Ver. 12. But theſe, as natural brute beaſts, &c.] So far are theſe men from acting like the angels, that they are ſunk below their own ſpecies, and are like beaſts, and become brutiſh in their knowledge and behaviour; are like the horſe and the mule, without underſtanding, act as if they were without reaſon; yea, are more ſtupid and ſenſeleſs than the ox, or the aſs, which know their owner, and their crib; and even in thoſe things which they might, and do know by the light of nature, they corrupt themſelves; and being given up to judicial blindneſs, and a reprobate mind, call good evil, and evil good, and do things that are not convenient, and which even brute beaſts do not; and like as they are guided by an inſtinct in nature, to do what they do, ſo theſe men are led and influenced by the force and power of corrupt nature in them, to commit all manner of wickedneſs: and like them are made to be taken and deſtroyed; or, as it may be rendered, to take and deſtroy; as beaſts and birds of prey, ſuch as lions, tygers, wolves, bears, vultures, hawks, &c. to which abuſers of themſelves with mankind, raviſhers of women, extortioners, oppreſſors, thieves, robbers, and plunderers of mens properties, may be compared: or to be taken and deſtroyed; that is, they are made or appointed to be taken in the net and ſnare of ſatan, are veſſels of wrath fitted for deſtruction, and are afore ordained to condemnation and ruin: and this being their caſe, they ſpeak evil of the things they underſtand not; either of angels, of whoſe nature, office, and dignity they are ignorant; and blaſpheme them, by either aſcribing too much to them, as the creation of the world, and divine worſhip, as were by ſome ancient hereticks; or by ſpeaking ſuch things of them as were below them, and unworthy of them; or of civil magiſtrates, not knowing the nature, and end of magiſtracy and civil government, and therefore ſpoke evil of them, when they ought to pray, and be thankful for them, and live peaceable and quiet lives under them; or of the miniſters of the word, whoſe uſefulneſs for the converſion of ſinners, and edification of ſaints, were not known, at leaſt not acknowledged by theſe men; hence they were traduced, and went thro' ill report among them, being as unknown by them; or of the ſcriptures of truth, which heretical men do not truly know and underſtand, but wreſt to their own deſtruction, or deny; and of the Goſpel and the myſteries of it, which are things not ſeen, known, and underſtood by carnal men, and therefore are blaſphemed, reviled, and reproached by them: and ſhall utterly periſh in their own corruption; of which they are ſervants, ver. 19. in their moral corruption, in their filthy and unnatural luſts, which are the cauſe of their everlaſting perdition and deſtruction, to which they are righteouſly appointed of God.

Ver. 13. And ſhall receive the reward of unrighteouſneſs, &c.] Due puniſhment, both in body and ſoul, for all their injuſtice to God and men; which will be a juſt recompence of reward they ſhall receive at the righteous judgment of God, who will render to every man according to his works: the juſtice of which appears by what follows, as they that count it pleaſure to riot in the day-time; who place all their ſatisfaction and happineſs in ſenſual delight, in rioting and drunkenneſs, in chambering and wantonneſs, day after day; putting away the evil day far from them, ſuppoſing that tomorrow will be as this day, and that there will be no future judgment nor ſtate; and therefore don't take the night for their revels, as other ſinners do, but being without all ſhame, declare their ſin as Sodom, and hide it not: ſpots they are, and blemiſhes; which defile themſelves, their minds and conſciences, their ſouls and bodies, with ſin, and defile others by their evil communications, and bring diſhonour and diſgrace upon the ways, doctrines, and intereſt of Chriſt: ſporting themſelves with their own deceivings; with their ſins and luſts, by which they deceive themſelves and others, it being a ſport to them to commit ſin; and in which they take great pleaſure and paſtime, and not only delight in their own ſins, but in thoſe of others, and in them that do them. Some verſions, as the Vulgate Latin and Arabic, inſtead of απαταις, deceivings, read αγαπαις, love feaſts, as in Jude 12. and ſo the Alexandrian copy; in which they behaved in a very ſcandalous manner, indulging themſelves in luxury and intemperance: to which agrees what follows, while they feaſt with you; at the above feaſts, or at the Lord's table, or at their own houſes, which ſhows that they were of them, and among them, as in ver. 1. and carries in it a tacit reproof for the continuance of them, when they were become ſo bad in their principles, and ſo ſcandalous in their lives.

Ver. 14. Having eyes full of adultery, &c.] For the ſeventh command is not only violated by unclean actions, and obſcene words, but alſo by unchaſte looks: and ſo the Jews explain [k] that precept, "thou ſhalt not commit adultery; you ſhall not "go after your hearts, nor after your eyes; ſays "R. Levi, the heart and the eye are ſin's two "brokers." Hence we read [l] of, נואף בעיניו, one that commits adultery with his eyes; ſee the note on Matt. v. 28. compare Job xxxi. 1. Ezek. vi. 9. Some read the words, having eyes full of the adultereſs; that is, having a leud and infamous woman always in mind and ſight, continually looking at her, and luſting after her: and that cannot ceaſe from ſin; which may be underſtood either of theſe wicked men, who are like the troubled ſea, that cannot reſt, but are continually caſting up the mire and dirt of ſin out of their polluted heart; who live and walk in ſin, and are always committing it, their converſation being nothing elſe but one continued ſeries of ſinning; nor can they do otherwiſe, ſince they are ſlaves to their luſts, and are carried away with the force and power of them: or of their eyes, which were always rolling after unlawful objects; their eyes and their hearts were only, and always for their luſt, as the prophet ſays of others, that they were but for their covetouſneſs; Jer. xxii. 17. a ſin alſo which reigned in theſe men: beguiling unſtable ſouls; ſuch as were unſteady in their principles, and unſtable in their ways; were like children toſſed to and fro with every wind of doctrine, not being rooted in Chriſt, nor eſtabliſhed in the faith; theſe, as the ſerpent beguiled Eve, they corrupted from the ſimplicity that is in Chriſt; impoſed falſe doctrines on them, and deceived them by falſe gloſſes, and outward appearances; and by fair words, and good ſpeeches, and by their wanton looks, and carnal luſts, they allured them into the ſin of adultery; or enſnared them, drew them into the net and ſnare of ſatan, and ſo they were taken and led captive. An heart they have exerciſed with covetous practices; an immoderate love of money, a covetous deſire after it, is the root of all evil, the bane of religion, and ſource of hereſy, and is a vice which has always prevailed among falſe teachers; and the character here given, well agrees with Simon Magus, the father of hereſies, and his followers: hence care is always taken to inſert, among the characters and qualifications of Goſpel-miniſters, that they be not greedy of filthy lucre; this iniquity, when it is a reigning one, and is become an habit, as it was in the perſons here deſcribed, for it had its ſeat in their heart, they were habituated to it, and continually exerciſed it in a multitude of inſtances and wicked practices, is inſatiable and damnable: curſed children; or children of the curſe; which may be underſtood, either actively, children that do curſe, as children of diſobedience are ſuch as commit acts of diſobedience; ſo theſe were curſing children, who, tho' their mouths might not be full of curſing and bitterneſs, as openly prophane ſinners be, yet they inwardly, and from their hearts, curſed the true followers of Chriſt, and their principles; or paſſively, curſed children who were under the curſe of the law, and from which there was no redemption for them, but at the laſt day will have the awful ſentence pronounced on them, go ye curſed into everlaſting fire.

[l] Vajikra Rabba, ſ. 23. fol. 165. 1. Vid. A. Gell. Noct. Attic. l. 3. c. 5.

Ver. 15. Which have forſaken the right way, &c.] The right way of the Lord, the way of truth, the Goſpel of truth; or Chriſt, who is the way, the truth, and the life; the true way to eternal life, and which is the right way to eternal happineſs; the way of life, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation by Chriſt, the chriſtian faith, and the doctrine of it, which they once profeſſed, but now relinquiſhed: and are gone aſtray; from the right way, the way of truth and holineſs, into the paths of error and prophaneneſs: following the way of Balaam the ſon of Boſor; which Jude calls his error, and is the path of covetouſneſs, uncleanneſs, and idolatry, ſins which he was either guilty of himſelf, or taught, adviſed, and ſeduced others to; ſee Rev. ii. 14. The Vulgate Latin verſion reads Balaam out of Boſor, taking Boſor for the name of a place, of which Balaam was; but not Boſor, but Pethor was the place of Balaam's reſidence, Numb. xxii. 5. The Arabic and Ethiopic verſions ſupply, as we do, the ſon of Boſor; and the Syriac verſion reads, the ſon of Beor, as in Numb. xxii. 5. for Beor and Boſor are the ſame names. The Sheva being pronounced by o, as it is by oa in Boanerges, and the Ain by S. Moreover, the letters צ and ע are ſometimes uſed for one another, as in צאן and עאן, ארץ and ארע, and ſo ע and ש, eſpecially in the Chaldean dialect; and Peter now being at Babylon in Chaldea, ſee 1 Pet. v. 13. it is no wonder that he ſo pronounced. Who loved the wages of unrighteouſneſs; which were the rewards of divination, Numb. xxii. 7. which were brought him for his divining or ſoothſaying, and may well be called unrighteous wages, ſince it was for doing unrighteous things, or things in an unrighteous manner; and theſe he loved, deſired, and greedily coveted, and fain would he have taken Balak's gold and ſilver, and have curſed Iſrael, but was reſtrained by the Lord: he ſhewed a good-will to it, in going along with the meſſengers, and in building altars, and offering ſacrifice in one place after another, in which there was a great reſemblance between him, and the men here ſpoken of.

Ver. 16. But was rebuked for his iniquity, &c.] Which was not merely going along with the meſſengers of Balak, for he had leave from the Lord ſo to do; but going along with them with a deſire to curſe Iſrael, when it was the will of God he ſhould go and bleſs them, in order to get Balak's money; ſo that his governing iniquity was covetouſneſs, which led him to other ſins; and for this he was rebuked by the angel, as well as reproved by his aſs: for the dumb aſs, as it was naturally ſo, the aſs on which he rode, ſpeaking with man's voice; which was ſupernatural and miraculous, for it was God that opened the mouth of the aſs: the mouth of that aſs is ſaid, by the Jews [m], to be one of the ten things created between the two evenings on the ſixth day of the creation; that is, as the Gloſs on it ſays, concerning which it was decreed, that its mouth ſhould be opened to ſpeak, what this aſs ſaid; and the occaſion of it may be ſeen in Numb. xxii. 22—30. Lactantius [n] obſerves, that there are two ſtars in the conſtellation of Cancer, which the Greeks call the aſſes; and which the poets feign, are thoſe that carried Liberus over a river, when he could not paſs it; to one of which he gave this for a reward, ut humana voce loqueretur, that it ſhould ſpeak with man's voice; a fable, no doubt, hatched from the ſacred hiſtory, and ſaid in imitation of this aſs. Which forbad the madneſs of the prophet; and ſo Balaam, tho' a diviner and ſoothſayer, is called by the Jewiſh writers [o]; who, they ſay, was firſt a prophet, and then a ſoothſayer, from whom Jerom [p] ſeems to have received the tradition; who ſays, that he was firſt a holy man, and a prophet of God, and afterwards, thro' diſobedience, and a deſire of gifts, was called a diviner; for his eyes were opened, and he ſaw the viſion of the Almighty; and the Spirit of God came upon him, and he propheſied many things concerning Iſrael, and the Meſſiah, and others, Numb. ch. 24. His madneſs lay in going with the meſſengers of Balak, in order to curſe Iſrael, contrary to the will of God; and 'tis madneſs in any to oppoſe God in his counſels, purpoſes, providences, and precepts; and every ſin, which is an act of hoſtility againſt God, has madneſs in it; and this of Balaam's was forbid by his aſs, and he was convinced of it. Very appoſitely is mention made of this dumb aſs, when the perſons here ſpoken of were as natural brute beaſts, and worſe than them, ver. 12.

Ver. 17. Theſe are wells without water, &c.] Which look large and deep, promiſe much, and have nothing in them; ſo theſe men looked like angels of light, transformed themſelves as miniſters of righteouſneſs, had a form of godlineſs, and boaſted of their great knowledge; promiſed great advantages to their followers, but were like deceitful brooks, or dry wells, and ſo diſappointed thoſe that came to them, and attended on them; having nothing but the filth and ſlime of error and iniquity, being deſtitute both of the grace of God, comparable to water, and of the truth of heavenly doctrine, which is like the rain that fills the wells, pools, and fountains. Clouds that are carried with a tempeſt; theſe falſe teachers may be compared to clouds for their number, for many antichriſts and falſe prophets ſoon came into the world; and for their ſudden riſe in the churches, into which they crept privily and unawares; and becauſe of the general darkneſs they ſpread; for when errors and hereſies prevail, 'tis a dark and cloudy day with the churches, a day of gloomineſs and darkneſs, of thick darkneſs, a day of trouble, rebuke, and blaſphemy; and becauſe of the height of them, eſpecially light clouds, as theſe are compared to, who are high in their own conceits and imaginations, and think, and give out themſelves to be ſome great perſons; and alſo becauſe of their ſudden deſtruction, which lingers and ſlumbers not, but comes upon them in a moment, and their glory paſſes away like the morning cloud: and theſe may be ſaid to be as clouds carried with a tempeſt; of their own luſts and paſſions, by which they are governed, and are led, and carried away with the force of them, and have no power to reſiſt them, being under the dominion of them, and captives to them; and of ſatan's temptations, who works effectually in them, with all power, ſigns, and lying wonders, and with all deceiveableneſs of unrighteouſneſs, and being taken in his ſnare, are led captive by him at his will: Jude ſays, carried about of winds; with every wind of falſe doctrine, like meteors in the air; are never at a point, always unſteady and unſettled, and ready to embrace every new and upſtart notion: to whom the miſt of darkneſs is reſerved for ever; ever; the nature of their puniſhment is expreſſed by darkneſs, the blackeſt darkneſs, the miſt of darkneſs, and which Jude calls blackneſs of darkneſs, the ſame with utter darkneſs; and which ſignifies a moſt forlorn and uncomfortable condition, and is a righteous judgment, and juſt retaliation upon them, who ſtudied to darken counſel by words without knowledge; and the certainty of their puniſhment is ſignified by its being reſerved, even as the happineſs of the ſaints, and the ſafety and ſureneſs of it, are repreſented by an inheritance reſerved in heaven: and as God has his treaſures, magazines, and ſtores of grace and mercy, felicity and glory, for his people; ſo he has his wrath and vengeance reſerved, laid up in ſtore with him, and ſealed up among his treaſures, which he will ſurely bring forth in his own time: and the duration of this puniſhment is for ever; 'tis a worm that never dies, a fire that is never quenched; 'tis everlaſting fire and burnings, the ſmoke of which aſcends for ever and ever.

Ver. 18. For when they ſpeak great ſwelling words of vanity, &c.] Marvellous things againſt the God of gods, great things and blaſphemies againſt God, his name, his tabernacle, and his ſaints; ſee Dan. xi. 36. Rev. xiii. 5, 6. or againſt men, dominions, and dignities, ver. 10. or it may deſign their ſelf-applauſes, and vain-glorying in themſelves, and their empty boaſt of knowledge and learning; and alſo expreſs the windineſs of their doctrines, and the bombaſt ſtile, and high-flown ſtrains of rhetotic in which they were delivered; as likewiſe the flattering titles they beſtowed on men, for the ſake of their own worldly intereſt and advantage; ſee Jude 16. and hereby they allure, through the luſts of the fleſh, through much wantonneſs, thoſe that were clean eſcaped from them who live in error; that is, from thoſe who lived in the error of heatheniſm or judaiſm, from whom, and which they were clean eſcaped; or truly, really, and entirely delivered, being fully convinced of the falſity thereof, and of the truth of the chriſtian religion; tho' ſome copies, as the Alexandrian, and two of Beza's, and two of Stephens's, read, not οντως, truly, but ολιγως, a little; and the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, a very little; to which agrees the Complutenſian edition; and the Syriac verſion renders it in a few words, or almoſt; and according to the Ethiopic verſion, a few perſons are deſigned; but be they more or leſs, and truly, or but a little, and for a little while, or almoſt, eſcaped from their former errors, in which they were brought up, and lived; yet by the carnal luſts and liberties, laſciviouſneſs and wantonneſs, which theſe falſe teachers indulged, they were allured, enſnared, and drawn by them into their wicked principles and practices.

Ver. 19. While they promiſe them liberty, &c.] Not chriſtian liberty, which lies in a freedom from ſin, its dominion, guilt, and condemnation, and in ſerving God with liberty, chearfulneſs, and without fear; but a ſinful carnal liberty, a liberty from the law of God, from obedience to it, as a rule of walk and converſation, and from the laws of men, from ſubjection to the civil magiſtrate, and from ſervitude to maſters, and obedience to parents; a liberty to lay aſide and neglect the ordinances of the Goſpel at pleaſure, and to live in all manner of ſin and wickedneſs; a liberty which is contrary to the nature, will, and work of Chriſt, to his Spirit, and to the principle of grace in the heart, and to the Goſpel, and to the conduct and converſation of real ſaints. Now this was the ſnare by which the falſe teachers beguiled unſtable ſouls; liberty being what is greatly deſirable to men, and is ſuited to their carnal luſts and intereſts: but a vain promiſe was this, when they themſelves are the ſervants of corruption; of ſin, which has corrupted all mankind in ſoul and body; and particularly the luſt of uncleanneſs, which theſe men walked in, and by which they not only corrupted themſelves, but the good manners of others alſo; and which tended and led them both to ruin and deſtruction, ſignified by the pit of corruption: and yet theſe very preachers, that promiſed liberty to others, were the ſervants of ſin; they were under the power and government of ſin. They were not only born ſo, and were home-born ſlaves to ſin, but they ſold themſelves to work wickedneſs; voluntarily and with delight, they ſerved divers luſts and pleaſures, and were ſlaves and drudges thereunto; as likewiſe to ſatan, whoſe luſts they would do, and by whom they were led captive; ſo that their condition was mean, baſe, and deplorable, and therefore could never make good their promiſe, or give that which they had not themſelves: and which is confirmed by the following reaſoning, for of whom a man is overcome, of the ſame is he brought in bondage; as this is a certain point in war, that when one man is conquered by another, he is no longer a free man, but the other's priſoner and captive, and is in a ſtate of ſervitude and bondage; ſo it is when a man is overcome by ſin, which muſt be underſtood not of a partial victory or conqueſt, for a good man may be ſurprized by ſin, and overtaken in a fault, and be overcome and carried captive by it for a time, as was the Apoſtle, ſee Rom. vii. 23. Gal. vi. 1. and yet not be a ſervant of corruption, or properly in a ſtate of bondage to it; but this is to be underſtood of a total and compleat victory, when a man is wholly under the dominion of ſin, it reigns in his mortal body, and he obeys it in the luſts of it, and yields his members inſtruments of unrighteouſneſs; ſuch a man is neither a free man himſelf, nor can he much leſs promiſe and give liberty to others.

Ver. 20. For if after they have eſcaped the pollutions of the world, &c.] The ſins of it, the governing vices of it, which the men of the world are addicted to, and immerſed in; for the whole world lies in wickedneſs, and which are of a defiling nature: the phraſe is Rabbinnical; it is ſaid[q], "he that ſtudies not in the law in this world, but is defiled "בטנופי עלמא with the pollutions of the world, what "is written of him? and they took him, and caſt him "without:" theſe, men may eſcape, abſtain from, and outwardly reform, with reſpect unto, and yet be deſtitute of the grace of God; ſo that this can be no inſtance of the final and total apoſtacy of real ſaints; for the houſe may be ſwept, and garniſhed with an external reformation; perſons may be outwardly righteous before men, have a form of godlineſs and a name to live, and yet be dead in treſpaſſes and ſins; all which they may have through the knowledge of the Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt. The Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions, read our Lord, and the latter leave out, and Saviour; by which knowledge is meant, not a ſpiritual, experimental knowledge of Chriſt, for that is eternal life, the beginning, pledge, and earneſt of it; but a notional knowledge of Chriſt, or a profeſſion of knowledge of him, for it may be rendred acknowledgment; or rather the goſpel of Chriſt, which, being only notionally received, may have ſuch an effect on men, as outwardly to reform their lives, at leaſt in ſome inſtances, and for a while, in whoſe hearts it has no place. Now, if after all this knowledge and reformation, they are again entangled therein; in the pollutions of the world, in worldly luſts, which are as gins, pits and ſnares: and overcome; by them, ſo as to be laden with them, and led away, and entirely governed and influenced by them: the latter end, or ſtate, is worſe with them, than the beginning; ſee Matth. xii. 45. Their beginning, or firſt eſtate, was that in which they were born, a ſtate of darkneſs, ignorance, and ſin, and in which they were brought up, and was either the ſtate of Judaiſm, or of Gentiliſm; their next eſtate was an outward deliverance and eſcape, from the error of the one, or of the other, and an embracing and profeſſing the truth of the Chriſtian religion, joined with a becoming external converſation; and this their laſt eſtate was an apoſtacy from the truth of the Goſpel they had profeſſed, a reception of error and hereſy, and a relapſe into ſin and immorality, which made their caſe worſe, than it was at firſt; for, generally, ſuch perſons are more extravagant in ſinning; are like raging waves of the ſea, foaming out their own ſhame; and are ſeldom, or ever, recovered; and by their light, knowledge and profeſſion, their puniſhment will be more aggravated, and become intolerable.

Ver. 21. For it had been better for them, &c.] Not that ignorance is good, or to be excuſed; but it would have been a leſſer evil, and not ſo much aggravated: not to have known the way of righteouſneſs; the ſame with the way of truth, ver. 2. and the right way, ver. 15. the Goſpel, which points out the way and method of a ſinner's juſtification before God, which is not by the works of the law, but by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed to them, and received by faith; and which teaches men to live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly; and a large, notional, tho' not an experimental knowledge, theſe Apoſtates had, of the word and doctrine of righteouſneſs, and indeed of the whole of the Chriſtian religion, which may truly go by this name: than after they have known it; owned, embraced, and profeſſed it: to turn; the Vulgate Latin verſion, and ſome copies, as the Alexandrian, and others, add, to that which is behind; to their former luſts, or errors, or worſe, which they had turned their backs upon externally: from the holy commandment delivered unto them; by the commandment is meant the Goſpel alſo, ſee chap. iii. 2. 1 Tim. vi. 14. called holy, becauſe of its nature and influence, and in oppoſition to the pollutions of the world; and which is the faith once delivered, Jude 3. and which they received, as delivered to them; and, particularly, the ordinances of it, which they once ſubmitted to, kept, and obſerved, as they were delivered to them, but now relinquiſhed, or corrupted: wherefore, it would have been better for them to have been in their former ignorance, either in Judaiſm, or in Gentiliſm, ſince proportionate to a man's light is his guilt, and ſo his puniſhment, ſee Rom. ii. 12. Luke xii. 47,48.

Ver. 22. But it is happened unto them, according to the true proverb, &c.] Which is true, both in fact, and in the application of it, and which lies in the Scriptures of truth, at leaſt the firſt part of it, Prov. xxvi. 11. The dog is turned to his own vomit again, and the ſow that was waſhed, to her wallowing in the mire; which expreſſes the filthy nature of ſin, ſignified by vomit, mire and dirt, than which nothing is more abominable and defiling; and alſo the juſt characters of theſe apoſtates, who are fitly compared to dogs and ſwine; and likewiſe their irreclaimable and irrecoverable ſtate and condition, it being impoſſible they ſhould be otherwiſe, unleſs their natures were changed and altered. In the Hebrew language, a ſow is called חזיר from the root חזר, which ſignifies to return, becauſe that creature, as ſoon as it is out of the mire and dirt, and is waſhed from its filthineſs, naturally returns to it again: ſo ſuch apoſtates return to what they were before, to their former principles and practices: in this manner the Jews explain the proverb, "Tobiah returns to Tobiah, as it is ſaid, Prov. xxvi. 11. as a dog returneth to his vomit[*]."

CHAP. III.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle makes mention of the end and deſign of his writing this ſecond Epiſtle; foretels that there would be ſcoffers at the coming of Chriſt in the laſt days; deſcribes the coming of Chriſt, and the burning of the world; and cloſes with the uſe ſaints ſhould make of theſe things. The end of his writing both this and the former Epiſtle, was to put the perſons he writes unto in mind of the doctrines and ordinances of the Goſpel, delivered by the prophets and Apoſtles, ver. 1, 2. and then, agreeable to what the prophets had ſaid, he predicts, that there would be ſcoffers in the laſt day; who are deſcribed by their ſinful courſe of life, and by their words, what they would ſay concerning the coming of Chriſt, and their reaſoning about it, ver. 3, 4. which aroſe from their ignorance of the creation of the heavens and the earth, and of the ſituation of them; and is refuted by ſhewing that things have not remained as they were from the creation; that the earth ſtanding in and out of the water, as it was capable of being overflowed with a flood, ſo it periſhed by one; and that the preſent heavens and earth are reſerved and prepared for a general burning at the day of judgment, in which wicked men will be deſtroyed, ver. 5, 6, 7. but let theſe men ſcoff as they will, the length of time ſince the promiſe of Chriſt's coming was made, ſhould be no objection with the ſaints to the performance of it; ſince the longeſt term of time is nothing with God, however conſiderable it may be with men, ver. 8. beſides, the reaſon of the coming of Chriſt being deferred, is not owing to any dilatorineſs in the performance of the promiſe, but to the long-ſuffering of God towards his elect, being unwilling that any one of them ſhould be loſt, but that all ſhould be brought to repentance, ver. 9. but as for the coming of Chriſt, that is certain, and will be ſudden; at which time will be the general conflagration, which is deſcribed in a very awful manner, ver. 10—12. and the uſe to be made of ſuch a tremendous diſpenſation by the ſaints, is to live a holy and godly converſation, ver. 11. to be eagerly looking for the coming of Chriſt, ver. 12. and to expect, according to his promiſe, new heavens and a new earth, in which will dwell righteous perſons, ver. 13. and to be diligent to be found in peace at that day, ver. 14. and to account the long-ſuffering of God ſalvation; and the whole of this account, and the uſe of it, is ſtrengthened by the teſtimony of the Apoſtle Paul, of whom, and of his Epiſtles, a character is given, ver. 15, 16. and the Epiſtle is concluded with ſome cautions and exhortations, [*] Vajikra Rabba, §. 16. fol. 158. 4.

hortations to the ſaints, to beware leſt they ſhould be carried away with the errors of wicked men, and ſo fall from any degree of ſtedfaſtneſs in the faith; and to be concerned for a growth in grace, and in the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus, to whom glory is to be aſcribed for ever and ever, ver. 17, 18.

Ver. 1. This ſecond Epiſtle, beloved, I now write unto you, &c.] This is a tranſition to another part of the Epiſtle; for the Apoſtle having largely deſcribed falſe teachers, the ſecret enemies of the chriſtian religion under a profeſſion of it, paſſes on to take notice of the more open adverſaries and prophane ſcoffers of it; and from their ridicule of the doctrine of Chriſt's ſecond coming, he proceeds to treat of that, and of the deſtruction of the world, and the future happineſs of the ſaints: he calls this Epiſtle his ſecond Epiſtle, becauſe he had written another before to the ſame perſons; and that the author of this Epiſtle was an Apoſtle, is evident from the following verſe; and which compared with ch. i. 18. ſhews him to be the Apoſtle Peter, whoſe name it bears, and who was an eye-witneſs to the transfiguration of Chriſt on the mount: he addreſſes theſe ſaints here, as alſo in ver. 8, 14, 17. under the character of beloved; becauſe they were the beloved of God, being choſen by him according to his foreknowledge, and regenerated by him, according to his abundant mercy; and were openly his people, and had obtained mercy from him, and like precious faith with the Apoſtles; and were alſo the beloved of Chriſt, being redeemed by him, not with gold and ſilver, but with his precious blood; for whom he ſuffered, and who were partakers of his ſufferings, and the benefits ariſing from them, and who had all things given them by him, pertaining to life and godlineſs, and exceeding great and precious promiſes; and were likewiſe beloved by the Apoſtle, though ſtrangers, and not merely as Jews, or becauſe they were his countrymen, but becauſe they were the elect of God, the redeemed of Chriſt, and who were ſanctified by the Spirit, and had the ſame kind of faith he himſelf had. The Syriac and Arabic verſions read, my beloved; and the Ethiopic verſion, my brethren: his end in writing both this and the former Epiſtle follows; in both which I ſtir up your pure minds by way of remembrance; that this was his view both in this and the former Epiſtle, appears from 1 Epiſtle, i. 13. and 2 Epiſtle, i. 12, 13, 14, 15. he calls their minds pure; not that they were ſo naturally, for the minds and conſciences of men are univerſally defiled with ſin; nor are the minds of all men pure who ſeem to be ſo in their own eyes, or appear ſo to others; nor can any man, by his own power or works, make himſelf pure from ſin; only the blood of Chriſt purges and cleanſes from it; and a pure mind is a mind ſprinkled with that blood, and which receives the truth as it is in Jeſus, in the power and purity of it, and that holds the myſtery of the faith in a pure conſcience. Some verſions, as the Vulgate Latin and Arabic, render the word ſincere, as it is in Phil. i. 10. and may deſign the ſincerity of their hearts in the worſhip of God, in the doctrines of Chriſt, and to one another, and of the grace of the Spirit of God in them; as that their faith was unfeigned, their hope without hypocriſy, and their love without diſſimulation, and their repentance real and genuine; but yet they needed to be ſtirred up by way of remembrance, both of the truth of the Goſpel, and the duties of religion; for ſaints are apt to be forgetful of the word, both of its doctrines and its exhortations; and it is the buſineſs of the miniſters of the word, to put them in mind of them, either by preaching or by writing; and which ſhews the neceſſity and uſefulneſs of the ſtanding miniſtry of the Goſpel: the particulars he put them in mind of, next follow.

Ver. 2. That ye may be mindful, &c.] This is an explanation of the above-mentioned end of his writing this and the other Epiſtle; which was, that thoſe ſaints might be mindful of two things more eſpecially: of the words which were ſpoken before by the holy prophets; that is, the prophets of the Old Teſtament, who were holy men of God, and therefore their words are to be regarded, and retained in memory; the Goſpel itſelf was ſpoken by them, and ſo was Chriſt, and the things relating to his perſon and offices, and to his incarnation, ſufferings and death, and the glory that ſhould follow; and indeed the Apoſtles ſaid no other than what they did, only more clearly and expreſly; and particularly many things were ſaid by them concerning the ſecond coming of Chriſt to judge the world, and deſtroy it, and to prepare new heavens and a new earth for his people, which is what the Apoſtle has chiefly in view; ſee Jude 14. Iſ. xi. 3. and lxv. 17. Mal. iv. 1. Dan. vii. 9, 10, 13, 14. and of the commandment of us the Apoſtles of the Lord and Saviour; that is, Jeſus Chriſt, as Jude expreſſes it, and the Ethiopic verſion adds here; and which likewiſe, and alſo the Syriac verſion, and ſome antient copies read, our Lord and Saviour, and omit the us before the Apoſtles; by whom are meant, the twelve Apoſtles of Chriſt, of which Peter was one, and therefore ſays, us the Apoſtles; though the Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions, and the Complutenſian edition read, your Apoſtles, and ſo the Alexandrian copy; but the former is the received reading: now the commandment of theſe intends either the Goſpel in general, ſo called becauſe it was the commandment of our Lord to his Apoſtles to preach it; and therefore the word commandment in the original, ſtands between us the Apoſtles, and the Lord and Saviour, as being the commandment of the one to the other; unleſs it can be thought any regard is had to the new commandment of love, or that of faith, inculcated both by Chriſt and his Apoſtles; John xiii. 34. 1 John ii. 7, 8. and iii. 23. or rather, particularly the inſtructions, directions, and predictions of the Apoſtles concerning the ſecond coming of Chriſt, and what ſhould go before it, as appears from the following words, and the parallel place in Jude 17, 18. the words of the prophets and Apoſtles being here put together, ſhew the agreement there is between them, and what regard is to be had to each of them, and to any thing and every thing in which they agree.

Ver. 3. Knowing this firſt, &c.] In the firſt place, principally, and chiefly, and which might eaſily be known and obſerved from the writings of the Apoſtles and prophets; ſee 1 Tim. iv. 1, 2. 2 Tim. iii. 1. that there ſhall come in the laſt days ſcoffers, or mockers; ſuch as would make a mock at ſin, make light of it, plead for it, openly commit it, and glory in it; and ſcoff at all religion, as the prejudice of education, as an engine of ſtate, a piece of civil policy, to keep ſubjects in awe, as cant, enthuſiaſm, and madneſs, as a gloomy melancholy thing, depriving men of true pleaſure; and throw out their flouts and jeers at thoſe that are the moſt religious, for the juſt, upright man, is commonly by ſuch laughed to ſcorn, and thoſe that depart from evil make themſelves a prey; and particularly at the miniſters of the word, for a man that has ſcarcely ſo much common ſenſe as to preſerve him from the character of an ideot, thinks himſelf a wit of the age, if he can at any rate break a jeſt upon a

Goſpel miniſter: nor do the ſcriptures of truth eſcape the banter and burleſque of theſe ſcoffers; the doctrines of it being fooliſhneſs to them, and the commands and ordinances in it being grievous and intolerable to them; yea, to thoſe lengths do ſuch proceed, as to ſcoff at God himſelf; at his perſons, purpoſes, providences, and promiſes; at Jehovah the Father, as the God of nature and providence, and eſpecially as the God and father of Chriſt, and of all grace in him; at Jehovah the Son, at his perſon, as being the Son of God, and truly God; at his office, as mediator, and at his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, which they trample under foot; and at Jehovah the Spirit, whom they do deſpite unto, as the Spirit of grace, deriding his operations in regeneration and ſanctification, as dream and deluſion; and moſt of all, things to come are the object of their ſcorn and deriſion; as the ſecond coming of Chriſt, the reſurrection of the dead, a future judgment, the torments of hell, and the joys of heaven; all which they repreſent as the tricks and juggles of deſigning men: ſuch as theſe, according to the prophets and Apoſtles, were to come in the laſt days; either in the days of the Meſſiah, in the Goſpel diſpenſation, the times between the firſt and ſecond coming of Chriſt; for it is a rule with the Jews[*], that wherever the laſt days are mentioned, the days of the Meſſiah are intended; ſee Heb. i. 1. when the prophets foretold ſuch ſcoffers ſhould come; or in the laſt days of the Jewiſh ſtate both civil and religious, called the ends of the world; 1 Cor. x. 11. a little before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, when iniquity greatly abounded; Matt. xxiv. 11, 12. or in the laſt of the days, as the words may be rendered, and ſo anſwer to באחרית הימים, in Iſ. ii. 2. and may regard the latter part of the laſt times; the times of the Apoſtles were the laſt days, 1 John, ii. 18. they began then, and will continue to Chriſt's ſecond coming; when ſome time before that, it will be a remarkable age for ſcoffers and ſcorners; and we have lived to ſee an innumerable company of them, and theſe predictions fulfilled; from whence it may be concluded, that the coming of Chriſt is at hand: theſe ſcoffers are further deſcribed as walking after their own luſts; either after the carnal reaſonings of their minds, admitting of nothing but what they can comprehend by reaſon, making that the rule, teſt and ſtandard of all their principles, and ſo caſt away the law of the Lord, and deſpiſe the word of the holy one of Iſrael; or rather, after their ſinful and fleſhly luſts, making them their guides and governors, and giving up themſelves entirely to them, to obey and fulfil them; the phraſe denotes a continued ſeries of ſinning, a progreſs in it, a deſire after it, and pleaſure in it, and an obſtinate perſiſting in it: ſcoffers at religion and revelation, are generally libertines; and ſuch as ſit in the ſeat of the ſcornful, are in the counſel of the ungodly, and way of ſinners, Pſ. i. 1.

Ver. 4. And ſaying, Where is the promiſe of his coming? &c.] That is, of the coming of the Lord and Saviour, ver. 2. the object of their ſcorn and deriſion, and whom they name not, through contempt; and the meaning is, What is become of the promiſe of his coming? where the accompliſhment of it? The prophets foretold he would come; he himſelf ſaid he would come again; the angels, at his aſcenſion, declared he would come from heaven in like manner as he went up; and all his Apoſtles gave out, that he would appear a ſecond time to judge both quick and dead, and that his coming was at hand; but where is the fulfilment of all this? he is not come: nor is there any ſign or likelihood of it: for ſince the fathers fell aſleep; or died; which is the language of the ſcriptures, and here ſneered at by theſe men, who believe them ſo faſt aſleep as never to be awaked, or raiſed more; and by the fathers they mean the firſt inhabitants of the world, as Adam, Abel, Seth, &c. and all the patriarchs and prophets in all ages; the Ethiopic verſion renders it, our firſt fathers: all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation; reaſoning, from the ſettled order of things, the conſtant revolution of the ſun, moon, and ſtars, the permanency of the earth, and the ſucceſſion of the inhabitants of it, to the future continuance of things, without any alteration; and conſequently, that Chriſt would not come, as was promiſed, to raiſe the dead, judge mankind, deſtroy the world, and ſet up a new ſtate of things: the fallacy of which reaſoning is expoſed by the Apoſtle in the following words.

Ver. 5. For this they willingly are ignorant of, &c.] Namely, what follows; for as theſe men were ſuch as had profeſſed chriſtianity, and had the advantage of revelation, and had the opportunity of reading the ſcriptures, they might have known that the heavens and the earth were from the beginning; and that they were made by the word of God; and that the earth was originally in ſuch a poſition and ſituation as to be overflowed with a flood, and that it did periſh by a general innundation; and that the preſent heavens and earth are kept and reſerved for a general burning; and it might be diſcerned in nature, that there are preparations making for an univerſal conflagration; but all this they choſe not to know, and affected ignorance of: particularly that by the word of God the heavens were of old; not only in the times of Noah, but from the beginning, as the Ethiopic verſion reads, and which agrees with the account in Gen. i. 1. by the heavens may be meant both the third heaven, and the ſtarry heavens, and the airy heavens, with all their created inhabitants; and eſpecially the latter, ſince theſe were concerned in, and affected with the general deluge; and theſe were in the beginning of time, out of nothing brought into being, and ſo were not eternal, and might be deſtroyed again, or at leaſt undergo a change, even though they were of old, and of long duration: for it was by the word of God that they at firſt exiſted, and were ſo long preſerved in being; either by the commanding word of God, by his powerful voice, his almighty fiat, who ſaid, Let it be done, and it was done, and who commanded beings to riſe up out of nothing, and they did, and ſtood faſt; and ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, by the command of God; or by his eternal logos, the eſſential word of God, the ſecond perſon in the Trinity, who is often in ſcripture called the word, and the word of God, and as ſome think, by the Apoſtle Peter, 1 Epiſtle, i. 23. and certain it is that the creation of all things is frequently aſcribed to him; ſee John i. 1, 2, 3. Col. i. 16. Heb. i. 2, 10. and xi. 3. wherefore, by the ſame word they might be diſſolved, and made to paſs away, as they will; and the earth ſtanding out of the water and in the water; that is, by the word of God; for this phraſe in the original text, is placed after this clauſe, and laſt of all; and refers not only to the being of the heavens of old, but to the riſe, ſtanding, and ſubſiſtence of the earth, which is here particularly deſcribed for the ſake of the deluge, the Apoſtle afterwards mentions: and it is ſaid to be ſtanding out of the water, or conſiſting out of it; it conſiſts of it as a part; the globe of the earth is terraqueous, partly land and partly water; and even the dry land itſelf has its riſe and ſpring out of water; the firſt matter that was created is called the deep, and waters in which darkneſs was, and upon which the Spirit of God moved, Gen. i. 2. agreeable to which Thales the Mileſian aſſerted [t], that water was the principle of all things; and the Ethiopic verſion here renders the words thus, and the word of God created alſo the earth out of water, and confirmed it: the account the Jews give of the firſt formation of the world is this [u]; "at firſt the world was מים במים, water in water; "what is the ſenſe (of that paſſage Gen. i. 2.) and the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters? "he returned and made it ſnow; he caſteth forth his ice like morſels, Pſ. cxlvii. 17. he returned and "made it earth; for to the ſnow he ſaith, be thou earth, Job xxxvii. 6. and the earth ſtood upon "the waters; to him that ſtretched out the earth above the waters, Pſ. cxxxvi. 6." however, certain it is, that the earth was firſt covered with water, when at the word, and by the command of God, the waters fled and haſted away, and were gathered into one place, and the dry land roſe up and appeared; and then it was that it ſtood out of the water; ſee Gen. i. 9, 10. Pſ. civ. 6, 7. moreover, the earth conſiſts, or is kept and held together by water; there is a general humidity or moiſture that runs through it, by which it is compacted together, or otherwiſe it would reſolve into duſt, and by which it is fit for the production, increaſe, and preſervation of vegetables and other things, which it otherwiſe would not be: and it is alſo ſaid to ſtand in the water, or by the water; upon it, according to Pſ. xxiv. 2. or rather in the midſt of it, there being waters above the firmament or expanſe, in the airy heavens, in the clouds all around the earth, called the windows of heaven; and water below the firmament or expanſe, in the earth itſelf; beſides the great ſea, a large body of waters, is in the midſt of the earth, in the very bowels of it, which feed rivers, and form ſprings, fountains and wells, called the fountains of the great deep; and in this poſition and ſituation was the earth of old, and ſo was prepared in nature for a general deluge, and yet was preſerved firm and ſtable by the word of God, for a long ſeries of time; ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, and the earth out of the water, and in the water ſtood ſtable, by the command of God; but when it was his pleaſure, he brought the flood on the world of the ungodly, of which an account follows.

Ver. 6. Whereby the world that then was, &c.] The old world, as it is called in ch. ii. 5. and as the Ethiopic verſion here renders it; the world before the flood, that had ſtood from the creation 1656 years: being overflowed with water; by the windows of heaven being opened, and the waters over the earth poured down upon it; and by the fountains of the great deep being broken up in it; thus by theſe waters from above and below, a general inundation was brought upon it; for that the deluge was univerſal, is clear from hence, and from the account by Moſes; for as the earth was filled with violence, and all fleſh had corrupted its way, God threatned a general deſtruction, and which was brought by a flood, which overflowed the whole earth; for all the hills that were under the whole heaven were covered with it, and every thing that had life in the dry land died, and every living ſubſtance was deſtroyed, that was upon the face of the ground; ſee Gen. vi. 11, 12, 13. and vii. 11, 19, 22, 23. and hence it follows, that hereby the then world periſhed; not as to the ſubſtance of it, whatever alteration there might be in its form and poſition; but as to the inhabitants of it; for all creatures, men and cattle, and the creeping things, and fowls of the heaven were deſtroyed, excepting Noah and his wife, and his three ſons and their wives, and the creatures that were with him in the ark; ſee Gen. vii. 23. 1 Pet. iii. 20. and by this inſtance the Apoſtle ſhews the falſhood of the above aſſertion, that all things continued as they were from the beginning of the creation; for the earth was covered with water at firſt, and which, by the command of God, was removed, and after a long ſeries of time, was brought on it again, and by it drowned; and from whence it alſo appears, that this ſort of reaſoning uſed by thoſe ſcoffers, is very fallacious; for though the heavens and the earth may continue for a long time, as they did before the flood, in the ſame form and ſituation, it does not follow from thence, that they always will, for the contrary is evident from what follows.

Ver. 7. But the heavens and the earth which are now, &c.] In being, in diſtinction from, and oppoſition to the heavens that were of old, and the earth ſtanding in and out of the water, and the world that then was when the waters of the flood overflowed it: by the ſame word are kept in ſtore; that is, by the word of God, as in ver. 5. and the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read, by his word; by the ſame word that the heavens, and the earth were made of old, or in the beginning, are they kept, preſerved, and upheld in their being: or are treaſured up; the heavens and the earth are a rich treaſure, they are full of the riches of God, as the God of nature and providence; and they are kept with care, as a treaſure is, not to be touched or meddled with at preſent, but muſt continue in the ſame poſition and uſe; or they are laid up in the ſtores, and ſealed up among the treaſures of divine wrath and vengeance, and will be brought out another day, and made uſe of, to the deſtruction of the ungodly inhabitants of the world, and to aggravate and increaſe their miſery and ruin: for it is further ſaid of them, that they are reſerved unto fire; for tho' the world is, and has been preſerved a long time without any viſible alteration in it, yet it will not be always ſo preſerved; and tho' it is, and will be kept from being drowned by water again, thro' the promiſe and power of God, yet it is kept and reſerved for a general conflagration; ſee ver. 10, 12. And as the old world was put into a natural ſituation, ſo as to be drowned by water, there are now preparations making in nature, in the preſent world, for the burning of it; witneſs the fiery meteors, blazing ſtars, and burning comets in the heavens, and the ſubterraneous fires in the bowels of the earth, which in ſome places have already broke out: there are now many Volcano's, burning mountains and iſlands, particularly in Sicily, Italy, and the parts adjacent, the ſeat of the beaſt, and where it is very likely the univerſal conflagration will begin, as Ætna, Veſuvius, Strombolo, and other Volcano's; and even in our own iſland, we have ſome ſymptoms and appearances of theſe fires under ground, as fiery eruptions in ſome places, and the hot waters at the Bath, and elſewhere, ſhow; from all which, 'tis plain, that the heavens and earth, that now are, are not, as they always ways were, and will be, but are reſerved and prepared for burning; and that things are ripening apace, as mens ſins alſo are, for the general conflagration. Joſephus[w] relates, that Adam foretold that there would be a deſtruction of all things, once by the force of fire, and once by the power and multitude of water; and it is certain the Jews had knowledge of the deſtruction of the earth by fire, as by water: they ſay[x], "that when the law was "given to Iſrael, his (God's) voice went from one "end of the world to the other, and trembling laid "hold on all the nations of the world in their temples, "and they ſaid a ſong, as it is ſaid, Pſ. xxix. 9. and "in his temple doth every one ſpeak of his glory; all of "them gathered together to wicked Balaam, and ſaid "to him, what is the voice of the multitude which "we hear, perhaps a flood is coming upon the world? "he ſaid unto them, the Lord ſitteth upon the "flood, yea, the Lord ſitteth king for ever, Pſ. "xxix. 10. Thus hath the Lord ſwore, that he "will not bring a flood upon the world; they re"plied to him, a flood of water he will not bring, "but, מבול של אש, a flood of fire he will bring, "as it is ſaid, Iſ. lxvi. 16. for by fire will the Lord "plead," or judge: and hence they ſpeak[y] of the wicked being judged with two ſorts of judgments, by water, and by fire: and, according to our Apoſtle, the heavens and earth are kept and reſerved to fire, againſt the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men; the time when God will judge the world is fixed, tho' it is not known; and it is called a day, becauſe of the evidence and light in which things will appear, and the quick diſpatch of buſineſs in it; and the judgment ſpoken of is the future judgment, and which is certain, and will be univerſal, righteous, and eternal, and when wicked and ungodly men will be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction: the bodies of thoſe that will be alive at the general conflagration, will be burnt in it, tho' not annihilated, and will be raiſed again, and both ſoul and body will be deſtroyed in hell.

Ver. 8. But beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, &c.] Here the Apoſtle addreſſes the ſaints he writes unto, and for whom he had a tender affection and regard, and for whoſe welfare he was concerned, leſt they ſhould be ſtumbled at the length of time, ſince the promiſe of the coming of Chriſt was given, and which theſe ſcoffers object; and therefore he would have them know, obſerve, and conſider this one thing, which might be of great uſe to them to make their minds eaſy, and keep up their faith and expectation of the coming of Chriſt: that one day is with the Lord as a thouſand years, and a thouſand years as one day; referring either to Pſ. xc. 4. or to a common ſaying among the Jews, founded on the ſame paſſage, יומו של הק״בה אלף שנים, the day of the holy bleſſed God is a thouſand years[z]; ſuggeſting, that tho' between thirty and forty years had elapſed ſince the promiſe was given out, that Chriſt would come again, and ſhould, even a thouſand, or two thouſand years more, run off, before the coming of Chriſt, yet this ſhould be no objection to the accompliſhment of the promiſe; for tho' ſuch a number of years is very conſiderable among men, yet not with God, as the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions read, with whom a thouſand years, and even eternity itſelf, is but as a day, Iſ. xliii. 13. Unleſs this phraſe ſhould be thought to refer, as it is by ſome, to the day of judgment, and be expreſſive of the duration of that: 'tis certain, that the Jews interpreted days of millenniums, and reckoned millenniums by days, and uſed this phraſe in confirmation of it. Thus they ſay[a], "in the time "to come, which is in the laſt days, on the ſixth "day, which is the ſixth millennium, when the "Meſſiah comes, for the day of the holy bleſſed "God is a thouſand years."——And a little after, "the Lord hath created a new thing in the earth, "a woman ſhall compaſs a man. This is in the time "of the Meſſiah, which is in the ſixth day." And elſewhere[b], "the ſixth degree is called the ſixth "day, the day of the holy bleſſed God is a thou"ſand years.——And in that day the king Meſ"ſiah ſhall come, and it ſhall be called the feaſt "of gathering, for the holy bleſſed God will ga"ther in it the captivity of his people." So they call the ſabbath, or ſeventh day, the ſeventh millennium, and interpret[c], "the ſong for the ſab"bath-day, Pſ. xcii. title, for the ſeventh millen"nium, for one day of the holy bleſſed God is a "thouſand years." To which agrees the tradition of Elias, which runs thus[d]; "'tis the tradition "of the houſe of Elias, that the world ſhall be ſix "thouſand years, two thouſand years void (of the "law), two thouſand years the law, and two thou"ſand years the days of the Meſſiah;" for they ſuppoſe that the ſix days of the creation were expreſſive of the ſix thouſand years in which the world will ſtand; and that the ſeventh day prefigures the laſt millennium, in which will be the day of judgment, and the world to come; for "the ſix days of the creation, they ſay[e], is a ſign "or intimation of theſe things: on the ſixth day "man was created, and on the ſeventh his work "was finiſhed; ſo the kings of the nations of the "world (continue) five millenniums, anſwering to "the five days, in which were created the fowls, "and the creeping things of the waters, and other "things; and the enjoyment of their kingdom is "a little in the ſixth, anſwerable to the creation of "the beaſts, and living creatures created at this time "in the beginning of it; and the kingdom of the "houſe of David is in the ſixth millennium, an"ſwerable to the creation of man, who knew his "creator, and rul'd over them all; and in the end "of that millennium, will be the day of judg"ment, anſwerable to man, who was judged in "the end of it; and the ſeventh is the ſabbath, "and it is the beginning of the world to come."

Ver. 9. The Lord is not ſlack concerning his promiſe, &c.] The Syriac verſion reads in the plural, his promiſe, any of his promiſes; tho' the words ſeem rather to regard the particular promiſe of Chriſt's coming, either to take vengeance on the Jewiſh nation, of which coming there was a promiſe made, and is often referr'd to by Chriſt, and his Apoſtles; ſee Mark ix. 1. John xxi. 22. Heb. x. 37. and it now being upwards of thirty years ſince, it was given out, ſome men began to charge God with ſlackneſs and dilatorineſs; whereas the true reaſon of the delay of it was, that there might be time for the gathering in of his elect, among them by his angels, or apoſtles and miniſters, ſent into the ſeveral parts of Judea, that ſo none of them might periſh, but be brought to faith and repentance; and thus as the time of Chriſt's coming was prolonged more than was thought it would, ſo when the days of afflictions were come, they were ſhortened alſo for theſe elects ſake: or this promiſe regards the ſecond coming of Chriſt, to judge the quick and dead at the laſt day, of which the former was a prelude, preſage, and pledge; that Chriſt would come again, and appear a ſecond time in perſon, was promiſed by himſelf, and often ſpoken of by his Apoſtles; and many of the primitive chriſtians thought it would be very ſoon, and which might be occaſioned by the hints that were given of his coming in the other ſenſe. Now this being deferred longer than was expected, the ſcoffers or mockers, take upon them to charge the Lord with ſlackneſs in the fulfilment of his promiſe: as ſome men count ſlackneſs; as if he had either changed his purpoſe, or had prolonged it beyond the appointed time, or was unmindful of his promiſe, and would never fulfil it; whereas he is in one mind, and none can turn him, nor will he delay the fulfilment of his promiſe beyond the ſet time; he has fixed a day for his coming, in which he'll judge the world in righteouſneſs, and he'll keep it: he is not dilatory, but is long-ſuffering to us-ward; not to all the individuals of human nature, for the perſons intended by us are manifeſtly diſtinguiſhed from ſome men in the text, and from ſcoffers, mocking at the promiſe of Chriſt's coming, in the context, ver. 3, 4. and are expreſsly called beloved, ver. 1, 8, 14, 17. and God's long-ſuffering towards them, is their ſalvation, ver. 15. nor is it true of all men, that God is not willing that any of them ſhould periſh, and that every one of them ſhould come to repentance, ſince many of them do periſh in their ſins, and do not come to repentance, which would not be the caſe, if his determining will was otherwiſe; beſides, a ſociety or company of men are deſigned, to which the Apoſtle himſelf belonged, and of which he was a part; and who are deſcribed, in his Epiſtles, as the elect of God, called out of darkneſs into marvellous light, and having obtained like precious faith with the Apoſtles; and muſt be underſtood either of God's elect among the Jews, for Peter was a Jew, and they were Jews he wrote to; and then the ſenſe is, that the delay of Chriſt's coming is not owing to any ſlackneſs in him, but to his long-ſuffering to his elect among the Jews, being unwilling that any of that number among them ſhould periſh, but that all of them repent of their ſins, and believe in him; and therefore he waits till their converſion is over, when a nation ſhall be born at once, and they that have pierced him, look on him and mourn, and ſo all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved; or rather of the elect in general, whether among Jews or Gentiles, upon whom the Lord waits to be gracious, and whoſe long-ſuffering iſſues in their converſion and ſalvation. And upon account of theſe the Lord ſtays his coming till their number is compleat in effectual vocation; and for their ſakes he is long-ſuffering to others, and bears with a wicked world, with the idolatry, ſuperſtition, hereſy, prophaneneſs, and impiety, with which it abounds; but when the laſt man that belongs to that number is called, he'll quickly deſcend in flames of fire, and burn the world, and the wicked in it, and take his choſen ones to himſelf. The Alexandrian copy reads, for you, or your ſakes; and ſo the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions. A paſſage ſomewhat like to this is met with in a book of the Jews[f], eſteemed by them very ancient. "God prolongs or defers his anger with "men; and one day, which is a thouſand years, "is fixed, beſides the ſeventy years he delivered to "David the king. —— And he does not judge "man by his evil works which he continually does, "for if ſo, the world would not ſtand; but the "holy bleſſed God defers his anger with the righteous, and the wicked, that they may return, by "perfect repentance, and be eſtabliſhed in this "world, and in the world to come." And it is an obſervation of theirs[g], that when God is ſaid to be long-ſuffering, it is not written, ארך אף, but ארך אפים, intimating, that he is long-ſuffering both to the righteous and the wicked; but then he bears with the latter, for the ſake of the former: compare with this paſſage Rev. vi. 9, 10, 11. not willing that any ſhould periſh; not any of the us, whom he has loved with an everlaſting love, whom he has choſen in his Son, and given to him, and for whom he has died, and who are brought to believe in him. Theſe, tho' they were loſt in Adam, did not periſh; and tho' in their own apprehenſions, when awakened and convinced, are ready to periſh; and though their peace, joy, and comfort may periſh for a while, and they may fear a final and total periſhing; yet they ſhall never periſh as others do, or be puniſhed with everlaſting deſtruction: and that this is the will of God, appears by his choice of them to ſalvation; by the proviſions of grace for them in an everlaſting covenant; by the ſecurity of their perſons in the hands of Chriſt; by ſending his Son to obtain ſalvation for them, and his Spirit to apply it to them; and by his keeping them by his power, thro' faith, unto ſalvation. But that all ſhould come to repentance; not legal, but evangelical, without which all muſt periſh; and which all God's elect ſtand in need of, as well as others, being equally ſinners; and which they can't come to of themſelves, and therefore he not only calls them to it, in his word, and by his Spirit and grace, but beſtows it upon them; he has exalted Chriſt at his own right hand, to give it to them; and repentance is a grant from him, a free gift of his grace; and the Spirit is ſent down into their hearts to work it in them, to take away the ſtony heart, and give an heart of fleſh; without which, whatever time and ſpace may be given, or means afforded, even the moſt awful judgments, the greateſt mercies, and the moſt powerful miniſtry, will be of no avail.

Ver. 10. But the day of the lord will come, as a thief in the night, &c.] That is, the Lord will come in that day, which he has fixed, according to his promiſe, than which nothing is more certain; and he will come, as a thief in the night: he will come in the night, which may be literally underſtood; for as his firſt coming was in the night; ſee Luke ii. 8, 10, 11. ſo perhaps his ſecond coming may be in the night ſeaſon; or, figuratively, when it will be a time of great darkneſs; when there will be little faith in the earth, and both the wiſe and fooliſh virgins will be ſlumbering and ſleeping; when it will be a ſeaſon of great ſecurity, as it was in the days of Noah, and at the time of the burning of Sodom and Gomorrha. The Vulgate Latin, Syriac and Ethiopic verſions leave out the phraſe, in the night; and the Alexandrian copy uſes the emphatic article, in the night: and he will come, as a thief, in the dark, indiſcernibly; it will not be known, what hour he will come; he will come ſuddenly, at an unawares, when he is not expected, to the great ſurprize of men, and eſpecially of the ſcoffers; when the following awful things will be done: in the which the heavens ſhall paſs away with a great noiſe; not the third heaven, the ſeat of angels and glorified ſaints, and even of God himſelf; but the ſtarry and airy heavens, which ſhall paſs away, not as to their matter and ſubſtance, but as to ſome of their accidents and qualities, and the preſent uſe of them; and that with a great noiſe, like that of a violent ſtorm, or tempeſt; though the Ethiopic verſion renders it, without a noiſe; and which is more agreeable to his coming as a thief, which is not with noiſe, but in as ſtill a manner, as poſſible; and ſome learned men obſerve, that the word ſignifies ſwiftly, as well as with a noiſe; and, accordingly, the Syriac verſion renders it ſuddenly; and the Arabic verſion preſently, immediately; that is, as ſoon as Chriſt ſhall come, immediately, at once, from his face ſhall the earth and heavens flee away, as John in a viſion ſaw, Rev. xx. 11. and the elements ſhall melt with fervent heat; not what are commonly called the four elements, earth, air, fire, and water, the firſt principles of all things: the ancient philoſophers diſtinguiſhed between principles and elements; principles, they ſay [h], are neither generated, nor corrupted; τα τε στοιχεια κατα την εκπυρωσιν φθειρεσθαι, but the elements will be corrupted, or deſtroyed by the conflagration; which exactly agrees with what the Apoſtle here ſays: by the elements, ſeem to be meant, the hoſt of heaven, being diſtinguiſhed from the heavens, as the works of the earth are diſtinguiſhed from the earth in the next clauſe; and deſign, the firmament, or expanſe, with the ſun, moon and ſtars in it, which will be purged and purified by this liquefaction by fire; the earth alſo will be purged and purified from every thing, that is noxious, hurtful, unneceſſary, and diſagreeable; though the matter and ſubſtance of it will continue: and the works that are therein, ſhall be burnt up; all the works of nature, wicked men, cattle, trees, &c. and all the works of men, cities, towns, houſes, furniture, utenſils, inſtruments of arts of all ſorts, will be burnt by a material fire, breaking out of the earth, and deſcending from heaven, for which the preſent heavens and earth are reſerved: this general conflagration was not only known to the Jews, but to the heathens, to the poets, and Platoniſt and Stoic philoſophers, who frequently [i] ſpeak of it in plain terms. Some are of opinion, that theſe words refer to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; and ſo the paſſing away of the heavens may deſign the removal of their church ſtate and ordinances, Heb. xii. 26, 27. and the melting of the elements, the ceaſing of the ceremonial law, called the elements of the world, Gal. iv. 3. 9. and the burning of the earth, the deſtruction of the land of Judea, expreſſed in ſuch a manner in Deut. xxix. 23. and xxxii. 22. and particularly of the temple, and the curious works in that, which were all burnt up and deſtroyed by fire, though Titus endeavoured to prevent it, but could not [k]: which ſenſe may be included, inaſmuch as there was a promiſe of Chriſt's coming to deſtroy the Jewiſh nation, and was expected; and which deſtruction was a prelude of the deſtruction of the world, and is ſometimes expreſſed in ſuch like language, as that is; but then this muſt not take place, to the excluſion of the other ſenſe: and whereas this ſenſe makes the words to be taken, partly in a figurative, and partly in a literal way; and ſeeing the heavens and the earth are in the context only literally taken, the former ſenſe is to be preferred; and to which beſt agrees the following uſe to be made of theſe things.

Ver. 11. Seeing then, that all theſe things ſhall be diſſolved, &c.] By fire; the heaven with all its hoſt, ſun, moon and ſtars, clouds, meteors, and fowls of the air; the earth, and all that is upon it, whether of nature, or art; and, ſince nothing is more certain, than ſuch a diſſolution of all things, what manner of perſons ought ye to be in all holy converſation and godlineſs? not as the ſcoffers and prophane ſinners, who put away this evil day far from them, but as men, who have their loins girt, and their lights burning, waiting for their Lord's coming; being continually in the exerciſe of grace, and in the diſcharge of their religious duties, watching, praying, hearing, reading; living ſoberly, righteouſly and godly; guarding againſt intemperance and worldly mindedneſs, and every worldly and hurtful luſt.

Ver. 12. Looking for, and haſting unto the coming of the day of God, &c.] The ſame with the day of the Lord, ver. 10. and ſo the Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions here read; and it intends the day of Chriſt's ſecond coming to judgment, and ſo is a proof of the deity of Chriſt; and is called the day of God, in diſtinction from man's day, or human judgment, 1 Cor. iv. 3. which is often fallacious; whereas the judgment of God is according to truth; and becauſe in that day Chriſt will appear moſt clearly to be truly and properly God, by the manifeſt diſplay of his omniſcience, omnipotence, and other glorious perfections of his; and becauſe it will be, as the day of God is, a thouſand years; and alſo the day, in which God will finiſh all his works, as on the ſeventh day, the works of creation, on this the works of providence; when all his purpoſes, promiſes and threatnings, relating to the final ſtate of all perſons and things will be fulfilled, and every work be brought to light, and into judgment, and every thing will ſtand in a clear light; for the day will declare it, either reſpecting God, or men; and there will be a diſplay, as of his grace and mercy, to his church and people; for it will be the day of his open eſpouſals to them, and of the gladneſs of his heart; ſo of his wrath and anger towards the wicked: for this great and dreadful day of the Lord ſhall burn like an oven, and deſtroy the wicked, root and branch: and it will be the day of Chriſt's glorious appearing, and of his kingdom, in which he will reign, before his ancients, glorioully; and when it is ended, God, Father, Son and Spirit, will be all in all: now the coming of this day ſaints ſhould be looking for by faith; believing that it certainly will come, ſince the patriarchs, prophets, Chriſt himſelf, the angels of heaven, and the apoſtles of the lamb, have all declared and aſſerted the coming of this day; and they ſhould look for it, and love it, as with the ſtrongeſt affection for it, and moſt vehement deſire of it, ſince they will then appear with Chriſt in glory; and they ſhould look out, and keep looking out for it, as what will be quickly; and tho' it is not, as ſoon as they deſire and expect, yet ſhould ſtill look wiſhly for it, and with patience and chearfulneſs wait for it: yea, they ſhould be haſting unto it, or haſtening it; for though the day is fixed for the coming of Chriſt, nor can it be altered, as his coming will not be longer, it cannot be ſooner, yet it becomes the ſaints to pray earneſtly for it, that it may be quickly, and for the accompliſhment of all things that go before it, prepare for it, and lead unto it; ſuch as the converſion of the Jews, and the bringing in of the fullneſs of the Gentiles; and by putting him in mind of, and pleading with him, his promiſes concerning cerning theſe things, and giving him no reſt till they are accompliſhed; there ſeems to be ſome reference to the prayers of the Jews for the Meſſiah's coming, which they deſire may be במהירה, in haſte; which will ſhow that they are in haſte for the coming of this day; and all which things God will haſten, though it will be in his own time: and moreover, ſaints ſhould be haſting to it by their readineſs for it, having their loins girt, and their lights burning, and their lamps trimmed, and they waiting for their Lord's coming, and going forth in acts of faith and love, and in the duties of religion, to meet him, and not ſlumber and ſleep: wherein; in which day, as in ver. 10. or by which; by which coming of Chriſt, or of the day of God, the heavens being on fire ſhall be diſſolved, and the elements ſhall melt weth fervent heat; at whoſe coming and preſence, and from whoſe face the heavens and earth ſhall flee away, juſt as the earth ſhook, and the heavens dropped, and Sinai itſelf moved, when God appeared upon it; ſee Rev. xx. 11. Pſ. lxviii. 8. This is a repetition of what is ſaid in ver 10. exciting attention to the exhortation given.

Ver. 13. Nevertheleſs we, according to his promiſe, &c.] Or promiſes, as the Alexandrian copy, and the Vulgate Latin verſion; namely thoſe in Iſ. lxv. 17. and lxvi. 22. look for new heavens and a new earth; not figuratively, the world to come in diſtinction from the Jewiſh world or ſtate; a new church-ſtate, the Goſpel-diſpenſation, with new ordinances, as baptiſm and the Lord's-ſupper, all legal ceremonies and ordinances being gone, and every thing new; for theſe things had taken place already, and were not looked for as future: but theſe phraſes are to be underſtood literally, as the heavens and the earth are in every paſſage in the context, ver. 5, 7, 10. and deſigns not new heavens and earth for ſubſtance, but for qualities; the heavens and elements being melted and diſſolved, and ſo purged and purified by fire, and the earth and its works being burnt up with it, and ſo cleared of every thing noxious, needleſs, and diſagreeable, new heavens and a new earth will appear, refined and purged from every thing which the curſe brought thereon for man's ſin: and ſuch heavens and earth the ſaints look for by faith and hope, and earneſt expectation, and with deſire and pleaſure; and therefore are not diſtreſſed, as they have no reaſon to be, with the burning of the preſent heavens and earth, as awful as theſe things will be; and they expect them not upon their own fancies and imaginations, or the vain conjectures and cunningly deviſed fables of men, but according to the promiſes of God recorded in the above paſſages, and in which they may be confirmed by the words of Chriſt, and by the viſion of John, Rev. xx. 1, 5. The Alexandrian copy reads, and his promiſes; as if it reſpected other promiſes the ſaints looked for beſides the new heavens and earth; namely, the reſurrection of the dead, eternal life, the incorruptible inheritance, the ultimate glory and happineſs: wherein dwelleth righteouſneſs; meaning not the heavenly felicity, called ſometimes the crown of righteouſneſs, and the hope of righteouſneſs, to which righteouſneſs gives a right, and where it will be perfect, for the Apoſtle is not ſpeaking of the ultimate glory of the ſaints; nor the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, as dwelling in the ſaints, as if the ſenſe was this, we in whom righteouſneſs dwells, look for new heavens and a new earth; for though the righteouſneſs of Chriſt is unto and upon them that believe, yet it is not in them; it is in Chriſt, and dwells in him, and not in them; it is not inherent in them, but imputed to them: by righteouſneſs is meant righteous men; ſuch as are ſo not in and of themſelves, or by the deeds of the law, or by works of righteouſneſs done by them, but who are made righteous by the obedience of Chriſt, and are righteouſneſs itſelf in him; ſee Jer. xxxiii. 16. 2 Cor. v. 21. now theſe, and theſe only, will be the inhabitants of the new heavens and the new earth; there will be no unrighteous perſons there, as in the preſent world, which lies in wickedneſs, and is full of wicked men; and they will be ſtocked with inhabitants after this manner; all the elect will now be gathered in, and Chriſt, when he comes, will bring all his ſaints with him from heaven, and will raiſe their bodies, and re-unite them to their ſouls; and thoſe that are alive will be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, and will make up together the general aſſembly and church of the firſt-born, whoſe names are written in heaven; and whereas upon the coming of Chriſt, the preſent heavens and earth will be burnt or purified by fire, and ſo made new and fit for the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect, who being again embodied, will fill the face of them, and ſhall inherit the earth, and reign with Chriſt on it for a thouſand years, during which time there will not be a wicked man in them; for the wicked that will be alive at Chriſt's coming, will be burnt with the earth, and the wicked dead ſhall not riſe till the thouſand years are ended, and who being raiſed, will, together with the devils, make the Gog and Magog army; wherefore none but righteous perſons can look for theſe new heavens and earth, for to theſe only are they promiſed, and ſuch only ſhall dwell in them; ſo the Targum on Jer. xxiii. 23. paraphraſes the words, "I God have created the world from "the beginning, ſaith the Lord, I God will renew "the world for the righteous:" and this will be, the Jews ſay, for the ſpace of a thouſand years; "it is a tradition, they ſay [l], of the houſe of Elias, "that the righteous, whom the holy bleſſed God "will raiſe from the dead, ſhall not return to their "duſt, as is ſaid, Iſ. iv. 3. and it ſhall come to paſs, "&c. as the holy one continues for ever, ſo they "ſhall continue for ever; and if you ſhould ſay "thoſe years (ſome editions read, thoſe thouſand "years, and ſo the Gloſs upon the place) in which "the holy bleſſed God renews the world; as it is "ſaid Iſ. ii. 11. and the Lord alone; &c. what ſhall "they do? the holy bleſſed God will make them "wings as eagles, and they ſhall fly upon the face "of the waters:" and this renovation of the heavens and the earth they ſay, will be in the ſeventh millennium; "in the ſeventh thouſand year, they "aſſert [m], there will be found new heavens and a "new earth;" which agree with theſe words of Peter.

Ver. 14. Wherefore, beloved, ſeeing ye look for theſe things, &c.] For the burning of the heavens and the earth, for the coming of Chriſt, and for the new heavens and new earth, be diligent that ye may be found of him; Chriſt, or αυτω, in him, as in Phil. iii. 9. for ſuch as are in Chriſt will have an undoubted right to the new heavens and the new earth, and will certainly dwell in them, becauſe they'll be found not in their own righteouſneſs, but in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt: or before him, as the Arabic verſion renders it; before him the judge of all, at whoſe tribunal they muſt ſtand; but being cloathed with his righteouſneſs, and ſo without ſpot and blemiſh, they'll not be aſhamed before him: or by him; Chriſt firſt finds his in redemption, and next in effectual vocation, and laſt of all at his coming, when all the elect will be looked up, gathered in, and preſented firſt to himſelf, and then to his father, compleat and perfect, not one wanting: and thus to be found in him, and before him, and by him, ſhould be the concern of all that look for the glorious things here ſpoken of, and particularly that they be found in the following ſituation and circumſtances: in peace; intereſted in that peace Chriſt has made by the blood of his croſs; for ſuch as are reconciled to God by his death, ſhall be ſaved by his life, and live with him in the new heavens and new earth, and for ever in the ultimate glory; and in enjoying that peace of conſcience which he himſelf gives, and which flows from his blood, righteouſneſs and atonement; ſo that the day of his coming by death, or at judgment, will not be terrifying to them, but they will look for theſe things with great delight and ſatisfaction: or in peace one with another; for peace-makers and keepers are called the children of God, and ſo heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Chriſt; or in happineſs and glory, expreſſed by peace, which is the end of the righteous man, which he enters into at death, and will reſt in to all eternity: without ſpot and blemiſh; no man is ſo in himſelf, ſanctification is imperfect, and many are the ſlips and falls of the ſaints, tho' their deſire is to be harmleſs and inoffenſive, and to give no juſt occaſion for blame or ſcandal; but the ſaints are ſo in Chriſt Jeſus, being waſhed in his blood, and cloathed with his righteouſneſs, and will be found ſo by him when he comes again, when he will preſent them to himſelf a glorious church, without ſpot or wrinkle, and alſo before the preſence of his father's glory, as faultleſs, with exceeding joy; and ſo will they be fit and meet to be the inhabitants of the new heavens and new earth, and reign with him therein, and be with him to all eternity.

[m] Zohar in Gen. fol. 35, 3.

Ver. 15. And account that the long-ſuffering of our Lord, &c.] Not his long-ſuffering towards the wicked, and his forbearance with them, for that is not the means of, nor the way to, nor does it iſſue in, their ſalvation, but in their ſorer puniſhment and greater damnation, ſee Rom. ii. 4. and ix. 22. but towards the elect, as in ver. 9. whom he bears much and long with before converſion, whilſt in their ſins, and in a ſtate of unregeneracy, and waits to be gracious to them, as he is in their vocation, and to make known and apply his great ſalvation to them; and as with particular perſons, ſo with the whole body of them, till they are all gathered in, and even with the world for their ſakes; and particularly the Lord's long-ſuffering here intends, the deferring of his coming, or his ſeeming ſlackneſs in the performance of his promiſe: the reaſon of which is, ſalvation; the ſalvation of all his choſen ones, and in that it iſſues; he waits, he ſtays, that none of them might periſh, but that they might be all brought to faith and repentance, and ſo be ſaved: wherefore the Apoſtle would have the ſaints conſider it in this light, and not imagine and conclude, with the ſcoffing infidels, that he is ſlack and dilatory, and will not come, but that his view in it is the ſalvation of all his people, which by this means is brought about: in confirmation of which, and other things he had delivered, he produces the teſtimony of the Apoſtle Paul; even as our beloved brother Paul alſo; he calls him a brother, both on account of his being a believer in Chriſt, one that belonged to the ſame family with him, and was of the houſhold of faith, born of the ſame father, and related to the ſame redeemer the firſt born among many brethren, and likewiſe on account of his being a fellow Apoſtle; for though he was not one of the twelve Apoſtles, but his call and miſſion were later than theirs, yet Peter does not diſdain to put him among them, and upon an equal foot with them, nor was he a whit behind the chief of them: he ſtiles him a beloved brother; expreſſing his affection for him which the relation between them called for, and which he bore to him, notwithſtanding his public oppoſition to him, and ſharp reproof of him, Gal. ii. 11. and perhaps loved him the more for it; ſee Pſ. cxli. 5. Prov. xxvii. 5, 6. and he makes mention of him, and that under theſe characters, partly to ſhew their agreement and conſent in doctrine; and partly to recommend him to the Jews, to whom he writes, who had, upon report of his doctrine and miniſtry, entertained an ill, at leaſt a mean opinion, of him; as alſo to ſet us an example to ſpeak well of one another, both as miniſters and private believers: according to the wiſdom given unto him, hath written unto you; meaning not all his Epiſtles, as being written for the general good of all the ſaints, as well as for thoſe particular churches or men to whom they were ſent; for what Peter ſpeaks of is what was particularly written to them, and is diſtinguiſhed in the following verſe from the reſt of Paul's Epiſtles; nor does he intend the Epiſtle of Paul to the Romans, for the long-ſuffering of God ſpoken of in that, as in ch. ii. 4. and ix. 22. is his long-ſuffering to the wicked, which iſſues in their deſtruction, and not his long-ſuffering to his elect, which is ſalvation, as here; but he ſeems maniſeſtly to have in view the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, for Peter wrote both his firſt and ſecond Epiſtles to Jews; wherefore, ſince none of Paul's Epiſtles but that were written particularly to them, it ſhould ſeem that that is deſigned, and ſerves to confirm his being the author of it; in which he writes to the Hebrews concerning the coming of Chriſt, and of the deferring of it a little while, and of the need they had of patience to wait for it, Heb. x. 36, 37. and in it alſo are ſome things difficult to be underſtood concerning Melchizedek, the old and new covenant, the removing of the Aaronical prieſthood, and the abrogation of the whole ceremonial law, &c. things not eaſily received by that nation; and the whole is written with great wiſdom, reſpecting the perſon and office of Chriſt, the nature of his prieſthood, and the glory of the goſpel-diſpenſation; and in a moſt admirable manner is the whole Moſaic œconomy laid open and explained: he was indeed a wiſe maſter-builder, and whatever he wrote was according to wiſdom; not fleſhly wiſdom, the wiſdom of this world, nor with enticing words of mens wiſdom, but according to the divine wiſdom, under the influence of the Spirit of wiſdom and revelation; for he had not this of himſelf naturally, nor did he learn it at Gamaliel's feet, but it was what was given to him; it came from above, from God, who gives it liberally; and as he himſelf always owned it to be a free-grace-gift of God beſtowed on him, and that all his light and knowledge were by the revelation of Chriſt, ſo Peter aſcribes it to the ſame, that God might have all the glory, and all boaſting in man be ſtopped.

Ver. 16. As alſo in all his Epiſtles, &c.] From whence it appears, that the Apoſtle Paul had, by this time, wrote ſeveral of his Epiſtles, if not all of them; and they were all written according to the ſame wiſdom, and under the influence of the ſame Spirit, as his Epiſtle to the Hebrews: ſpeaking in them of thoſe things; of the ſame things Peter had been ſpeaking of, of the coming of Chriſt, as that he ſhould appear a ſecond time to them that look for him, and would come as a thief in the night, and that the faſhion, ſcheme, and form of this world ſhould paſs away, and that ſaints ſhould look and wait for his coming, and love it: ſomething of this kind is ſaid in all his Epiſtles; ſee Heb. ix. 28. 1 Theſſ. v. 2. 1 Cor. vii. 31. and i. 7. Tit. ii. 13. 2 Tim. iv. 8. and alſo of mockers, ſcoffers, ſeducers, and wicked men that would ariſe in the laſt days; ſee 1 Tim. iv. 1. 2 Tim. iii. 1. in which are ſome things hard to be underſtood. The phraſe, in which, refers either to the Epiſtles, or the things ſpoken in them. The Alexandrian manuſcript, and three of Robert Stephens's copies read, εν αις, in which Epiſtles, but the generality of copies read, εν οις, in, or among which things, ſpoken of in them, concerning the ſubject here treated of, the coming of Chriſt; as the time of Chriſt's coming, which is ſometimes repreſented by the Apoſtle, as if it would be whilſt he was living; and the manner of his coming in perſon with all his ſaints, and his mighty angels, with a ſhout, the voice of the archangel, and trump of God, things not eaſily underſtood; and the deſtruction of antichriſt at his coming, which will be with the breath of his mouth, and the brightneſs of his coming; as alſo the reſurrection of the dead, of the ſaints that will riſe firſt, and that with ſpiritual bodies; and likewiſe the change of the living ſaints, and the rapture both of living and raiſed ſaints together, in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and the ſtanding of them before the judgment-ſeat of Chriſt, and the account that every one muſt give to him, 1 Theſſ. iv. 15, 16, 17. 2 Theſſ. i. 7, 8. and ii. 8. 1 Cor. xv. 44, 51, 52. 2 Cor. v. 10. Rom. xiv. 12. which they that are unlearned; untaught of God, who have never learned of the Father, nor have learned Chriſt, nor have that anointing which teacheth all things; who, tho' they may have been in the ſchools of men, were never in the ſchool of Chriſt; and tho' they have been ever learning, yet will never come to the knowledge of the truth; for men may have a large ſhare of human literature, and yet be unlearned men in the ſenſe of the Apoſtle; and very often it is, that ſuch wreſt and pervert the ſcriptures to the ruin of themſelves, and others: and unſtable; unſettled in their principles, who are like children toſſed to and fro with every wind of doctrine; the root of the matter is not in them; nor are they rooted and built up in Chriſt, and ſo are not eſtabliſhed in the faith; they are not upon the foundation Chriſt, nor do they build upon, and abide by the ſure word of God, or form their notions according to it, but according to their own carnal reaſonings, and fleſhly luſts; and ſo wreſt the word of God, diſtort it from its true ſenſe and meaning, and make it ſpeak that which it never deſigned; dealing with it as innocent perſons are ſometimes uſed, put upon a rack, and tortured, and ſo forced to ſpeak what is contrary to their knowledge and conſciences; and ſo were the words of the Apoſtle Paul wreſted by ill deſigning men, as about the doctrines of grace and works, ſo concerning the coming of Chriſt; ſee Rom. iii. 8. 2 Theſſ. ii. 1, 2. as they do alſo the other ſcriptures; the writings of Moſes, and the prophets of the Old Teſtament, the Goſpels, the Acts of the Apoſtles, and the other Epiſtles of the Apoſtles of the New Teſtament: and which is eventually, unto their own deſtruction; for by ſo doing they either add unto, or detract from the ſcriptures, and ſo bring the curſe of God upon them; and they give into doctrines of devils, and into hereſies, which are damnable, and bring upon themſelves ſwift deſtruction, which lingers not, and ſlumbers not. Now from hence it does not follow, that the ſcriptures are not to be read by the common people; for not all the parts of ſcripture, and all things in it, are hard to be underſtood, there are many things very plain and eaſy, even every thing reſpecting eternal ſalvation; there's milk for babes, as well as meat for ſtrong men: beſides, not the ſcriptures in general, but Paul's Epiſtles, only, are here ſpoken of, and not all of them, or any one whole Epiſtle among them, only ſome things in them, and theſe not impoſſible, only difficult to be underſtood; and which is no reaſon why they ſhould be laid aſide, but rather why they ſhould be read with greater application and diligence, and be followed with fervent prayer, and frequent meditation; and tho' unlearned and unſtable men may wreſt them to their perdition, thoſe that are taught of God, tho' otherwiſe illiterate, may read them to great profit and advantage.

Ver. 17. Ye therefore, beloved, ſeeing ye know theſe things before, &c.] As that there will be ſuch mockers and ſcoffers in the laſt days, and ſuch unlearned and unſtable men that will deprave the ſcriptures, and wreſt them in ſuch a miſerable manner: beware, leſt ye alſo being led away with the error of the wicked; from the ſimplicity of the Goſpel, along with ſuch wicked men, that wax worſe and worſe, deceivers and being deceived, by giving into any of their errors which reſpect the grace of God, or the perſon and offices of Chriſt, or particularly his ſecond coming; be upon the watch and guard againſt them, having previous notice of them, for they lie in wait to deceive: leſt ye fall from your own ſtedfaſtneſs; which was proper to them, and which, by the grace of God, they had, and retained, both in the faith of Chriſt, and doctrine of the Goſpel; for tho' the ſaints can never finally and totally fall into ſin, or from the truth, yet they may fall from their ſtedfaſtneſs, both as to the exerciſe of the grace of faith, and as to their profeſſion of the doctrine of faith; and to be fluctuating, heſitating, and doubting in either reſpect, muſt be very uncomfortable and diſhonourable.

Ver. 18. But grow in grace, &c.] In the gifts of grace, which, under a divine bleſſing, may be increaſed by uſing them: gifts neglected decreaſe, but ſtirred up and uſed, are improved and increaſe. And tho' men are to be thankful for their gifts, and be contented with them, yet they may lawfully deſire more, and in the uſe of means ſeek an increaſe of them, which may be a means of preſerving themſelves, and others, from the error of the wicked. Moreover, by grace may be meant internal grace. The work of grace is gradual; it is like a grain of muſtard-ſeed, or like ſeed caſt into the earth, which ſprings up, it is not known how, firſt the blade, then the ear, then the full corn in the ear; ſaints are firſt babes, and from children they grow to young men, and from young men to fathers. There is ſuch a thing as growth in grace, in this ſenſe; every grace, as to its act and exerciſe, is capable of growing and increaſing; faith may grow exceedingly, hope abound, love increaſe, and patience have its perfect work, and ſaints may grow more humble, holy, and ſelf-denying: this is indeed God's work, to cauſe them to grow, and it is owing to his grace; yet ſaints ſhould ſhow a concern for this, and make uſe of means which God owns and bleſſes for this purpoſe, ſuch as prayer, attending on the word, and looking over the promiſes of God, for an increaſe of faith; recollecting paſt experiences, and looking to the death and reſurrection of Chriſt for the encouragement of hope, and to the love of God and Chriſt, for the ſtirring up of love to both, and to the ſaints; conſidering the ſufferings of Chriſt, the deſert of ſin, and the glories of another world, to promote patience, and ſelf-denial, and the pattern of Chriſt, to excite to humility; tho' grace may alſo intend the Goſpel, the knowledge of which is imperfect, and may be increaſed in the uſe of means, and which is a ſpecial preſervative againſt error, a growth in which ſaints ſhould be concerned for: and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; of his perſon, office, and grace, than which nothing is more valuable, and is to be preferred to every thing; it is the principal thing in grace, and is the beginning and pledge of eternal life, and will iſſue in it; for an increaſe of which, and a growth in it, the word and ordinances are deſigned; and nothing can be a greater ſecurity againſt error than an experimental growing knowledge of Chriſt. The Syriac verſion adds, and of God the Father; and ſo ſome copies read: to him be glory, both now, and for ever; or to the day of eternity; that is, to Chriſt, who is truly God, or otherwiſe ſuch a doxology would not belong to him, be aſcribed the glory of deity, of all divine perfections; the glory of all his offices and work as mediator; the glory of man's ſalvation; and the glory of all that grace, and the growth of it, together with the knowledge of himſelf, which ſaints have from him; and that both in this world, and that which is to come. Amen; ſo be it.

AN EXPOSITION, &c.

The Firſt Epiſtle General of JOHN.

THE Author of this Epiſtle was John, the ſon of Zebedee, the diſciple whom Jeſus loved: he was the youngeſt of the Apoſtles, and ſurvived them all. He does not indeed put his name to this Epiſtle, as the Apoſtles Paul, Peter, James, and Jude do to theirs; and it is eaſy to obſerve, that when this diſciple, in his writings, had any occaſion to ſpeak of himſelf, it was uſually by ſuch a circumlocution, as the diſciple whom Jeſus loved, or the other diſciple, ſtudiouſly concealing his name: ſo that his not putting his name to this Epiſtle, need not create any ſcruple about his being the author of it, which every where breathes the temper and ſpirit of this great Apoſtle; and whoever compares this Epiſtle, and the Goſpel written by him, together, will eaſily conclude it to be his, both from the ſtile and ſubject-matter of it: beſides, as Euſebius aſſerts[a], this Epiſtle was generally received without ſcruple, both by ancient and modern writers. It is called general, becauſe it was not written and ſent to any particular church, or perſon, and not becauſe it was for the general uſe of the churches, for ſo are all the particular Epiſtles; but becauſe it was written to the chriſtians in general, or to the believing Jews in general, where-ever they were; for that it was written to the Jews, ſeems evident from ch. ii. 2. It was called, by ſome of the ancients, the Epiſtle of John to the Parthians[b]; by whom muſt be meant, not the natives of Parthia, but the Jews profeſſing to believe in Chriſt, who dwelt in that empire. We read of Parthian Jews at the feaſt of Pentecoſt, Acts ii. 9. who at that time might be converted, and upon their return to their own country, lay the foundation of a Goſpel church-ſtate there. Dr. Lightfoot[c] conjectures from a paſſage in 3 John 9. that this Epiſtle was written to the Corinthians; but there does not ſeem to be any ſufficient reaſon for it. As for the time when, and place where, this Epiſtle was written, it is not eaſy to ſay: ſome think it was written at Patmos, whither the Apoſtle was baniſhed in the reign of Domitian, and where he wrote the book of the Revelations; ſee Rev. i. 9. and here ſome ſay he wrote his Goſpel, and this Epiſtle, and that a little before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and which he calls the laſt time or hour; and that his deſign in writing it, was to exhort the believing Jews, either in Parthia, or ſcattered about in other countries, to brotherly love, and to warn them againſt falſe Chriſts and falſe prophets, which were now gone forth into the world to deceive men; ſee ch. ii. 18. and iv. 1. Others think that it was written by him, when a very old man, after his return from his exile to Epheſus, where he reſided during his life, and where he died, and was buried. It is called his firſt Epiſtle general, not that it is the firſt general Epiſtle, for the other two are written to particular perſons, but is the firſt he wrote, and which is general: the occaſion, and manifeſt deſign of it is to promote brotherly love, which he enforces upon the beſt principles, and with the ſtrongeſt arguments, taken from the love of God and Chriſt, from the commandment of Chriſt, and its being an evidence of regeneration, and the truth and glory of a profeſſion of religion: and alſo to oppoſe and ſtop the growth of licentious principles, and practices, and heretical doctrines. The licentious principles and practices he condemns are theſe, that believers had no ſin in them, or need not be concerned about it, nor about their outward converſation, ſo be they had but knowledge; and theſe men boaſted of their communion with God, notwithſtanding their impieties; and which were the ſentiments and practices of the Nicolaitans, Gnoſticks, and Carpocratians. The hereſies he ſets himſelf againſt, and refutes, are ſuch as regard the doctrine of the Trinity, and the perſon and office of Chriſt. There were ſome who denied a diſtinction of perſons in the Trinity, and aſſerted there was but one perſon; that the Father was not diſtinct from the Son, nor the Son from the Father; and by confounding both, tacitly denied there was either, as Simon Magus, and his followers; regard is had to theſe in ch. ii. 22. and v. 7. and others, as the unbelieving Jews, denied, that Jeſus was the Meſſiah, or that Chriſt was come in the fleſh; theſe are taken notice of in ch. ii. 22. and iv. 2, 3. and v. 1. Others, that profeſſed to believe in Jeſus Chriſt, denied his proper deity, and aſſerted he was a mere man, and did not exiſt before he took fleſh of the virgin, as Ebion and Cerinthus; theſe are oppoſed in ch. i. 1, 2. and iii. 16. and v. 20. And others denied his real humanity, and affirmed, that he was a mere phantom; that he only had the appearance of a man, and aſſumed human nature, and ſuffered, and died, and roſe again in ſhew only, and not in reality; of which ſort were the followers of Saturninus and Baſilides, and which are confuted in ch. i. 1, 2, 3. This Epiſtle is, by Clemens Alexandrinus[d], called his greater or larger Epiſtle, it being ſo in compariſon of the other two that follow.

CHAP. I.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle gives a ſummary of the Goſpel, and the evidence of it, and from thence preſſes to a holy life and converſation. The ſum of the Goſpel is Jeſus Chriſt, who is deſcribed both as God and man; his deity is expreſſed by being that which was from the beginning, the word of life, life, and eternal life; his humanity by being the life manifeſted in the fleſh, of which the Apoſtles had full evidence by the ſeveral ſenſes of ſeeing, hearing, and handling, and ſo were capable of bearing witneſs to the truth thereof, ver. 1, 2. And the ends had in view in giving this ſummary, evidence, and teſtimony, were, that the ſaints wrote unto might have fellowſhip with the Apoſtles, whoſe fellowſhip was with the Father, and his Son Jeſus Chriſt, and that their joy on hearing theſe things might be full, ver. 3, 4. And the amount of the meſſage declared by them was, that God is light, or a pure and holy being, and that there is no darkneſs of ſin, or unholineſs in him; wherefore all ſuch that pretend to communion with him, and live a ſinful courſe of life, are liars; only ſuch have fellowſhip with him, and with his Son, whoſe blood cleanſes them from all ſin, who live holy lives and converſations, ver. 5, 6, 7. not that it is to be expected that men ſhould be clear of the being of ſin in this life, only that they ſhould, as often as they ſin, be humbled for it, and confeſs it before God, who will forgive them, and cleanſe them from all unrighteouſneſs; but as for thoſe who affirm they have no ſin in them, or any done by them, they are ſelf-deceivers, the truth of grace is not in them, nor the word of God, and they make him a liar, ver. 8, 9, 10.

Ver. 1. That which was from the beginning, &c.] By which is meant not the Goſpel, as if the Apoſtle's deſign was to aſſert the antiquity of that, and clear it from the charge of novelty; for tho' that is called the Word, and the Word of life, and is the Spirit which gives life, and is the means of quickning dead ſinners, and brings the report of eternal life and ſalvation by Chriſt, yet the ſeeing of it with bodily eyes, and handling it with corporeal hands, do not agree with that; but Jeſus Chriſt is here intended, who in his divine nature was, really exiſted as a divine perſon, as the everlaſting Jehovah, the eternal I AM, which is, and was, and is to come, and exiſted from the beginning; not from the beginning of the preaching of the Goſpel by John only, for he was before the Goſpel was preached, being the firſt preacher of it himſelf, and before John was; yea, before the prophets, before Abraham, and before Adam, and before all creatures, from the beginning of time, and of the creation of the world, being the maker of all things, even from everlaſting; for otherwiſe he could not have been ſet up in an office-capacity ſo early, or God's elect be choſen in him before the foundation of the world, and they have grace and bleſſings given them in him before the world began, or an everlaſting covenant be made with him; ſee John i. 1. which we have heard; this, with what follows, proves him to be truly and really man; for when the Word was made fleſh, and dwelt among men, the Apoſtles heard, and ſaw, and handled him; they not only heard a voice from heaven, declaring him to be the Son of God, but they often heard him ſpeak himſelf, both in private converſation with them, and in his public miniſtry; they heard his many excellent diſcourſes on the mount, and elſewhere, and thoſe that were particularly delivered to them a little before his death; and bleſſed were they on this account, Matt. xiii. 16, 17. which we have ſeen with our eyes; with the eyes of the body, with their own, and not another's; and they ſaw him in human nature, and the common actions of life he did, as eating, drinking, walking, &c. and his many miracles; they ſaw him raiſe the dead, cleanſe the lepers, reſtore ſight to the blind, cauſe the lame to walk, the dumb to ſpeak, and the deaf to hear; and they ſaw him transfigured on the mount. John was one that was preſent at that time, and ſaw his glory, as he alſo was when he hung upon the croſs, and ſaw him bleeding, gaſping, and dying there; they ſaw him after his reſurrection from the dead, he ſhewed himſelf to them alive, and was ſeen of them forty days; they ſaw him go up to heaven, and a cloud receiving him out of their ſight: which we have looked upon; wiſhly and intently, once and again, and a thouſand times, and with the utmoſt pleaſure and delight; and knew him perfectly well, and were able to deſcribe exactly his perſon, ſtature, features, and the lineaments of his body: and our hands have handled of the word of life; as Peter did when Jeſus caught him by the hand on the water, when he was juſt ready to ſink; and as this Apoſtle did, when he leaned on his boſom; and as Thomas did, even after his reſurrection, when he thruſt his hand into his ſide; and as all the Apoſtles were called upon to ſee and handle him, that it was he himſelf, and not a Spirit, which has not fleſh and bones as he had. Now as this is ſaid of Chriſt, the Word of life, who is ſo called, becauſe he has life in himſelf, as God, as the mediator, and as man, and is the author of life, natural, ſpiritual, and eternal, it muſt be underſtood as he, the Word, is made manifeſt in the fleſh; for he, as the Word, or as a divine perſon, or as conſidered in his divine nature, is not to be ſeen nor handled: this therefore is ſpoken of the Word, or of the perſon of Chriſt, God-man, with reſpect to his human nature, as united to the Logos, or Word of God; and ſo is a proof the truth and reality of his human nature, by ſeveral of the ſenſes.

Ver. 2. For the life was manifeſted, &c.] That is, the Word of life, who is life itſelf, the fountain of life, having it, as God, in and of himſelf, without derivation from, and independent of another, originally and eternally, and who is the cauſe, author, and giver of life in every ſenſe to others; this living God, who from all eternity, was inviſible, was in the fullneſs of time manifeſted in human nature; ſee John i. 14. 1 Tim. iii. 16. 1 John iii. 8. And we have ſeen it; as before with the eyes of their bodies: and bear witneſs; for they were both eye and ear-witneſſes of the word, and of the truth of his incarnation, and bore a faithful record both to his proper deity, and real humanity: and ſhow unto you that eternal life; Jeſus Chriſt, the true God, and eternal life, as in ch. v. 20. ſo called, becauſe he has everlaſting life in himſelf; as he is the living God, and becauſe he has eternal life for all his people; not only the purpoſe and promiſe of it are in him, but the thing itſelf; and it is in his power and gift to beſtow it on all the Father hath given to him, and to them he does give it. The beginning of it lies in the knowledge of him, and the conſummation of it will be in the everlaſting viſion and enjoyment of him: which was with the Father; that is, which life, eternal life, and Word of life, was from the beginning, or from all eternity with God the Father; which phraſe is expreſſive of the eternal exiſtence of Chriſt, as the Word and Son of God, with his Father, his relation to him, his oneneſs in nature, and equality with him, and his perſonal diſtinction from him; ſee John i. 1. and was manifeſted unto us; in human nature, as before obſerved, and that to the Apoſtles, as he was not to the patriarchs and prophets; for though they ſaw him in promiſe, in prophecy, in type, and figure, and he ſometimes appeared in an human form, for a ſhort time, to them, yet they did not ſee him incarnate, in actual union with human nature; nor had they him dwelling among them, and converſing with them, as the Apoſtles had; this was an happineſs peculiar to them.

Ver. 3. That which we have ſeen and heard, &c.] This is repeated, both to confirm and illuſtrate what had been before ſaid, and to carry on the diſcourſe to what follows: declare we unto you; in the miniſtry of the word; the perſon and offices of Chriſt being the ſum and ſubſtance of the Goſpel-miniſtration, that declares him to be the true God, and eternal life, God over all, bleſſed for ever; and truly man, made of a woman, and made under the law; and to be the only mediator between God and man, to be prophet, prieſt, and king, and to be the alone ſaviour and redeemer: this declares the greatneſs and excellency of his ſalvation, what an able, proper, and ſuitable ſaviour he is; and what precious promiſes, and ſpiritual bleſſings are in him, even all grace, and eternal glory. And this declaration of him is made in the Goſpel, for the following ends and purpoſes, that ye alſo may have fellowſhip with us; in hearing, ſeeing, and handling of Chriſt in a ſpiritual ſenſe; and by enjoying the ſame privileges in God's houſe and family, the ſame ordinances and ſpiritual proviſions; joining and partaking with them in all the immunities and advantages of a Goſpel church-ſtate here; and by being with them to all eternity hereafter. And truly our fellowſhip is with the Father; the Father of Chriſt, the covenant God and Father of his people; and which they have with him, when under the influence and witneſſings of the Spirit of adoption, and can in the ſtrength of faith call him their Father, draw nigh to him thro' Chriſt as ſuch, and are indulged with his preſence, and the diſcoveries of his love: and with his Son Jeſus Chriſt; being in union to him, they become partakers of him, and of his bleſſings; they receive out of his fulneſs, and grace for grace; they are admitted to an intimacy and familiarity with him; they are had into his chambers of ſecret retirement; they are brought into his banquetting houſe, where his banner over them is love, and where he ſups with them, and they with him; and into this fellowſhip are they called by the grace of God, thro' the Goſpel; as alſo they have fellowſhip with the bleſſed Spirit, tho' not here mentioned; ſee 2 Cor. xiii. 14.

Ver. 4. And theſe things write we unto you, &c.] Concerning the deity and eternity of Chriſt, the Word; and concerning the truth of his humanity, and the manifeſtation of him in the fleſh; and concerning that eternal life and ſalvation which is declared in the Goſpel to be in him; and concerning the ſaints fellowſhip one with another, and with God the Father, and with Jeſus Chriſt: that your joy may be full; meaning either their ſpiritual joy in this life, which has Chriſt for its object, and is increaſed by the conſideration of his proper deity, his incarnation and mediation; by a view of free juſtification, by his righteouſneſs and atonement by his blood; by a ſight of his glorious perſon by faith, and by intimate communion with him, and a diſcovery of his love, which paſſeth knowledge: and which joy, when it is large, and very great, may, in a comparative ſenſe, be ſaid to be full, tho' not abſolutely ſo, and being as much as can well be enjoyed in this ſtate; and nothing can more contribute to it than a declaration of the above things in the Goſpel, and an experimental acquaintance with them, and enjoyment of them: or elſe it may intend the joy of the ſaints in the world to come, in the preſence of Chriſt, where are fulneſs of joy, and pleaſures for evermore; and ſo may expreſs the ultimate glory and happineſs of God's people, which is the chief end, as of his purpoſes, promiſes, and covenant, ſo of the Goſpel, and the declaration of it. The Syriac verſion renders it, that our joy, which is in you, may be full; for it is the joy of the miniſters of the word, when the ſaints are eſtabliſhed in the faith of Chriſt's perſon and offices, and have communion with him, with which view they declare him, and bear record of him. Some copies read, our joy.

Ver. 5. This then is the meſſage, &c.] Of God by his Son the Word, or from Chriſt by his Apoſtles. The Syriac verſion renders it, this is the Goſpel; which is good news from a far country, a meſſage ſent from the king of kings to ſinful men; or this is the annuntiation, or declaration; that is, the thing declared, or ſhewed. Some render it, this is the promiſe, that whereas God is light, ſuch who walk in the light ſhall have communion with him, and others ſhall not: which we have heard of him; of Chriſt, who has declared him, that he is light without any mixture of darkneſs; that he is a pure Spirit, and muſt be worſhipped in a ſpiritual way; and that only ſpiritual worſhippers are ſuch as he ſeeks, and admits to communion with him. Moreover, they might hear and learn this of Chriſt, by his telling them that he himſelf was light, who is the image of the inviſible God, inſomuch, that he that has ſeen the Son, has ſeen the Father alſo. Wherefore, if the one is light, the other muſt be likewiſe; nor is there any coming to the Father, and enjoying communion with him, but through Chriſt; all which our Lord told his diſciples. The Ethiopic verſion reads, which ye have heard, very wrongly; for the words regard the Apoſtles, who made a faithful declaration of the meſſage they heard, and had from Chriſt, which is as follows: and declare unto you that God is light; that is, God the Father, as diſtinguiſhed from him, Chriſt, of whom they had heard this meſſage, and from Jeſus Chriſt his Son, ver. 7. what is declared of him, agreeable to the report of Chriſt, is, that he is light; that is, as light is oppoſed to the darkneſs of ſin; he is pure and holy in his nature and works, and of ſuch pure eyes as not to behold iniquity; and ſo perfectly holy, that angels cover their faces before him, when they ſpeak of his holineſs: and as light is oppoſed to the darkneſs of ignorance, he is wiſe and knowing; he knows himſelf, his own nature, being, and perfections, his Son and Spirit, and their diſtinct modes of ſubſiſting; he ſees clearly all things in himſelf, all things he could do, or has determined ſhall be done; he has perfect knowledge of all creatures and things, and the darkneſs and the light are alike unto him, nor can the former hide from him: he is knowable, and to be diſcerned; he is clothed with light, and dwells in it; he may be known by the works of creation and providence; even the inviſible things of him, his eternal power and Godhead may be clearly ſeen and underſtood by them, and eſpecially in his word, and moſt clearly in his Son; it is owing to the darkneſs of men, and not to any in and about God, who is light, that he is ſo little known as he is: and like the light he illuminates others; he is the Father of lights, the author and giver of all light; of the light of reaſon to men in general; and of grace here, and glory hereafter to his own people, which are both ſignified by light; in whoſe light they ſee light; and he refreſhes and delights their ſouls, with the light of his countenance now, and with his glorious preſence in the other world: and in him is no darkneſs at all; no darkneſs of ſin; nothing more is contrary to him, or more diſtant from him: nor any darkneſs of error and ignorance; what is unknown to men, as the times and ſeaſons; what angels were ignorant of, and even Chriſt, as man, as the day and hour of Jeruſalem's deſtruction, were known to the Father; in him is no ignorance of any thing whatever; nor is there any variableneſs or ſhadow of turning in him, as there is in the luminous body of the ſun; but God is always the ſame pure and holy, wiſe and knowing being. It is uſual, with the Cabaliſtic Jews [e], to call the ſupreme being, אור, light; the moſt ſimple light, hidden light, and infinite light, with reſpect to his nature, glory, and majeſty, and with regard alſo to his grace and mercy, juſtice and judgment; though, as R. Sangari ſays [f], this is to be underſtood of him figuratively.

Ver. 6. If we ſay that we have fellowſhip with him, &c.] The Alexandrian copy reads, for if we ſay; that is, if any profeſs to be partakers of the divine nature, to be like unto God, and to have communion with him, to have the light of his countenance, and the diſcoveries of his love: and walk in darkneſs; in the darkneſs of ſin, ignorance, and unbelief, or are in a ſtate of unregeneracy, and blindneſs; whoſe underſtandings are darkened, and they know not God in Chriſt, nor have any true ſight and ſenſe of themſelves, their ſin and danger; and are ignorant of Chriſt, and his righteouſneſs, and the way of ſalvation by him; and are ſtrangers to the Spirit of God, and the work of his grace; and are unacquainted with the truths of the Goſpel; and not only ſo, but go on in darkneſs more and more; prefer it to the light, love it, and the works of it; have fellowſhip with them, and chuſe them; take pleaſure in the ways of ſin and wickedneſs, and continue, and walk on in them; if ſuch perſons pretend to fellowſhip with God, they are liars: we lye; it cannot be, it is a contradiction, the thing is impoſſible and impracticable; what communion hath light with darkneſs? or what fellowſhip can the throne of iniquity, or thoſe in whom ſin reigns, have with God? for God is light, and were they partakers of him, or like unto him, or had communion with him, they would conſequently be in the light, and not in darkneſs, and much leſs walk in it: wherefore they are liars, and do not the truth; they don't ſay the truth, nor act according to it; they don't act uprightly, or ſincerely, but are hypocrites, and pretend to that which they have not; and if they did the truth, they would come to the light, and not walk in darkneſs; ſee John iii. 21.

Ver. 7. But if we walk in the light, &c.] Are perſons enlightned by the Spirit of God, ſo as to have a true ſight and ſenſe of ſin, to know Chriſt, and the way of ſalvation by him; and are children of the light, and are going on and increaſing in ſpiritual light and knowledge; walk on in Chriſt, the light, by faith, and in the light and truth of the Goſpel, and as becomes it, and as children of light; and as ſuch who are called out of darkneſs into marvellous light: as he is in the light; according to the light which he has given, who is light itſelf, is in it, and dwells in it. This as denotes not equality, but likeneſs: when this is the caſe, then it is a clear point, that we have fellowſhip one with another; not with the ſaints, with the Apoſtles, and other chriſtians, but with God: we have mutual communion, as the Arabic verſion renders it; God with us, and we with him. Some copies read, with him, as in ver. 6. and ſuch a reading the ſenſe requires; and agreeable to this the Ethiopic verſion renders it, and we are partakers among ourſelves with him; that is, we all jointly and mutually appear to be like him, and partake of his nature, and have communion with him; and not only ſo, but with his Son Jeſus Chriſt, as appears from our having a ſhare in the cleanſing efficacy of his blood: and the blood of Jeſus Chriſt, his Son, cleanſeth us from all ſin; there is a pollution on human nature, which is original, natural, univerſal, and internal, and is ſuch that nothing can remove but the blood of Chriſt; not ceremonial ablutions and ſacrifices, nor moral duties, nor evangelical performances, or ſubmiſſion to Goſpel-ordinances, and particularly baptiſm, which is not the putting away the filth of the fleſh; nor even the graces of the Spirit, no, not faith, no otherwiſe than as it has to do with this blood; for this cleanſing is not to be underſtood of ſanctification, for that more properly belongs to the Spirit of God, and beſides, does not cleanſe from all ſin; for notwithſtanding this, ſin is in the ſaints: but either of the atonement of ſin, by the ſacrifice of Chriſt, and ſo of a compleat juſtification from it by his blood, which is put for both his active and paſſive obedience, the one being finiſhed in the other; or rather of the pardon of ſin, procured by the blood of Chriſt, and the application of that blood to the conſcience, which purges it from dead works, and which has a continued virtue in it for that purpoſe. Chriſt's blood, being applied by the Spirit of God, has been always cleanſing from ſin; it had this virtue in it, and was of this uſe, even before it was actually ſhed, to the Old Teſtament ſaints; whence Chriſt is ſaid to be the Lamb ſlain from the foundation of the world; and it has the ſame efficacy now, as when firſt ſhed, and will have to the end of the world; and being ſprinkled upon the conſcience, by the Spirit of God, it takes away the ſins of believers, and cleanſes from them, as faſt as the corruption of nature riſes, or ſins appear; and removes them out of their ſight, and ſpeaks peace to their ſouls; and which is owing, as to the dignity of Chriſt's perſon, and the value of his ſacrifice, ſo to his continual interceſſion, advocacy, and mediation; and which reaches to all ſin, original and actual, ſecret and open ſins; ſins of heart, thought, lip, and life; ſins of omiſſion and commiſſion, greater or leſſer ſins, committed againſt light and knowledge, grace and mercy, law and Goſpel, all but the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt; and in this Chriſt was the antitype of the ſcape-goat, of which the Jews ſay [f], that "it atoned for all " the tranſgreſſions of the law, whether ſmall or " great, ſins of preſumption, or of ignorance, " known, or not known, which were againſt an " affirmative or negative command, which deſerved " cutting off, (by the hand of God) or death by " the Sanhedrim." The Arabic and Ethiopic verſions render it, from all our ſins; and this muſt be aſcribed to the greatneſs of his perſon, as the Son of God; wherefore the emphaſis lies on theſe words, his ſon; the Son of God, who is equal with God, and is truly and properly God: as it muſt be the blood of man that muſt, according to the law, be ſhed, to atone for, and expiate ſin, and cleanſe from it, and that of an innocent man, who is holy, harmleſs, and without ſin; ſo it muſt not be the blood of a mere man, tho' ever ſo holy, but the blood of one that is God, as well as man; ſee Acts xx. 28. The divine nature of the Son of God, being in union with the human nature, put virtue into his blood to produce ſuch an effect, which ſtill continues, and will, as long as there is any occaſion for it.

[f] Sepher Coſri, par. 2. §. 2. fol. 61. 2.

Ver. 8. If we ſay that we have no ſin, &c.] Notwithſtanding believers are cleanſed from their ſins by the blood of Chriſt, yet they are not without ſin; no man is without ſin: this is not only true of all men, as they come into the world, being conceived in ſin, and ſhapen in iniquity, and of all that are in a ſtate of unregeneracy, and of God's elect, while in ſuch a ſtate, but even of all regenerated and ſanctified perſons in this life; as appears by the ingenuous confeſſions of ſin made by the ſaints in all ages; by their complaints concerning it, and groans under it; by the continual war in them between fleſh and ſpirit; and by their prayers for the diſcoveries of pardoning grace, and for the freſh application of Chriſt's blood for cleanſing; by their remiſſneſs in the diſcharge of duty, and by their frequent ſlips and falls, and often backſlidings: and though their ſins are all pardoned, and they are juſtified from all things by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, yet they are not without ſin; tho' they are freed from the guilt of ſin, and are under no obligation to puniſhment on account of it, yet not from the being of it; their ſins were indeed transferred from them to Chriſt, and he has bore them, and took them and put them away, and they are redeemed from them, and are acquitted, diſcharged, and pardoned, ſo that ſin is not imputed to them, and God ſees no iniquity in them in the article of juſtification; and alſo, their iniquities are cauſed to paſs from them, as to the guilt of them, and are taken out of their ſight, and they have no more conſcience of them, having their hearts ſprinkled and purged by the blood of Jeſus, and are clear of all condemnation, the curſe of the law, the wrath of God, or the ſecond death, by reaſon of them; yet pardon of ſin, and juſtification from it, though they take away the guilt of ſin, and free from obligation to puniſhment, yet they don't take out the being of ſin, or cauſe it to ceaſe to act, or don't make ſins ceaſe to be ſins, or change the nature of actions, of ſinful ones, to make them harmleſs, innocent, or indifferent; the ſins of believers are equally ſins with other perſons, are of the ſame kind and nature, and equally tranſgreſſions of the law, and many of them are attended with more aggravating circumſtances, and are taken notice of by God, and reſented by him, and for which he chaſtiſes his people in love: now tho' a believer may ſay, that he has not this or that particular ſin, or is not guilty of this or that ſin, for he has the ſeeds of all ſin in him, yet he cannot ſay he has no ſin; and though he may truly ſay he ſhall have no ſin, for in the other ſtate the being and principle of ſin will be removed, and the ſaints will be perfectly holy in themſelves, yet he cannot, in this preſent life, ſay that he is without it: if any of us who profeſs to be cleanſed from ſin by the blood of Chriſt, ſhould affirm this, we deceive ourſelves; ſuch perſons muſt be ignorant of themſelves, and put a cheat upon themſelves, thinking themſelves to be ſomething when they are nothing; flattering themſelves what pure and holy creatures they are, when there is a fountain of ſin and wickedneſs in them; theſe are ſelf-deceptions, ſad deluſions, and groſs impoſitions upon themſelves: and the truth is not in us; it is a plain caſe the truth of grace is not in ſuch perſons, for if there was a real work of God upon their ſouls, they would know and diſcern the plague of their own hearts, the impurity of their nature, and the imperfection of their obedience; nor is the word of truth in them, for if that had an entrance into them, and worked effectually in them, they would in the light of it diſcover much ſin and iniquity in them; and indeed there is no principle of truth, no veracity in them; there is no ſincerity nor ingenuity in them; they don't ſpeak honeſtly and uprightly, but contrary to the dictates of their own conſcience.

Ver. 9. If we confeſs our ſins, &c.] Not to one another; for though it is our duty to confeſs our faults to our fellow-creatures and fellow-chriſtians which are committed againſt them, yet are under no obligation to confeſs ſuch as are more immediately againſt God, and which lie between him and ourſelves; or at leaſt it is ſufficient to confeſs and acknowledge in general what ſinful creatures we are, without entring into particulars; for confeſſion of ſin is to be made to God, againſt whom it is committed, and who only can pardon: and a man that truly confeſſes his ſins is one that the Spirit of God has convinced of it, and has ſhown him its exceeding ſinfulneſs, and filled him with a godly ſorrow for it, and given him repentance unto ſalvation, that needeth not to be repented of; and who under ſuch a ſight and ſenſe of ſin, and concern for it, comes and acknowledges it before the Lord, humbly imploring, for Chriſt's ſake, his pardoning grace and mercy; and ſuch obtain it: he is faithful and juſt to forgive us our ſins; forgiveneſs of ſin here intends not the act of forgiveneſs, as in God, proceeding upon the bloodſhed and ſacrifice of Chriſt, which is done at once, and includes all ſin, paſt, preſent, to come; but an application of pardoning grace to a poor ſenſible ſinner, humbled under a ſenſe of ſin, and confeſſing it before the Lord; and confeſſion of ſin is not the cauſe or condition of pardon, nor of the manifeſtation of it, but is deſcriptive of the perſon, and points him out, to whom God will and does make known his forgiving love; for to whomſoever he grants repentance, he gives the remiſſion of ſin; in doing of which he is faithful, to his word of promiſe; ſuch as in Prov. xxviii. 13. Iſ. lv. 7. and juſt; in being true, as the Arabic verſion adds, to his word; and ſhewing a proper regard to the blood and ſacrifice of his Son; for his blood being ſhed, and hereby ſatisfaction made to the law and juſtice of God, it is a righteous thing in him to juſtify from ſin, and forgive the ſinner for whom Chriſt has ſhed his blood, and not impute it to him, or puniſh him for it; though the word here uſed may anſwer to the Hebrew word צדיק, which ſometimes carries in it the notion and idea of mercy and beneficence; hence mercy to the poor is ſometimes expreſſed by righteouſneſs; and the righteous acts of God intend his mercies and benefits unto men; ſee Dan. iv. 27. 1 Sam. xii. 7. and ſo forgiveneſs of ſin ſprings from the tender mercies of our God, and is both an act of juſtice and of mercy; of juſtice, with reſpect to the blood of Chriſt, and of pure grace and mercy to the pardoned ſinner: the following clauſe, and to cleanſe us from all unrighteouſneſs, is but the ſame thing expreſſed in different words; for all unrighteouſneſs is ſin, and to cleanſe from ſin is to remove the guilt of it, by an application of the blood of Chriſt for pardon. The antecedent to the relative he in the text, is either God, who is light, and with whom the ſaints have fellowſhip; or his ſon Jeſus Chriſt, who is the neareſt antecedent, and who being truly God, has a power to forgive ſin.

[f] Miſn. Shebuot, c. 1. §. 6.

Ver. 10. If we ſay that we have not ſinned, &c.] Have never ſinned, in time paſt as well as now; deny original ſin, and that men are born in ſin, but affirm they come into the world pure and holy; and aſſert that concupiſcence is not ſin; and ſo not regarding internal luſts and deſires as ſinful, only what is external, fancy they have ſo lived as to have been without ſin: but if any of us give out ſuch an aſſertion, we make him a liar; that is God, who in his word declares that the wicked are eſtranged from the womb, and go aſtray as ſoon as they be born, ſpeaking lyes; that his own people are tranſgreſſors from the womb; that all have ſinned and come ſhort of his glory; and that there is none that does good, no not one, but all are under ſin, under the power and guilt of it, and become filthy by it, and ſo obnoxious to the wrath of God: and his word is not in us; either Chriſt the word of God, or rather the word of God which declares theſe things; no regard is had unto it; it is not with us, as the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions render it; it is not uſed and attended to as the rule and ſtandard of truth, but is caſt away and deſpiſed; at leaſt it has no place in the hearts of ſuch, nor does it work effectually; for was this the caſe, they would have other notions of themſelves than that of ſinleſs creatures. The Apoſtle has regard either to the Gnoſtics, a ſett of hereticks of this age, who fancied themſelves pure, ſpiritual, and perfect, even in the midſt of all their impurities, and notwithſtanding their vicious lives; or to Judaizing chriſtians, and it may be to the Jews themſelves, who entertained ſuch ſort of notions as theſe of being perfect and without ſin [h].

CHAP. II.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle comforts the ſaints under a ſenſe of ſin; urges them to an obſervance of the commandments of God in imitation of Chriſt, particularly to the new commandment of brotherly love, and gives his reaſons for it; dehorts them from the love of the world, and the things of it; cautions them againſt falſe teachers and antichriſts, and exhorts them to abide in Chriſt, and perſevere in the faith of him. He firſt declares that the end of his writing was to prevent their ſinning; but ſuppoſing any ſhould fall into ſin through infirmity, he comforts them with the conſideration of the advocacy of Chriſt, and of his being the propitiation for the ſins both of Jews and Gentiles, ver. 1, 2. and whereas ſome perſons might boaſt of their knowledge of Chriſt, and neglect his commands, he obſerves, that the keeping of them is the beſt evidence of true knowledge, and of the ſincerity of their love to God, and of their being in Chriſt; and that ſuch who ſhew no regard to them are liars, and the truth is not in them; and ſuch that profeſs to be in Chriſt and abide in him, ought to walk as they have him for an example, ver. 3, 4, 5, 6. and inſtances in a particular commandment, to love one another, which on different accounts is called an old and a new commandment, and which has been verified both in Chriſt and in his people; for which a reaſon is given in the latter, the darkneſs being paſt, and the true light ſhining, ver. 7, 8. upon which ſome propoſitions are founded, as that he that profeſſes to be in the light, and hates his brother, is in darkneſs to this very moment; and that he that loves his brother is evidently in the light, nor will he eaſily give or take offence; and that he that hates his brother is not only in darkneſs, but walks in it, being blinded by it, and ſo knows not whither he is going, ver. 9, 10, 11. and this commandment of love the Apoſtle writes to the ſaints, as diſtinguiſhed into the ſeveral claſſes of fathers, young men, and children; and urges it on them from the conſideration of the bleſſings of grace peculiar to them; as ancient knowledge to fathers, ſtrength and victory to young men, knowledge of the father, and remiſſion of ſins to children, ver. 12, 13, 14. and then he diſſuades from the love of worldly things, ſeeing the love of them is not conſiſtent with the love of God; and ſeeing the things that are in it are vain and ſinful, and are not of God, but of the world; and ſince the world and its luſt paſs away, when he that does the will of God abides for ever, ver. 15, 16, 17. he next obſerves unto them, that there were many antichriſts in the world; which was an evidence of its being the laſt time; and theſe he deſcribes as ſchiſmaticks and apoſtates from the chriſtian churches, ver. 18, 19. but as for the ſaints he writes to, they were of another character, they were truly chriſtians, having an anointing from the holy one, by which they knew all things; nor did the Apoſtle write to them as ignorant, but as knowing perſons, and able to diſtinguiſh between truth and error, ver. 20, 21. and then he goes on with his deſcription of antichriſtian liars, ſhewing that they were ſuch who denied Jeſus to be the Meſſiah, and the relation that is between the Father and the Son, ver. 22, 23. and cloſes the chapter with an exhortation to perſeverance in the doctrine of Chriſt; ſince it was what they had heard from the beginning, and ſince by ſo doing they would continue in the Father and in the Son, and beſides had the promiſe of eternal life, ver. 24, 25. and indeed this was the main thing in view in writing to them concerning ſeducers, to preſerve them from them, though indeed this was in a great meaſure needleſs, ſince the anointing they had received abode in them; and taught them all things, and according as they regarded its teaching they would abide in Chriſt, ver. 26, 27. to which he exhorts them from the conſideration of that boldneſs and confidence it would give them at his appearance, who they muſt know are righteous, and ſo that every one that doth righteouſneſs is born of him, ver. 28, 29.

Ver. 1. My little children, &c.] The Apoſtle may addreſs the ſaints under this character, on account of their regeneration by the Spirit and grace of God, in which they were as new-born babes; and on account of his being the inſtrument of their converſion, and ſo was their ſpiritual father, and therefore calls them his own children; and he might the rather uſe ſuch a way of ſpeaking, becauſe of his advanced age, being now in his old age, and John the elder in age as well as in office; as well as to ſhew his paternal affection for them, and care of them, and that what he had wrote, or ſhould write, was not from any diſreſpect, but from pure love to them; and it might ſerve to put them in mind of their weakneſs in faith, in knowledge, and ſpiritual ſtrength, that they might not entertain high notions of themſelves, as if they were perfect and without infirmities; and it is eaſy to obſerve, that this is one of Chriſt's expreſſions, John xiii. 33. from whoſe lips the Apoſtle took it, whoſe words and phraſes he greatly delighted in, as he ſeems to do in this, by his frequent uſe of it; ſee ver. 18, 28. and iii. 7, 18. and iv. 4. and v. 21. Theſe things write I unto you; concerning the purity and holineſs of God, who is light itſelf; concerning fellowſhip with him, which no one that lives in ſin can have; concerning pardon and cleanſing from ſin by the blood of Chriſt, and concerning ſin being in them, and they not without it. The Ethiopic verſion reads, we write, as in ch i. 4. that ye ſin not; not that he thought they could be entirely without it, either without the being of it, or the commiſſion of it, in thought, word, or deed, for this would be to ſuppoſe that which is contrary to his own words, in ch. i. 8, 10. but he ſuggeſts that the end of his writing on theſe ſubjects was, that they might not live in ſin, and indulge themſelves in a vicious courſe of living, give up themſelves to it, and walk in it, and work it with all greedineſs: and nothing could be more ſuitably adapted to ſuch an end than the conſideration of the holineſs of God, who calls by his grace; and of the neceſſity of light and grace and holineſs in men to communion with him; and of the pardoning grace of God and cleanſing blood of Chriſt, which when ſavingly applied, ſets men againſt ſin, and makes them zealous of good works; and of the indwelling of ſin in the ſaints, which puts them upon their guard againſt it: and if any man ſin; as every man does, even every one that is in the light, and walks in it, and has fellowſhip with God; every one that believes in Chriſt, and is juſtified through his righteouſneſs, and pardoned by his blood; every one of the little children; for the Apoſtle is not ſpeaking of mankind in general who ſin, for Chriſt is not an advocate for all that ſin, but of theſe in particular; hence the Arabic verſion renders it, if any of you ſin; and this, with the following, he ſays not to encourage in ſin, but to comfort under a ſenſe of it: we have an advocate with the father, Jeſus Chriſt the righteous; Chriſt is an advocate, not for juſt or righteous perſons, for as he came not to call theſe to repentance, nor to die for them, ſo ſuch have no need of an advocate, nor is he one for them; but as he came to call ſinners, and to ſave them, and died for them, the juſt for the unjuſt, ſo he is an advocate, and makes interceſſion for tranſgreſſors; and not for all men, though they have all ſinned; not for the world, or thoſe ſo called in diſtinction from the perſons given him by his Father, for theſe he prays not; but for all the elect, and whatſoever charges are brought againſt them he anſwers to them, and for them; and for all that believe in him, be they weak or ſtrong, even for the Apoſtles as well as others; for they were not without ſin, were men of like paſſions as others, and carried about with them a body of ſin, and had their daily infirmities, and ſo needed an advocate as others; and hence John ſays, we have an advocate, &c. but then Chriſt is not an advocate for ſin, tho' for ſinners; he does not vindicate the commiſſion of ſin, or plead for the performance of it; he is no patron of iniquity; nor does he deny that his clients have ſinned, or affirm that their actions are not ſins; he allows in court all their ſins, with all their aggravated circumſtances; nor does he go about to excuſe or extenuate them; but he is an advocate for the non-imputation of them, and for the application of pardon to them: he pleads in their favour, that theſe ſins have been laid upon him, and he has bore them; that his blood has been ſhed for the remiſſion of them, and that he has made full ſatisfaction for them; and therefore in juſtice they ought not to be laid to their charge; but that the forgiveneſs of them ſhould be applied unto them, for the relief and comfort of their burdened and diſtreſſed conſciences: and for this he is an advocate for his poor ſinning people with the Father; who being the firſt perſon, and the Son the advocate, and the Spirit ſuſtaining a like character, is only mentioned; and he being God againſt whom ſin is committed, and to whom the ſatisfaction is made; and the rather, as he is the Father of Chriſt, and of thoſe for whom he is an advocate; ſeeing it may be concluded that his pleadings will be with ſucceſs, ſince he is not only related to him, and has an intereſt in him himſelf, but the perſons alſo whoſe patron he is, are related to him, and have a ſhare in his paternal affection and care: moreover, this phraſe, as it expreſſes the diſtinct perſonality of Chriſt from the Father, ſo his being with him in heaven at his right-hand, and nearneſs to him; where he diſcharges this office of his, partly by appearing in perſon for his people in the preſence of God; and partly by carrying in and preſenting their confeſſions of ſin, and their prayers for the freſh diſcoveries and applications of pardoning grace, which he offers up to his Father with the ſweet incenſe of his mediation; and chiefly by pleading the virtue of his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, which are carried within the vail, and are always in ſight, and call aloud for peace and pardon; as alſo by anſwering and removing the charges and accuſations of the court-adverſary, the accuſer of the brethren, the devil; as well as by the declarations of his will, demanding in point of juſtice, in conſideration of his ſufferings and death, that ſuch and ſuch bleſſings be beſtowed upon his people, as pardon, righteouſneſs, grace, and ſupplies of grace, and at laſt glory; and by applying theſe benefits to their ſouls as a comforter, which the word here uſed alſo ſignifies, and is ſo rendered, John xiv. 16, 26. and xv. 26. and xvi. 7. and by the Arabic verſion here. Now the ſaints have but one advocate, and that is enough for them; the Apoſtle does not ſay we have advocates, but an advocate; not angels, nor ſaints departed, but Jeſus Chriſt only, who is the one mediator between God and man: and he is a continual one, he ever lives to make interceſſion; his blood is always ſpeaking, and he is always pleading; and therefore 'tis ſaid we have, not we have had, or we ſhall have an advocate: and he is a prevalent one, he is always heard, he thoroughly pleads the cauſe he undertakes, and ever carries it; which is owing to the dignity of his perſon, his intereſt with his Father, and the virtue and value of his ſacrifice: and he is every way fit for ſuch a work, for he is righteous; not only in his natures, both divine and human, but in his office, as mediator, which he faithfully and righteouſly performs; he is a very proper perſon to plead for guilty perſons, which he could not do if he himſelf was guilty; but he is ſo holy and righteous that nothing can be objected to him by God; and it need not be doubted by men that he will act the faithful part to them, and righteouſly ſerve them and their cauſe; and it is moreover his righteouſneſs which he has wrought out, and is imputed to them, that carries the cauſe for them; and therefore this character of Chriſt is fitly added, as is alſo the following. The Jews [i] have adopted the word in the text into their language, but have applied it to a different purpoſe, to alms-deeds, repentance, and good works. Much more agreeably Philo the Jew [k] ſpeaks of the ſon of perfect virtue, παρακλητω, as an advocate for the forgiveneſs of ſins, and for a ſupply of everlaſting good things.

Ver. 2. And he is the propitiation for our ſins, &c.] For the ſins of us who now believe, and are Jews: and not for ours only; but for the ſins of Old Teſtament ſaints, and of thoſe who ſhall hereafter believe in Chriſt, and of the Gentiles alſo, ſignified in the next clauſe: but alſo for the ſins of the whole world; the Syriac verſion renders it, not for us only, but alſo for the whole world; that is, not for the Jews only, for John was a Jew, and ſo were thoſe he wrote unto, but for the Gentiles alſo. Nothing is more common in Jewiſh writings than to call the Gentiles עלמא, the world; and כל העולם, the whole world; and אומות העולם, the nations of the world [l]; ſee the note on John xii. 19. and the word world is ſo uſed in ſcripture; ſee John iii. 16. and iv. 42. Rom. xi. 12, 15. and ſtands oppoſed to a notion the Jews have of the Gentiles, that אין להן כפרה, there is no propitiation for them [m]: and it is eaſy to obſerve, that when this phraſe is not uſed of the Gentiles, it is to be underſtood in a limited and reſtrained ſenſe; as when they ſay [n] "it happened to a certain high "prieſt, that when he went out of the ſanctuary "כולי עלמא, the whole world went after him;" which could only deſign the people in the temple. And elſewhere [o] it is ſaid, "כולי עלמא, the whole "world, has left the Miſna, and gone after the "Gemara;" which at moſt can only intend the Jews; and indeed only a majority of their doctors who were converſant with theſe writings: and in another place [p], "כולי עלמא, the whole world, "fell on their faces, but Raf did not fall on his "face;" where it means no more than the congregation. Once more, it is ſaid [q] when "R. Simeon "ben Gamaliel entred (the ſynagogue) כולי עלמא, "the whole world, ſtood up before him;" that is, the people in the ſynagogue: to which may be added [r], "when a great man makes a mourning, "כולי עלמא, the whole world come to honour him;" i. e. a great number of perſons attend the funeral pomp: and ſo theſe phraſes, כולי עלמא לא פליגי, the whole world is not divided, or does not diſſent [s]; כולי עלמא סברי, the whole world are of opinion [t], are frequently met with in the Talmud, by which an agreement among the Rabbins, in certain points, is deſigned; yea, ſometimes the phraſe all the men of the world [u] only intend the inhabitants of a city where a ſynagogue was, and at moſt, only the Jews: and ſo this phraſe, all the world, or the whole world, in ſcripture, unleſs when it ſignifies the whole univerſe, or the habitable earth, is always uſed in a limited ſenſe, either for the Roman empire, or the churches of Chriſt in the world, or believers, or the preſent inhabitants of the world, or a part of them only, Luke ii. 1. Rom. i. 8. and iii. 19. Col. i. 6. Rev. iii. 10. xii. 9. and xiii. 3. and ſo it is in this Epiſtle, ch. v. 19. where the whole world lying in wickedneſs is manifeſtly diſtinguiſhed from the ſaints, who are of God, and belong not to the world; and therefore cannot be underſtood of all the individuals in the world; and the like diſtinction is in this text itſelf, for the ſins of the whole world are oppoſed to our ſins, the ſins of the Apoſtle and others to whom he joins himſelf; who therefore belonged not to, nor were a part of the whole world, for whoſe ſins Chriſt is a propitiation, as for theirs: ſo that this paſſage cannot furniſh out any argument for univerſal redemption; for beſides theſe things, it may be further obſerved, that for whoſe ſins Chriſt is a propitiation, their ſins are atoned for and pardoned, and their perſons juſtified from all ſin, and ſo ſhall certainly be glorified, which is not true of the whole world, and every man and woman in it; moreover, Chriſt is a propitiation through faith in his blood, the benefit of his propitiatory ſacrifice is only received and enjoyed through faith; ſo that in the event it appears that Chriſt is a propitiation only for believers, a character which does not agree with all mankind; add to this, that for whom Chriſt is a propitiation he is alſo an advocate, ver. 1. but he is not an advocate for every individual perſon in the world; yea, there is a world, he will not pray for, and conſequently, is not a propitiation for them. Once more, the deſign of the Apoſtle in theſe words is to comfort his little children with the advocacy and propitiatory ſacrifice of Chriſt, who might fall into ſin through weakneſs and inadvertency; but what comfort would it yield to a diſtreſſed mind, to be told that Chriſt was a propitiation not only for the ſins of the Apoſtles and other ſaints, but for the ſins of every individual in the world, even of thoſe that are in hell? Would it not be natural for perſons in ſuch circumſtances to argue rather againſt, than for themſelves, and conclude that ſeeing perſons might be damned notwithſtanding the propitiatory ſacrifice of Chriſt, that this might, and would be their caſe. In what ſenſe Chriſt is a propitiation, ſee the note on Rom. iii. 25. The Jews have no notion of the Meſſiah as a propitiation or atonement: ſometimes they ſay [w], repentance atones for all ſin; ſometimes the death of the righteous [x]; ſometimes incenſe [y]; ſometimes the prieſts garments [z]; ſometimes it is the day of atonement [a]; and indeed they are in the utmoſt puzzle about atonement; and they even confeſs in their prayers [b], that they have now neither altar, nor prieſt to atone for them; ſee the note on ch. iv. 10.

Ver. 3. And hereby we do know that we know him, &c.] Either the Father, with whom Chriſt is an advocate; not as the God of nature, and by the light of it, nor as the law-giver and judge of the whole earth, and by the law of Moſes; but as the God of all grace, as a God pardoning iniquity, tranſgreſſion, and ſin, as the Father of Chriſt, and as in him, by the Goſpel; and this not in a mere notional and ſpeculative way, but with love and affection; not with fear and trembling, as devils know him, nor in theory, as formal profeſſors and hypocrites, but with a knowledge, joined with hearty love of him, and chearful obedience to him: or elſe Chriſt the advocate and propitiation for ſin; and him alſo, not with a mere notional knowledge of his perſon and offices, which carnal men and devils themſelves have of him, but with that which is ſpiritual, ſpecial, and ſaving, being from the Spirit and grace of God; and regards Chriſt as a Saviour, as a propitiatory ſacrifice for ſin, and an advocate with God the Father; and by which he is approved as ſuch, to the rejection of all other ſaviours, ſacrifices, and advocates; and is truſted, confided, and believed in as ſuch, and affectionately loved, and that above all others, in ſincerity and truth; and is readily obeyed in his word and ordinances; for where there is true knowledge of Chriſt, there is faith in him; and where there is faith in him, there is love to him, for faith works by love; and where there is love to him, there will be an obſervance of his commands; and this is here made the evidence of the true knowledge of him: for it follows, if we keep his commandments; not the commandments of men, for the keeping of them ariſes from ignorance of God, and is a proof of it; nor the commandments of the ceremonial law, which are aboliſhed, particularly circumciſion, which is oppoſed to the keeping of the commandments of God, 1 Cor. vii. 19. but either thoſe of the moral law, and which are more particularly the commandments of God the Father; the obſervance of which, though it can't be with perfection, yet being in faith, and from love to God, and with a view to his glory, is an evidence of the true knowledge of him, and of his will: or elſe thoſe commandments, which are more eſpecially the commandments of Chriſt Jeſus; ſuch as the ordinances of baptiſm and the Lord's-ſupper, which are peculiar to the Goſpel-diſpenſation; and which being kept as they were delivered by Chriſt, and in his name and ſtrength, and to his glory, without depending on them for life and ſalvation, is an argument and proof of the right knowledge of him; and particularly his new commandment of loving one another, may be chiefly deſigned, that being what the Apoſtle has greatly in view throughout this Epiſtle; now let it be obſerved, that keeping of the commands of God, or Chriſt, is not the knowledge of either of them itſelf, for much may be done in an external way, yet neither God nor Chriſt be ſpiritually and ſavingly known; nor is it the cauſe of ſuch knowledge, for that is owing to the Spirit and grace of God; but is an effect or conſequence of ſpiritual knowledge, and ſo an evidence of it; hereby is not the knowledge itſelf, but the knowledge of that knowledge, that is, that it is true and genuine.

Ver. 4. He that ſaith I know him, &c.] God or Chriſt, as the Gnoſtics did, who pretended to great, even perfect knowledge of divine things: and keepeth not his commandments; which the above perſons had no regard to, and as many who profeſs great light and knowledge, in our days, ſhew no concern for: is a liar; he contradicts what he ſays, and gives the lye to it; for though in words he profeſſes to know God, in works he denies him, and which betrays his ignorance of him: and the truth is not in him; there is no true knowledge of God and Chriſt in him; nor is the truth of the Goſpel in his heart, however it may be in his head; nor is the truth of grace in him, for each of theſe lead perſons to obedience. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, the truth of God is not with him; ſee the note on ch. i. 8.

Ver. 5. But whoſo keepeth his word, &c.] Either the word of the Goſpel, and the truths of it, who receives it in love, cordially embraces and retains it, and will by no means part with it, but holds it faſt, and ſtands faſt in it; or the precepts and ordinances of the word, who loves theſe, and eſteems them above fine gold, and concerning all things to be right, and obſerves them as they ſhould be: in him verily is the love of God perfected; not the love wherewith God loves him, for that is perfect in himſelf, and admits of no degrees, and cannot be more or leſs in his heart, and is intirely independent of the obedience of men, or any works of theirs; it is true indeed the manifeſtations of this love to the ſaints are imperfect, and may be more and greater, and greater manifeſtations of love are promiſed to ſuch that love Chriſt, and keep his commandments, John xiv. 21, 23. but here it is to be underſtood not actively, but paſſively, of the love wherewith God is loved by his people; and intends not the abſolute perfection of it in them, in whom it often waxes cold, and is left, or the fervour of it abated, but the ſincerity and reality of it; for by keeping the word of God, both his truths and his ordinances, it is clearly ſeen that their love to him is without diſſimulation, and is not in tongue only, but in deed and in truth: now it is not the keeping of the word of God that cauſes this love, or makes it perfect or ſincere, for it is a fruit of the Spirit, and is owing to the grace of God; but love on the other hand, is the cauſe of keeping of the word; and the latter being a conſequent and an effect of the former, is the evidence of it, of the truth and ſincerity of it: hereby know we that we are in him; in Chriſt, not merely nominally, or by profeſſion, as all that name the name of Chriſt, and are in a Goſpel church-ſtate, may be ſaid to be; but really, firſt ſecretly, through the love of Chriſt, the election of God, and the covenant of grace, and then openly, in converſion and effectual vocation, thro' believing in Chriſt, when the ſaints appear to be in him as branches in the vine; and which is known by their fruits, as here, by keeping the word, and doing the commandments of Chriſt, which do not put a man into Chriſt, but only ſhew that he is there; for a man's being in Chriſt is owing to the grace of God; this is the firſt thing done in grace, 1 Cor. i. 30.

Ver. 6. He that ſaith, he abideth in him, &c.] As all do that are in him; once in Chriſt, and always in Chriſt; they are ſet as a ſeal on his arm and heart, which can never be removed; they are in his arms, and can never be plucked from thence; and are members of him, and can never be diſunited from him: or dwelleth in him, as in John vi. 56. that is, by faith; who under a ſenſe of ſin and danger, have fled to Chriſt, as to a ſtrong tower and place of defence, where they dwell ſafely, peaceably, pleaſantly, and comfortably, enjoying whatever is neceſſary for them. The Syriac and Ethiopic verſions read, he that ſaith I am in him; loved by him, choſen in him, united to him, a member of his, and have communion with him: ought himſelf alſo to walk even as he walked; as Chriſt walked, lived, and acted, ſo ought he; that is, to imitate him and follow him, as he has him for an example; not in his miraculous works, in raiſing the dead, healing the ſick, and walking upon the waters, &c. which were wrought as proofs of his deity and of his Meſſiahſhip, and not intended for imitation; nor in his mediatorial performances, as in his propitiatory ſacrifice and advocacy; but in the exerciſe of grace, and duties of religion as a man, and in a private way; and may chiefly regard walking in love, as he walked, ſee Eph. v. 2. and is what is in the following verſes inſiſted on, namely, the new commandment of love to the brethren; which ſhould be to all, as his was, and, like his, conſtant and laſting; and, when the caſe requires, ſhould be ſhewn by laying down life for them. The as is not a note of equality, but of likeneſs; for it cannot be thought that ſaints ſhould walk in that degree of perfection, in humility, patience, love, and in the exerciſe of every other grace, and in the diſcharge of duty, as Chriſt did; only that they ſhould copy after him, and make his obedience and life the rule of theirs.

Ver. 7. Brethren, I write no new commandment unto you, &c.] Some underſtand this of faith, which this Apoſtle calls a commandment, ch. iii. 23. but it rather intends the commandment of love, eſpecially to the brethren, of which the Apoſtle ſays the ſame things as here, in his ſecond Epiſtle, ver. 5, 6. and this ſenſe agrees both with what goes before, and follows after, and is a conſiderable branch of the commandments of Chriſt to be kept, and of walking as he walked; and the word brethren, prefixed to this account, may direct to, and ſtrengthen this ſenſe, though the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions read, beloved; and ſo the Alexandrian copy, and others: and this commandment is ſaid to be not a new one, but an old commandment, which ye had from the beginning; it being in its original a part of the eternal law of truth, founded upon the unalterable nature and eternal will of God, who is love itſelf, and requires it in all his creatures; being what was written on Adam's heart in a ſtate of innocence, and a branch of the divine image inſtamped upon him; and is what was delivered in the law of Moſes, for love to God and men is the ſum and ſubſtance of that; and was taught by Chriſt and his Apoſtles, from the beginning of the Goſpel-diſpenſation; and was what theſe ſaints had been acquainted with, and influentially inſtructed in from their firſt converſion, being taught of God in regeneration to love one another; ſo that this was no novel doctrine, no upſtart notion, no new law, but of the greateſt and moſt venerable antiquity, and therefore to be regarded in the moſt reſpectful manner. The old commandment is the word which ye have heard from the beginning; or this ancient law of love is contained in, and enforced by, that word or doctrine, which was delivered from the beginning of time; and which theſe ſaints had heard of, concerning the ſeed of the woman's bruiſing the ſerpent's head, which includes the work of redemption and ſalvation by Chriſt, atonement by his ſacrifice, forgiveneſs of ſin thro' his blood, and juſtification by his righteouſneſs, than which nothing can more powerfully engage to love God, and Chriſt, and one another; and which is alſo ſtrongly encouraged by the word of God, and Goſpel of Chriſt, which they had heard, and had a ſpiritual and ſaving knowledge of, from the time they were effectually called by the grace of God: the phraſe, from the beginning, is left out in the Alexandrian copy, and others, and in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions; it is omitted in both clauſes of the text in the latter.

Ver. 8. Again, a new commandment I write unto you, &c.] Which is the ſame with the former, conſidered in different reſpects. The command of brotherly love is a new one; that is, it is an excellent one, as a new name is an excellent name, and a new ſong is an excellent one; it is renewed by Chriſt under the Goſpel-diſpenſation; it is newly explained by him, and purged from the falſe gloſſes of the Scribes and Phariſees; ſee Matt. v. 43, 44. and enforced by him with a new argument, and by a new example of his own, even his own love to his people; and which is obſerved by them in a new manner, they being made new creatures; and this law being anew written in their hearts, under the renewing work of the Spirit of God, as a branch of the new covenant of grace; ſee John xiii. 34. The Jews[c] expect, תורה חדשה, a new law to be given them by the hands of the Meſſiah; and a new one he has given, even the new commandment of love, and which is the fulfilling of the law. Which thing is true in him, and in you. The Alexandrian copy reads, in us; the ſenſe is either, it is true in itſelf, as the phraſe will bear to be rendered, and it is verified in you, or in us, to be a new commandment; or it is true in Chriſt, it is yea and amen in him; it has its full completion in him, who is the fulfilling end of the law, as well as it has been faithfully delivered, truly explained, and warmly and affectionately recommended and urged by him; and he is the great pattern and exemplar of it: and the love which this new commandment requires, is really and truly in the ſaints, implanted in them in regeneration, is a fruit of the Spirit, and which faith works by, and will always continue in them; and ſhould be in its actings like Chriſt's true, ſincere, cordial, affectionate, conſtant, and univerſal: and ſome think the word ἐϛι, or ἔϛω, is, or let it be, is wanting in the laſt clauſe, and may be read, which thing is true in him, and is, or let it be in you; that is, as love to the brethren is true and ſincere in Chriſt, ſo it is, or ſhould be in you; it ſhould be without diſſimulation, and ſo it was, as the reaſon following ſhews: becauſe the darkneſs is paſt; or is paſſing; meaning either the darkneſs of the ceremonial law, which lay in dark types and ſhadows, and in cloudy ſacrifices, and myſtical repreſentations of things, and was a ſhadow of good things to come; and its ſhadows were now fleeing away apace, in fact as well as in right; and ſo the Alexandrian copy reads, becauſe the ſhadow is paſſing away; the night of Jewiſh darkneſs was far ſpent, and the Goſpel-day was not only broke, but it was, or near noon-day, which brought the light of faith, and the heat of love with it: or elſe the darkneſs of ſin and ignorance, of a ſtate of nature, and of the kingdom of ſatan, in which the people of God are before converſion; which then paſſes away gradually, by little and little, for it is not removed at once, or wholly gone; for though the ſaints are at once removed out of a ſtate of darkneſs, and from the kingdom of darkneſs, and the power of it, yet they are not wholly free from the darkneſs of ſin and ignorance, they ſtill ſee but thro' a glaſs darkly: and the words are better rendered, the darkneſs paſſes, or is paſſing away, and not, is paſt, or has paſſed away; for as yet it is not entirely gone: and the true light now ſhineth; either the Goſpel, which is a light, and a true and ſubſtantial one, in diſtinction from the dim light of nature, or the ſhadowy law of Moſes; and which now, under the preſent diſpenſation, ſhines out in a moſt glorious manner, as the ſun in its full ſtrength; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, the light of truth; the word of truth, the Goſpel of our ſalvation: or Jeſus Chriſt, who is ſo called, John i. 9. in diſtinction from typical lights, as the Urim on the high-prieſt's breaſt-plate, the candleſtick in the tabernacle and temple, and the pillar of fire by night, which guided the Iſraelites thro' the wilderneſs; and in oppoſition to all falſe lights, to the Scribes and Phariſees, to falſe Chriſts, and falſe prophets, which are ſo many ignes fatui; but Chriſt is the ſun of righteouſneſs that is riſen in our horizon, and the true light which ſhines out in a moſt illuſtrious manner: or the light of grace is here intended, that light which the Spirit of God illuminates with in converſion; in which a man ſees ſin in its true colours, and has a ſpiritual and ſaving ſight of Chriſt, of pardon, peace, life, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation by him; which is no other than the light of faith, by which an enlightened perſon ſees the Son, looks to him, and has an evidence of the unſeen glories of another world. Now this is a true light, things are ſeen by the believer in a right light, both his own ſins, and the perſon, blood, and righteouſneſs of Chriſt; this is a ſhining one, which cannot but be obſerved by himſelf, and ſhines more and more to the perfect day; and it now ſhines as it did not before, in a ſtate of nature, and continues to ſhine, and ever will: this light will never be put out, and is the cauſe of brotherly love, being truly in the ſaints, and of the continuance of it; before this light ſhines, men live in malice, but when it comes and ſhines, as they walk in light, they walk in love.

Ver. 9. He that ſaith he is in the light, &c.] Is in Chriſt the light, or has the true knowledge of the light of the Goſpel, or is illuminated by the Spirit of God; for perſons may profeſs to be enlightened ones, and not be ſo: wherefore the Apoſtle does not ſay, he that is in the light, but he that ſays he is, and hateth his brother; who is ſo either by creation, as all men are brethren, having one Father, that has made them, and brought them up; or by regeneration, being born of God, the Father, and in the ſame family and houſhold of faith; and ſo regards ſuch who are in a ſpiritual relation, whom to hate internally, or not to love, is inconſiſtent with being in the light, or having faith, which is always naturally and neceſſarily accompanied with the heat of love; for as light and heat, ſo faith and love go together: wherefore, let a man's profeſſion of light be what it will, if love to his brother is wanting, he is in darkneſs even until now; he is in a ſtate of nature and unregeneracy, which is a ſtate of darkneſs and ignorance; he is under the power of darkneſs, and in the kingdom of ſatan, who is the ruler of the darkneſs of this world; he ever was ſo from his birth; he never was called, nor delivered out of it, but is ſtill in it to this moment, and ſo remains. This ſeems to be very much levelled againſt the Jews, who make hatred of the brother in ſome caſes lawful: for they ſay [d], "if one man obſerves " ſin in another, and reproves him for it, and he " does not receive his reproof, מותר לשנאותו, it " is lawful to hate him;" ſee the note on Matt. v. 43.

Ver. 10. He that loveth his brother, &c.] As ſuch, and becauſe he is his brother in Chriſt, and that cordially and ſincerely, without hypocriſy and diſſimulation, and by love ſerves him, both in things temporal and ſpiritual, and ſo obſerves the new, and yet old commandment, abideth in the light: it is a plain caſe, that ſuch a man is in the light of grace, and continues in it; for tho' it is not his love to the brethren, which is the cauſe of his light, of his being and continuing in it, for that is owing to the Spirit of light and knowledge, but on the contrary, light is the cauſe of his love; yet it is an evidence of it, that by which it is known, as the cauſe is known by the effect; ſee 1 John iii. 14. and there is none occaſion of ſtumbling in him; or there is no ſcandal, or offence in him; he gives no offence to his brother, or at leaſt as much as in him lies, he takes care that he gives none; he avoids as much as can be, putting a ſtumbling-block, or an occaſion to fall in his brother's way, by the uſe of things indifferent, or by any other action; nor will he eaſily take offence at what is ſaid or done unto him, for charity or love is not eaſily provoked, it ſuffers long, and bears all things; ſee 1 Cor. xiii. 4, 5, 7. nor does he ſo much, and ſo frequently tranſgreſs the laws of God, and particularly thoſe which regard his neighbour, or his brother, and ſo eaſily fall into the ſnares of ſatan, becauſe he is in the light, and walks in the light, and ſees his way, and what lies in his way, and ſo ſhuns and avoids occaſion of ſtumbling and falling. There is not in him that wrath, and malice, and envy, which lead on to the commiſſion of other ſins; for love works no ill, but fulfills the law, and will not ſuffer him to commit adultery, to kill, to ſteal, or bear falſe witneſs againſt his neighbour, friend, and brother; ſee Rom. xiii. 9, 10. and ſuch an one enjoys great peace, tranquillity, and happineſs; he has much comfort in himſelf, and pleaſure in the ſaints, and delight in their company; he walks inoffenſively, and in an harmleſs manner, without hurting himſelf, or any other, Pſ. cxix. 165.

Ver. 11. But he that hateth his brother is in darkneſs, &c.] As is before expreſſed in ver. 9. to which is added, and walketh in darkneſs; he goes on in it, and takes delight in it, as dangerous and uncomfortable as it is: and knoweth not whither he goeth; he can't diſcern between good and evil; he puts darkneſs for light, and light for darkneſs; he ſees not what is before him, nor what ſtumbling-blocks lie in the way; he is not aware of the ſnares, pits, and traps he is in danger of falling into; nor does he know and conſider what theſe paths of darkneſs, of ſin, and ignorance, and infidelity lead unto, even unto utter darkneſs, where is weeping, wailing, and gnaſhing of teeth: and the reaſon is, becauſe that darkneſs hath blinded his eyes; either ſatan, the God of this world, who blinds the minds of them that believe not, and who is darkneſs itſelf, and the cauſe of darkneſs in himſelf, and in others, and one of whoſe names this was with the Jews [e]; ſee the note on Luke xxii. 53. or that natural darkneſs which ſin has brought upon the underſtanding, and has blinded the eyes of it, called the blindneſs of the heart, Eph. iv. 18. ſo that a man, under the power of it, is ignorant of himſelf, and knows not that he is blind and miſerable; is a ſtranger to the way of peace, and life by Chriſt, and knows not what he is about, and where he is, or whither he is going, and what his end will be.

Ver. 12. I write unto you little children, &c.] By whom the Apoſtle means in common all the ſaints he writes to, whom he afterwards diſtributes into fathers, young men, and little children; for the ſame word is uſed here, as in ver. 1. and a different one from that which is rendered little children in the next verſe; and beſides, the following bleſſing of pardon of ſin is common to all the children of God of different ages: now what the Apoſtle ſays he writes writes unto them, intends not the Epiſtle in general, but the new commandment of love in particular: and which he urges and enforces on them all, for this reaſon, becauſe your ſins are forgiven you for his name ſake; theſe little children had been ſinners by nature and practice, and were not now without ſin, but they ſhared in the bleſſing of the forgiveneſs of it; which ariſes from the abundant mercy and rich grace of God, and proceeds on the blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt; and therefore is ſaid to be for his name ſake; not for the ſake of any merits in men, any ſervices or works of theirs, but for the ſake of Chriſt, his blood, ſacrifice, and ſatisfaction; and it reaches to all ſins, original and actual, ſecret and open, paſt, preſent, and to come; and here intends the application of it by the Spirit of God, and the reception of it by faith: and which, as it is a reaſon and argument encouraging love to God, who freely and fully forgives, and to Chriſt, whoſe blood was ſhed for the remiſſion of ſin, ſo to their brethren and fellow-chriſtians; who are equally ſharers in the ſame bleſſing, and whom they ſhould love, becauſe they are loved of God and Chriſt; and whom they ſhould forgive, becauſe God, for Chriſt's ſake, has forgiven them. It may be, they may be called here little children, with a view to their intereſt in this bleſſing of grace. So the Jews ſay [f], that Saul was called "the ſon of one "year in his reign, 1 Sam. xiii. 1. becauſe all his "iniquities were forgiven him, כתינוק, as a ſuck- "ing child of a year old."

[d] Moſes Kotſenſis Mitzvot Tora, pr. neg. 5.

[e] Yalkut Simeoni, par. 2. fol. 44. 4.

Ver. 13. I write unto you fathers, &c.] Not merely in age, tho' they might be men in years who are here intended, or only with reſpect to their long ſtanding in the church, which might be the caſe; tho' perſons may be in years, and of a long ſtanding in the church, and yet be children in knowledge and experience: but here it deſigns ſuch, who, in compariſon of others, were perfect, and were ſpiritual, and judged all things; had a well-informed and eſtabliſhed judgment in divine things, and were in underſtanding men, fathers, and not babes in Chriſt; ſo the Jews uſed to call their men of wiſdom, and knowledge, and underſtanding, אבות, Abot, fathers. Hence there is a whole treatiſe in the Miſna called Pirke Abot, which contains the apothegms, wiſe ſayings, and ſentences of their fathers, or wiſe men. Now the Apoſtle writes the new commandment of love, and urges it on theſe, for this reaſon, becauſe ye have known him that is from the beginning; either God the Father, who is from everlaſting to everlaſting, the ancient of days, the eternal I AM, whom to know is life eternal; whoſe everlaſting love to them, whoſe covenant of grace with his Son for them, before the world was, and the ancient tranſactions and ſettlements of his grace on their account, they were acquainted with: or Jeſus Chriſt, the Logos or Word, which was from the beginning, who exiſted from all eternity, as a divine perſon, as the Son of God, co-eternal with the Father; as the eternal choice made in him, and the everlaſting covenant with him ſhow; and who in his office-capacity, as mediator, was ſet up from everlaſting; and who, with reſpect to the virtue of his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, was from the beginning of the world, and was the ſame yeſterday, to-day, and for ever; it being by his blood that all the patriarchs, from the beginning of time, were pardoned, and by his righteouſneſs they were juſtified, and by his grace they were ſaved; all which reſpecting the antiquity of Chriſt's perſon, office, and grace, was known to theſe fathers: they knew him, ſo as to approve of him, truſt in him, and appropriate him to themſelves, and which obliged them to the new commandment of love, not only to God and Chriſt, but to one another; and the reaſon here given, engaging to it, is exceeding ſuitable to their character, it being what fathers and aged men delight in, even ancient things, to call them to remembrance, to talk of them as things well known unto them; but nothing is more ancient than what is here inſtanced in, and nothing ſo honourable and profitable to know as this, or to be gloried in; and therefore the argument from hence to love thoſe that belong to him, who is the everlaſting Father, is very ſtrong and forcible. I write unto you young men; who are warm and zealous for God, for his cauſe and intereſt, for the glory of a redeemer, for his truths and ordinances; and are lively in the exerciſe of grace, and fervent in the diſcharge of duty; and are active, diligent, and induſtrious, always abounding in the work of the Lord; and are ſtrong and robuſt, able to go alone, to walk by faith, being ſtrong in it, and in the grace that is in Chriſt, and don't need the ſtaff that old age does, nor the hand to lead and teach to go as children do: to theſe the Apoſtle writes the new commandment of love, for this reaſon, becauſe ye have overcome the wicked one; ſatan, who is eminently ſo, being the firſt that was, and the worſt that is ſo; for he is wickedneſs itſelf, he is wholly, entirely, immutably, and unalterably wicked; and his whole work and employment is in wickedneſs. Now theſe young men had overcome him, not only in Chriſt their head, who has ſpoiled him, deſtroyed him, and led him captive in triumph, in whom they were more than conquerors; but in themſelves, thro' the power of divine grace, holding up, and making uſe of the ſhield of faith againſt him, whereby they quenched his fiery darts, and got the victory over him: and this is alſo ſaid in perfect agreement with the character of young men, who are apt to glory in their ſtrength, and are fond of getting the advantage, or a victory over others; and which is uſed to teach ſuch as are ſo in a ſpiritual ſenſe, not to glory in their ſtrength, but in the Lord; and to love him whom they know, and whoſe loving-kindneſs is exerciſed towards them, and in Chriſt; and to love him thro' whom they get the victory, and to bear the infirmities of weaker ſaints, to whom they ſhould be ſtrongly affected. I write unto you little children; or babes in Chriſt, ſuch as were new-born babes, juſt born again, not able to go alone, or walk by faith, but were dandled on the knee, and lay at the breaſts of divine conſolation; could ſpeak but ſtammeringly, and not plain, it being as much as they could do, to ſay Abba, father. To theſe the Apoſtle writes, and urges the new commandment of love, for this reaſon, becauſe ye have known the Father; the Father of Chriſt, and him, as their Father in Chriſt, under the witneſſings of the Spirit of adoption; ſo as, in ſome good meaſure, to hope and believe he was their Father, and to love, honour, and obey him as ſuch, to apply to him for whatever they ſtood in need of, and always to put themſelves under his care and protection; and a conſideration of this their relation to him, and intereſt in him, is a ſtrong and prevailing argument why they ſhould not only love him, their Father and Chriſt, who is begotten of him, but alſo all the ſaints who are the children of this their Father, and their brethren; and very aptly does the Apoſtle mention their knowledge of the Father as ſuitable to their age and character, it being one of the firſt and moſt neceſſary things for a child to know.

Ver. 14. I have written unto you fathers, &c.] This, with the reaſon annexed to it, is repeated, to raiſe the attention of the aged ſervants of Chriſt, and to quicken them to a diſcharge of their duty, who are apt to abate in their zeal, to grow lukewarm and indifferent, to cleave to the world, and to the things of it, which they are cautioned againſt in the following verſe. The whole of this, with the reaſon, becauſe ye have known him that is from the beginning, is left out in the Vulgate Latin verſion, and Complutenſian edition. I have written unto you young men; this repetition to them, with ſome additions, is alſo made, to ſtir them up the more to love the ſaints, who are too apt to be carried away with the luſt of the fleſh, the luſt of the eyes, and the pride of life, warned againſt in ver. 16. becauſe ye are ſtrong; not naturally, for ſin has ſadly weakened human nature, ſo that a man, by the ſtrength of nature, can do nothing that is ſpiritually good; nor in themſelves, tho' regenerated, but in Chriſt, in whom are righteouſneſs and ſtrength; without whom they can do nothing, tho' they can do all things thro' him ſtrengthening them; and ſo are ſtrong in the exerciſe of grace on him, and in the performance of every duty, being ſtrengthened by him with ſtrength in their ſouls: and the word of God abideth in you; either Chriſt the Logos, the eſſential Word of God, who might be ſaid to be in them, and abide in them, becauſe his grace was implanted in their hearts, called Chriſt, formed there, and becauſe he dwelt in their hearts by faith, and lived in them; and hence they had their ſtrength, or came to be ſo ſtrong as they were, and alſo overcame ſatan, becauſe he that was in them was greater than he that is in the world: or elſe the Goſpel is meant, which cometh not in word only, but in power, has a place in the heart, and works effectually, and dwells richly there; and this is a means of ſpiritual ſtrength againſt ſin and temptation, and to perform duty, and to ſtand faſt in the truth againſt the errors and hereſies of men; and is that piece of ſpiritual armour, the ſword of the Spirit, by which ſatan is often foiled, and overcome: hence it follows, and ye have overcome the wicked one; ſee the note on ver. 13.

Ver. 15. Love not the world, &c.] The habitable earth, the world in which men live; this is not to be loved by ſaints, as if it was their habitation, where they are always to be, and ſo loth to remove from it, ſeeing they are but ſojourners, and pilgrims, and ſtrangers here; this is not their reſt, nor dwelling-place, their continuing city, or proper country, that is heaven. Nor ſhould they love the men of the world, who are as they came into it, are of it, and mind the things of it, and lie in wickedneſs, and are wicked men; for tho' theſe are to be loved, as men, as fellow-creatures, and their good, both ſpiritual and temporal, is to be ſought, and good is to be done to them, as much as lies in our power, both with reſpect to ſoul and body; yet their company is not to be choſen, and preferred to the ſaints, but to be ſhunned and avoided, as diſagreeable and dangerous; their evil converſation, and wicked communications, are not to be loved, but abhorred, and their works of darkneſs are to be reproved; nor are their ways to be imitated, and their cuſtoms followed, or their manners to be conformed unto: neither the things that are in the world; good men that are in the world, tho' they are not of the world, are to be loved; and the kingdom of Chriſt, tho' it is not of the world, yet it is in the world, and is to be regarded and promoted to the uttermoſt; and there are the natural and civil things of the world, called this world's goods, which may be loved within due bounds, and uſed in a proper manner, tho' they are not to be loved inordinately and abuſed. This is the character of worldly men; ſo the Jews call ſuch, אהבי העולם הזה, ſuch that love this world[t]. Near relations and friends in the world, and the bleſſings of life, may be loved and enjoyed in their way, but not above God and Chriſt, or ſo as to take up ſatisfaction and contentment in them, to make idols of them, and put truſt and confidence in them, and prefer them to ſpiritual and heavenly things, and be ſo taken with them, as to be unconcerned for, and careleſs about the other; but the evil things of the world, or at leaſt the evil uſe of them, and affection for them, are here intended, as appears from the following verſe. Now it is chiefly with reſpect to the fathers, and young men, that this exhortation is given; and the repetition of what is ſaid to them before, is made, to introduce this; which is exceeding ſuitable to their age and characters. Old men are apt to be covetous and love the world, and worldly things, juſt when they are going out of it, and about to leave them; and young men are apt to be carried away with luſt, vanity, ambition, and pride: and therefore, from each of theſe, the Apoſtle diſſuades, from the following arguments, if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him; that is, the love of God, as the Alexandrian copy, and the Ethiopic verſion read; who is the Father of Chriſt, and of all the elect in him; and who is indeed, by creation, the Father of all men, the Father of ſpirits, of the ſouls of men, and of angels, and the Father of mercies, and of lights, and by the love of him is meant, either the love with which he loves his people, and which being ſhed abroad in the heart, attracts the ſoul to himſelf, and cauſes it to love him above the world, and all things in it; and ſuch an one eſteems of it, and an intereſt in it, more than life, and all the enjoyments of it, and is by it looſened to the world, and ſets light by it, and can part with all good things in it, and ſuffer all evil things chearfully, under the conſtraints and influence of this love; ſo that it is a clear caſe, that when the affections of men are ſet upon the world, and they are glued to the things of it, their hearts are not warmed with a ſenſe of the love of God, or that is not ſenſibly in them, or ſhed abroad in their hearts: or elſe by the love of God is meant love to God, which is inconſiſtent with the love of the world, or with ſuch an inordinate love of mammon, as to ſerve it; for a man may as ſoon ſerve two maſters, as ſerve God and mammon, which he can never do truly, faithfully, and affectionately; and which alſo is not conſiſtent with friendſhip with the men of the world, or a converſation and fellowſhip with them, in things that are evil, whether ſuperſtition or prophaneneſs; ſee Matt. vi. 24. James iv. 4.

Ver. 16. For all that is in the world, &c.] This is the ſum of the evil things in the world; or theſe following are the objects of ſin in the world, or about which wicked men are converſant; even ſuch as are carnal or grateful to the fleſh, viſible to the eye, and belong to this vain life, or ſerve to fill with pride and vanity; or theſe are the main things, which men that love the world, moſt highly value and eſteem: the luſt of the fleſh; by which is meant, not luſt in general, or concupiſcence, the corruption of nature, which is the fountain of all ſin, or indwelling ſin, the fleſh, or that corrupt principle, which luſts againſt the ſpirit; nor the various luſts of the fleſh, fleſhly luſts, which war againſt the ſoul, and which are many, and are alſo called worldly luſts; but ſome particular one, a luſt of the body, as the Syriac verſion reads; either the luſt of uncleanneſs, which includes all unchaſte deſires, thoughts, words, and actions, fornication, adultery, rape, inceſt, ſodomy, and all unnatural luſts; and which make up a conſiderable part of the all that is in the world: or elſe intemperance in eating and drinking, gluttony and drunkenneſs, exceſs of wine, ſurfeitings, rioting, and revellings, and all the ſenſual pleaſures of life, by which the carnal mind, and the luſts of it, are gratified; whereby the ſoul is deſtroyed, the body is diſhonoured, and a wound, diſhonour, and reproach brought on the character, not to be removed; for which reaſons the world, and the things of it, are not to be loved: the next follows, the luſt of the eyes; after unlawful objects, and may deſign unchaſte and laſcivious looks, eyes full of adultery, and whereby adultery is committed; ſee Matt. v. 28. but then this falls in with the other, unleſs that be confined to intemperance; rather then this may intend a ſinful curioſity of ſeeing vain ſights, and ſhows, with which the eye of man is never ſatisfied, Eccl. i. 8. and againſt which the pſalmiſt prays, Pſ. cxix. 37. or rather the ſin of covetouſneſs is here deſigned, the objects of which are viſible things, as gold, ſilver, houſes, lands, and poſſeſſions, with which riches, the eyes of men are never ſatisfied, and which ſin is drawn forth and cheriſhed by the eyes; and indeed, a covetous man has little more ſatisfaction than the beholding his ſubſtance with his eyes, and in which he takes much ſinful pleaſure; ſee Eccl. iv. 8. and v. 11. and what a poor vain empty thing is this? therefore, love not the world, ſince this is a principal thing in it: as is alſo the pride of life; by which ſeems to be meant, ambition of honour, of chief places, and high titles, as in the Scribes and Phariſees, Matt. xxiii. 6, 7. or of grand living, for the word ſignifies not ſo much life as living; living in a ſumptuous, gay, luxurious, and pompous manner, in rich diet, coſtly apparel, having fine ſeats, palaces, and ſtately buildings, and numerous attendance; all which is but vanity and vexation of ſpirit; ſee Eccl. ii. 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 11. The Syriac and Arabic verſions read, the pride of the age; and every age has ſome peculiar things in which the pride of it appears. Now neither of theſe is of the Father; of God the Father, as the Ethiopic verſion reads; the things which are deſired and luſted after are of God, but not the luſt itſelf; God is not the author of ſin, nor is it agreeable to his will: but is of the world; of the men of it, and agreeable to their carnal minds; and is a reaſon why things of the world are not to be loved by the ſaints, who are not of it, but choſen and called out of it; and beſides, all theſe things are mean, baſe, vile, and contemptible, and unworthy of their love and affection.

[t] Kimchi in Pſ. xlix. 9. Ben Melech in ib. ver. 14.

Ver. 17. And the world paſſeth away, &c.] Not the matter and ſubſtance, but the faſhion, form, and ſcheme of it, 1 Cor. vii. 31. kingdoms, cities, towns, houſes, families, eſtates, and poſſeſſions, are continually changing, and caſting into different hands, and different forms; the men of the world, the inhabitants of it, are continually removing; one generation goes, and another comes; new faces are continually appearing; the riches and honours of the world are fading, periſhing, and tranſitory things; every thing is upon the flux, nothing is permanent; which is another argument why the world, and the things of it, are not to be loved: and the luſt thereof; alſo paſſes away; and objects of luſt are fading and fleeting, as beauty, and riches, and honours; theſe are continually taking away from men, or men are taken away from them, and will not be hereafter; and even the pleaſure of luſt itſelf paſſes away, as ſoon as enjoyed; the pleaſures of ſin are but for a ſeaſon, and a very ſhort one; and are indeed but imaginary, and leave a real bitterneſs and ſorrow behind them, and at length bring a man to ruin and deſtruction: but he that doeth the will of God; not perfectly as contained in the law, which is the good, and perfect, and acceptable will of God; for no man can do that in ſuch a manner, tho' a regenerate man deſires to do it, even as it is done in heaven, and ſerves the law of God with his mind, and under the influence of the Spirit of God; and does walk in his ſtatutes, and keeps his judgments from a principle of love, in faith, and without mercenary views, and ſiniſter ends, without depending on what he does for life and ſalvation; and ſuch an one may be ſaid to be a doer of the will of God: tho' rather here it intends ſuch an one as believes in Chriſt, as the propitiation for his ſins, and as his advocate with the Father, and who makes Chriſt his pattern and example, and walks as he walked; and particularly obſerves the new commandment of love, loves God, and Chriſt, and his fellow-chriſtians, and not the world, and the things of it: and ſuch a man is happy, for he abideth for ever; in the love of God, which will never depart from him, nor ſhall he be ſeparated from that; and in the hands and arms of Chriſt, out of which none can pluck him; and in the family and houſhold of God, where he, as a ſon, abides for ever, and ſhall never be caſt out; and in a ſtate of juſtification, and ſhall never enter into condemnation; and in a ſtate of grace and holineſs, from whence he ſhall never fall, totally and finally; and in heaven, with Chriſt, to all eternity: the reaſon of this his abiding, is not his doing the will of God, which is only deſcriptive of him manifeſtatively, and not the cauſe of his perpetuity and immoveableneſs; but his eternal election of God, which ſtands ſure, not on the foot of works, but of him that calleth; and the covenant of grace, in which he is intereſted, and which is immoveable, ſure, firm, and inviolable; and the foundation Jeſus Chriſt, on which he is built; and the principle of grace in him, which always remains, and is connected with eternal life.

Ver. 18. Little children, it is the laſt time, &c.] Or hour; not of the Jewiſh civil and church-ſtate, for that had been at an end for ſome time; this Epiſtle was written ſome years after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; nor the laſt hour of the Goſpel-diſpenſation, or world to come, for this was but the firſt age of that; and much leſs the laſt hour of time, or of the preſent world itſelf, for that has been many hundreds of years ſince; but the laſt hour of the apoſtolic age. All the Apoſtles were now dead, John was the laſt of them; perilous times were now coming on, impoſtors and hereticks were riſing apace, againſt which the Apoſtle cautions his little children; and ſo ſtill he writes to them, agreeable to their age and character, who, being ſuch, were moſt likely to be impoſed upon by thoſe who lie in wait to deceive. And as ye have heard that antichriſt ſhall come; or is coming; and begins to ſhow himſelf in the falſe teachers and deceivers, who were his fore-runners; and this they had heard and underſtood, either from the words of Chriſt in John v. 43. or from the account the Apoſtle Paul gave to the Theſſalonians concerning him, 2 Theſſ. ii. 3, 4, 7, 8, 9, 10. or rather it may be from what the Apoſtle had ſaid to the elders of the church at Epheſus, where the Apoſtle John now was, when he met them at Miletus, Acts xx. 29, 30. even now there are many antichriſts. The Syriac and Ethiopic verſions read, falſe Chriſts; but ſuch are not intended here, that ſet up for Meſſiahs, whom Chriſt foretold ſhould ariſe before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, Matt. xxiv. 24. for that was now over, and thoſe falſe Chriſts had ariſen and were gone: if this ſenſe could be admitted, Bar Cocab in Adrian's time, bids fair to be the falſe Chriſt, or Meſſiah, in the preceding clauſe, as the ſame verſions there read; but ſuch as were adverſaries of Chriſt, as the Arabic verſion renders it, are meant, who ſet themſelves againſt Chriſt, and were oppoſers of his perſon, incarnation, and office; who either denied that he was the Chriſt, or that he was come in the fleſh, the truth of his incarnation, or his proper deity, or real humanity, ſuch as Ebion, Cerinthus, and others. The Apoſtle might well ſay there were many, ſince in his time were the followers of Simon Magus, the Menandrians, Saturnilians, Baſilidians, Nicolaites, Gnoſticks, Carpocratians, Cerinthians, Ebionites, and Nazarenes, as reckoned up by Epiphanius. And hence we learn, that antichriſt is not one ſingle individual, but many; antichriſt in the former clauſe is explained by antichriſts in this; ſee ver. 22. and iv. 1, 3. 2 Ep. 7. and tho' the popes of Rome are, by way of eminence, the antichriſt that ſhould come, and which thoſe deceivers were the fore-runners of, and paved the way for; yet they are not the only antichriſts, there were others before them, and there are many now beſides them. Whereby we know that it is the laſt time; the pure apoſtolic age was now going off, with the doctrines, diſcipline, and worſhip of it, which was eaſy to be diſcerned by the multitude of antichriſts which now appeared; and it may well be thought to be the laſt time, or near the end of things with us, ſince almoſt every hereſy is revived among us.

Ver. 19. They went out from us, &c.] Which intends not the perſons that went down from Judea to Antioch, Acts xv. 1, 24. who preached deſtructive doctrines to the Gentiles, which the Apoſtles, and the church of Judea, diſowned and cenſured; by which it appeared, that all the preachers of theſe doctrines were not of them, and of the ſame mind with them: for this ſenſe makes theſe antichriſts to be only preachers; whereas, tho' many of them might be ſuch, yet not all; for whoever, in a private capacity denied the Father, and the Son, or that Chriſt was come in the fleſh, was antichriſt; and to theſe, private believers are oppoſed in the next verſe; and it alſo makes the us to be the Apoſtles, whereas they were all dead but John; and theſe antichriſts were men, that had riſen up then in the laſt time, and therefore could not, with propriety, be ſaid to go out from the Apoſtles; beſides, whenever the Apoſtle uſes this pronoun us, he includes with himſelf all true believers, and may more eſpecially here intend the churches of Aſia; or rather the members of the church at Epheſus, where he was; nor is it likely he ſhould have in view the church of Judea, and a caſe in which that was concerned near forty years ago: moreover, ſuch a ſenſe makes the going out to be merely local and corporal, and which is in itſelf not criminal; the perſons that went from Judea to Antioch were not blameable for going thither, nor for going out from the Apoſtles thither, but for troubling the diſciples with words, to the ſubverting of their ſouls; nor was a corporal departure from the Apoſtles any evidence of not being of the ſame mind with them; for they often departed one from other, yet continued of the ſame mind, and in the ſame faith: but the ſenſe is, that there were ſome perſons in the Apoſtle John's time, who had made a profeſſion of religion, were members of the church, and ſome of them perhaps preachers, and yet they departed from the faith, and dropped their profeſſion of it, and withdrew themſelves from the church, or churches to which they belonged, and ſet up ſeparate aſſemblies of their own: but they were not of us; they were of the church, and of the ſame mind with it, at leaſt in profeſſion, antecedent to their going out; for had they not been in communion with the church, they could not be properly ſaid to go out of it; and if they had not been of the ſame mind and faith in profeſſion, they could not be ſaid to depart from it; but they were not truly regenerated by the grace of God, and ſo apparently were not of the number of God's elect: notwithſtanding their profeſſion and communion with the church, they were of the world, and not of God; they were not true believers; they had not that anointing which abides, and from which perſons are truly denominated chriſtians, or anointed ones: for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us; in the doctrine of the Apoſtles, and in the fellowſhip of the church, as true believers do: if their hearts had been right with God, they would have remained ſtedfaſt to him, his Goſpel, truths, and ordinances, and faithful with his ſaints; for ſuch who are truly regenerate, are born of an incorruptible ſeed; and thoſe that have received the anointing which makes them truly chriſtians, that abides, as does every true grace, faith, hope, and love; and ſuch who are truly God's elect cannot poſſibly fall into ſuch errors and hereſies, as theſe did, and be finally deceived, as they were: but they went out; they went out from us, ſo the Syriac verſion reads: that they might be made manifeſt, that they were not all of us; the word all is left out in the Syriac verſion. The defection and apoſtacy of theſe perſons were permitted by God, that it might appear they had never received the grace of God in truth; and their going out was in ſuch a manner, that it was a certain argument that they were not of the elect; ſince they became antichriſts, denied the deity or ſonſhip of Chriſt, or that he was come in the fleſh, or that he was the Chriſt, and therefore are ſaid to be of the world, and not of God, ver. 22. and iv. 1, 3, 4, 5, 6. ſo that this paſſage furniſhes out no argument againſt the ſaints perſeverance, which is confirmed in the following verſe.

Ver. 20. But ye have an unction from the holy one, &c.] Meaning the Spirit, and his graces, with which Chriſt the head, is anointed without meaſure, and his members in meaſure; from whence he is called Chriſt, and they chriſtians. Theſe were really the Lord's anointed ones; they were true believers; were the wiſe virgins who had oil in their veſſels with their lamps, which would never go out. The grace of the Spirit is called a chriſm, or an ointment, or an anointing, in alluſion to the anointing oil under the law; ſee the note on Matt. xxv. 3. of which anointing oil the Jews ſay [h], that it continues all of it, לעתיד לבוא, to time to come, (i. e.

to the times of the Meſſiah) as it is ſaid, Exod. xxx. 31. Now this theſe ſaints had, from the holy one; or that holy one; meaning, not the Holy Spirit of God, tho' it is true that this anointing, or theſe graces, were from him; he is the author of them, and may truly be ſaid to anoint with them; nor the Father, who is holy in his nature, and in his works, and is the God of all grace, and is ſaid to anoint the ſaints too, 2 Cor. i. 21. but rather the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is holy, both as God and man, and from whoſe fulneſs all grace is had. This oil, or ointment, was firſt poured on him without meaſure, and from him it deſcends to all the members of his myſtical body, as the ointment poured on Aaron's head deſcended to his beard, and to the ſkirts of his garments; ſee ver. 27. and ye know all things; for this anointing is a teaching one; it makes perſons of quick underſtanding; it enlightens their underſtandings, refreſhes their memories, and ſtrengthens all the powers and faculties of the ſoul; it leads into the knowledge of all ſpiritual things, into all the myſteries of grace, and truths of the Goſpel, into all things neceſſary for ſalvation; for theſe words are not to be taken in the largeſt ſenſe, in which they are only applicable to the omniſcient God, but to be reſtrained to the ſubject-matter treated of, and to thoſe things chiefly in which the antichriſts, and deceivers erred; and regard not a perfect knowledge, for thoſe that know moſt of theſe things, under the influence of this unction, know but in part. The Syriac verſion reads, all men, and ſo refers to that diſcerning of ſpirits, of the Spirit of truth, from the ſpirit of error; a gift which was beſtowed on many in the primitive times, by which they could diſtinguiſh hypocrites from true believers, and antichriſts and deceivers from the faithful miniſters of the word. One of Stephens's copies read, and ye all know.

Ver. 21. I have not written unto you, &c.] Either this Epiſtle, or rather what particularly here regards thoſe apoſtates from the truth, in order to ſhun them, and not be deceived by them: the Apoſtle here obviates an objection that he ſaw might be made upon what he laſt ſaid, that they knew all things; and if ſo, why then did he write the things he did, ſince they knew them before? to which he anſwers, that he did not write to them as to ignorant, but as to knowing perſons: becauſe ye know not the truth, but becauſe ye know it; the Father, who is the God of truth; Chriſt, who is truth itſelf; and the Spirit, who is the Spirit of truth; and the Goſpel, which is the word of truth; and the ſcriptures, which are the ſcriptures of truth, and from whence truth is to be fetched, and by them to be confirmed and defended; and which, if they had not known, it would have been to no purpoſe for him to have written to them about the antichriſts that were come into the world; and tho' they did know the truth, it was very proper to put them in remembrance of it, and to eſtabliſh them in it, againſt theſe deceivers, which ſuppoſes former knowledge of it: and that no lye is of the truth; either ſprings from it, or is according to it, but juſt the reverſe. The Apoſtle has reſpect to the errors and hereſies of the above apoſtates, which were flagrant contradictions to the Goſpel, and as diſtant from it, as a lye is to truth; and of ſuch lyes, and of thoſe liars, he ſpeaks in the next verſes. The Arabic verſion reads, and that every liar is not of the truth.

Ver. 22. Who is a liar, but he that denieth that Jeſus is the Chriſt? &c.] Or that very Chriſt, and true Meſſiah, who was ſpoken of by all the prophets, ſince the beginning of the world, and ſo much, and ſo long deſired by the Old Teſtament ſaints: he that denies that Jeſus of Nazareth is the Meſſiah of the prophets, is not indeed the only liar in the world, but he is the greateſt of liars; this is a conſummate lye, being oppoſed to a glaring truth, to a fact clear and indiſputable; and which reſts not merely on the teſtimony of Jeſus, who is truth itſelf, and who, in expreſs words, more than once, declared and aſſerted himſelf to be the Chriſt; but all the characters of the Meſſiah, every thing that is ſaid of him in the prophets, meet in Jeſus; and the miracles which were done by him, are flagrant proofs, and undeniable evidences of his being the Chriſt of God; and all the Apoſtles believed, and were ſure that he was Chriſt, the Son of the living God: to which may be added the teſtimony of John, who was ſent, and came to bear witneſs of him, and did; and who was a prophet, and a man of great probity and integrity. But there was a greater witneſs than he, even God himſelf, by a voice from heaven, bore a teſtimony to him; and angels, at his incarnation, declared him to be the ſaviour, which is Chriſt the Lord; yea, the devil himſelf, who is a liar, and the father of lyes in other things, knew and owned Jeſus to be the Chriſt; ſo that thoſe that deny him are the worſt of liars, even worſe than the devil himſelf. This may have regard not only to the Jews, that deny Jeſus to be the Meſſiah, but chiefly to ſuch who went by the name of Chriſtians; who denied either his proper deity, or real humanity, as Ebion and Cerinthus, which was denying him to be the God-man, the mediator, and Meſſiah; and is true of all ſuch that deny him in any of his offices, or in things relating to them, as his Goſpel, and any of the peculiar doctrines of it, delivered by him, and ſo deny his prophetic office; or any of his ordinances, inſtitutions, and appointments, as lawgiver in his houſe, and king of ſaints, and ſo deny him in his kingly office; or reject him as the alone ſaviour, joining their own works with him, in the buſineſs of ſalvation, and oppoſe his ſacrifice and ſatisfaction, and deſpiſe his imputed righteouſneſs, and ſo deny him in his prieſtly office. Now theſe are ſome of the liars, and theſe ſome of the doctrinal lyes, which are not of the truth, as in the preceding verſe. He is antichriſt that denieth the Father and the Son; that denies the Father of Chriſt to be the creator of the world, but aſſerts that it was made by angels, as ſome ancient hereticks did; or that the Father of Chriſt is not the God of the Old Teſtament, as Marcion; or that denies that God is the Father of Chriſt, and that Chriſt is the Son of God; who will not allow that there is any ſuch relation in nature between them; who affirm that Chriſt is only the Son of God by adoption, or becauſe of his love to him, or becauſe of his incarnation and reſurrection from the dead; or that he is not his true and proper Son, only in a figurative and metaphorical ſenſe; that he is not the natural and eternally begotten Son of God, only by office, and as mediator, and that God is only his Father, as having inſtalled him into an office; or he that denies that theſe two are diſtinct from each other, but affirms that the Father is the Son, and the Son is the Father, and ſo confounds them both, and by confounding both, denies that there are either Father or Son; and all ſuch perſons are antichriſts, or oppoſers of Chriſt.

Ver. 23. Whoſoever denieth the Son, &c.] Jeſus Chriſt to be the true, proper, natural, eſſential, and eternal Son of God: the ſame hath not the Father; or does not hold the Father; or believe the Father, as the Syriac verſion renders it; for there can't be a father without a ſon; and he that honours not the Son, by owning him as ſuch, honours not the Father; and whatever reflects diſhonour on the Son, reflects diſhonour on the Father. If Chriſt is not truly and properly the Son of God, the Father is not truly and properly the Father of Chriſt; if Chriſt is only a Son in a figurative and metaphorical ſenſe, the Father is only a father in a figurative and metaphorical ſenſe; if Chriſt is a ſon only by office, then the Father is a father only by office, which is monſtrouſly ſtupid. Such an one does not hold the true doctrine of the Father, and does not appear to have true faith in him, true love unto him, or real intereſt in him, only by profeſſion: but he that acknowledgeth the Son, hath the Father alſo; this clauſe is left out in many copies, and ſtands as a ſupplement in our verſion; but is in the Alexandrian copy, in four of Beza's manuſcripts, and in ſome others; and in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions; and confirms, and illuſtrates what is before ſaid; for as he that denies the ſonſhip of Chriſt, cannot hold the paternity of God, ſo he that owns the ſonſhip of Chriſt, the ſecond perſon, maintains the paternity of the firſt; for theſe two are correlates, and mutually put, or take away each other: no mention is made of the Spirit, becauſe, as yet, no controverſy had riſen concerning him.

Ver. 24. Let that therefore abide in you, &c.] Meaning the word of God, ver. 14. the Goſpel of Chriſt, which there was reaſon to believe had a place in their hearts, and which they had embraced and profeſſed; and therefore the Apoſtle exhorts them to perſeverance in it; and particularly not to let go the doctrine concerning the Father and the Son, and this their relation to each other, which is the foundation of the doctrine of the Trinity, and of the diſtinct perſonality of Father, Son, and Spirit; the contrary to which leaves the three without either name, or diſtinction from each other: the arguments to enforce this exhortation follow, which ye have heard from the beginning; they had heard it not externally only, but internally; they had hearkened to it, and from the heart obeyed it; they had mixed it with faith, and received the love of it; they had heard it from the Apoſtles of Chriſt, who were eye and ear-witneſſes of the word; and this they had heard at the firſt preaching of the Goſpel to them, at the firſt of their converſion: the Apoſtles of Chriſt began their miniſtry with the ſonſhip of Chriſt, and greatly inſiſted on it, in it, and required a profeſſion of it before baptiſm, and which was made in order to it; and theſe believers had been baptized in the name of the Father, and of the Son, as ſtanding in ſuch a relation to each other; ſee Acts ix. 20. and viii. 37. Matt. xxviii. 19. and therefore ought not to relinquiſh this truth, and receive a new and upſtart notion: and for further encouragement to continue in it, 'tis added, if that which ye have heard from the beginning ſhall remain in you, ye alſo ſhall continue in the Son, and in the Father; as thoſe that are once in either always will; what is here ſaid is not either the cauſe or condition of men being in the Father, and in the Son, or of their continuance in them, but is deſcriptive of the perſons that are in them, and is an open and manifeſt evidence of their being and continuance in them. Such are in union with Chriſt, and at times enjoy ſenſible communion with him, and ſhall never be finally and totally removed from it; they are in the love of Chriſt, from whence there is no ſeparation, and in the arms and hands of Chriſt, out of which none can pluck them; and they abide by him in the exerciſe of faith and love, and cleave unto him with full purpoſe of heart, and will hold on and out, profeſſing his name to the end: and they are, and abide in the love of God the Father, which is from everlaſting to everlaſting; and in the covenant of his grace, which is ſure and inviolable; and in the participation of all the bleſſings and promiſes of it, among which, the following one, eternal life, is a principal one.

Ver. 25. And this is the promiſe that he hath promiſed us, &c.] Either God the Father, who is that God that cannot lye, who in the covenant of his grace, before the world began, made this promiſe unto his people, even eternal life; which promiſe, with all others, was put into the hands of Chriſt, where, with them, it is yea and amen; and alſo the thing itſelf promiſed, where it is hid, and lies ſafe and ſecure: or the Son, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who has promiſed it in the Goſpel; for this is the ſum of the Goſpel-declaration, that whoever believes in him ſhall have everlaſting life; and this lies in the knowledge of the Father, and of the Son, and in the enjoyment of them, and conformity to them; wherefore the doctrine reſpecting them ought to be retained, and firmly adhered to.

Ver. 26. Theſe things have I written unto you, &c.] The little children, who were moſt likely to be impoſed upon by antichriſts and deceivers: concerning them that ſeduce you. The Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions render it, for them that ſeduce you; not that they were actually ſeduced and carried away with the error of the wicked; for tho' God's elect may be ſtaggered and waver, and be toſt to and fro by falſe teachers, and their doctrines, yet they cannot be totally and finally deceived: but the ſenſe is, theſe men endeavoured to ſeduce them; they lay in wait to deceive, and attempted to deceive them, by walking in craftineſs, and handling the word of God deceitfully; and therefore, that they might be known, and ſo ſhunned and avoided, the Apoſtle points them out, and ſhews who they are; that they are ſuch who deny that Jeſus is the Chriſt, and do not own neither the Father nor the Son; in doing which he acted the part of a tender father, a faithful ſhepherd, and a careful monitor.

Ver. 27. But the anointing which ye have received of him, &c.] The Spirit, and the grace of the Spirit, which they had received out of the fulneſs of grace which is in Chriſt; and is compared to oil or ointment; ſee the note on ver. 20. for Chriſt, the anointed, is the fountain of it all, and it is had from him in a way of giving and receiving. So the ſecond Sephirah, or number in the Jews Cabaliſtic tree, which is wiſdom, has for one of its ſurnames, the fountain of the oil of unction [1]: this abideth in you; the Syriac and Arabic verſions render it, if it abideth, which ſpoils the text, for the words are not conditional but affirmative; grace is an internal thing, it is oil in the veſſel of the heart, and where it once is, it abides; as does every grace of the Spirit, as faith, hope, love, and every other: grace can never be taken away; God will not take it away, where he has once beſtowed it, and men and devils cannot; it can never be loſt as to the principle and being of it; it is an incorruptible ſeed, and a living principle, which can never be deſtroyed, notwithſtanding all the corruptions in a man's heart, the pollutions of the world, and the temptations of ſatan: and ye need not that any man teach you; not that they were perfect in knowledge, for no man is abſolutely, only comparatively ſo, in this life; or that they needed not, and was above and exempt from the inſtructions of Chriſt's faithful ſervants; for John himſelf taught them, and to teach and inſtruct them was the end of his writing this Epiſtle to them; but the ſenſe is either that they needed not the teachings of theſe men before-mentioned, the antichriſts, liars, and ſeducers, being better taught, and having an unction by which they knew all things; or they needed not to be taught as if they were babes in Chriſt, as unſkilful in the word of righteouſneſs, but ſo as to increaſe in ſpiritual knowledge, and go on to perfection, and be eſtabliſhed in the preſent truth, at leaſt ſo as to be put in remembrance of them; or rather, they needed not, nor were they to regard any mere human revelation and doctrine, for the whole Goſpel was come by Jeſus Chriſt, and no other is to be expected or received by men, nor any doctrine but what is according to the revelation of Chriſt; wherefore ſaints under the Goſpel-diſpenſation are taught of God, by his Spirit, according to the word of truth, and by the miniſtry of it, and have no need of learning every man from his neighbour, or from his brother, any ſeparate revelation; ſo that this paſſage does not militate againſt the external miniſtry of the Goſpel, or human teachings according to that perfect rule and declaration of the whole mind and will of God by Chriſt under the Goſpel-diſpenſation: but as the ſame anointing. The Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions read, his anointing; that is God's or Chriſt's; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, that unction which is of God; meaning the ſame as before: the Ethiopic verſion renders it, his Spirit, which, tho' not a true verſion, is no improper or impertinent ſenſe of the phraſe: and this teacheth you of all things; truths and doctrines neceſſary to ſalvation, as in ver. 20. and is truth, and is no lye; or true, and not a liar; which is a juſt character of the Spirit of truth, in oppoſition to the ſpirit of error; and holds good of the grace of the Spirit, which is truth in the inward parts, and is genuine and ſincere: and even as it hath taught you, ye ſhall abide in him; in Chriſt, from whom they received this anointing, ſee the note on ver. 24. or in the anointing itſelf, in the grace of the Spirit, in which they ſtood. Some verſions read in the imperative, abide in him, or it, as in the following verſe.

[1] Cabala Denudata, par. 2. p. 8.

Ver. 28. And now little children abide in him, &c.] The Apoſtle having finiſhed his ſeparate inſtructions and exhortations to the fathers, young men, and children, returns to the whole body of the ſaints in general, whom he addreſſes, as in ver. 1, 12. under the name of little children; ſee the note on ver. 1. and whom he exhorts to abide in Chriſt, that is, in the exerciſe of faith on him, of hope in him, and love to him; and to hold to him the head, and to hold faſt his word and Goſpel, and abide by his truth and ordinances, and adhere to his cauſe and intereſt, and not to be moved away on any conſideration; to which the following encouragement is given: that when he ſhall appear; that is Chriſt, who is now hid, and out of the ſight of bodily eyes, is in heaven, at the right-hand of God; but ere long he will appear a ſecond time, and not only to thoſe that look for him, but even every eye ſhall ſee him; and his appearance will be a glorious one, and his ſaints ſhall appear in glory with him, and ſhall be like him, and ſee him as he is: we may have confidence; boldneſs or freedom, as now at the throne of grace, ſo then at the throne of judgment; where the ſaints will ſtand with courage and intrepidity, when the wicked will flee to the rocks and mountains, being filled with amazement, terror, and trembling: and not be aſhamed before him at his coming; they'll not be put to ſhame by him; nor will they be aſhamed of their confidence, faith, hope, and expectation; their hope will not make them aſhamed, for they will now enjoy what they hoped for; and, notwithſtanding all their ſins and infirmities, they'll not be aſhamed, for they will have on the wedding-garment, the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and will ſtand before the throne without fault, ſpot, or blemiſh; nor will Chriſt be aſhamed of them who have not been aſhamed of him and his words, but have confeſſed him, and have been faithful unto death, and have cleaved to him and his cauſe with full purpoſe of heart to the end. Some think, miniſters of the goſpel are here meant, who, when thoſe that are under their care abide faithful, and perſevere to the end, will give up their account with joy; and will have what they have expreſſed confidence in, and will have their expectations anſwered, and not diſappointed, by having ſuch ſouls as their joy and crown of rejoicing.

Ver. 29. If ye know that he is righteous, &c.] That is, Chriſt, who is righteous, as God, in his nature and in his works; and as man, in his obedience, life, and converſation; and as mediator, in faithfully diſcharging the work he undertook; and is the author of an everlaſting righteouſneſs, which is imputed by God, revealed in the Goſpel, and received by faith; all which they knew, for this is not ſaid as doubting, but rather as taking it for granted that they did know it; if, or ſeeing ye know, &c. then it follows: ye know, or know ye; ye may aſſure yourſelves, that every one that doth righteouſneſs; not merely works of righteouſneſs, eſpecially in order to juſtify him before God; for ſuch an one is ſo far from being born of God, or born again, that he is manifeſtly in a ſtate of nature, and of oppoſition to, and enmity againſt God; he is not ſubject to him, he does not ſubmit to the righteouſneſs of God, but goes about to eſtabliſh his own, and betrays his ignorance and want of grace; but it intends ſuch an one who with the heart believes unto righteouſneſs, and lays hold by faith, and lives upon the righteouſneſs of Chriſt for juſtification; and who performs good works in faith, and from a principle of love, not to obtain a juſtifying righteouſneſs, but becauſe he is juſtified by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt: and ſuch an one is born of him; either of God, or rather of Chriſt; being regenerated by his Spirit, having his grace implanted in him, as appears by his faith in his righteouſneſs, and by his works of righteouſneſs, as fruits of faith; and having his image inſtamped on him, and he himſelf formed in him, and ſo made like unto him; by all which it is evident, he is one of his ſpiritual ſeed and offſpring. The Syriac verſion reads, is of him; belongs to him, is one of his; and this makes way for what is ſaid of adoption in the following chapter, and which ſhould begin here.

CHAP. III.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle exhorts to a holy life and converſation in general, and to the exerciſe of brotherly love in particular. The former of theſe is urged from the conſideration of the great bleſſing of adoption, which ſprings from the free love and favour of God, is unknown to the men of the world, and indeed, in the preſent ſtate of things, does not appear to the ſaints themſelves in all its fulneſs and advantages, as it will do in the future ſtate, when the children of God will be like to Chriſt, and ſee him as he is; the hope of which ſhould engage them to purity of life and converſation, ver. 1, 2, 3. and this is further enforced from the nature of ſin, which is a tranſgreſſion of the law, ver. 4. from the end of Chriſt's manifeſtation in the fleſh, which was to take away ſin, and who was without it, ver. 5. from communion with Chriſt, expreſſed by abiding in him, ſeeing and knowing him, which ſuch muſt be ſtrangers to, that live a ſinful courſe of life, ver. 6. from this, that only ſuch that do righteouſneſs are righteous perſons, and theſe are righteous as Chriſt is, ver. 7. and from a man's being of the devil, that is of a vicious converſation, who was a ſinner from the beginning, and whoſe works Chriſt was manifeſted in the fleſh to deſtroy, ver. 8. and from the nature of the new man, or that which is born of God, which is not to ſin, nor can it, ver. 9. and from the diſtinction there is between the children of God and the children of the devil, thoſe not being of God who do not righteouſneſs, nor love their brethren, ver. 10. from hence the Apoſtle paſſes to brotherly love, and excites and engages to that, from its being a meſſage which had been heard from the beginning, ver. 11. which is illuſtrated by its contrary in the inſtance of Cain, who by the inſtigation of ſatan ſlew his brother, becauſe his works were righteous, and his own were evil, ver. 12. wherefore, it is no wonder that good men ſhould be hated by the world, who, as Cain, are of the ſame wicked one, ver. 13. brotherly love is further urged unto, from its being an evidence of paſſing from death to life, or of regeneration; whereas he that hates his brother openly continues in a ſtate of death, is a murderer, and ſo has not eternal life abiding in him, ver. 14, 15. and from the great inſtance of Chriſt's love, in laying down his life for his people, the ſaints are incited to lay down their lives for one another; to ſuch a pitch does the Apoſtle carry brotherly love, ver. 16. wherefore, he that is rich, and is incompaſſionate to his brother in diſtreſs, cannot be thought to have the love of God dwelling in him, ver. 17. hence he preſſes the exhortation to brotherly love, that it be not in profeſſion only, but true, real, and cordial, ver. 18. and that by obſerving the advantages of it, as that hereby men know they are of the truth, and can aſſure their hearts before God; and which is illuſtrated by the contrary, the condemnation of the heart, ver. 19, 20. the advantages of non-condemnation of the heart are confidence before God, and receiving whatſoever we aſk of him; the reaſon of which is, becauſe his commandments are kept, and things done which are pleaſing to him, ver. 21, 22. the commandments are explained of faith in Chriſt, and love to one another, ver. 23. and the happineſs of them that do them is, that Chriſt dwells in them, and they in him, the evidence of which is, the Spirit that is given unto them, ver. 24.

Ver. 1. Behold what manner of love, &c.] See, take notice, conſider, look by faith, with wonder and aſtoniſhment, and obſerve, how great a favour, what an inſtance of matchleſs love, what a wonderful bleſſing of grace, the Father hath beſtowed upon us; the Father of Chriſt, and the Father of us in Chriſt, who hath adopted us into his family, and regenerated us by his grace, and hath freely given us the new name: that we ſhould be called the ſons of God. The Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, and the Vulgate Latin verſion add, and we are, or be; and the Ethiopic verſion, and have been; for it is not a mere name that is beſtowed, but the thing itſelf in reality; and in the Hebrew language, to be called, and to be, are terms ſynonymous, ſee Iſ. ix. 6. Hoſ. i. 10. in what ſenſe the ſaints are the ſons of God, ſee the note on Gal. iv. 6. this bleſſing comes not by nature, nor by merit, but by grace, the grace of adoption; which is of perſons unto an inheritance they have no legal right unto; the ſpring of it is the everlaſting and unchangeable love of God, for there was no need on the adopter's ſide, he having an only-begotten and beloved Son, and no worth and lovelineſs in the adopted, they being by nature children of wrath; it is a privilege that exceeds all others, and is attended with many; ſo that it is no wonder the Apoſtle breaks out in this pathetic manner, and calls upon the ſaints to view it with admiration and thankfulneſs: therefore the world knoweth us not; that is, the greater part of the world, the world that lies in wickedneſs, the men of the world, who have their portion in this life, whom the God of this world has blinded, and who only mind the things of the world, and are as when they came into it, and have their converſation according to the courſe of it; theſe don't know the ſaints are the ſons of God; the new name of ſons is what no man knoweth, but he that receiveth it; they don't own the ſaints as theirs, as belonging to them, but reckon them as the filth of the world, and the offſcouring of all things; nor do they love them, and that becauſe they are not their own, but hate them and perſecute them: the reaſon is, becauſe it knew him not; neither the Father, whoſe ſons they are, and who has beſtowed the grace upon them; wherefore they know not, and diſown and perſecute his children; ſee John xvii. 25. and xv. 21. and xvi. 3. nor the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the only begotten of the Father, the firſt-born among many brethren; who, though he made the world, and was in it, was not known by it, but was hated, abuſed, and perſecuted; and therefore it need not ſeem ſtrange that the ſaints, who are the ſons of God by adoption, ſhould be treated in like manner.

Ver. 2. Beloved, now are we the ſons of God, &c.] By adoption, ſecretly in God's predeſtination, and in the covenant of grace; and openly in regeneration, thro' faith in Chriſt, and by the teſtimony of the Spirit: and it doth not yet appear what we ſhall be; though they are ſons, they don't appear now as ſuch, as they will do, when they ſhall be introduced into their father's houſe, and into the many manſions there prepared for them; when Chriſt ſhall publickly own them as the children given unto him, and when they ſhall be put into the poſſeſſion of the inheritance they are heirs of; beſides, they will appear then not only to be kings ſons, but kings themſelves, as they now are; they'll then inherit the kingdom prepared for them, and will ſit down on a throne of glory, and have a crown of righteouſneſs, life, and glory put upon them; and will appear not only perfectly juſtified, their ſins being not to be found, and the ſentence of juſtification afreſh pronounced, and they placed out of the reach of all condemnation; but they will be perfectly holy and free from all ſin, and perfectly knowing and glorious; they have a right to glory now, and glory is preparing for them, and they for that; and they are now repreſentatively glorified in Chriſt, but then they'll be perſonally glorified: now, though all this ſhall certainly be, yet it does not now manifeſtly appear; it appears to God, who calls things that are not as though they were; and to Chriſt, whoſe delights were with the ſons of men, theſe children of God, before the world was, and ſaw them in all the glory they were to be brought to; but not even to angels, until they are owned and confeſſed before them; much leſs to the world, who don't know what they are now, and ſtill leſs what they will be, ſeeing them now in poverty, meanneſs, under many reproaches, afflictions, and perſecutions; and even this does not appear to the ſaints themſelves, whoſe life is a hidden life; and that by reaſon of darkneſs, deſertion, and diffidence, for want of more knowledge, and from the nature of the happineſs itſelf, which is at preſent unſeen: but we know that when he ſhall appear; that is Jeſus Chriſt, who is now in heaven, and out of ſight, but will appear a ſecond time; the time when, is not known, but the thing itſelf is certain: we ſhall be like him; in body, faſhioned like to his glorious body, in immortality and incorruption, in power, in glory, and ſpirituality, in a freedom from all imperfections, ſorrows, afflictions, and death; and in ſoul, which likeneſs will lie in perfect knowledge of divine things, and in complete holineſs: for we ſhall ſee him as he is; in his human nature, with the eyes of the body, and in his glorious perſon, with the eyes of the underſtanding; not by faith as now, but by ſight; not thro' ordinances, as in the preſent ſtate, but thro' thoſe beams of light and glory darting from him, with which the ſaints will be irradiated; and this ſight, as it is now exceeding deſireable, will be unſpeakably glorious, delightful, and raviſhing, ſoul-ſatisfying, free from all darkneſs and error, and interruption; will aſſimilate and transform into his image and likeneſs, and be for ever. Philo the Jew obſerves [k], that Iſrael may be interpreted one that ſees God; but adds, ουχ οιος εϛιν ο Θεος, not what God is, for this is impoſſible: it is indeed impoſſible to ſee him eſſentially as he is, or ſo as to comprehend his nature, being, and perfections; but then the ſaints in heaven will ſee God and Chriſt as they are, and as much as they are to be ſeen by creatures; God will be ſeen as he is in Chriſt; and Chriſt will be ſeen as he is in himſelf, both in his divine and human natures, as much as can be, or can be deſired to be ſeen and known of him.

Ver. 3. And every man that hath this hope in him, &c.] Or on him, Jeſus Chriſt; for a true hope of that eternal happineſs, which lies in likeneſs to Chriſt, and in the viſion of him, is only founded on his perſon, blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice: and this hope every man has not, only he who is born again; for this grace is implanted in regeneration, when men are of abundant mercy begotten unto it, and have it beſtowed upon them as a free-grace-gift; and which is of great ſervice to them both in life and in death; and among the reſt it has this influence and effect upon them, that every ſuch perſon that has it, purifieth himſelf even as he is pure; not that any man can purify or cleanſe himſelf from ſin, this is only owing to the grace of God and blood of Chriſt; nor that any man can be ſo pure and holy as Chriſt is, who is free from all ſin, both original and actual; but this muſt be underſtood either of a man that has faith and hope in Chriſt, dealing by theſe with the blood of Chriſt for purity and cleanſing, with whom and which theſe graces are converſant for ſuch purpoſes; or of ſuch a perſon's imitating of Chriſt in the holineſs of his life and converſation, making him his pattern and example, ſtudying to walk as he walked; to which he is the more excited and ſtimulated by the hope he has of being a ſon of God, a dear child of his, and therefore ought to be a follower of him, and walk as Chriſt walked, in humility, love, patience, and in other acts of holineſs; and by the hope he has of being like unto him, and with him in the other world to all eternity: but then this as is only expreſſive of ſome degree of likeneſs and ſimilitude, and not perfect equality, which is not to be expected in this, or in the world to come; believers indeed who have faith and hope in the juſtifying righteouſneſs of Chriſt, may, and ſhould conſider themſelves pure and righteous, and free from ſin, as Chriſt is; being clothed upon with his robe of righteouſneſs, in which they ſtand without fault before the throne, without ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing; but this does not ſeem to be the ſenſe of the place here, the argument being to engage the ſaints to purity and holineſs of life and converſation, from the conſideration of the great love of God beſtowed upon them in their adoption, and from their hope of eternal happineſs, as the context ſhews; ſee 2 Cor. vii. 1. other arguments follow.

Ver. 4. Whoſoever committeth ſin, &c.] This, in connection with what follows, is true of any ſin, great or ſmall, but here deſigns a courſe of ſinning, a wilful, obſtinate perſiſting in ſin: tranſgreſſeth alſo the law; not of man, unleſs the law of men is founded on, and agrees with the law of God, for ſometimes to tranſgreſs the laws of men is no ſin, and to obey them would be criminal; but the law of God, and that not the ceremonial law, which was now aboliſhed, and therefore to neglect it, or go contrary to it, was not ſinful; but the moral law, and every precept of it, which regards love to God or to our neighbour, and which may be tranſgreſſed in thought, word, and deed; and he that commiteth ſin tranſgreſſes it in one or all of theſe ways, of which the law accuſes and convicts, and for it pronounces guilty before God, and curſes and condemns; and this therefore is an argument againſt ſinning, becauſe it is againſt the law of God, which is holy, juſt and good, and contains the good and acceptable, and perfect will of God, which is agreeable to his nature and perfections; ſo that ſin is ultimately againſt God himſelf: for ſin is a tranſgreſſion of the law; and whatever is a tranſgreſſion of the law, is ſin; the law requires a conformity of nature and actions to it, and where there is a want of either, it is a breach of it; it is concerned with the will and affections, the inclinations and deſires of the mind, as well as the outward actions of life; concupiſcence or luſt is a violation of the law, as well as actual ſin; and eſpecially a courſe of ſinning both in heart, lip, and life, is a continued tranſgreſſion of it, and expoſes to its curſe and condemnation, and to the wrath of God; and is inconſiſtent with a true hope of being the ſons and heirs of God: but then the tranſgreſſion of what is not the law of God, whether the traditions of the elders among the Jews, or the ordinances of men among papiſts, pagans, and Turks, or any other, is no ſin, nor ſhould affect the conſciences of men.

Ver. 5. And ye know that he was manifeſted, &c.] This is a truth of the Goſpel the ſaints were well inſtructed in and acquainted with; that Jeſus Chriſt, the word and ſon of God, who is here meant, who was with the Father, and lay in his boſom from all eternity, was in the fulneſs of time made manifeſt in the fleſh, or human nature, by aſſuming it into union with his divine perſon; in which he came and dwelt among men, and became viſible to them: the end of which manifeſtation was, to take away our ſins; as the antitype of the ſcape-goat, making reconciliation and ſatisfaction for them, through the ſacrifice of himſelf; which was doing what the blood of bulls and goats, or any legal ſacrifices or moral performances could never do: and this he did by taking the ſins of his people upon himſelf, by carrying them up to the croſs, and there bearing them, with all the puniſhment due unto them, in his body; by removing them quite away, and utterly deſtroying them, finiſhing and making an end of them; and by cauſing them to paſs away from them, from off their conſciences, through the application of his blood by his Spirit: and in him is no ſin; neither original, nor actual; no ſin inherent; there was ſin imputed to him, but none in him, nor done by him; and hence he became a fit perſon to be a ſacrifice for the ſins of others, and by his unblemiſhed ſacrifice to take them away; and anſwered the typical ſacrifices under the law, which were to be without ſpot and blemiſh: and this ſhews that he did not offer himſelf for any ſins of his own, for there were none in him, but for the ſins of others; and which conſideration therefore, is a ſtrong diſſuaſive from ſinning, and as ſuch, is mentioned by the Apoſtle; for, ſince ſin is of ſuch a nature that nothing could atone for it but the blood and ſacrifice of Chriſt, an innocent, as well as a divine perſon, it ſhould be abhorred by us; and ſince Chriſt has taken it away by the ſacrifice of himſelf, it ſhould not be continued and encouraged by us; and ſince in him is no ſin, we ought to imitate him in purity of life and converſation; the end of Chriſt's bearing our ſins was, that we might live unto righteouſneſs, and to purify to himſelf a peculiar people, zealous of good works; and his love herein ſhould conſtrain us to obedience to him: ſo the Jews[1] ſpeak of a man after the image of God, and who is the myſtery of the name Jehovah; and in that man, they ſay, there is no ſin, neither ſhall death rule over him; and this is that which is ſaid, Pſ. v. 4. neither ſhall evil dwell with thee.

Ver. 6. Whoſoever abideth in him, &c.] As the branch in the vine, deriving all light, life, grace, holineſs, wiſdom, ſtrength, joy, peace, and comfort from Chriſt; or dwells in him by faith, enjoys communion with him as a fruit of union to him; and ſtands faſt in him, being rooted and grounded in him, and abides by him, his truths and ordinances, takes up his reſt, and places his ſecurity in him, and perſeveres thro' him: ſinneth not; not that he has no ſin in him, or lives without ſin, but he does not live in ſin, nor give up himſelf to a vicious courſe of life; for this would be inconſiſtent with his dwelling in Chriſt, and enjoying communion with him: whoſoever ſinneth; which is not to be underſtood of a ſingle action, but of a courſe of ſinning: hath not ſeen him, neither known him; that is, he has never ſeen Chriſt with an eye of faith; he has never truly and ſpiritually ſeen the glory, beauty, fullneſs, and ſuitableneſs of Chriſt, his need, and the worth of him; he has never ſeen him ſo as to enjoy him, and have communion with him; for what communion hath Chriſt with Belial, or light with darkneſs, or righteouſneſs with unrighteouſneſs? nor has he ever ſavingly known him, or been experimentally acquainted with him; for though he may profeſs to know him in words, he denies him in works.

Ver. 7. Little children, let no man deceive you, &c.] Neither by falſe doctrines, nor by wicked practices, drawing into the belief of the one, or into the performance of the other; ſuggeſting, as the Gnoſticks did, that knowledge without practice was enough, and that it was no matter how a man lived, provided his notions of the Goſpel were right: he that doth righteouſneſs, is righteous; not that any man is made righteous by the works of the law, or by his obedience to the law of works, for this is contrary to the expreſs word of God; and beſides, the beſt righteouſneſs of man is imperfect, and can never conſtitute or denominate him righteous before God; and was he juſtified by it, it would not only lay a foundation for boaſting in him, which ought not to be, but would make the death, the ſacrifice, and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, to be in vain; men are only made righteous by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which he has wrought out, which is revealed in the Goſpel, and received by faith, and which God imputes without works; ſo that he that doth righteouſneſs is he that being convinced of the inſufficiency of his own righteouſneſs, and of the excellency and ſuitableneſs of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, renounces his own, and ſubmits to his; who lays hold upon it, receives it, and excerciſes faith on it, as his juſtifying righteouſneſs; and in conſequence of this, lives in a courſe of holineſs and righteouſneſs, in oppoſition to, and diſtinction from one that commits ſin, or lives a ſinful courſe of life; which, though it does not make him righteous in the ſight of God, yet it ſhews him to be righteous in the ſight of men, and proves that faith to be right which lays hold on the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, by which he is truly righteous: even as he is righteous; as Chriſt himſelf is righteous; and ſo the Syriac verſion reads; not as perſonal, or as he is perſonally and eſſentially righteous as God; but as myſtical, every member of his body being clothed with the ſame robe of righteouſneſs the whole body of Chriſt is, and indeed juſtified by the ſame righteouſneſs that he as mediator was, when he roſe from the dead, as the repreſentative of his people: moreover, as Chriſt ſhewed himſelf to be righteous as man, by doing good, ſo believers in him, by imitating him, and walking as he walked, ſhew themſelves to be good and righteous, like, tho' not equal to him; for as a tree is known by its fruits, ſo is a good man by his good works, and a righteous man by doing righteouſneſs; and as good fruit does not make a good tree, but ſhews it to be good, ſo good works don't make a good man, nor a man's own righteouſneſs make him a righteous man, but ſhew him to be ſo.

Ver. 8. He that committeth ſin is of the devil, &c.] Not every one that ſins, or commits acts of ſin, then every man is of the devil, becauſe no man lives without the commiſſion of ſin; but he who makes ſin his conſtant buſineſs, and the employment of his life, whoſe life is a continued ſeries of ſinning, he is of the devil; not as to origin and ſubſtance, or by proper generation, as ſome have literally underſtood the words; but by imitation, being like him, and ſo of him their father, doing his luſts, living continually in ſin, as he does, and ſo reſemble him, as children do their parents; and hereby alſo appear to be under his government and influence, to be led captive by him at his will, and ſo to belong to him, and ſuch as will have their part and portion with him in the lake which burns with fire and brimſtone; ſo living and dying: for the devil ſinneth from the beginning; not of his creation, for he was made by God a pure and holy creature; but from the beginning of the world, or near it, at leaſt from the beginning of man's creation; for he not only ſinned by rebelling againſt God himſelf, and by drawing in the reſt of the apoſtate angels into the rebellion with him, but by tempting man as ſoon as created, to ſin againſt God: what was his firſt and particular ſin is not certain, whether pride or envy, or what; it ſeems to be, his not abiding in the truth, or an oppoſition to the truth of the Goſpel, reſpecting the incarnation of the Son of God, mentioned in the following clauſe; ſee John viii. 44. however he has been continually ſinning ever ſince: he ſinneth; he is always ſinning, doing nothing elſe but ſin; ſo that he that lives a vicious courſe of life is like him, and manifeſtly of him: for this purpoſe the Son of God was manifeſted; in human nature, as in ver. 5. whence it appears that he was the Son of God before his incarnation, and ſo not by it; he did not become ſo thro' it, nor was he denominated ſuch on account of it; he was not made the Son of God by it, but was manifeſted in it what he was before; and for this end: that he might deſtroy the works of the devil; and the devil himſelf, and all his dominion and power, and particularly his power over death, and death itſelf; and eſpecially the ſins of men, which are the works of the devil, which he puts them upon, influences them to do, and takes delight in; and which are deſtroyed by Chriſt, by his ſacrifice and death, being taken, carried, removed away, finiſhed, and made an end of by him; ſee the note on ver. 5.

[1] Sepher Tikkunim, fol. 112. 1, apud Rittangel. de ver. Rel. Chriſt. p. 68.

Ver. 9. Whoſoever is born of God, &c.] In a figurative and ſpiritual ſenſe; who are regenerated, or born from above; who are quickened by the grace of God, and have Chriſt formed in them; who are made partakers of the divine nature, and new creatures in Chriſt; which ſpiritual birth is not owing to men, to the powet and will of men, but to the grace of God; and is ſometimes aſcribed to the Father, who of his own will and abundant mercy begets ſouls again to a lively hope, and ſaves them by the waſhing of regeneration; and ſometimes to Chriſt, who quickens whom he will, whoſe grace is implanted, and image inſtamped in it, and by whoſe reſurrection from the dead men are begotten again; and chiefly to the Spirit of God, who is the author of regeneration, and of the whole of ſanctification: and ſuch as are born of him are alive thro' him, the Spirit of life entring into them, and live to God and upon Chriſt, and breathe after divine and ſpiritual things, and have their ſenſes to diſcern them; they ſee, hear, feel, taſte, and ſavour them; and deſire the ſincere milk of the word, for their nouriſhment and growth; and have every grace implanted in them, as faith, hope, and love: and of every ſuch an one it is ſaid, he doth not commit ſin; does not make it his trade and buſineſs; it is not the conſtant courſe of his life; he does not live and walk in ſin, or give up himſelf to it; he is not without the being of it in him, or free from acts of ſin in his life and converſation, but he does not ſo commit it, as to be the ſervant of it, a ſlave unto it, or to continue in it; and that for this reaſon: for his ſeed remaineth in 1 him; not the word of God, or the Goſpel, tho' that is a ſeed which is ſown by the miniſters of it, and bleſſed by God, and by which he regenerates his people; and which having a place in their hearts, becomes the engrafted word, and there abides, nor can it be rooted out; where it powerfully teaches to avoid ſin, is an antidote againſt it, and a preſervative from 2. it: nor the Holy Spirit of God, tho' he is the author of the new birth, and the principle of all grace; and where he once is, he always abides; and thro' the power of his grace believers prevail againſt ſin, and mortify the deeds of the body, and live: but rather 3r. the grace of the Spirit, the internal principle of grace in the ſoul, the new nature, or new man formed in the ſoul is meant; which ſeminally contains all grace in it, and which, like ſeed, ſprings up and gradually increaſes, and always abides; and is pure and incorruptible, and neither ſins itſelf, nor encourages ſin, but oppoſes, checks, and prevents it: and he cannot ſin; Neg. not that it is impoſſible for ſuch a man to do acts of ſin, or that it is poſſible for him to live without ſin; for the words are not to be underſtood in the ſenſe of thoſe who plead for perfection in this life; for tho' the ſaints have perfection in Chriſt, yet not in themſelves; they are not impeccable, they are not free from ſin, neither from the being nor actings of it; ſin is in them, lives in them, dwells in them, hinders all the good, and does all the miſchief it can: or in ſuch ſenſe, as if the ſins of believers were not ſins; for tho' they are pardoned and expiated, and they are juſtified from them, yet they don't ceaſe to be ſins; they are equally contrary to the nature, will, and law of God, as well as the ſins of others; and are oftentimes attended with more aggravated circumſtances, and which God in a fatherly way takes notice of, and chaſtizes for, and on the account of which he hides his face from them: nor does the 2. phraſe intend any particular ſingle ſin, which cannot be committed; tho' there are ſuch, as ſinning wilfully after receiving the knowledge of the truth, or denying Chriſt to be the Saviour of ſinners, and a ſacrifice for ſin, and hatred of a chriſtian brother as ſuch, and ſinning the ſin unto death, or the unpardonable ſin; neither of which can be committed by a regenerate man: nor is the meaning only, tho' it is a 3 ſenſe that will very well bear, and agrees with the context, that ſuch perſons cannot ſin as unregenerate men do; that is, live in a continued courſe of ſinning, and with pleaſure, and without reluctance, Affir. and ſo as to lye in it, as the whole world does: but rather the meaning is, he that is born of God, as he is born of God, or that which is born of God in him, the new man, or new creature, cannot ſin; for that is pure and holy; there is nothing ſinful in it, nor can any thing that is ſinful come out of it, or be done by it; it is the workmanſhip of the Holy Spirit of God; it is a good work, and well-pleaſing in the ſight of God, who is of purer eyes than to behold ſin with delight; and an incorruptible ſeed, which neither corrupts, nor is corrupted; and though it is as yet an imperfect work, it is not impure: the reaſon of the immpeccability of the regenerate man, as ſuch, is, becauſe he is born of God; for that which is born of God in him, does, under the influence of the Spirit, power, and grace of God, preſerve him from the temptations of ſatan, the pollutions of the world, and the corruptions of his own heart; ſee 1 John v. 18. which the Vulgate Latin verſion there renders, the generation of God, meaning regeneration, or that which is born of God, preſerveth him: this furniſhes out a conſiderable argument for the perſeverance of the ſaints.

Ver. 10. In this the children of God are manifeſt, &c.] By regenerating grace, and not ſinning, in the ſenſe before explained, in conſequence of it: adoption is an act of God's grace and ſovereign will; it is ſecret in his own heart, and is ſecured in divine predeſtination, and in the covenant of grace, and is antecedent to regeneration: regeneration and faith do not make men the children of God, but manifeſt them to be ſo; adoption makes them the children of God, and intitles them to the inheritance; regeneration gives them the nature of the children of God, and makes them meet for it, and manifeſts their right unto it; not to the men of the world, but to themſelves and other ſaints: and the children of the devil; ſuch as imitate him, do his will and his luſts, and are openly under his power and influence; theſe are diſtinguiſhable from regenerate perſons, and the children of God by their lives and converſations; ſo the people of the nations of the world are called, בנוי, the children of Samael, and the ſerpent, by the Jews [m], which are with them the names of the devil. Whoſoever doth not righteouſneſs is not of God; that is, he does not appear to be born of God, who does not by faith lay hold on the righteouſneſs of Chriſt for his juſtification before God, and acceptance with him; and who does not do works of righteouſneſs in faith from a principle of love, and with a view to the glory of God; for where regenerating grace is, there will be ſuch graces and ſuch practices: neither he that loveth not his brother; for as he that loveth God, and Chriſt, and the brethren, appears manifeſtly to be born again, and to have paſſed from death to life, ſo he that does not, is in darkneſs, in a ſtate of unregeneracy, and walks and continues therein; for was he born again, he would be taught of God to love the ſaints; ſee 1 John iv. 7. and iii. 14. and ii. 11.

Ver. 11. For this is the meſſage, &c.] Sent from God by Chriſt, or what he in his miniſtry declared, and is the commandment which was ſo frequently urged by him, John xiii. 34. and xv. 12, 17. that ye have heard from the beginning; of the preaching of the Goſpel to them, and of their converſion; ſee chap. ii. 7. that we ſhould love one another; to which the command of Chriſt, the reaſon with which it is enforced, and the early notice of it ſhould engage.

Ver. 12. Not as Cain, &c.] That is, let us not be like him, or do as he did, hate the brethren. The Apoſtle illuſtrates brotherly love by its contrary, in the inſtance of Cain, who was the firſt inſtance and example of hatred of the brethren, and of fratricide, and a very deteſtable one, by which he would diſſuade from ſo vile and abominable a practice: who was of that wicked one; ſatan, a child of his, an imitator of him, one that appeared to be under his influence, and to belong unto him. So the Jews ſay of Cain [n], that "he was of "the ſide of the ſerpent, (the old ſerpent the de"vil) and as the way of the ſerpent is to ſlay and "to kill, ſo Cain immediately became a murderer." And again, "becauſe Cain came from the ſide of "the angel of death, he ſlew his brother [o];" tho' they ſay that he afterwards repented, and became worthy of paradiſe [p]. And ſlew his brother; ſee Gen. iv. 8. According to the tradition of the Jews [q], he ſtruck a ſtone into his forehead, and killed him: and wherefore ſlew he him? what was the cauſe and occaſion of it? what moved him to it? becauſe his own works were evil, and his brother's righteous; or his work, as the Ethiopic verſion reads: the ſacrifice which he offered up, which, tho' it was not evil as to the matter and ſubſtance of it, yet was ſo, being offered with an evil mind, and with an hypocritical heart, and without faith in the ſacrifice of Chriſt, and ſo was unacceptable to God; whereas, on the other hand, the ſacrifice his brother brought was offered up in the faith of Chriſt, by which he obtained a teſtimony that he was righteous, and that the work he did was a righteous work, being done in faith, and ſo was acceptable to God; which Cain perceiving, was filled with envy, and this put him upon killing him. The Jews [r] relate the occaſion of it after this manner; "Cain ſaid to Abel "his brother, come, and let us go out into the open "field; and when they were both out in the open "field, Cain anſwered and ſaid to Abel his brother, "there's no judgment, nor judge, nor another "world; neither will a good reward be given to "the righteous, nor vengeance be taken on the "wicked; neither was the world created in mercy, "nor is it governed in mercy; or why is thy of"fering kindly accepted, and mine is not kindly "accepted? Abel anſwered and ſaid to Cain, there "is judgment, and there is a judge, and there is "another world; and there are gifts of a good re"ward to the righteous, and vengeance will be "taken on the wicked; and the world was created "in mercy, and in mercy it is governed, for ac"cording to the fruit of good works it is govern"ed; becauſe that my works are better than thine, "my offering is kindly accepted, and thine is not "kindly accepted; and they both ſtrove together "in the field, and Cain roſe up againſt Abel his "brother, and ſlew him." In the Hebrew text in Gen. iv. 8. there is an extraordinary large pauſe, as if a diſcourſe of this kind, which paſſed between the two brothers, was to be inſerted. Philo the Jew ſays [s], that in the contention or diſpute between Cain and Abel, Abel attributed all things to God, and Cain aſcribed every thing to himſelf; ſo that the controverſy was about grace and works, as now; and as then Cain hated his brother upon this account, ſo now carnal men hate and perſecute the ſaints, becauſe they will not allow their works to be the cauſe of juſtification and ſalvation: and from hence alſo it may be obſerved, that a work may be, as to the matter of it, good, and yet as to its circumſtances, and the end and view of it, evil.

Ver. 13. Marvel not, my brethren, if the world hate you.] By the world is meant the inhabitants of the world, the wicked part of them; theſe hate the ſaints, tho' without a cauſe, any juſt cauſe, and for no other reaſon, but becauſe they are choſen and called out of the world, and don't live the wicked life they do: and this hatred of theirs is not at all to be wondred at; ſo it was from the beginning, and has been in all ages ſince; immediately upon the fall there was enmity between the ſeed of the woman, and the ſeed of the ſerpent, which ſhowed itſelf in Cain, the inſtance juſt given, who hated and murdered his righteous brother; Iſhmael that was born after the fleſh, perſecuted Iſaac, that was born after the Spirit; and as it was then, 'tis now, the Jews perſecuted the prophets of old, and hated Chriſt, and his Apoſtles. This is the common lot of all the ſaints, of all that will live godly in Chriſt Jeſus; and therefore it ſhould not be reckoned a ſtrange and unuſual thing; it always was ſo, even from the beginning, as ſoon as ever there were two ſorts of perſons, good and bad, righteous and wicked. This is a corollary or concluſion drawn from the above inſtance of Cain.

Ver. 14. We know that we have paſſed from death to life, &c.] From a death in ſin, a moral or ſpiritual death; which lies in a ſeparation from God, Father, Son, and Spirit; in an alienation from the life of God; in a loſs of the image of God, of righteouſneſs, holineſs, and knowledge, in which man was created; in a privation of all true ſenſe of ſin, and in a ſervitude to it, which is unto death, and is no other than death: and from a legal death, or death in a law ſenſe, under the ſentence of which all men are, as conſidered in Adam; and which God's elect are ſenſible of, when convinced by the Spirit of God, and are in their own apprehenſion as dead men. Now in regeneration, which is a quickning of ſinners dead in ſin, a reſurrection of them from the dead, the people of God paſs from this death of ſin, and the law, to a life of ſanctification, having principles of grace and life implanted in them; and to a life of juſtification, and of faith on Chriſt, as the Lord their righteouſneſs; and to a life of communion with Chriſt; and to ſuch a life as is to the glory of Chriſt; and to a right to eternal life. And this paſſing from the one to the other, is not of themſelves, it is not their own act; no man can quicken himſelf, or raiſe himſelf from the dead; in this men are paſſive: and ſo the words are rendered in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions, we know that we are tranſlated; that is, by God the Father, who delivers from the power of darkneſs, and death, and tranſlates into the kingdom of his dear Son, which is a ſtate of light and life; or by Chriſt, who is the reſurrection and the life, who is the author of the reſurrection from the death of ſin, to a life of grace; or by the Spirit of life from Chriſt, by whom ſouls are quickened, and of whom they are born again: and this paſſage from death to life, or regeneration, is a thing that may be, and is known by the regenerate man; who, as he knows ſurely, that whereas he was blind he now ſees, ſo that whereas he was dead in ſin, he is now alive; and among other things it may be known by this, becauſe we love the brethren: this is not the cauſe of paſſing from death to life, but the effect of it, and ſo an evidence of it, or that by which it is known; brotherly love being what the ſaints are taught of God in regeneration, and is a fruit of the Spirit of God, and is what true faith works by, and is what ſhows itſelf as ſoon as any thing in a regenerate man; nor can any one love the ſaints, as ſuch, as brethren in Chriſt, unleſs he is born agian; a man may indeed love a ſaint, as a natural relative, as a good neighbour, and becauſe he has done him ſome good offices, and becauſe of ſome excellent qualities in him, as a man of learning, ſenſe, candour, civility, &c. tho' he has not the grace of God; but to love him as a child of God, a member of Chriſt, and becauſe he has his image inſtamped on him, no man can do this, unleſs he has received the grace of God; ſo that this is a certain evidence of it: he that loveth not his brother, abideth in death; in the death of ſin, in a ſtate of nature and unregeneracy; under the ſentence of condemnation and death; and he is liable to eternal death, which is the wages of ſin, under the power of which, ſuch a man manifeſtly is. This is ſaid to deter from hatred, as alſo what follows.

Ver. 15. Whoſoever hateth his brother is a murderer, &c.] A ſoul-murderer, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; not only of himſelf, for every ſinner, by ſinning, wrongs and deſtroys his own ſoul; but of his brother whom he hates: he is a murderer of him in his heart, even as he that luſts after a woman hath committed adultery with her in his heart, out of which ariſe murders, as well as adulteries; it is not only taking away life, but alſo cauſeleſs anger, malice, and hatred, that is a breach of the ſixth command; ſee Matt. v. 21, 22, 28. and xv. 19. and ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him; he has not the grace of life, or the beginning of eternal life in him; he has no meetneſs for it, being unregenerate; and no right unto it, being unrighteous; nor has he the earneſt and pledge of it, being deſtitute of the Spirit of God; all which a regenerate man has, and has them abiding in him: not but that the ſin of murder may be forgiven; a man guilty of it may truly repent, and have pardoning grace applied unto him, and enjoy eternal life, thro' the grace of the Spirit, and the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt; but without theſe he is ſo far from having eternal life, that he is not only puniſhable with a corporal death, according to the laws of God and man, but he is expoſed unto, and will die the ſecond, or an eternal death.

Ver. 16. Hereby perceive we the love of God, &c.] The phraſe of God is not in the Oriental verſions, nor in the Greek copies, but is in the Complutenſian edition, and in the Vulgate Latin verſion, and is favoured by the Syriac verſion, which reads, by this we know his love to us; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion, by this we know his love. That is, the love of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is truly and properly God, the great God, the mighty God, the true God, and God over all, bleſſed for ever. His love is manifeſted to his people, and perceived by them in various inſtances; but in nothing is it more clearly ſeen, than in the following one: becauſe he laid down his life for us; of the life of Chriſt, and his laying it down in the room of his people, ſee the note on John xv. 13. which ſhows his love, his free grace and favour; for this aroſe not from any merit, or worth in the perſons he died for; not from their love, lovelineſs, or duty, but from his rich mercy, and the great love wherewith he loved them; and which, tho' it cannot be equalled, ſhould be imitated: and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren; not in ſuch ſenſe, or for ſuch ends and purpoſes, as Chriſt laid down his life for us; for no man, as by giving his money, ſo by laying down his life, can redeem his brother, or give to God a ranſom for him: but the meaning is, that ſaints ought to riſque their lives, and expoſe themſelves to dangers, for the ſake of their brethren, when they are called to it, and the caſe requires it; as Priſcilla and Aquila laid down their necks, or ventured their lives for the Apoſtle Paul, Rom. xvi. 3, 4. and they ſhould alſo, when called unto it, freely lay down their lives in the cauſe of Chriſt, and for the ſake of his Goſpel, for the gaining of ſouls to Chriſt, and for the confirming of the faith of the brethren in him, as the Apoſtles of Chriſt, and the martyrs of Jeſus, have done; this is an argument for brotherly love in the higheſt inſtance of it, taken from the example of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, than which nothing is more forcible, or can lay a greater obligation on the ſaints.

Ver. 17. But whoſo hath this world's good, &c.] The poſſeſſions of this world, worldly ſubſtance, the temporal good things of it; for there are ſome things in it, which are honeſtly, pleaſantly, and profitably good, when uſed lawfully, and not abuſed, otherwiſe they are to the owner's hurt: or the living of this world; that which the men of the world give up themſelves to, are bent upon, and purſue after; or on which men live, and by which life is maintained, and preſerved, and made comfortable in the preſent ſtate of things; ſuch as meat, drink, apparel, money, houſes, lands, &c. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, he that hath the government of this world; as if it pointed at a perſon that is in ſome high office of worldly honour and profit, and is both great and rich; but the words are not to be reſtrained to ſuch an one only, but refer to any man that has any ſhare of the outward enjoyments of life; that has not only a competency for himſelf, and family, but ſomething to ſpare, and eſpecially that has an affluence of wordly ſubſtance; but of him that has not, it is not required; for what a man diſtributes ought to be his own, and not another's, and in proportion to what he has, or according to his ability: and ſeeth his brother have need; meaning, not merely a brother in that ſtrict and natural relation, or bond of conſanguinity; tho' ſuch an one in diſtreſs ought to be, in the firſt place, regarded, for no man ſhould hide himſelf from, overlook and neglect his own fleſh and blood; but any, and every man, his neighbour, as the Ethiopic verſion reads, whom he ought to love as himſelf; and eſpecially a brother in a ſpiritual relation, or one that is of the houſhold of faith: if he has need; that is, is naked and deſtitute of daily food, has not the common ſupplies of life, and what nature requires; and alſo, whoſe circumſtances are low and mean, tho' not reduced to the utmoſt extremity; and if he ſees him in this diſtreſs with his own eyes, or if he knows it, hears of it, and is made acquainted with it, otherwiſe he cannot be blame-worthy for not relieving him. And ſhutteth up his bowels of compaſſion from him; hardens his heart, turns away his eyes, and ſhuts his hand; has no tenderneſs in him for, nor ſympathy with his diſtreſſed brother, nor gives him any ſuccour: and this ſhews, that when relief is given, it ſhould be not in a moroſe and churliſh manner, with reflection and reproach, but with affection and pity; and where there is neither one nor the other, how dwelleth the love of God in him? neither the love with which God loves men; for if this was ſhed abroad in him, and had a place, and dwelt in him, and he was properly affected with it, it would warm his heart, and looſen his affections, and cauſe his bowels to move to his poor brother: nor the love with which God is loved; for if he don't love his brother whom he ſees in diſtreſs, how ſhould he love the inviſible God? chap. iv. 20. nor that love which God requires of him, which is to love his neighbour as himſelf.

Ver. 18. My little children, let us not love in word, neither in tongue, &c.] Which tho' it holds good of love to God, and to Jeſus Chriſt, yet here is to be underſtood of love to the brethren, as the context ſhows; and ſo the Syriac verſion reads, let us not love one another in word, &c. that is, without the heart, or with a double heart; ſpeaking one thing with the lip, and deſigning another thing in the heart; ſpeaking peaceably with the mouth, and with the heart laying wait; or we ſhould not love in this manner only; and ſo the Arabic verſion of De Dieu adds. It is very lawful and right to expreſs our love to one another, and to all men in words, to give good words, and uſe courteous language, and ſpeak in a kind, tender, and affectionate manner, and eſpecially to perſons in diſtreſs; but this ſhould not be all, it will be of no avail to ſay to ſuch, be warmed and filled, and give them nothing, but theſe good words, nothing to warm and fill them with; ſee James ii. 15, 16. but in deed and in truth; for true love is a laborious and operative grace, hence we read of the work and labour of love; it ſhews itſelf by the ſaints ſerving one another, in ſpirituals; as by bearing one another's burdens, forbearing with, and forgiving one another, praying for each other, and building up one another on their moſt holy faith; exhorting each other to the duties of religion, and not ſuffering ſins upon one another, but admoniſh in love, and reſtore with meekneſs; and in temporals, diſtributing to the neceſſities of the ſaints, miniſtring to them of their wordly ſubſtance, and ſupplying their daily wants: and this is loving in deed, or in work; this is actual love, love in fact, and what is apparent and evident: and it is in truth, when it is in reality, and not in ſhow only; and when it is cordially and heartily done, with chearfulneſs, and without grudging.

Ver. 19. And hereby we know that we are of the truth, &c.] By the ſaints loving one another in deed and in truth, they know, as the cauſe is known by the effect, that they are of God, who is the true God, the God of truth, and cannot lye, and is truth itſelf; that they are the children of God, and are born of him, ſince they love thoſe that are, and every like loves it like; and that they are of Jeſus Chriſt, who is the way, the truth, and the life; that they belong to him, are his, ſince they have his Spirit, as appears by his fruits in them, and this, among the reſt, love to the brethren; and that they are his diſciples, which others, even all men know, as well as themſelves, by their mutual brotherly love; and that they are of the Goſpel, which is truth, and the word of truth; that they are begotten, and born again, according to the will and grace of God by it, and are on the ſide of it, and can do nothing againſt, but all for it; and that they are true, ſincere, and upright perſons, true believers in Chriſt, whoſe faith works by love, and and are real lovers of him, and his, ſince they love not in word only, but in deed, and in truth. And ſhall aſſure our hearts before him; or perſuade our hearts; arrive to a full aſſurance of faith, hope, and underſtanding, that we are of the truth, do belong to God, are loved by him with an everlaſting love, are choſen by him unto ſalvation, and are his adopted and regenerated ones, having paſſed from death to life, of which brotherly love is a ſure evidence, ver. 14. Some render the words, ſhall pacify, or make our hearts tranquil, or quiet; this only the blood of Chriſt can do, and does, being ſprinkled on the conſcience: he only has a quiet mind, or true peace of conſcience, that looks to the righteouſneſs of Chriſt for juſtification, and deals with his blood for the full and free remiſſion of his ſins: it is true indeed, that one that loves his brother heartily and ſincerely, has peace of mind in it, tho' not for it; when, on the other hand, there is no peace to the wicked man, that hates his brother; for where there is envying, malice, hatred, and ſtrife, there is no true peace, pleaſure, and comfort, but confuſion, uneaſineſs, diſtraction, and every evil work. Or this paſſage may refer to that holy confidence before God, which true believers in Chriſt, and cordial lovers of the brethren have; both now at the throne of grace, where they can come with boldneſs, intrepidity, and freedom, to aſk for what they want, and confidently believe they ſhall receive what is proper and needful for them; and alſo hereafter, at the throne of judgment, and in the day of judgment, when they ſhall have boldneſs, and not be aſhamed before the judge at his coming; who will particularly take notice of their love in feeding, clothing, and viſiting the leaſt of his brethren, which he takes as done to himſelf.

Ver. 20. For if our heart condemn us, &c.] Of want of love to the brethren, and of hypocriſy in it, as well as of any other ſin; for the conſcience, which is meant by the heart here, is accuſer, witneſs and judge; it accuſes of the evil of ſin, and is as good as a thouſand witneſſes; and upon its own teſtimony pronounces guilty, and condemns. God is greater than our heart; for he is the maker of it, and he has the power over it, and the management of it; it is in his hands, and to be turned by him as he pleaſes; and he is the ſearcher and trier of it; and beſides, is a ſwifter witneſs than conſcience, and a ſuperior judge unto it. And knoweth all things; that are in the heart; the principles of actions, and all the actions of men, for which their hearts condemn them; and all the ſinfulneſs in them, and the aggravations of them; wherefore, as he knows them more perfectly, he judges of them more exactly, and will reprove more ſharply, and condemn more ſeverely for them: hence, if the condemnation of mens hearts and conſciences be ſo very great, as ſometimes to be intolerable and inſupportable, what will be the righteous judgment, and dreadful condemnation of God? how fearful a thing will it be to fall into the hands of the living God? this ſenſe is confirmed by the Syriac verſion rendering it, how much greater is God than our hearts: there is another ſenſe given by ſome, which is not by way of terror, but comfort, and that is, that if the hearts of believers accuſe, reprove, and condemn for ſin thro' unbelief, or want of clear view of pardon and righteouſneſs by Chriſt, God is greater, as in power, ſo in knowledge, than the hearts of men; and he knows the thoughts he has towards them, which are of peace, and not of evil; the covenant he has made with his Son, of which he is ever mindful; and what his Son has done, that he has made full ſatisfaction for ſin, and brought in an everlaſting righteouſneſs; ſo that let ſin, or ſatan, or the world, or the law, or their own hearts condemn them, there is no condemnation of any avail unto them. But the former ſenſe ſeems beſt to agree with the context.

Ver. 21. Beloved, if our heart condemn us not, &c.] Which muſt be underſtood, not of a ſtupidity of mind, as is in unregenerate men, who have no ſenſe of ſin, no ſorrow for it, or remorſe of conſcience on account of it; or as is in them who are paſt feeling; having their conſciences ſeared as with a red-hot iron; ſuch cannot be intitled to the advantages that follow; nor is it of ſuch perſons the Apoſtle ſpeaks, but of himſelf, and other chriſtians, the beloved of the Lord, and one another, who had an experience of the grace of God upon their ſouls, and made a profeſſion of religion: nor does it deſign ſuch a purity of heart and life in believers, as that their hearts do not ſmite, reproach, and condemn them for ſin at any time, for ſuch a ſtate of perfection is not to be attained to, and expected in this life; but rather a conſcience purged by the blood of Chriſt, or an heart ſprinkled from an evil conſcience by that blood, which ſpeaks peace and pardon, ſo that there is no more conſcience of ſin, for the removal of which that is applied; and this gives boldneſs and confidence at the throne of grace: tho' it is beſt of all to confine it to the caſe of brotherly love; for the ſenſe is not, if our heart condemn us not of any thing but of the want of brotherly love, or inſincerity in it, then have we confidence towards God; or with him, at the throne of his grace: ſuch can draw nigh to him, and ſtand before him with an holy and humble confidence, when ſuch as hate the brethren, as Cain did, in whom the Apoſtle inſtances, and thoſe that go in his way cannot; whoſe heart condemned him, his conſcience ſmote him, and he went from the preſence of the Lord; but thoſe that love the brethren have confidence of their relation to God; by this they know their regeneration, and by that their adoption, and ſo that they are the children of God; and can therefore draw nigh to God as their father, and call him ſo; they can come with an holy boldneſs and intrepidity of mind before him, and uſe a ϖαῤῥησια, freedom of ſpeech with him; can tell him all their mind, pour out their ſouls unto him, and lay before him their caſe and wants; they have confidence of his power, faithfulneſs, and willingneſs to ſupply their need, and fulfil all his promiſes to them, and that their prayers will be heard, anſwered, and regarded by him in his own time.

Ver. 22. And whatſoever we aſk we receive of him, &c.] According to his promiſe, Matt. vii. 7. that is, whatever is aſked according to the will of God, in the name of Chriſt, and for his ſake, and in faith, nothing wavering, but believing in God, in his covenant and promiſes, for theſe are proviſo's in the caſe; and ſuch as aſk in this way may exerciſe an holy confidence that they ſhall receive; and indeed they do receive what they aſk for; ſee 1 John v. 14. John xiv. 13, 14. Matt. xxi. 22. becauſe we keep his commandments; not that keeping the commands of God is the meritorious cauſe of receiving any thing from him; for when men have done all they can, or are aſſiſted to do, they are but unprofitable ſervants in point of merit: whatever is received from God, as it is in conſequence of aſking, ſo it is entirely owing to his own grace and favour, and for the ſake of Chriſt; but keeping the commands of God is a neceſſary adjunct, or, as Calvin on the text calls it, an inſeparable accident, or what neceſſarily belongs unto, and enters into the character of ſuch, who are heard and anſwered by God, and receive at his hands; for there is a great deal of truth in what the Jews ſay to the blind man, John ix. 31. and which may ſerve as a comment on theſe words: and do thoſe things that are pleaſing in his ſight; as keeping of his commandments is; not that theſe things ingratiate into the love and favour of God, or are the cauſes and conditions of it, for the love of God is prior to any thing of this kind; nor are they the cauſes of mens acceptance with God, for the acceptance both of perſons and ſervices is only in Chriſt the beloved; but theſe things are what God approves of, when done in faith, from a principle of love, and with a view to his glory: and ſince he hears ſuch perſons that are worſhippers of him, and do his will, and has promiſed good things to them; this is therefore a reaſon ſtrengthening their confidence in him, that what they aſk, they ſhall receive.

Ver. 23. And this is his commandment, &c.] Having mentioned the keeping of the commandments of God, the Apoſtle proceeds to ſhew what they are; that they are faith in Chriſt, and love to one another; which two are reduced to one, becauſe they are inſeparable; where the one is, the other is; faith works by love. That we ſhould believe on the name of his Son Jeſus Chriſt; Chriſt is the object of faith, and he is ſo, as he is Jeſus, a ſaviour; faith deals with him as ſuch, and will have no other ſaviour but he: and now to believe in him, is not merely to believe that he is the Son of God, the true Meſſiah, the ſaviour of the world, that he is come in the fleſh, has ſuffered, and died, and roſe again from the dead, is aſcended into heaven, and is ſet down at the right hand of God, makes interceſſion for his people, and will come again to judge the quick and dead; but it is to go forth in ſpecial and ſpiritual acts upon him, ſuch as looking at him, coming to him, venturing on him, truſting in him for life and ſalvation, committing all into his hands, and expecting all from him. And this is called a commandment, and comes under the notion of one; not that it is properly a law, or belongs to the law; for faith in Chriſt Jeſus is a fruit of electing grace, and a bleſſing of the covenant of grace; it is the free gift of God, and the operation of his Spirit, and is peculiar to the elect of God, and ſheep of Chriſt; and ſo cannot belong to the law of works; but, as the Hebrew words, תורה, and מצוה, both ſignify any doctrine, and inſtruction in general; ſee Pſ. xix. 7, 8. ſo the word here uſed deſigns an evangelical doctrine, a divine inſtruction of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, in the Goſpel, which declares that he that believes in Chriſt ſhall be ſaved; and ſo the word is uſed for a doctrine in this Epiſtle, ch. ii. 7. and that of the next command or doctrine, which follows, and love one another as he gave us commandment; that is, as Chriſt taught and inſtructed his diſciples, John xiii. 34. and xv. 12, 17.

Ver. 24. And he that keepeth his commandments, &c.] Attends to thoſe inſtructions and declarations concerning faith in Chriſt, and love to the brethren, and acts according to them: dwelleth in him, and he in them; that is, he dwells in Chriſt, and Chriſt dwells in him; the ſame is ſaid of believing in Chriſt under the figurative expreſſions of eating his fleſh, and drinking his blood, in John vi. 56. ſee the note there: and hereby we know that he abideth in us; or dwelleth in us, as before, by the Spirit which he hath given us; which if underſtood of private chriſtians, as the preceding verſes incline to, the ſenſe is, that union to Chriſt, and the continuance of it, or his indwelling as a fruit of union, and the permanency of that, are evidenced by the Spirit of God; who is given in conſequence of union and relation to Chriſt, as a Spirit of regeneration and ſanctification, of faith, and love, of adoption, and as the earneſt of the heavenly inheritance; but if of the Apoſtles and miniſters of the word, it may regard the gifts of the Holy Spirit beſtowed on them, fitting them for their work and office, and who is a Spirit of truth, and not of error; and by having and enjoying theſe, they knew that Chriſt abode in them, and had reaſon to believe, according to his promiſe, that he would be with them, and with his miniſtring ſervants in ſucceſſion, to the end of the world; and this ſenſe ſeems to be encouraged by the former part of the following chapter.

CHAP. IV.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle cautions againſt ſeducing ſpirits; adviſes to try them, and gives rules by which they may be known, and by which they are diſtinguiſhed from others; and then returns to his favourite ſubject, brotherly love. He exhorts the ſaints not to believe every man that came with a doctrine to them, but to try them, ſince there were many falſe teachers in the world; and gives a rule by which they may be tried and judged, as that whatever teacher owns Chriſt to be come in the fleſh, is of God, but he that does not, is not of God, but is the ſpirit of antichriſt that ſhould come, and was in the world, ver. 1, 2. but for the comfort of thoſe to whom he writes, he obſerves, that they were of God, and had overcome theſe falſe teachers, thro' the mighty power of the divine Spirit in them, who is greater than ſatan, and all his emiſſaries, ver. 4. He diſtinguiſhes between ſeducing ſpirits, and faithful miniſters of the word; the former are of the world, ſpeak of worldly things, and worldly men hear them; but the latter are of God, and they that have any ſpiritual knowledge of God hear them; but ſuch as are not of God, do not hear them, by which may be known the ſpirit of truth from the ſpirit of error, ver. 5, 6. And then the Apoſtle returns to his former exhortation, to brotherly love, which he enforces by the following reaſons, becauſe it is of God, a fruit of his Spirit and grace, and becauſe it is an evidence of being born of God, and of having a true knowledge of him; whereas he that is deſtitute of it does not know him, ſeeing God is love, ver. 7, 8. and having affirmed that God is love, he proves it, by the miſſion of his Son, to be a propitiation for the ſins of ſuch that did not love him, and that they might live thro' him; wherefore he argues, that if God had ſuch a love to men, ſo undeſerving of it, then the ſaints ought to love one another, ver. 9, 10, 11. Other arguments follow, engaging to it, as that God is inviſible; and if he is to be loved, then certainly his people, who are viſible; and that ſuch who love one another, God dwells in them, and his love is perfected in them; and that he dwells in them, is known by the gift of his Spirit to them, ver. 12, 13. and that God the Father ſo loved the world, as to ſend his Son to be the ſaviour of it, before aſſerted, is confirmed by the Apoſtles, who were eye-witneſſes of it; who alſo declare, that whoever confeſſes the Sonſhip of Chriſt, God dwells in him, and he in God; and who had an aſſurance of the love of God to them, who is love itſelf; ſo that he that dwells in God, and God in him, dwells in love, ver. 14, 15, 16. And great are the advantages ariſing from hence, for hereby the ſaints love to God is made perfect; they have boldneſs in the day of judgment, ſince as he is, ſo are they in this world, and fear is caſt out by it, ver. 17, 18. but leſt too much ſhould be thought to be aſcribed to love, that is ſaid to be owing to the love of God to them, which is prior to theirs to him, and the reaſon of it, ver. 19. And the chapter is cloſed with obſerving the contradiction there is between a profeſſion of love to God, and hatred of the brethren, ſeeing God, who is inviſible, cannot be loved, if brethren that are ſeen are hated; and alſo the commandment, that he that loves God ſhould love his brother alſo, ver. 20, 21.

Ver. 1. Beloved, believe not every ſpirit, &c.] The Apoſtle having mentioned the word ſpirit in the latter part of the preceding chapter, takes an occaſion from thence to return to what he had been ſuggeſting in the ſecond chapter, concerning the many antichriſts that then were, and whom he points out, and here cautions againſt. By every ſpirit he means, either every doctrine that is pretended to come from the Spirit of God, or every teacher, who profeſſes to be qualified and ſent by him, and to have his light, knowledge, and doctrine from him. Every true miniſter of the Goſpel has the Spirit, and the gifts of the Spirit, more or leſs, to qualify him for his work; he is ſeparated, and called to it by him, and receives his ſpiritual light and knowledge from him; it is he that teaches him ſound doctrine, and leads him into all truth, as it is in Jeſus, and brings every neceſſary truth to his remembrance; and who ſucceeds his miniſtrations to the good of ſouls: but there are ſome who call themſelves the miniſters of the Goſpel, who, tho' they may have ſome natural abilities, and a ſhare of human learning, and a notional knowledge of things, yet have never received either grace or gifts from the Spirit; nor have they been ever called by him; nor are their miniſtrations according to that divine word which is inſpired by him, nor attended with his demonſtration and power; wherefore, fore, tho' ſome profeſſing to have the Spirit of Chriſt are to be believed, yet not every one; and tho' the Spirit is not to be quenched in any, nor propheſying to be deſpiſed, yet care ſhould be taken what is heard and received: ſome perſons are ſo obſtinate and incredulous as not to believe any thing that is declared, be the evidence what it will; as the Jews would not believe Chriſt and his Apoſtles, tho' what they ſaid agreed with Moſes and the prophets, and was confirmed by miracles; and others are too credulous; at once receive every teacher, and embrace every upſtart doctrine: this they ſhould not do, but try the ſpirits whether they are of God; not by human reaſon, eſpecially as carnal and unſanctified; for tho' the doctrines of the Goſpel are not contrary to true reaſon, they are above it, and not to be judged of by it, and are diſapproved of, and rejected by carnal reaſon; but by the word of God, which is the ſtandard of all doctrine; and whatever agrees with that, is to be received, and what does not ſhould be rejected. And ſo to do is very commendable, as appears from the inſtance of the Beræans, who on this account are ſaid to be more noble than thoſe of Theſſalonica, Acts xvii. 11. and from the commendation of the church at Epheſus, Rev. ii. 2. And this is what every believer, every private chriſtian ſhould do; to them it belongs to read and ſearch the ſcriptures, and prove all things, and judge for themſelves of the truth of doctrine; and to ſuch a probation or trial of the ſpirits, ſpiritual light, knowledge, judgment, ſenſe, experience, and divine guidance are neceſſary, which ſhould be aſked of God, and an increaſe thereof; and all ſuch diligent ſearchers, and humble enquirers, are capable of making judgment of perſons and doctrines, whether they are from the Spirit of God or not, for the Spirit of God never ſpeaks contrary to his word: and the reaſon why ſuch a trial ſhould be made, is, becauſe many falſe prophets are gone out into the world; ſuch who pretended either to a revelation of future things, and to foretel things to come; or rather to a gift of propheſying, or preaching in Chriſt's name, to be prophets and ſpiritual men, and miniſters of the word, but were falſe ones; who either predicted what did not come to paſs, or rather preached falſe doctrine, by corrupting the word, and handling it deceitfully, and ſo impoſed upon; and ruined the ſouls of others, as well as deceived their own: and there were not only one, or two, or a few of theſe, but many, as our Lord had foretold, Matt. xxiv. 11, 24. and which makes the reaſon the ſtronger for not believing every ſpirit, but trying them; and the rather, ſince they were not ſent of God, nor called out by his churches, but were gone out of themſelves; of their own heads, and without any miſſion from God or man: and into the world too; they were in every part of it, and eſpecially where there were any churches of Chriſt; into which they firſt crept in privily, and at unawares, but afterwards became publick preachers of the word, and then ſeparating from them, ſet up openly in the world for themſelves.

Ver. 2. Hereby know ye the Spirit of God, &c.] This is a rule by which believers may know, whether a man profeſſing to have the Spirit of God, and to be called and ſent by him, and whether the doctrine he preaches is of him or no: every ſpirit that confeſſeth that Jeſus Chriſt is come in the fleſh, is of God; or of the Spirit of God; that is, every doctrine which carries this truth in it; or every man that owns, and profeſſes, and publiſhes this doctrine concerning Chriſt, is on the ſide of God and truth; and which contains ſeveral articles in it, reſpecting the perſon and office of Chriſt; as that he exiſted before he came in the fleſh, not in the human nature, or as man, or as an angel, but as the Son of God, as a divine perſon, being truly and properly God; ſo that this confeſſion takes in his divine Sonſhip, and proper deity, and alſo his true and real humanity; that the Meſſiah was incarnate, againſt the Jews, and was God and man in one perſon; and that he was really man, and not in appearance only, againſt the hereticks of thoſe times: and it alſo includes his offices, as that Jeſus of Nazareth was the Chriſt, the Meſſiah, which the Jews denied, and that he was the anointed prophet, prieſt, and king; and ſo is a confeſſion or acknowledgment of all the doctrines of the Goſpel, which came by him, as a prophet; and of his ſatisfaction, ſacrifice, and interceſſion, as a prieſt; and of all his ordinances and commands as a king; and that he is the only ſaviour and redeemer of men. Now, whoever owns and declares this ſyſtem of truth, is of God; not that every one that aſſents unto this, or preaches it, is born of God; a man may believe, and confeſs all this, as the devils themſelves do, and yet be deſtitute of the grace of God; but the Spirit, or doctrine, which contains theſe things in it, is certainly of God, or comes from him; or whoever brings theſe truths with him, and preaches them, he is, ſo far as he does ſo, on the ſide of God and truth, and to be regarded.

Ver. 3. And every ſpirit that confeſſeth not, &c.] The proper deity and Sonſhip of Chriſt, his true and real humanity, and his Meſſiahſhip; or any of his offices, doctrines, and ordinances; or his ſatisfaction and righteouſneſs; or that peace, pardon, juſtification, life, and ſalvation are by him; all which are meant by what follows, that Jeſus Chriſt is come in the fleſh: this clauſe is left out in the Ethiopic verſion, and that without hurting the ſenſe, ſince it is eaſily ſupplied from the preceding verſe; and the Alexandrian copy, and the Vulgate Latin verſion, only read Jeſus; and the latter reads the whole thus, and every ſpirit that diſſolves Jeſus; that ſeparates the two natures, human and divine, in him, and makes two perſons of them; or denies either of them, either that he is truly God, or really man, or denies him to be Jeſus, the ſaviour; who, as much as in him lies, deſtroys his perſon, office, and work, and makes void his obedience, ſufferings, and death: is not of God; neither he, nor his doctrine are of God; his doctrine cannot come from God, being contrary to the word of God; and he himſelf is neither born of God, nor on his ſide. And this is that ſpirit of antichriſt; who is againſt Chriſt, or oppoſes himſelf to him; as he who denies his Sonſhip, his deity, his humanity, his offices, and his grace, manifeſtly does; every doctrine that is calculated againſt theſe truths, is the ſpirit and doctrine of antichriſt: whereof you have heard, that it ſhould come; and even now already is it in the world; in the falſe teachers, the fore-runners of antichriſt; ſee the note on ch. ii. 18.

Ver. 4. Ye are of God, little children, &c.] This, with what follows, is ſaid for the comfort of the ſaints, and to deliver them from the fears of being drawn aſide by the deluſions of the falſe prophets, and antichriſts; ſince they belonged to God, were his elect, and therefore could not be finally and totally ſeduced; they were the children of God by adopting grace, and could not become the ſervants of men; they were born of God, and ſo were kept by the power of God unto ſalvation, as all that are begotten unto a lively hope are; they were enlightned by the Spirit of God, and had a diſcerning of truth from error, and therefore could not be impoſed upon: and have overcome them; the falſe prophets, being in a good cauſe, fighting the good fight of faith, and having good weapons, particularly, the ſword of the Spirit, which is the word of God, and invincible arguments from thence; and alſo gracious aſſiſtance from the Spirit of God, who gives a mouth that none can ſhut, and wiſdom that none can reſiſt; as well as an inward experience of the truth, and power of Goſpel doctrines; a teſtimony within themſelves, which will ſtand the whole ſhock and oppoſition of the enemy: the Vulgate Latin verſion reads, and have overcome him; antichriſt, whoſe ſpirit was then in the world; or the world itſelf, or ſatan, the God of the world; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion reads, and have overcome the evil one, as in ch. ii. 13, 14. the reaſon of which victory, and which adds to the comfort and ſupport of ſaints in their preſent warfare, is, becauſe greater is he that is in you, than he that is in the world; by he that is in the world is meant, either the devil, the prince and God of the world, and who goes up and down in it, dwells in the hearts of the men of it, under whoſe influence they are, and in whom he works effectually; or antichriſt, whoſe ſpirit was now in the world, and whoſe doctrine was propagated by the falſe teachers, in whom he began to appear; but he that is in the ſaints, either God who dwells in them, and they in him, ver. 15. is mighter than the man of ſin, and his emiſſaries, to keep and preſerve from all corruptions, and every falſe way; or Chriſt, who dwells in their hearts by faith, and is ſtronger than the ſtrong man armed, and able to ſave and deliver out of his hands; or the Spirit of God; and ſo the Arabic verſion reads, the Spirit that is in you; who is in the ſaints, as a Spirit of regeneration and ſanctification, as a Spirit of adoption, and the earneſt of their inheritance; he is able to carry on the work of grace in them, and finiſh it, and will do it; and he, as a Spirit of truth, is more powerful than the ſpirit of error; and when the enemy comes in like a flood, or pours in a flood of errors and hereſies, he lifts up a ſtandard againſt him; cauſes him to fly, and ſecures the ſaints from being carried away with it: compare with this the Septuagint verſion of Pſ. cxxiv. 1, 2. if it had not been the Lord who was on our ſide; which render it thus, if the Lord had not been in us.

4 Ver. 5. They are of the world, &c.] That is, the falſe prophets and teachers that were gone out into the world, and had the ſpirit of antichriſt in them; theſe were as they were when they came into the world, under the pollution, guilt, and dominion of ſin, in a ſtate of unregeneracy, carnality, and darkneſs; they properly belonged unto it, and walked after the courſe of it, and were under the influence of the God of it, who led them into error; and were ſenſual, and indulged themſelves in worldly luſts, and were ſeeking after worldly things; ſuppoſed that gain was godlineſs, and had mens perſons in admiration becauſe of advantage; their nature and diſpoſition, their principles and practices, and their ends and views, were worldly; and were quite different from Chriſt and his Apoſtles, John xvii. 14, 16. therefore ſpeak they of the world; they ſpeak the wiſdom of the world, or that in which the world thinks wiſdom lies, and cry up for true knowledge, and right principles; and this they do with the enticing words of man's wiſdom, or in words which man's wiſdom teacheth; ſpeaking great ſwelling words of vanity, which take with vain and carnal minds; and preach doctrines ſuited to their own taſte, and the taſte of others, as carnal and worldly men; ſuch as the purity of human nature, in its firſt conception and birth, its freedom from any original corruption, and from any concern with the ſin of Adam, only with actual ſin of its own; and the power of it to do that which is good, keep the law of God, and obtain his favour; the non-neceſſity of any internal work of efficacious grace, a reformation of life and manners, being thought ſufficient to render a man acceptable to God, and prepare him for eternal happineſs; the doctrine of juſtification and ſalvation by works; all which are pleaſing to carnal men: hence it follows, and the world heareth them; the wicked of the world; worldly and unregenerate men attend on their miniſtry, approve of what they deliver, and receive it with pleaſure, and believe it: this expreſſes both the quality of the hearers of falſe teachers, that they are that part of the world, the worſe part of it, which lies in wickedneſs; and the quantity of them, the greater part of the world, as it was foretold by Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, that they ſhould deceive many, that many ſhould follow their pernicious ways, and that they ſhould draw many diſciples after them; wherefore the numbers that attend ſuch perſons, ~~as it~~ need not be wondered at, ſince both preachers and hearers, and the doctrines preached and heard, are all alike, they are of the world, ſo it ſhould not be ſtumbling to the people of God.

Ver. 6. We are of God, &c.] Not only as the choſen of God, the children of God, regenerated ones, and believers, but as miniſters of the Goſpel; they were choſen, and called, and ſent of God to preach the Goſpel, and were qualified for it, by gifts received from him, and had their doctrine from him, as well as their commiſſion and miſſion: they were not of the world, and therefore did not ſpeak of the world, nor things ſuited to worldly men; but being of God, they ſpoke the words of God, which were agreeable to him, which made for the glory of the three divine perſons, and were conſiſtent with the divine perfections; which maintained the honour and dignity of the perſons in the Godhead; which magnified the grace of God in ſalvation, and debaſed the creature: he that knoweth God; not only as the God of nature and providence, but as in Chriſt, and that not only profeſſionally, but practically; that has an experimental knowledge of him, that knows him, as exerciſing loving kindneſs, having taſted of his grace and goodneſs; that knows him ſo as to truſt in him, and love him; for ſuch a knowledge of God is meant, as has true real affection to him joined with it; ſo that it is he that loves his name, his glory, his truths, and his ordinances: he heareth us; not only externally, conſtantly attending on the miniſtry of the word, as ſuch do; but internally, underſtanding what is heard, receiving it in love, cordially embracing it, and firmly believing it, and acting according to it: he that is not of God; who is not born of God, but is as he was when born into the world, and is of it; and who does not righteouſneſs, nor loves his brother, nor confeſſes the divinity, humanity, and offices of Chriſt, and ſo is not on the ſide of truth, nor has the truth of grace in him; ſee ch. iii. 10. and iv. 3. ſuch a man heareth not us; he is a mere natural man, a carnal and unregenerate man; and ſuch an one cannot attend on a Goſpel miniſtry, or receive Goſpel doctrines, which are with him ſenſeleſs, ſtupid, and fooliſh notions, yea, fooliſhneſs itſelf; nor can he know and underſtand them through ignorance, and want of a ſpiritual diſcerning; they are hard ſayings, and he cannot hear, nor bear them; and when this is the caſe, it is a plain token of unregeneracy, and that ſuch perſons are not of God; ſee John viii. 47. Hereby know we the ſpirit of truth, and the ſpirit of error; the difference between truth and error; can diſtinguiſh one from another, and diſcern who are the true miniſters of Chriſt, and who are the falſe teachers; for not only the word of God, the ſcriptures of truth, are the teſt and ſtandard, the touchſtone to bring them to, and try them by; and the doctrines they ſeverally bring ſhew who they are; but even their very hearers diſtinguiſh them. Spirits, or men pretending to the Spirit of God, may be known in a great meaſure by their followers; they who have the ſpirit of error, and are of the world, they are followed, and careſſed, and aplauded by the men of the world, by unregenerate perſons; they who have the ſpirit of truth, and are of God, they are heard and approved of, and embraced by ſpiritual men, by ſuch who know God in Chriſt, and have taſted that the Lord is gracious.

Ver. 7. Beloved, let us love one another, &c.] The Apoſtle having finiſhed what he propoſed to ſay concerning the trying of ſpirits, returns to his former exhortation to brotherly love, and which comes with freſh force and ſtrength; for ſince worldly men follow, hear, embrace, and cleave to the falſe teachers; ſuch as are of God, and on the ſide of truth, ſhould love one another, and their faithful miniſters, and ſtand faſt in one ſpirit by the truths of the Goſpel, in oppoſition to every error: for love is of God; to love one another is the command of God, it is his revealed will, and is well-pleaſing in his ſight; it comes from him, is a gift of his grace, and a fruit of his Spirit, and which he teaches regenerate ones to exerciſe: and every one that loveth God, as the Alexandrian copy reads, or Chriſt, and the ſaints, who ſeem to be particularly meant: is born of God; for love to the brethren is an evidence of regeneration; ſee the note on ch. iii. 14. and knoweth God; he knows God in Chriſt, and therefore loves thoſe who have the grace of God in them, and the image of Chriſt upon them; he knows the mind and will of God, being taught of God to love the brethren; and he knows the love of God, and has had an experience of the grace of God, which influences him to love the ſaints.

Ver. 8. He that loveth not, knoweth not God, &c.] If a man loves not the children of God, thoſe that are born of him, he does not know, ſo as to love, God, the Father of them; for to pretend love to God, the begetter of them, whom he ſees not, and not love thoſe who are begotten by him, and are viſible objects of reſpect, is a contradiction, and cannot be reconciled; ſee ver. 20. This clauſe is left out in the Ethiopic verſion, and is tranſpoſed in the Syriac verſion, which reads the text thus, for God is love, and whoever loveth not, knoweth not God. By which reading, the following reaſon ſtands in cloſe connexion with ver. 7. For God is love; he loves himſelf; there is an entire love between the three divine perſons, who are in the ſtricteſt, and in the moſt unconceivable and inexpreſſible manner affected to each other; their love is natural and eſſential: God loves all his creatures as ſuch, nor does he hate any of them, as ſo conſidered; and he bears an everlaſting, unchangeable, and invariable love to his elect in Chriſt Jeſus; of which an inſtance is given in the following verſes, and is a reaſon why the ſaints ſhould love one another; that they might be like their heavenly Father, by whom they are begotten, and of whom they are born, and whoſe children they are; ſeeing he is love itſelf, and in his breaſt is nothing elſe but love. So the Shekinah is, by the Cabaliſtic Jews [t], called, אהבה, love.

Ver. 9. In this was manifeſted the love of God towards us, &c.] The love of God here ſpoken of, and inſtanced in, is not his general love to all his creatures, which is ſhown in the make of them, and in the ſupport of them in their beings, and in his providential care of them, and kindneſs to them; but his ſpecial love towards his elect, and which was before it was manifeſted; it was ſecretly in his heart from everlaſting, and did not begin to be at the miſſion of Chriſt into the world, but was then in a moſt glaring manner manifeſted: there were ſeveral acts of it before, as the choice of them in Chriſt, the appointment of him to be their ſaviour, and the covenant of grace made with him on their account; theſe were more ſecret and hidden; but now the love and kindneſs of God appeared, broke forth, and ſhone out in its glory; this is a moſt flagrant and notorious inſtance of it, in which it is exceedingly conſpicuous; this is a moſt clear proof, a plain and full demonſtration of it: becauſe that God ſent his only-begotten Son into the world; the ſender is God the Father, who is diſtinguiſhed from the Son that is ſent; of which act of ſending, ſee the notes on Rom. viii. 3. and Gal. iv. 4. and for him, who is that God againſt whom we have ſinned, and is that lawgiver that is able to ſave, and to deſtroy, and of purer eyes than to behold iniquity, to ſend his Son to be the ſaviour of ſinful men, is an amazing inſtance of love; and which appears the more manifeſt, when 'tis obſerved that it is his only-begotten Son that is ſent; of which ſee the note on John i. 14. and the place he was ſent into is the world, where his people are, and where their ſins are committed, he came to expiate; and where he was treated with great indignity and contempt, and ſuffered many things, and at laſt death itſelf: the end of his miſſion was, that we might live thro' him; who were dead in Adam, dead in ſin, and dead in law, and could not quicken themſelves; nor obtain eternal life for themſelves, by their performances. Chriſt came, being ſent, that they might have life, and that more abundantly than Adam had in innocence, or man loſt by the fall; and accordingly they were quickned together with him; when he was quickned, after he had been put to death, they were virtually and repreſentatively quickned and juſtified in him; and in conſequence of his death and reſurrection from the dead, they are regenerated and made ſpiritually alive, and live unto righteouſneſs; and thro' his righteouſneſs wrought out for them, and imputed to them, they are in a law-ſenſe alive unto God, and alive and comfortable in their own ſouls, living by faith on Chriſt, and have a right and title to eternal life; and which they alſo have thro' him, and which is chiefly intended here; for the deſign is not only that they may live ſpiritually and comfortably here, but eternally hereafter.

Ver. 10. Herein is love, &c.] The love of God, free love, love that cannot be matched: herein it is manifeſted, as before; this is a clear evidence of it, an undoubted proof, and puts it out of all queſtion: not that we loved God; the love of God is antecedent to the love of his people; it was when theirs were not; when they were without love to him, yea enemies in their minds, by wicked works, and even enmity itſelf, and therefore was not procured by theirs; but on the contrary, their love to him is cauſed by his love to them; hence his love, and a continuance in it, do not depend on theirs; nor does it vary according to theirs; wherefore there is good reaſon to believe it will continue, and never be removed; and this ſhows the ſovereignty and freeneſs of the love of God, and that it is ſurprizing and matchleſs: but that he loved us; that is, God; and ſo the Syriac verſion reads, but that God himſelf loved us. The Vulgate Latin verſion adds, firſt, as in ver. 19. the inſtance of this love follows: and ſent his Son to be the propitiation for our ſins; this is a ſubordinate end to the other, mentioned in the preceding verſe; for, in order that ſinful men may poſſeſs everlaſting life and happineſs, 'tis neceſſary that their ſins be expiated, or atonement be made for them, which is meant by Chriſt's being a propitiation for them; that the juſtice of God ſhould be ſatisfied; that peace and righteouſneſs, or love and juſtice, ſhould be reconciled together, and kiſs each other; and that all obſtructions be removed out of the way of the enjoyment of life, which are brought in by ſin; and that the wrath of God which ſin deſerved, be averted or appeaſed, according to our ſenſe and apprehenſion of it; for otherwiſe the love of God to his people is from everlaſting, and is unchangeable, and never alters, or never changes from love to wrath, or from wrath to love; nor is the love of God procured by the ſatisfaction and ſacrifice of Chriſt, which are the effects of it; but hereby the way is laid open for the diſplay of it, and the application of its effects, in a way conſiſtent with the law and juſtice of God. This phraſe is expreſſive of the great love of Chriſt to his people, and of his ſubſtitution in their room and ſtead; and ſo it is uſed among the Jews for a ſubſtitution in the room of others, לרוב אהבתו, to expreſs the greatneſs of love[a]; ſee the notes on Rom. iii. 25. and ix. 3.

[t] Shirhaſhirim Rabba, fol. 15. 1. & Lex. Cabal. p. 43, 44.

Ver. 11. Beloved, if God ſo loved us, &c.] As to ſend his Son to be a propitiatory ſacrifice for our ſins, and to obtain eternal life for us thro' his ſufferings and death: the Apoſtle uſes the ſame language his lord and maſter did, John iii. 16. we ought alſo to love one another; for thoſe who are the objects of God's love, ought to be the objects of ours; and if God has loved our fellow-chriſtians and brethren to ſuch a degree, as to ſend his Son to die for them, we ought to love them too; and if we are intereſted in the ſame love, the obligation is ſtill the greater; and if God loved them with ſo great a love, when they did not love him, but were enemies to him, then ſurely we ought to love them now they are become the friends of God, and ours alſo; as God loved them freely, and when unlovely, and us likewiſe in the ſame manner, and under the ſame circumſtances, then we ought to love, and continue to love the ſaints, tho' there may be ſomething in their temper and conduct diſagreeable: God is to be imitated in his love; and his love to us, which is unmerited and matchleſs, ſhould influence and engage us to the love of the brethren, who have a far greater claim to our love than we can make to the love of God; and which indeed is none at all, but what he is pleaſed to give us.

Ver. 12. No man hath ſeen God at any time, &c.] The ſame is ſaid by the Evangeliſt John, ch. i. 18. but here it is obſerved with a different view, and upon another account; there it ſignifies that no man has ſeen and looked into the counſels and deſigns of God, and been able to make a diſcovery and declaration of his mind and will, his love and grace, and which is there aſcribed to the Son of God, ſee the note there: but here the ſenſe is, that whereas God is inviſible in his nature, and incomprehenſible in his being and perfections, ſo that there is no coming to him, and ſeeing of him, and converſing with him in a familiar way, and ſo not of loving him as he is in himſelf, and ought to be loved, as one friend ſees, converſes with, and loves another, and finds his love increaſed by ſight and converſation; then we ought to love the ſaints and people of God, who are viſible, may be ſeen, come at, and converſed with, ſee ver. 20. for this clauſe ſtands among the arguments and reaſons for brotherly love: if we love one another God dwelleth in us; not as he does in his Son, by union of nature; nor as in heaven, by the diſplays of his glory; nor as in the whole world, by his omnipreſence and power; but by his Spirit, and the communications of his love, and by his gracious preſence and communion, which he indulges the ſaints with; for ſuch who love one another, as they appear to have the Spirit of God, of which that grace is a fruit, ſo they are by the Spirit built up a fit habitation for God, and by which Spirit he dwells in them; and ſuch may expect the preſence of God, for they who live in peace, the God of love and peace ſhall be with them: and his love is perfected in us; not that love of God, with which he loves his people; for that admits of no degrees and is not more or leſs in itſelf, or in his heart; but is always invariably and unchangeably the ſame, and is full, compleat, and perfect in his own breaſt, as it was from all eternity; and does not paſs by degrees, or gradually riſe from a love of benevolence to a love of complacency and delight, or increaſe as our love does to him and to one another, on which it has no dependance: nor is this love perfected in the ſaints in this life; that is to ſay, they have not perfect knowledge and enjoyment of it; nor have they all the effects of it beſtowed upon them, and applied unto them; the perfection of it, in this ſenſe, will be in heaven: but the love with which God is loved is here deſigned; and it is called his, becauſe he is both the object and the author of it; and this is not perfect as to degrees; yea, ſometimes, inſtead of abounding and increaſing, it goes back, it is left, and waxes cold; and it will not have its completion till the ſaints come to heaven, and then it will be in its full perfection and glory, when faith and hope ſhall be no more: but the ſenſe is, that this grace of love is ſincere and hearty, and without diſſimulation; it is unfeigned love; and it is in deed and in truth, and not in word and in tongue only; and this appears to be ſo, by the love which is ſhown to the brethren, the children of God; ſo that love to God in the ſaints is perfected by love to the brethren, juſt in ſuch ſenſe as faith is made perfect by works, Jam. ii. 22. that is, is made to appear to be genuine, right, and true.

Ver. 13. Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, &c.] That there is a communion between God and us, and a communication of his love and grace to us, and an exerciſe of grace upon him; for God dwells in his people by his Spirit and grace, and they dwell in him by the exerciſe of faith and love upon him: and this is known, becauſe he hath given us of his Spirit; not of the eſſence and nature of the Spirit, which is the ſame with the nature of the Father and of the Son, and is incommunicable; but either of the gifts of the Spirit, which are divided to every man as he pleaſes, and which being beſtowed on men, and uſed by them, for the profit and advantage of the church of God, ſhow that God is with them, and dwells among them of a truth; or of the graces of the Spirit, ſuch as faith, hope, hope and love, which are ſeverally the gifts of God; and theſe being beſtowed and exerciſed, are proofs of the mutual indwelling of God and his people; ſee the note on ch. iii. 24.

Ver. 14. And we have ſeen, and do teſtify, &c.] This ſeems to be particularly ſaid of the Apoſtles, who had a clear diſcerning of the love and grace of God, manifeſted in the miſſion of Chriſt into the world; for tho' no man had ſeen his nature and his perſon, yet they had ſeen his love, and the exceeding riches of his grace, which he had ſhewn forth in Chriſt Jeſus; and they had alſo ſeen Chriſt, God manifeſt in the fleſh; they had ſeen his glory, as the glory of the only-begotten of the Father; they had ſeen him with their bodily eyes; they had ſeen his works and miracles; they had ſeen him dying and riſen again from the dead, and go up to heaven; they were witneſſes, and eye-witneſſes of him, and bore a faithful teſtimony of him, and for him, and particularly ſet their ſeal to this truth, that the Father ſent the Son to be the Saviour of the world; not of every individual perſon in it, for there are ſome that will go into everlaſting puniſhment, and even a world that will be condemned; Chriſt is not in fact the Saviour of all the individuals of human nature, and therefore was not ſent to be ſuch; for if he was, the end of his miſſion is not fully anſwered; nor of the Jews only, but of the Gentiles alſo, and who are chiefly intended by the world; ſee the note on ch. ii. 2. and even of all the elect of God, ſtiled his people, his ſheep, his friends, his church, and the ſons of God; and it may be ſaid of all that believe in him throughout the whole world, without any diſtinction of nation, age, ſex, ſtate or condition: and Chriſt is the Saviour both of the ſouls and bodies of theſe, from all their ſins, original and actual; from the power of ſatan, the bondage and curſe of the law, and wrath to come; and he is the only, able, willing, and complete Saviour, and who ſaves with an everlaſting ſalvation.

Ver. 15. Whoſoever ſhall confeſs that Jeſus is the Son of God, &c.] The only-begotten of the Father; that he is not a mere man, as the Jews, and Ebion and Cerinthus ſaid, but a divine perſon, equal with the Father; which contains all that relates to the dignity of his perſon, and his fitneſs for his office as a Saviour, and which was the teſt of faith in thoſe times, and the grand article of belief: not that a bare aſſent to this had what followed annexed to it; for the devils believed and owned that Jeſus was the Son of God; and ſo might, and did, unregenerate perſons, as the centurion at the croſs of Chriſt, who know nothing what communion with God is; but this confeſſion is ſuch as is attended with a believing in Chriſt from the heart unto righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation, and a chearful obedience to his ordinances and commands, from a principle of love to him, and faith in him, things not to be found in devils and carnal men; ſee Rom. x. 9, 10. God dwelleth in him, and he in God; ſee the note on ver. 13. this ſhould encourage to an open and hearty confeſſion of Chriſt as the Son of God, and Saviour of ſinners, and to a public profeſſion of his name, and faith in him, and an holding it faſt without wavering.

Ver. 16. And we have known and believed, &c.] Or have a full aſſurance and knowledge of, and faith in, the love that God hath to us; ſhewn as in many inſtances, ſo more eſpecially in ſending his Son to be the propitiation for our ſins, to be the Saviour of us, and that we might live thro' him. God is love; as in ver. 8. ſee the note there: and he that dwelleth in love; who dwells by faith upon the love of God as diſplayed in Chriſt, and abides in the exerciſe of love to God, and to the ſaints: dwelleth in God, and God in him; ſee the note on ver. 13. the laſt clauſe, and God in him, is left out in the Syriac verſion.

Ver. 17. Herein is our love made perfect, &c.] Or love with us; which ſome underſtand of the love of God towards his people, and which is ſhed abroad in them: this indeed removes all fear of an awful judgment, and renders that amiable and deſireable; and ſuch who are intereſted in it, ſhall ſtand in that day with intrepidity and boldneſs; and this ſenſe may ſeem to be favoured by the Syriac verſion, which reads, his love with us; and eſpecially by the Vulgate Latin verſion, which renders it, the love of God with us: but it is beſt to underſtand it agreeable to the context, of our love to God, which is with, and in our hearts; and which is made, or made to appear to be perfect, true, and genuine, by our love to the brethren; ſince the love of God to us does not admit of degrees, nor does it, or the reality and ſincerity of it, depend upon our love to the ſaints; ſee the note on ver. 12. that we may have boldneſs in the day of judgment; not of mens judgment, when brought before judges, governors, and kings, for the ſake of Chriſt and the Goſpel, and ſtand at their bar, where ſaints, who have true love to God and Chriſt, and the brethren, have ſtood with great courage and intrepidity, and ſhown much boldneſs, and uſed great freedom of ſpeech; nor of judgment in this life, which ſometimes begins at the houſe of God, tho' the ſaints often have great boldneſs and preſence of mind, and freedom of expreſſion both to God and man in a day of affliction, as Job had; but of the future judgment, which, tho' it will be very awful and ſolemn, Chriſt the judge will appear with great majeſty and glory, and all men will ſtand before him, and the books will be opened, and the judgment will proceed with great ſtrictneſs and juſtice, and will iſſue in the everlaſting perdition of devils and wicked men, yet the ſaints will have boldneſs in it: whilſt evil men and devils tremble at the thoughts of it now, they rejoice and are glad; they love it, look for it, long for it, and haſten to it; and will ſtand fearleſs, and without the leaſt dread, whilſt others will flee to the rocks, and into the holes of the earth; and they will uſe freedom of ſpeech with Chriſt, as the word here ſignifies; they'll ſing his new ſong, and aſcribe the glory of their ſalvation to him, and expreſs their praiſes of him, and love to him, then and to all eternity: and this boldneſs the ſaints may be ſaid to arrive at thro' a perfect, or ſincere, and genuine love of the brethren; for by this they know they are born again, and are born to an inheritance incorruptible, which they have both a meetneſs for, and a right unto; and knowing hereby that they are paſſed from death to life, they juſtly conclude they ſhall not enter into condemnation, and therefore are not afraid of the awful judgment: hereby they know that their faith is right, and that therefore they are manifeſtly the children of God; and if children, then heirs, and ſo ſhall be ſaved, and have everlaſting life: becauſe as he is, ſo are we in this world; which may be underſtood either of God, to whom the ſaints are like; for ſuch who are born again, as thoſe who love the brethren are, they are partakers of the divine nature, and bear a reſemblance to God, even in this preſent ſtate of things; and as it becomes them to be holy in all manner of converſation, as he is holy, and to be merciful to wicked men, as he is merciful, ſo to love the ſaints as he does, and to be kind, tenderhearted, and forgive one another as he for Chriſt's ſake has forgiven them; for as God is love, they ſhould be all love likewiſe: or of Chriſt, ſee ch. iii. 3, 7. and that with reſpect to God; as he is the Son of God, ſo are they the ſons of God; he by nature, they by grace and adoption; as he is loved by God with an everlaſting and unchangeable love, with a love of complacency and delight, ſo are they loved by him with the ſame kind of love, even whilſt they are in this world; and as he is the choſen of God, and precious, ſo they are choſen in him, and unto ſalvation by him. The Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions render it, as he was; and the ſenſe may be, as he was in this world, ſo are they; and which may regard not ſo much likeneſs in nature, though there is an agreement in that, excepting ſin, but the ſameneſs of ſtate and condition; as he was a man of ſorrows, attended with afflictions, loaded with reproaches, and followed with the perſecutions of men, ſo are they; nor need they wonder that they are the objects of the world's hatred and contempt, ſince he was alſo; as he was tempted by ſatan, forſaken by his friends, and deſerted by his God, ſo ſometimes are they in this world; and as he went through a variety of ſufferings, and death itſelf, to glory, ſo thro' many tribulations do they enter the kingdom: moreover, as he now is in heaven, ſo are they in this world; even as he is in heaven, ſo are they repreſentatively in him, whilſt in this world; and as he is righteous, being juſtified and acquitted from all the charge of ſin he took upon him, and therefore will appear a ſecond time without ſin, ſo they are compleatly righteous in him: and once more, as he is, ſo they are, or ſhould be in this world; they ſhould be holy as he is holy, and be humble, meek, and patient, as he is, and walk as he walked; and particularly love the ſaints and one another, as he does; and which ſeems to be greatly intended here, and muſt be underſtood not of an equality, but of a likeneſs. The Arabic verſion reads the words conditionally, and as depending on the preceding clauſe, if as he was, we are in this world; and then the ſenſe is, that the ſaints ſhall have boldneſs in the day of judgment, provided they are in this world as Chriſt was.

Ver. 18. There is no fear in love, &c.] In the love of the brethren; where that is, there is no fear; ſo far as that prevails and gains ground, fear removes; not the filial fear of God, the new-covenant grace of fear, which is the beginning of wiſdom, and is conſiſtent with faith, hope, love, and ſpiritual joy; but either the fear of men, which brings a ſnare: thoſe that truly love Chriſt, his Goſpel, and his people, they are not afraid of men; the ſpirit of power, love, and of a ſound mind, is oppoſite to a ſpirit of fear, nor can they ſtand together; and ſuch ſtrength there is ſometimes in brotherly love, that the ſaints are not afraid of death itſelf, but freely lay down their lives for one another; ſee ch. iii. 16. or it may be rather, that they are not afraid of the day of judgment, and of hell and damnation; where hatred of the brethren has place, there is a fear and dread of theſe things, as were in Cain; but thoſe that love the brethren, they know they are paſſed from death to life, and ſhall not enter into condemnation, and therefore are in no fear of any of theſe things: but perfect love caſteth out fear; when love to the brethren appears to be perfect, that is genuine and ſincere, and a man knows that from the bottom of his heart he ſincerely loves the ſaints, he concludes from hence, as he may, the truth of his faith, which works in this way; and this frees him from the fears of men and devils, and of the future judgment, and wrath to come. The Jews have a ſaying [*], "worthy is his portion that rules over "the place of fear, for lo there is nothing that rules "over the degree of fear but love." Becauſe fear hath torment; it diſtreſſes a man, fills him with anguiſh, and makes him reſtleſs and uneaſy, and keeps him in ſervitude; thro' the fear of men, of the devil, death, judgment, and hell, he is all his life-time, or as long as this fear laſts, ſubject to bondage: or fear has puniſhment, as it may be rendered, and is by the Vulgate Latin verſion; it is a puniſhment itſelf to a man; and its being criminal, deſerves puniſhment, and is puniſhable; ſee Rev. xxi. 8. he that feareth is not made perfect in love; or by love; that is, he that is poſſeſſed, and under the power of a ſervile fear of puniſhment, is one who is not, by the love to the brethren, made to appear to himſelf to be a ſincere lover of God, and true believer in Chriſt; for was he, he would not be in fear of deſtruction and death, ſince whoever truly loves God, and believes in Chriſt, ſhall certainly be ſaved; though ſuch perſons, at times, may not be without their doubts and fears.

Ver. 19. We love him becauſe he firſt loved us.] Leſt love to God, and ſo to one another, ſhould be thought to be of ourſelves, and too much be aſcribed unto it, the Apoſtle obſerves, that God's love to us is prior to our love to him; his love is from everlaſting, as well as to everlaſting; for he loves his people as he does his Son, and he loved him before the foundation of the world; his chooſing them in Chriſt as early, and bleſſing them then with all ſpiritual bleſſings, the covenant of grace made with Chriſt from all eternity, the gift of grace to them in him before the world began, and the promiſe of eternal life to them ſo ſoon, ſhew the antiquity and priority of his love: his love ſhown in the miſſion and gift of his Son, was before theirs, and when they had none to him; and his love in regeneration and converſion is previous to theirs, and is the cauſe of it; his grace in regeneration brings faith and love with it, and produces them in the heart; and his love ſhed abroad there, is the moving cauſe of it, or what draws it firſt into act and exerciſe; and the larger the diſcoveries and applications of the love of God be, the more does love to him increaſe and abound; and nothing more animates and enflames our love to God, than the conſideration of the earlineſs of his love to us, of its being before ours; which ſhews that it is free, ſovereign, diſtinguiſhing, and unmerited. Some read the words as an exhortation, let us love him; and others as in the ſubjunctive mood, we ſhould love him, becauſe, &c. ſome copies read, we love God, and ſo the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions, and the Alexandrian copy read, becauſe God firſt loved us; and ſo ſome others.

Ver. 20. If a man ſay I love God, and hateth his brother, &c.] Than which profeſſion, nothing can be more contradictory, not black and white, or hot and cold in the ſame degree: he is a liar; it is not truth he ſpeaks, it is a contradiction, and a thing impoſſible: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath ſeen; his perſon, which might have drawn out his affection to him; and ſomething valuable and worthy in him, which might have commanded reſpect; or his wants and diſtreſſes, which ſhould have moved his pity and compaſſion: how can he love God, whom he hath not ſeen? it cannot be thought he ſhould; the thing is not reaſonable to ſuppoſe; it is not poſſible he ſhould; ſee the note on ver. 12.

[*] Zohar in Exod. fol. 87. 1.

Ver. 21. And this commandment have we from him, &c.] Either from God, as the Alexandrian copy and the Vulgate Latin verſion read; and that to love the brethren is a commandment of God, is clear from ch. iii. 23. or from Chriſt, for it is alſo a command of his, even his new commandment, which he has given, and his people have received from him: that he who loveth God, love his brother alſo; ſee John xiii. 34. and xv. 12, 17. which is an argument perſuading to attend to the one as well as to the other; for the ſame command that requires the one, requires the other; and he that tranſgreſſes it in one caſe, is a tranſgreſſor of it, as well as in the other.

CHAP. V.

IN this chapter the Apoſtle treats of the nature of faith and love; of Chriſt the object of both, and of the witneſs that is bore to him; of the neceſſity of believing the teſtimony concerning him; of the confidence of prayer being heard, and concerning whom it ſhould be made; of the happineſs of regenerate perſons, and of their duty to keep themſelves from idols. Faith in Chriſt is the evidence of regeneration, and where that is, there will be love to the author of regeneration, and to them that are regenerated; and love to them is known by love to God, and keeping his commandments; and keeping the commandments of God, and which are not grievous, is a proof of love to God, ver. 1, 2, 3. and whereas every regenerate man overcomes the world, it is by his faith, the evidence of his regeneration, that this victory is obtained; nor can any other man be pointed out that overcomes the world, but he that believes that Jeſus is the Son of God, ver. 4, 5. and Chriſt the Son of God, the object of this victorious faith, is deſcribed by his coming by water and blood, of which the Spirit is witneſs, who is a true one; and ſix witneſſes of the truth of this and of his divine Sonſhip are produced, three in heaven, the Father, Word, and Spirit, who are the one God, and three on earth, the Spirit, water, and blood, who agree in their teſtimony, ver. 6, 7, 8. wherefore, this teſtimony concerning the Son of God, ought to be received, ſince it is the teſtimony of God, which is greater than that of men; beſides, he that believes in Chriſt has a witneſs of this in himſelf, and honours God, whereas he that believes not, makes God a liar, not giving credit to his record concerning his Son; the ſum of which is, that God has made a grant of eternal life to ſome perſons, which is in his Son, which thoſe that believe in the Son of God have, but thoſe that do not believe in him have it not: all which ſhew the neceſſity of receiving the above teſtimony; and the ends propoſed in writing theſe things were, to believe in Chriſt, and that it might be known they had eternal life in him, ver. 9, 10, 11, 12, 13. and from faith in Chriſt the Apoſtle paſſes to confidence in prayer, as a particular effect and fruit of it; as, that whatever is aſked according to the will of God is heard; and that ſuch who are ſatisfied of this, that they are heard, may be aſſured that they have the petitions they deſire to have, ver. 14, 15. and whereas it is one branch of prayer to pray for others as well as for ourſelves, the Apoſtle directs who we ſhould pray for; for the brethren in general, and in particular for ſuch who have ſinned, but not unto death, and life ſhall be given to ſuch: but as for thoſe who have ſinned unto death, he does not ſay prayer ſhould be made for them, for though all unrighteouſneſs in general is ſin, yet there is a particular ſin which is unto death, and is not to be prayed for, ver. 16, 17. but happy are thoſe who are born of God, for they do not ſin this ſin; and thro' the uſe of the armour of God, and the power of divine grace, they keep themſelves from the evil one, and he cannot come at them, to draw them into this ſin; alſo they know that they are of God, and are diſtinguiſhed from the world, which lies in wickedneſs; yea, they know that the Son of God is come in the fleſh, and hath given them an underſtanding of the true God, by which they know that they are in him, and in his Son Jeſus Chriſt, who is with him, and the divine Spirit, the one true God, and the author and giver of eternal life, ver. 18, 19, 20. and the chapter, and with it the Epiſtle, is concluded with an exhortation to theſe regenerate ones, as they had kept themſelves from ſatan, that they would alſo keep themſelves from idols of all ſorts, ver. 21.

Ver. 1. Whoſoever believeth that Jeſus is the Chriſt, &c.] Or the Meſſiah that was propheſied of of old, was long promiſed to the Jews, and whom they expected; there was a perſon ſpoken of in the writings of the Old Teſtament under this character, Pſ. ii. 2. Dan. ix. 25, 26. and the Jews looked for him; and Jeſus of Nazareth is he, as appears by all the characteriſtics of the Meſſiah in prophecy being found upon him: this the Jews deny, but is the grand article of faith embraced by the Apoſtles and followers of Jeſus, and is of very great importance; he that denies it is a liar, and he that does not believe it ſhall die in his ſins: the word ſignifies anointed, and includes all the offices of the Son of God, to which he was anointed, as prophet, prieſt, and king; ſo that to believe him to be the Chriſt, is to believe him to be that prophet Moſes ſaid ſhould come, and who has declared the whole mind and will of his Father; and that he is that prieſt that ſhould ariſe after the order of Melchizedek, and make atonement for ſin, and interceſſion for tranſgreſſors; and that he is that king whom God has ſet over his holy hill of Zion, whoſe laws are to be obeyed, and his commands obſerved: but to believe that Jeſus is the Chriſt, or the Meſſiah, is not barely to give an aſſent to this truth, or to acknowledge it; ſo the devils themſelves have done, Luke iv. 41. and whole nations of men, multitudes of which were never born of God; it is not a mere profeſſion of it before men, or an idle, inoperative faith, which is deſtitute of love to Chriſt, and obedience to him; but whereas his work and buſineſs, as the Chriſt of God, was to bring in an everlaſting righteouſneſs, to procure the remiſſion of ſin, and to make peace and reconciliation for it, and to obtain eternal ſalvation; true faith in him as the Meſſiah is a believing with the heart unto righteouſneſs, or a looking to, and truſting in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt for juſtification; and a dealing with his blood for pardon and cleanſing, under a ſenſe of guilt and filth; and a laying hold on his atoning ſacrifice for the expiation of ſin, and peace with God; and a reception of him as the only Saviour and redeemer, or a dependance on him for life and ſalvation; and which faith ſhows itſelf in love to him, and in a profeſſed ſubjection to his Goſpel, and chearful ſubmiſſion to his ordinances: and every ſuch perſon is born of God; is a partaker of the divine nature; has Chriſt formed, and every grace of the Spirit implanted in him, among which faith in Chriſt is a conſiderable one; and ſuch an one in conſequence is openly a child and heir of God; wherefore, to be born of God is an inſtance of great grace, and an high honour and privilege, and of the greateſt moment and importance. Regeneration is not owing to the power and will of man, but to the abundant mercy and good-will of God, and is an inſtance of his rich mercy, great love, and free favour, and commands love again: and every one that loveth him that begat; that is, God the Father, who has begotten them again to a lively hope, according to his abundant mercy and ſovereign will; and as he is their Father that has begotten them, they cannot but love him: and ſuch an one loveth him alſo that is begotten of him; not only Jeſus Chriſt, who by nature is the only-begotten of the Father; for thoſe who know God to be their Father by adoption and regeneration, will love Chriſt, who is the Son of God by nature; ſee John viii. 42. but alſo every regenerate perſon, all that are born of God; ſince they are the children of the ſame Father with them, belong to the ſame houſhold and family, and bear the image and likeneſs of their heavenly Father on them.

Ver. 2. By this we know that we are the children of God, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion reads, by this we know that we love God; which, in connexion with what follows, makes a tautology, and is a proving idem per idem; whereas the Apoſtle's view is to ſhew when love to the ſaints is right; and that is, when we love God, and keep his commandments: love to the brethren may ariſe from ſuch a cauſe, as may ſhew that it is not brotherly love, or of a ſpiritual kind; it may ariſe from natural rerelation, or civil friendſhip, or from a benefit or favour received from them, and from ſome natural external excellency ſeen in them; and a man may do acts of love and kindneſs to the brethren, from what may be called good nature in himſelf, or with ſiniſter views; but true love to the brethren ſprings from love to God: ſuch who love the ſaints aright, and by which they may know they do ſo, they love them, becauſe they themſelves love God, and in obedience to his command; they love them, becauſe they belong to God, and are the objects of his love; becauſe his grace is wrought in them, and his image inſtamped upon them.

Ver. 3. For this is the love of God that we keep his commandments, &c.] Keeping of the commandments of God is an evidence of love to God; this ſhows, that love is not in word and tongue, in profeſſion only, but in deed and in truth; and that ſuch perſons have a ſenſe of the love of God upon their ſouls, under the influence of which they act; and ſuch ſhall have, and may expect to have, greater manifeſtations of the love of God unto them: and his commandments are not grievous; heavy, burdenſome, and diſagreeable; by which are meant, not ſo much the precepts of the moral law, which thro' the weakneſs of the fleſh are hard to be kept, and cannot be perfectly fulfilled; tho' believers indeed being freed from the rigorous exaction, curſe, and condemnation of the law, delight in it after the inward man, and ſerve it chearfully with their Spirit; and ſtill leſs the commands of the ceremonial law, which were now aboliſhed, and were grievous to be born; but rather thoſe of faith in Chriſt, and love to the ſaints, ch. iii. 23. or it may be the ordinances of the Goſpel, baptiſm, and the Lord's ſupper, with others, which tho' diſagreeable to unregenerate perſons, who don't care to be under the yoke of Chriſt, however eaſy and light it is, yet are not heavy and burdenſome to regenerate ones; and eſpecially when they have the love of God ſhed abroad in them, the preſence of God with them, communion with Jeſus Chriſt, and a ſupply of grace and ſtrength from him; then are theſe ways ways of pleaſantneſs, and paths of peace, and the tabernacles of the Lord are amiable and lovely.

Ver. 4. For whatſoever is born of God, &c.] Which may be underſtood either of perſons born of God; or of the new creature, or principle of grace wrought in them, particularly faith hereafter mentioned, which is an heaven-born grace, the gift of God, and the operation of his Spirit: this overcometh the world; the God of the world, ſatan; the luſts which are in the world; falſe prophets gone forth into the world; and the wicked men of the world, who by temptations, ſnares, evil doctrines, threatenings, promiſes, and ill examples, would avert regenerate ones from obſerving the commands of God; but ſuch are more than conquerors over all theſe, thro' Chriſt that has loved them: and this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith. The Arabic and Ethiopic verſions read, your faith; great things, heroic actions, and wonderful victories, are aſcribed to faith; ſee Heb. xi. 33, 34. which muſt not be underſtood of the grace itſelf, as ſeparately conſidered, but of Chriſt the object of it, as ſupported, ſtrengthened, aſſiſted, and animated by him; and then it does wonders, when it is enabled to hold Chriſt, its ſhield, in its hand, againſt every enemy that oppoſes.

Ver. 5. Who is he that overcometh the world, &c.] This queſtion carries in it a ſtrong affirmation, that no other perſon is the conqueror of the world: but he that believeth that Jeſus is the Son of God? and this points out what that faith is which obtains the victory over the world; and ſhows that it is not that truſt and confidence which has a man's ſelf, or any mere creature, thing, or perſon for its object, but only Jeſus Chriſt, and that as he is the Son of God; and which is not a mere aſſent to ſuch a propoſition, to which devils and unregenerate perſons may aſſent, and do; but it is a ſeeing of the Son in the glory, fulneſs, and ſuitableneſs of his perſon, office, and grace; a going to him being drawn by the Father; and a living upon him as the Son of God, and truſting in him for life, righteouſneſs, and ſalvation: and this ſhows, that the victory over the world is not owing to faith itſelf, but to its object Chriſt, who has overcome it, and makes true believers in him more than conquerors over it.

Ver. 6. This is he that came by water and blood, even Jeſus Chriſt, &c.] By water is not meant the ablutions or waſhings of the ceremonial law; Chriſt came not by theſe, but to make an end of them; his blood, which cleanſeth from all ſin, being the antitype, and ſo the fulfilling end of them: nor the purity of his nature, life, and converſation; tho' he came into the world, that holy thing which is called the Son of God; and was holy in his nature, and harmleſs in his life, and did no ſin, and ſo was fit to be a ſacrifice for the ſins of others: nor does it intend the waſhing and cleanſing of his people from their ſins; this is what he came to do, and has done, and not what he came by: but the ordinance of water-baptiſm is deſigned; and tho' Chriſt did not come baptizing with water, he having a greater baptiſm to adminiſter, yet that he might be made manifeſt, John came baptizing in that way; and Chriſt, as the Son of God, came, or was made manifeſt by John as ſuch, at the waters of Jordan, and at his baptiſm; there he was declared to be the Son of God by his Father's voice from heaven: not by water only; he did not come by water only, as Moſes did, who was drawn out of it, and therefore ſo called; or as John, who came adminiſtring water-baptiſm externally only: but by water and blood; by blood as well as water; by which is meant, not the blood of bulls and goats, Chriſt came to put an end unto, and lay aſide the ſhedding of that blood; but his own blood is intended, and not reconciliation and atonement for the ſins of his people, which was what he came to do, and has done, and not what he came by: but the ſenſe is, that as at baptiſm, ſo at his ſufferings and death he was made manifeſt to be the Son of God; as he was to the centurion and others, that were with him, when they obſerved the earthquake, and the things that were done; and at his reſurrection from the dead he was declared to be the Son of God with power: and this might be ſeen in the cleanſing and atoning virtue of his blood, which is owing to his being the Son of God. There may be here an alluſion to the water and blood which came out of his ſide, when pierced on the croſs, which this Apoſtle John was an eye-witneſs of. Some copies add here, and in the former clauſe, and by the Spirit, as the Alexandrian copy, three of Beza's copies, and the Ethiopic verſion: but it ſeems unneceſſary, ſince it follows, and it is the Spirit that beareth witneſs; by which may be meant, either the Goſpel, which is the Spirit that gives life, and is ſo called, becauſe by it the Spirit of God, in his gifts and graces, is received, and which is a teſtimony of the perſon, as well as of the offices and grace of Chriſt; or rather thoſe miraculous works which Chriſt did by the Spirit, to which he often appeals, as witneſſes of his divine Sonſhip, and equality with the Father, as well as of his being the true Meſſiah; or elſe the Holy Spirit, who bore teſtimony to Chriſt, by his deſcent on him at his baptiſm, and upon his Apoſtles at the day of Pentecoſt, and by attending, ſucceeding, and confirming the Goſpel, which is the teſtimony of him; and he is elſewhere, as well as here, and in the context ſpoken of as a witneſs of Chriſt, Acts v. 32. becauſe the Spirit is truth; he is the Spirit of truth, and truth itſelf; he is eſſentially truth; his teſtimony is moſt true, and firmly to be believed. The Vulgate Latin verſion reads, becauſe Chriſt is the truth.

Ver. 7. For there are three that bear record in heaven, &c.] That is, that Jeſus is the Son of God. The genuineneſs of this text has been called in queſtion by ſome, becauſe it is wanting in the Syriac verſion, as it alſo is in the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions; and becauſe the old Latin interpreter has it not; and it is not to be found in many Greek manuſcripts; nor cited by many of the ancient fathers, even by ſuch who wrote againſt the Arians, when it might have been of great ſervice to them: to all which it may be replied, that as to the Syriac verſion, which is the moſt ancient, and of the greateſt conſequence, it is but a verſion, and a defective one. The hiſtory of the adulterous woman in the eighth of John, the ſecond Epiſtle of Peter, the ſecond and third Epiſtles of John, the Epiſtle of Jude, and the book of the Revelations, were formerly wanting in it, till reſtored from Biſhop Uſher's copy by De Dieu and Dr. Pocock, and who alſo, from an Eaſtern copy, has ſupplied this verſion with this text. As to the old Latin interpreter, it is certain it is to be ſeen in many Latin manuſcripts of an early date, and ſtands in the Vulgate Latin edition of the London Polyglot bible; and the Latin tranſlation, which bears the name of Jerom, has it, and who in an Epiſtle of his to Euſtochius, prefixed to his tranſlation of theſe canonical Epiſtles, complains of the omiſſion of it by unfaithful interpreters. And as to its being wanting in ſome Greek manuſcripts, as the Alexandrian, and others, it need only be ſaid, that it is to be found in many others; it is in an old Britiſh copy, and in the Complutenſian edition, the compilers of which made uſe of various copies; and out of ſixteen ancient copies of Robert Stephens's, nine of them had it: and as to its not being cited by ſome of the ancient fathers, this can be no ſufficient proof of the ſpuriouſneſs of it, ſince it might be in the original copy, though not in the copies uſed by them, thro' the careleſſneſs or unfaithfulneſs of tranſcribers; or it might be in their copies, and yet not cited by them, they having ſcriptures enow without it, to defend the doctrine of the Trinity, and the divinity of Chriſt: and yet, after all, certain it is, that it is cited by many of them; by Fulgentius[z], in the beginning of the ſixth century, againſt the Arians, without any ſcruple or heſitation; and Jerom, as before obſerved, has it in his tranſlation made in the latter end of the fourth century; and it is cited by Athanaſius[a] about the year 350; and before him by Cyprian[b], in the middle of the third century, about the year 250; and is referred to by Tertullian[c] about the year 200; and which was within a hundred years, or little more, of the writing of the Epiſtle; which may be enough to ſatisfy any one of the genuineneſs of this paſſage; and beſides, there never was any diſpute about it till Eraſmus left it out in the firſt edition of his tranſlation of the New Teſtament; and yet he himſelf, upon the credit of the old Britiſh copy before mentioned, put it into another edition of his tranſlation. The heavenly witneſſes of Chriſt's Sonſhip are, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghoſt. The Father is the firſt perſon, ſo called, not in reference to the creatures, angels, or men, he is the creator, and ſo the Father of; for this is common to the other two perſons; but in reference to his Son Jeſus Chriſt, of whoſe Sonſhip he bore witneſs at his baptiſm and transfiguration upon the mount. The Word is the ſecond perſon, who ſaid and it was done; who ſpoke all things out of nothing in the firſt creation; who was in the beginning with God the Father, and was God, and by whom all things were created; he declared himſelf to be the Son of God, and proved himſelf to be ſo by his works and miracles; ſee Mark xiv. 61, 62. John v. 17, &c. and x. 30, &c. and his witneſs of himſelf was good and valid; ſee John viii. 13—18. and becauſe it is his Sonſhip that is here teſtified of, therefore the phraſe, the Word, and not the Son, is here uſed. The Holy Ghoſt is the third perſon who proceeds from the Father, and is alſo called the Spirit of the Son, who teſtified of Chriſt's Sonſhip alſo at his baptiſm, by deſcending on him as a dove, which was the ſignal given to John the Baptiſt, by which he knew him, and bare record of him, that he was the Son of God. Now the number of theſe witneſſes was three, there being ſo many perſons in the Godhead; and ſuch a number being ſufficient, according to law, for the eſtabliſhing of any point: to which may be added, that they were witneſſes in heaven, not to the heavenly inhabitants, but to men on earth; they were ſo called, becauſe they were in heaven, and from thence gave out their teſtimony; and which ſhows the firmneſs and excellency of it, it being not from earth, but from heaven, and not human but divine; to which may be applied the words of Job, in ch. xvi. 19. It follows, and theſe three are one; which is to be underſtood not only of their unity and agreement in their teſtimony, they teſtifying of the ſame thing, the Sonſhip of Chriſt; but of their unity in eſſence or nature, they being the one God. So that this paſſage holds forth and aſſerts the unity of God, a Trinity of perſons in the Godhead, the proper deity of each perſon, and their diſtinct perſonality; the unity of eſſence in that they are one; a Trinity of perſons in that they are three, the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghoſt, and are neither more nor fewer; the deity of each perſon, for otherwiſe their teſtimony would not be the teſtimony of God, as in ver. 9. and their diſtinct perſonality; for were they not three diſtinct perſons, they could not be three teſtifiers, or three that bare record. This being a proper place, I ſhall inſert the faith of the ancient Jews concerning the doctrine of the Trinity; and the rather, as it agrees with the Apoſtle's doctrine in words and language, as well as in matter. They call the three perſons in the Godhead three degrees: they ſay [d], "Jehovah, Elohenu (our God) Jehovah, Deut. vi. 4. theſe are the three degrees with reſpect to this ſublime myſtery, in the beginning Elohim, or God, created, Gen. i. 1, &c." And theſe three, they ſay, tho' they are diſtinct, yet are one, as appears by what follows [e]: "come ſee the myſtery of the word; there are three degrees, and every degree is by itſelf, yet they are all one, and are bound together in one, and one is not ſeparated from the other." Again, 'tis ſaid [f], "this is the unity of Jehovah the firſt, Elohenu, Jehovah, lo, all of them are one, and therefore called one; lo, the three names are as if they were one, and therefore are called one, and they are one; but by the revelation of the Holy Spirit it is made known, and they by the ſight of the eye may be known, דתלתא אלין אחד, that theſe three are one: and this is the myſtery of the voice which is heard; the voice is one, and there are three things, fire, and ſpirit, and water, and all of them are one in the myſtery of the voice, and they are but one: ſo here, Jehovah, Elohenu, Jehovah, they are one, the three, גוונין, forms, modes, or things, which are one." Once more [g], "there are two, and one is joined unto them, and they are three; and when the three are one, he ſays to them, theſe are the two names which Iſrael heard, Jehovah, Jehovah, and Elohenu is joined unto them, and it is the ſeal of the ring of truth; and when they are joined as one, they are one in one unity." And this they illuſtrate by the three names of the ſoul of man [h]; "the three powers are all of them one, the ſoul, ſpirit, and breath, they are joined as one, and they are one; and all is according to the mode of the ſublime myſtery," meaning the Trinity. "Says R. Iſaac [i], worthy are the righteous in this world, and in the world to come, for lo the whole of them is holy, their body is holy, their ſoul is holy, their ſpirit is holy, their breath is holy, holy are theſe three degrees, according to the form above.——Come ſee theſe three degrees cleave together as one, the ſoul, ſpirit, and breath." The three firſt ſephirot, or numbers, in the Cabaliſtic tree, intend the three divine perſons; the firſt is called the chief crown, and firſt glory, whoſe eſſence no creature can comprehend [k], and deſigns the Father, John i. 18. the ſecond is called wiſdom, and the intelligence illuminating, the crown of the creation, the brightneſs of equal unity, who is exalted above every head; and he is called, by the Cabbaliſts, the ſecond glory [l]; ſee 1 Cor. i. 24. John i. 9. Rev. iii. 14. Heb. i. 3. Eph. i. 21. This is the Son of God: the third is called underſtanding ſanctifying, and is the foundation of ancient wiſdom, which is called the worker of faith; and he is the parent of faith, and from his power faith flows [m]; and this is the Holy Spirit; ſee 1 Pet. i. 2. 2 Cor. iv. 13. Now they ſay [n], that theſe three firſt numbers are intellectual, and are not, מדות, properties, or attributes, as the other ſeven are. R. Simeon ben Jochai ſays [o], "of the three ſuperior numbers it is ſaid, Pſ. lxii. 11. God hath ſpoken once, twice have I heard this; one and two, lo the ſuperior numbers, of whom it is ſaid, one, one, one, three ones, and this is the myſtery of Pſ. lxii. 11." Says R. Judah Levi [p], "behold the myſtery of the numberer, the number, and the numbered; in the boſom of God 'tis one thing, in the boſom of man three; becauſe he weighs with his underſtanding, and ſpeaks with his mouth, and writes with his hand." It was uſual with the ancient Jews to introduce Jehovah ſpeaking, or doing any thing in this form, I and my houſe of judgment; and it is a rule with them, that where-ever it is ſaid, and Jehovah, he and his houſe of judgment are intended [q]; and Jarchi frequently makes uſe of this phraſe to explain texts where a plurality in the Godhead is intended, as Gen. i. 26. Cant. i. 11. and it is to be obſerved, that a houſe of judgment, or a Sanhedrim, among the Jews, never conſiſted of leſs than three. They alſo had uſed to write the word Jehovah with three Jods, in this form, ,י, as repreſenting the three divine perſons: one of their more modern [r] writers has this obſervation on the bleſſing of the prieſt in Numb. vi. 24, 25, 26. "theſe three verſes begin with a Jod, in reference to the three Jods which we write in the room of the name, (i. e. Jehovah) for they have reſpect to the three ſuperior things."

Ver. 8. And there are three that bear witneſs on earth, &c.] To the ſame truth of the Sonſhip of Chriſt: the ſpirit, and the water, and the blood; by the ſpirit is not meant the human ſpirit or ſoul of Chriſt; for however that may be a witneſs of the truth of his human nature, yet not of his divine Sonſhip; and moreover cannot be ſaid to be a witneſs in earth; rather the Goſpel called the Spirit, which is a teſtimony of Chriſt's perſon, office, and grace, and is preached by men on earth; or elſe the gifts of the Spirit beſtowed on men on earth, both in an extraordinary and ordinary way, by which they have been qualified to bear witneſs to this truth; or it may be the Holy Spirit itſelf is intended, as he is in the hearts of his people here on earth, where he not only witneſſes to the truth of their Sonſhip, but alſo of the Sonſhip of Chriſt, and is that witneſs a believer has within himſelf of it, mentioned in ver. 10. By water is deſigned, not internal ſanctification, which tho' an evidence of regeneration and adoption, yet not of Chriſt's Sonſhip; but water-baptiſm, as adminiſtred on earth in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt; and which is a noble and ſtanding teſtimony to the proper, natural, and eternal Sonſhip of Chriſt: and by blood is intended, not juſtification by the blood of Chriſt, but rather the blood of the ſaints, the martyrs of Jeſus, who have ſhed it on earth, in teſtimony of their faith in the Son of God, and thereby ſealing the truth of it; or rather the ordinance of the Lord's ſupper, which is the communion of the blood of Chriſt; and repreſents that blood which was ſhed for the remiſſion of ſins, and has a continual virtue to cleanſe from all ſin, which is owing to his being the Son of God. The three witneſſes on earth ſeem therefore to be the Goſpel, attended with the Spirit and power of God, and the two ordinances of baptiſm, and the Lord's ſupper: and theſe agree in one; in their teſtimony of Chriſt, the word and ordinances agree together; and the ſum and ſubſtance of them is Chriſt; they come from him, and center in him; they are like the cherubim over the mercy-ſeat, that looked to one another, and to that; and the two ordinances are the churches two breaſts, which are equal, and like to one another; there is a great agreement between them, they are like to two young roes that are twins.

Ver. 9. If we receive the witneſs of men, &c.] The witneſs of a ſufficient number of credible men, of men of good character and report, is always admitted in any caſe, and in any court of judicature; it was allowed of in the law of Moſes; every thing was proved and eſtabliſhed hereby; upon this men were juſtified or condemned, cognizance was taken of mens ſins, and puniſhment inflicted, yea, death itſelf, Deut. xvii. 6. and xix. 15. Heb. x. 28. and even in this caſe concerning the Son of God, his coming into the world, and the dignity of his perſon, the teſtimony of men is credited; as that of the wiſe men, who declared, that the king of the Jews was born, and his ſtar had been ſeen in the eaſt, which Herod himſelf gave credit to, and upon it ſummoned the chief-prieſts, and enquired of them where he ſhould be born; and alſo of the ſhepherds, who teſtified to the appearance of angels, who told them, that there was then born a ſaviour, which is Chriſt the Lord, and who alſo related, that they themſelves ſaw the infant at Bethlehem; and eſpecially of John the Baptiſt, whoſe teſtimony was true, and could not be objected to by the Jews themſelves, who ſent to him, before whom he bore a plain and faithful witneſs. Now if an human teſtimony may be, and is received, the teſtimony of God is greater; more valuable, ſurer, and to be more firmly depended on, ſince it muſt be infallible; for God can neither deceive, nor be deceived: for this is the witneſs of God, which he hath teſtified of his Son; even the witneſs of the Spirit, the water, and the blood, is the teſtimony, not of men, but of God; the Goſpel, attended with the Spirit of God, is the teſtimony of God; and ſo the ordinances of baptiſm, and the Lord's ſupper, which bear witneſs of Chriſt, are not of men, but of God; and eſpecially the witneſs of the Father, the Word, and the Spirit, muſt be the teſtimony of God, ſince, tho' three perſons, they are one God; particularly the witneſs which God the Father teſtified of his Son Jeſus Chriſt at his baptiſm and transfiguration, muſt be allowed to be the teſtimony of God, and far greater than any human teſtimony, and therefore to be received.

Ver. 10. He that believeth on the Son of God, &c.] As a divine perſon who came in the fleſh, and obeyed the law, and brought in everlaſting righteouſneſs, and obtained life and ſalvation for men: he that with the heart believes in him for righteouſneſs, and eternal life, he being the Son of God, truly and properly God, and ſo able to ſave all that believe in him, hath the witneſs in himſelf; of the need he ſtands in of Chriſt, and of the ſuitableneſs, fulneſs, and excellency of him; the Spirit of God enlightning him into the impurity of his nature, his impotence to do any thing ſpiritually good, his incapacity to atone for ſin, and the inſufficiency of his righteouſneſs to juſtify him before God; and convincing him, that nothing but the blood of the Son of God can cleanſe him from ſin, and only his ſacrifice can expiate it, and his righteouſneſs juſtify him from it, and that without him he can do nothing; teſtifying alſo to the efficacy of his blood, the compleatneſs of his ſacrifice and ſatisfaction, the excellency of his righteouſneſs, and the energy of his grace and ſtrength: ſo he comes to have ſuch a witneſs in himſelf, that if ten thouſand arguments were ever ſo artfully formed, in favour of the purity of human nature, the power of man's free-will, and the ſufficiency of his righteouſneſs, and againſt the ſacrifice and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, the dignity of his perſon, as the Son of God, which gives virtue to his blood, ſacrifice, and righteouſneſs, they would all ſignify nothing to him, he would be proof againſt them. And ſuch an one very readily receives into him the teſtimony God gives of his Son, of the glory and excellency of his perſon, and retains it in him. The Alexandrian copy, and the Vulgate Latin verſion read, hath the witneſs of God in him; to which the Ethiopic verſion agrees, and confirm the laſt obſervation: he that believeth not God; does not receive his teſtimony concerning his Son: the Alexandrian copy, and two of Stephens's, and the Vulgate Latin verſion read, he that believeth not the Son; and the Ethiopic verſion, his Son; and the Arabic verſion the Son of God; and ſo is a direct antitheſis to the phraſe in the former clauſe of the verſe: hath made him a liar; not the Son, but God, as the Arabic verſion renders it, hath made God himſelf a liar; who is the God of truth, and cannot lie; it is impoſſible he ſhould; and as nothing can be more contumelious and reproachful to the being and nature of God, ſo nothing can more fully expoſe and aggravate the ſin of unbelief, with reſpect to Chriſt, as the Son of God: becauſe he believeth not the record that God gave of his Son; at the times and places before obſerved.

Ver. 11. And this is the record, &c.] The ſum and ſubſtance of it, with reſpect to the perſon of Chriſt, and the ſecurity of ſalvation in him, who is the true God, and eternal life: that God hath given to us eternal life; which is a life of glory and happineſs hereafter; in the preſent ſtate is unſeen, but will in the world to come be a life of viſion, free from all the ſorrows and imperfections of this; and will be of the utmoſt perfection and pleaſure, and for ever. This is a pure free-grace gift of God the Father, proceeding from his ſovereign good-will and pleaſure, and which he gives to all his choſen ones, for they are ordained unto eternal life; to as many as he has given to his Son; to all that are redeemed by his blood, and are brought to believe in him: to theſe he gave it in his Son before the world began; and to the ſame in time, he gives the right unto it, the meetneſs for it, and the pledge and earneſt of it; and will hereafter give them the thing itſelf, the whole of it, to be poſſeſſed and enjoyed by them in perſon, to all eternity. And this life is in his Son; not only the purpoſe and promiſe of it, but that itſelf; Chriſt aſked it of his Father in the covenant of peace, and he gave it to him, that he might have it in himſelf for all his people; and here it is ſafe and ſecure, it is hid with Chriſt in God, it is bound up in the bundle of life with him; and becauſe he lives, this life will never be loſt, or they come ſhort of it.

Ver. 12. He that hath the Son, &c.] Has a ſpiritual and experimental knowledge of him, true faith in him; who has him dwelling in his heart, and living in him: hath life; not only ſpiritual life, being quickned by him, and living by faith on him, but eternal life; the knowledge he has of him is eternal life; he has it in faith and hope, and has a right unto it, and the earneſt of it, as well as has it in Chriſt his repreſentative, whom he has, and in whom this life is: and he that hath not the Son of God; no knowledge of him, nor faith in him, nor enjoyment of him: hath not life; he is dead in ſin, he is alienated from the life of God, has no title to eternal life, nor meetneſs for it, nor ſhall enjoy it, but ſhall die the ſecond death.

Ver. 13. Theſe things have I written unto you, &c.] Which are contained in the Epiſtle in general, and particularly what is written in the context, concerning the victory of the world, being aſcribed to him who believes that Chriſt is the Son of God; and concerning the ſix witneſſes of his Sonſhip, and the record bore by God, that the gift of eternal life is in him: and which are eſpecially written to them, that believe on the name of the Son of God; who not only believed that Chriſt is the Son of God, which this ſix-fold teſtimony would confirm them in, but alſo believed in his name, for righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation; in which name there is all this, and in no other; and who alſo profeſſed their faith in him, and were baptized in his name, and continued believing in him, and holding faſt their profeſſion of him. The end of writing theſe things to them was, that ye may know that ye have eternal life; that there is ſuch a thing as eternal life; that this is in Chriſt; that believers have it in him, and the beginning of it in themſelves; and that they have a right unto it, and meetneſs for it, and ſhall certainly enjoy it; the knowledge of which is had by faith, under the teſtimony of the Spirit of God, and particularly what is above written concerning eternal life, being a free-grace gift of God; and this being in Chriſt, and the aſſurance of it, that ſuch who have him, or believe in him, have that which might ſerve to communicate, cultivate, and increaſe ſuch knowledge: and that ye may believe on the name of the Son of God; which they had done already, and ſtill did; the ſenſe is, the above things were written to them concerning the Son of Chriſt, that they might be encouraged to continue believing in him, as ſuch; to hold faſt the faith of him, and go on believing in him to the end; and that their faith in him might be increaſed; for faith is imperfect, and is capable of increaſing, and growing exceedingly; and nothing more tends unto, or is a more proper means of it, than the ſacred writings, the reading and hearing them explained, and eſpecially that part of them, which reſpects the perſon, office, and grace of Chriſt. The Alexandrian copy, and one of Beza's manuſcripts, the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read, theſe things have I written unto you, that ye may know that ye have eternal life, who believe in the name of the Son of God.

Ver 14. And this is the confidence that we have in him, &c.] Either in God, to whom prayer is made; or in the Son of God, thro' whoſe blood and righteouſneſs believers in him have confidence with God at the throne of grace; they can come with boldneſs and intrepidity, and uſe freedom and liberty of ſpeech, as the word here uſed ſignifies; eſpecially when they have the ſpirit of Chriſt with them, and are under the ſprinklings of the blood of Chriſt, and have a comfortable aſſurance of being heard and anſwered; and this is what the Jews call עיון תפלה, the conſideration, or attention of prayer [a], which they explain thus; "after a man has prayed, "he judges in his heart that the holy bleſſed God "will give him his reward, and will do every thing "needful for him, and will hear his prayer, be"cauſe he has prayed with intention;" but this is much better expreſſed, and upon a much better foundation, by our Apoſtle here: that if we aſk any thing according to his will, he heareth us; to aſk any thing according to the will of God, is to aſk as to matter what, and in a manner which is agreeable to it; by which is meant, not his ſecret will, or his purpoſes and decrees, which are unknown, tho', ſo far as theſe are made known, they are not to be prayed againſt, for they can never be made void; and therefore, when God had declared it as his purpoſing will, that the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs ſhould not enter into Canaan's land, and that he had rejected Saul from the kingdom, in theſe caſes it would have been wrong for Moſes to have prayed for the one, or Samuel for the other; 1 Sam. xvi. 1. and though no one perſon is to be excluded from our prayers on the account of the decree of reprobation, ſince no man can certainly be known to be a reprobate; yet it does not become us to pray for the converſion and ſalvation of reprobates in general, ſince this would be contrary to the decree of God: and ſuch purpoſes which God has declared by prophecy he has purpoſed in himſelf, as the converſion of the Jews, the bringing in the fullneſs of the Gentiles, the deſtruction of antichriſt, and the glory of the Goſpel church, for theſe we ſhould pray that God would haſten them in his own time, and we are ſure of being heard; but the revealed will of God is here intended, by which it appears that all grace is laid up in Chriſt, and all ſpiritual bleſſings are with him, and that the covenant of grace is ordered in all things, and full of the ſure mercies of David, and of exceeding great and precious promiſes; all which are treaſured up for the benefit and uſe of the people of God; and if, therefore, they aſk for any grace, or ſupply of grace, for any ſpiritual bleſſing, or mercy, laid up in Chriſt, in the covenant, or in any of the promiſes, they aſk that for matter which is according to the will of God, and which they may be aſſured they ſhall have, ſooner or later: and to aſk in a manner agreeable to his will, is to come in the name of Chriſt, and make mention of his righteouſneſs, and aſk for his ſake; to put up all petitions in faith, with fervency, in ſincerity, and uprightneſs; with reverence, humility, and ſubmiſſion to the divine will, and with importunity; and ſuch aſkers God hears, even ſo as to anſwer, and grant their requeſts in his own time, though not always in theirs; in ſome caſes ſooner, in others later, according to his infinite wiſdom, and in his own way, which is always the beſt, tho' not in theirs, as in the caſe of the Apoſtle Paul, 2 Cor. xii. 7, 8, 9. The Alexandrian copy, and the Ethiopic verſion read, if we aſk any thing according to, or in his name; that is of Chriſt, and which agrees with John xiv. 13, 14. and xvi. 23, 24.

Ver. 15. And if we know that he hear us, &c.] As it may be aſſured he does hear and anſwer all ſuch perſons that aſk according to his will: whatſoever we aſk we know, or are aſſured, that we have the petitions that we deſired of him; for as it is the nature of that holy confidence which believers have in God, to believe whatever they aſk according to his will, in general, ſhall be granted, ſo every requeſt in particular; yea, before the mercy deſired, or the favour aſked for is conferred, they are as ſure of having it in God's own time and way, as if they now had it in hand and fact.

[a] T. Bab. Bava Bathra, fol. 164. 2.

Ver. 16. If any one ſee his brother ſin, &c.] Thoſe who have ſuch an intereſt at the throne of grace, and ſuch boldneſs and freedom there, ſhould make uſe of it for others, as well as themſelves, and particularly for fallen believers; for a brother; not in a natural or civil ſenſe, but in a ſpiritual ſenſe, one that is judged to be born again, and belongs to the family and houſhold of God, and is a member of a Goſpel-church; and ſo is under the watch, inſpection, and care of the ſaints; and is obſerved to ſin, as the beſt of men are not without it, nor the commiſſion of it, in thought, word, or deed: and this ſin of his is a ſin which is not unto death; every ſin, even the leaſt ſin, is in its own nature mortal, or deſerving of death; the proper wages of ſin is death, yea death eternal; yet none of the ſins of God's elect are unto death, or iſſue in death, in fact; which is owing not to any different nature there is in their ſins, or to their good works which counterbalance them; but to the grace of God, and to the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt, by which they are pardoned and juſtified, and freed from obligation to puniſhment, or eternal death, the juſt demerits of them: but how ſhould another man know that a brother's ſin is not unto death, when it is of the ſame nature and kind with another man's? it is known by this, that he does not continue in it; he does not live in the conſtant commiſſion of it; his life is not a courſe of iniquity; that ſin he ſins is not a governing one in him; tho' he falls into it, he riſes up out of it thro' divine grace, and abides not in it; and he has a ſenſe of it, and is ſorry for it, after a godly ſort, loathes it, and himſelf for it; is aſhamed of it, ingenuouſly confeſſes it, and mourns over it and forſakes it: now when any ſtrong believer or ſpiritual man ſees or knows that a brother has ſinned, and this is his caſe, he ſhall aſk; he ſhall pray to God for him; that he would adminiſter comfort to him, diſcover his love, and apply his pardoning grace to him, and indulge him with his preſence and the light of his countenance: and he ſhall give him life; that is, God ſhall give the ſinning brother life; by which may be meant comfort, that which will revive his drooping ſpirits, and cauſe him to live chearfully and comfortably, that ſo he may not be ſwallowed up with over-much ſorrow; or he ſhall grant a diſcovery of the pardon of his ſin unto him, which will be as life from the dead, and will give him a comfortable hope of eternal life, of his right unto it, and meetneſs for it: for them, or to them that ſin not unto death, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions render it; for this phraſe is only deſcriptive of the perſons to whom life is given by God, upon the prayers of ſaints for them, and not that this life is given to him that prays, and by him to be given to the ſinning perſon. The Vulgate Latin verſion renders the whole thus, and life ſhall be given to him that ſins not unto death; which leaves the words without any difficulty: the Ethiopic verſion indeed renders it, and he that prays ſhall quicken him that ſins a ſin not unto death; and this ſenſe ſome interpreters incline to, and would have with this text compared 1 Tim. iv. 16. James v. 20. There is a ſin unto death; which is not only deſerving of death, as every other ſin is, but which certainly and inevitably iſſues in death in all that commit it, without exception; and that is the ſin againſt the Holy Ghoſt, which is neither forgiven in this world nor in that to come, and therefore muſt be unto death; it is a ſinning wilfully, not in a practical, but doctrinal way, after a man has received the knowledge of the truth; it is a wilful denial of the truth of the Goſpel, particularly that peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, eternal life and ſalvation are by Jeſus Chriſt, contrary to the light of his mind, and this joined with malice and obſtinacy; ſo that there is no more or other ſacrifice for ſuch a ſin; there is nothing but a fearful looking for of wrath and fury to fall on ſuch oppoſers of the way of life; and as the preſumptuous ſinners under Moſes's law died without mercy, ſo muſt theſe deſpightful ones under the Goſpel; ſee Matt. xii. 31, 32. Heb. x. 26—29. Some think there is an alluſion to one of the kinds of excommunication among the Jews, called Shammatha, the etymology of which, according to ſome Jewiſh writers, is שם מיתה; there is death[t]. I do not ſay that he ſhall pray for it; the Apoſtle does not expreſsly forbid to pray for the forgiveneſs of this ſin, yet what he ſays amounts unto it; he gives no encouragement to it, or any hopes of ſucceeding, but rather the reverſe; and indeed where this ſin is known, or can be known, it is not to be prayed for, becauſe it is irremiſſible; but as it is a moſt difficult point, to know when a man has ſinned it, the Apoſtle expreſſes himſelf with great caution.

Ver. 17. All unrighteouſneſs is ſin, &c.] All unrighteouſneſs againſt God or man is a ſin againſt the law of God, and the wrath of God is revealed againſt it, and it is deſerving of death; yet all unrighteouſneſs is not unto death, as the ſins of David, which were unrighteouſneſs both to God and man, and yet they were put away, and he died not; Peter ſinned very foully, and did great injuſtice to his dear Lord, and yet his ſin was not unto death; he had repentance unto life given him, and a freſh application of pardoning grace: and there is a ſin not unto death; this is added for the relief of weak believers, who hearing of a ſin unto death, not to be prayed for, might fear that theirs were of that kind, whereas none of them are; for tho' they are guilty of many unrighteouſneſſes, yet God is merciful to them, and forgives, Heb. viii. 12. and ſo they are not unto death.

Ver. 18. We know that whoſoever is born of God, &c.] Who is regenerated by his Spirit and grace, and quickened by his power; who has Chriſt formed in him, and is made a partaker of the divine nature, and has every grace implanted in him: ſinneth not; the ſin unto death; nor does he live in ſin, or is under the power and dominion of it, tho' he does not live without it; ſee the note on ch. iii. 9. but he that is begotten of God; the Vulgate Latin verſion reads, the generation of God keeps or preſerves him; that is, that which is born in him, the new man, the principle of grace, or ſeed of God in him, keeps him from notorious crimes, particularly from ſinning the ſin unto death, and from the governing power of all other ſins; but all other verſions, as well as copies, read as we do, and as follows: keepeth himſelf; not that any man can keep himſelf by his own power and ſtrength; otherwiſe what mean the petitions of the ſaints to God that he would keep them, and even of Chriſt himſelf to God for them on the ſame account? God only is the keeper of his people, and they are only kept in ſafety whom he keeps, and it is by his power they are kept; but the ſenſe is, that a believer defends himſelf by taking to him the whole armour of God, and eſpecially the ſhield of faith, againſt the corruptions of his own heart, the ſnares of the world, and particularly the temptations of ſatan: and that wicked one toucheth him not; he can't come at him ſo as to wound him to the heart, or deſtroy that principle of life that is in him, or ſo as to overcome and devour him; he may tempt him and ſift him, and buffet him, and greatly afflict and grieve him, but he can't touch his life, or hurt him with the ſecond death; nay, ſometimes the believer is ſo enabled to weild the ſhield of faith, or to hold up Chriſt the ſhield by faith, and turn it every way in ſuch a manner, that ſatan, who is here meant by the wicked one, becauſe he is notoriouſly ſo, can't come near him, nor in with him; can't work upon him at all with his temptations, nor in the leaſt hurt his peace, joy, and comfort: the ſaints know their perſeverance from the promiſes of God and declarations of Chriſt; Pſ. cxxv. 1, 2. Jer. xxxii. 40. Matt. xvi. 18. John x. 28.

[t] T. Bab. Moed Katon, fol. 17. 1.

Ver. 19. And we know that we are of God, &c.] The ſons of God, and regenerated by him; this is known by the Spirit of God, which witneſſes to the ſpirits of the ſaints, that they are the children of God; and by the fruits and effects of regenerating grace, as love to the brethren, and the like: and the whole world lies in wickedneſs; that is, the men of the world, the greater part of the inhabitants of it, who are as they were when they came into it, not being born of God; theſe are addicted to ſin and wickedneſs; the biaſs of their minds is to it, they are ſet upon it, and give themſelves up to it, are immerſed in it, and are under the power of it: or in the wicked one; ſatan, the god of this world; they are under his influence, and led according to his will, and they are governed by him, and are at his beck and command; and this is known by ſad experience, it is eaſy of obſervation; ſee 2 Eſdras, iv. 27.

Ver. 20. And we know that the Son of God is come, &c.] That the ſecond perſon in the Godhead, who is equal to the Father, and of the ſame nature with him, is come from the Father, from heaven into this world, not by local motion, but by aſſumption of nature; that he is come in the fleſh, or is become incarnate, in order to work out ſalvation for his people, by his obedience, ſufferings, and death; and this John and others knew, for they had perſonal knowledge of him, and converſe with him; they ſaw him with their eyes, heard him, and handled him; he dwelt among them, preached to them, wrought miracles before them, which proved him to be what he was; and it may be known that the Meſſiah muſt be come, ſince Daniel's weeks, which fixes the time of his coming, are long ago up; the ſcepter is departed from Judah, and the ſecond temple is deſtroyed, neither of which were to be till the Meſſiah came; and that Jeſus of Nazareth is he, who is come, may be known by the characters of him, and the works done by him: and hath given us an underſtanding; not a new faculty of the underſtanding, but new light into it; a knowledge of ſpiritual things; of himſelf, and of God in him, and of the truths of the Goſpel, and of all divine and heavenly things; for he, the Son of God, is come a light into the world, and gives ſpiritual light to men: that we may know him that is true; or the true God, as the Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, and the Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read; that is God the Father, who is the true God, in oppoſition to the falſe gods of the heathens, tho' not to the excluſion of the Son and Spirit; and the ſpiritual knowledge of him as the Father of Chriſt, and as a covenant-God and father in him, is only given to men by Chriſt, and this is life eternal; ſee Matt. xi. 27. John xvii. 3. and we are in him that is true, even in his Son, Jeſus Chriſt; the words Jeſus Chriſt, are left out in the Alexandrian copy, and in the Vulgate Latin verſion; however, certain it is, that Jeſus Chriſt is meant by his Son, who is the Son of the true and living God, and is himſelf true; not only true God, as hereafter aſſerted, but true man, having a true body and a reaſonable ſoul, and was true and faithful in the diſcharge of his offices, as prophet, prieſt, and king; he faithfully declared the whole will of God, and taught the way of God in truth; he was faithful to him that appointed him, by ſecuring his glory when he made reconciliation for the ſins of the people; and all the adminiſtrations of his kingly office are juſt and true; yea he is truth itſelf, the ſubſtance of all the types, in whom all the promiſes are yea and amen, and who has all the truths of the Goſpel and treaſures of wiſdom in him: now his people are in him; they were ſecretly in him before the world was, being loved by him, choſen in him, put into his hands, preſerved in him, and repreſented by him; and openly, at converſion, when they are anew created in him, brought to believe in him, and live upon him, and he lives in them, and they are in him as branches in the vine; and this is known by his Spirit being given them, by the commnnication of his grace unto them, and by the communion they have with him. This is the true God and eternal life; that is, the Son of God, who is the immediate antecedent to the relative this; he is the true God, with his Father and the Spirit, in diſtinction from all falſe, fictitious, or nominal deities; and ſuch as are only by office, or in an improper and figurative ſenſe: Chriſt is truly and really God, as appears from all the perfections of deity, the fulneſs of the Godhead being in him; from the divine works of creation and providence being aſcribed to him; and from the divine worſhip that is given him; as well as from the names and titles he goes by, and particularly that of Jehovah, which is incommunicable to a creature: and he is called eternal life, becauſe it is in him; and he is the giver of it to his people; and that itſelf will chiefly conſiſt in the enjoyment and viſion of him, and in conformity to him.

Ver. 21. Little children, keep yourſelves from idols. Amen.] From heathen idols and idolatry, into which the ſaints in thoſe times might be liable to be drawn, by reaſon of their dwelling among heathen idolaters, and being related to them, and by the too great freedom uſed in eating things ſacrificed to idols in their temples; and from all other idols that might be introduced by ſome who went by the name of chriſtians, as the Gnoſticks, who worſhipped the images of Simon and Helena; and the paſſage may be an antidote againſt the worſhipping of images, afterwards introduced by the Papiſts. Moreover, errors and falſe doctrines, which are the figments of mens minds, and what they are fond of, may be called idols, and ſhould be guarded againſt, and abſtained from; as alſo the luſts of mens hearts, and all the evil things that are in the world, which are adored by the men of it; and even every creature that is loved too much, is an idol; hence covetouſneſs is called idolatry; nor ſhould any creature or thing be loved more than God or Chriſt; the one only living and true God, Father, Son, and Spirit, he is only to be worſhipped, feared, and loved.

The Second Epiſtle of JOHN.

THOUGH this Epiſtle was called in queſtion and gainſaid by ſome as authentic, as Euſebius ſays [a], yet there is no room to doubt of the authority of it; it was very early received into the canon of the ſcripture, and is cited as ſuch, and alſo as the Apoſtle John's, by Irenæus [b], who was a diſciple of Polycarp, and an hearer of Papias, who were both diſciples of the Apoſtle John; nor need there be any queſtion as to his being the author of it. Euſebius indeed does ſay [c], it was a doubt whether it was the Apoſtle John's, or another of the ſame name; and ſome have ſince aſſerted, that it was written not by John the Evangeliſt, but by John the preſbyter of Epheſus, after the Apoſtle; and this is thought to have ſome confirmation from the author of it being called an elder, or preſbyter, which is judged not ſo agreeable to the Apoſtle John; tho' it ſhould be obſerved, that Peter an Apoſtle ſtiles himſelf an elder, as John here does, 1 Pet. v. 1. moreover, the above antient writer Irenæus, expreſly aſcribes this Epiſtle to John, the diſciple of the Lord; and whoever compares ſome paſſages in this Epiſtle with the former, particularly ver. 5, 6, 7, 9. with 1 John ii. 7, 8. and iii. 23. and v. 3. and iv. 1, 2, 3. will eaſily conclude, from the likeneſs of ſtile and matter, that it is a genuine Epiſtle of the Apoſtle John: the deſign of which is to exhort and encourage the lady he writes to, to continue in the truth and faith of the Goſpel, and in love to God and his people, and to avoid falſe teachers and their doctrines.

THE writer of this Epiſtle deſcribes himſelf by his office, an elder, and inſcribes it to a certain matron, whom he ſtiles, on account of her honour and riches, a lady; and by reaſon of her grace, elect; and to her children, who, as well as herſelf, were the objects of the Apoſtle's love, and of all that knew the truth, and that for the ſake of it, which was common to them all, ver. 1, 2. the ſalutation follows, ver. 3. and then a congratulation of the lady, that ſome of her children walked in the ſame path of truth with herſelf, ver. 4. and next an exhortation to brotherly love, which is the commandment from the beginning; the evidence of which love is walking according to that, and every other command of God, ver. 5, 6. and the rather this ſhould be cloſely attended to, ſince many deceivers, who were no other than antichriſt, had got into the world, who did not own that Chriſt was come in the fleſh; wherefore it became thoſe that were concerned for his name and glory, as well as their own intereſt, to take heed leſt what was wrought ſhould be loſt, and ſo a full reward be not received, ver. 7, 8. and then a deſcription of theſe deceivers and falſe teachers is given; that they are tranſgreſſors of the rule of God's word, abide not in the doctrine of Chriſt, and ſo have not God, any intereſt in him; whereas he that abides in the doctrine of Chriſt, has an intereſt both in the Father and in the Son, ver. 9. wherefore the Apoſtle gives advice to the lady how to behave towards ſuch; not to receive them into her houſe, nor wiſh them ſucceſs, ſince ſo to do, would be to join with them in their evil deeds, ver. 10, 11. and then he excuſes the ſhortneſs of his letter, tho' he had many things to write unto her, yet would not, becauſe he hoped ſhortly to viſit her, and then would perſonally relate what he had to communicate to their mutual joy, ver. 12. and cloſes the Epiſtle with the ſalutation of her ſiſter's children to her, ver. 13.

Ver. 1. The elder unto the elect lady and her children, &c.] By the elder is meant the writer of this Epiſtle, the Apoſtle John, who ſo calls himſelf either on account of his age, he being now near an hundred years of age, having out-lived all the Apoſtles; or on account of his office, being a biſhop or overſeer, not only of the church at Epheſus, but of all the Aſiatic churches, which is the ſame with an elder; nor is this incompatible with his being an Apoſtle; ſee 1 Pet. v. 1. the elect lady is the perſon he writes unto; by whom is deſigned not the church of Chriſt, ſince ſuch a way of ſpeaking is unuſual; and beſides, he ſpeaks of coming to ſee her face to face, and of the children of her elect ſiſter; but ſome particular perſon, ſome rich, as well as gracious woman of John's acquaintance; and theſe words, elect lady, are neither of them proper names of the perſon: ſome think that the word Kyria, rendered lady, was the name of the perſon, as Domina with the Romans, and anſwers to the Hebrew word Martha; for as מר, Mar, ſignifies lord, ſo מרתא, Martha, lady; and then the inſcription runs, to the choice or excellent Martha; and the Syriac and Arabic verſions read, to the elect Kyria: and others think that the word rendered elect is a proper name, and that this perſon's name was Electa, as Electus [d] is a man's name; and then it muſt read thus, to the lady Electa; but her ſiſter alſo is ſo called, and it can hardly be thought that two ſiſters ſhould be both of a name; neither of them are proper names, but characters and titles of reſpect and honour: ſhe is called a lady, becauſe ſhe was a perſon of diſtinction and ſubſtance, which ſhows that God ſometimes calls by his grace ſome that are rich and noble; and alſo that titles of reſpect and honour, where flattery is avoided, may be lawfully given to perſons of dignity and wealth; ſo Nazianzen [e] calls his own mother by the ſame title; and it was uſual to call women by this name from fourteen years of age [f]: and this perſon alſo is ſaid to be elect; either becauſe ſhe was a choice, famous, and excellent perſon, not only for her birth, nobility, and riches, but for her virtue, grace, and good works; or becauſe ſhe was choſen unto eternal life and ſalvation; and which the Apoſtle might know without a ſpecial and divine revelation, by the Goſpel coming with power to her; by the grace that was wrought in her; by the faith of God's elect, which ſhe appeared to have, ſeeing it worked by love; and which may be, and ought to be concluded in a judgment of charity, of every one that profeſſes faith in Chriſt, and walks according to it; and this alſo makes it appear that election is of particular perſons, and not of nations, communities, and churches, as ſuch; nor is it unuſual to ſalute ſingle perſons under this character; ſee Rom. xvi. 13. this Epiſtle is inſcribed not only to this lady, but alſo to her children; who were not infants, but grown up, and had made a profeſſion of the truth, and walked in it, ver. 4. and both the mother and the children the Apoſtle repreſents as the objects of his love: whom I love in the truth; either as being in the truth and faith of the Goſpel; for tho' all men are to be loved as men, and to be done well to, yet they that are of the houſhold of faith, or are in the faith, are in an eſpecial manner to be loved and reſpected; ſee Gal. vi. 10. Tit. iii. 15. or the ſenſe is, that the Apoſtle loved this lady and her children ſincerely and heartily, without diſſimulation; not in word and in tongue, but in deed and in truth: and not I only, but alſo all they that have known the truth; either the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is the truth; not with a notional knowledge, but with the knowledge of approbation and affection; with a fiducial and appropriating one: or the Goſpel, the word of truth; not with a ſpeculative, but with a ſpiritual and experimental knowledge of it: and this is not to be underſtood of every individual perſon then living, which had ſuch a knowledge of the truth; for it can't be reaſonably thought that every individual perſon ſhould know this lady and her children; but of all ſuch perſons who had any knowledge of them; for ſuch who are born again by the word of truth, love not only him that begat them, but all thoſe who are begotten of him; this ſhews in what ſenſe the word all is ſometimes taken.

Ver. 2. For the truth's ſake which dwelleth in us, &c.] Not for her high birth, nobility, or riches; but either for Chriſt's ſake, who is the truth, and who dwells in the hearts of believers by faith, and who is the ſame that dwells in one as in another; and on his account it is that ſaints love one another, becauſe they belong to him, he is formed in them, and his image is enſtamped upon them; and every like loves its like: or for the Goſpel's ſake, which has a place, and dwells in every ſaint, and is the ſame for matter and ſubſtance in one as in another; and unity of mind and judgment produces unity of affection: or for the ſake of the truth of grace, the inward principle of grace, which dwells in every regenerate perſon; a communication of the experience of which, knits the ſaints one to another: and ſhall be with us for ever; where Chriſt enters and takes up his abode, from thence he never finally and totally departs, though he may ſometimes hide his face with reſpect to communion, or withdraw his gracious preſence; and where the Goſpel has once took place in the heart, and is become the engrafted word, it can never be rooted out, or be removed; and where the truth of grace is, it will remain; it is an incorruptible ſeed, a well of living water, ſpringing up unto eternal life.

Ver. 3. Grace be with you, mercy and peace, &c.] This form of ſalutation, or wiſh and prayer for the bleſſings mentioned, from God the Father, and from the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, is the ſame uſed by other Apoſtles; ſee 1 Tim. i. 2. Jude 2. and the note on Rom. i. 7. Only 'tis added here with reſpect to Chriſt, that he is the Son of the Father in truth and love; which is mentioned by the Apoſtle to confirm the deity of Chriſt, which is plainly implied in wiſhing for the above things equally from him, as from the Father; and to oppoſe and confront ſome hereticks of thoſe times, who denied the true and proper Sonſhip of Chriſt; and therefore he calls him, the Son of the Father, the only-begotten of the Father; and that in truth, or truly and properly, and not in a figurative and metaphorical ſenſe, as magiſtrates are called the Sons of God, and children of the moſt high, by reaſon of their office; but ſo is not Chriſt, he is God's own Son, in a true, proper, and natural ſenſe: and he is ſo in love; he is his well-beloved Son, his dear Son, the Son of his love, as he cannot otherwiſe be; ſince he is not only the image of him, but of the ſame nature, and has the ſame perfections with him.

Ver. 4. I rejoiced greatly that I found of thy children, &c.] Not all, but ſome of them; for good parents have not always good children, or at leaſt not all of them; Adam had a Cain, Abraham an Iſhmael, and Iſaac an Eſau: God is pleaſed to ſhew his diſcriminating grace in tribes and families, by taking ſome, and leaving others: it is a great mercy when any are called by grace, and inſtead of the fathers are the children: and this was the caſe of ſome of the children of this elect lady, they were walking in the truth; in Chriſt, the truth, by faith, as they had received him; and in the truth of the Goſpel, as they had embraced and profeſſed it; they abode in it, and by it, and made a proficiency in the knowledge of it, which may be ſignified by walking, that being a progreſſive action; as alſo they walked according to it, and as became it; and likewiſe they walked in the truth of Goſpel-worſhip, diſcipline, and ordinances: as we have received a commandment from the Father; and which has been made known by Jeſus Chriſt, as his mind and will. Now as it is matter of joy and gladneſs to godly parents, when their children walk in the paths of faith, truth, and holineſs, ſo it is alſo to miniſters of the Goſpel, as well as to the angels in heaven; it gives them an inward pleaſure and joy, and which is not only expreſſed by them, to ſuch children and their parents, but is alſo abundant by many thankſgivings unto God.

Ver. 5. And now I beſeech thee, lady, &c.] Or Kyria, which word the Syriac and Arabic verſions retain, as if it was a proper name: the Apoſtle having finiſhed the inſcription, ſalutation, and congratulation in the preceding verſes, paſſes to an exhortation and entreaty to obſerve the commandment of love to one another, which is not a new commandment, but what was from the beginning: not as tho' I wrote a new commandment, &c. ſee the note on 1 John ii. 7, 8.

Ver. 6. And this is love, that we walk after his commandments, &c.] By obſerving them as a rule of converſation, in ſo doing love is ſhown to God; and ſuch may expect the freſh diſcoveries of the love of God to them; ſee the note on 1 John v. 3. this is the commandment, that as ye have heard from the beginning, ye ſhould walk in it; that is, this is the will of God, that his people ſhould walk in the truth of the Goſpel, and abide by it, as they heard and received it at their firſt converſion, from the mouths of the Apoſtles, or other faithful miniſters of the word; a reaſon for which is given in the next verſe.

Ver. 7. For many deceivers are entred into the world, &c.] By whom are meant falſe teachers, who are deſcribed by their quality, deceivers, deceitful workers, pretending to be miniſters of Chriſt, to have a value for truth, a love for ſouls, and a view to the glory of God, but lie in wait to deceive, and handle the word of God deceitfully; and by their quantity or number many, and ſo likely to do much miſchief; and by the place where they were, they were entred into the world; or gone out into the world, as the Alexandrian copy and ſome others, and the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions, read, as in 1 John iv. 1. ſee the note there; and by their tenet, who confeſs not that Jeſus Chriſt is come in the fleſh; theſe were not the Jews who denied that Jeſus was the Chriſt, tho' they would not allow that Chriſt was come in the fleſh; but theſe were ſome who bore the chriſtian name, and profeſſed to believe in Jeſus Chriſt, but would not own, that he was really incarnate, or aſſumed a true human nature, only in appearance; and denied that he took true and real fleſh of the virgin, but only ſeemed to do ſo; and theſe are confuted by the Apoſtle, 1 John i. 1. and upon every one of theſe he juſtly fixes the following character. This is a deceiver and an antichriſt; one of the deceivers that were come into the world, and one of the antichriſts that were already in it; and who were the fore-runners of the man of ſin, and in whom the myſtery of iniquity already began to work; for antichriſt does not deſign any one particular individual perſon, but a ſett of men, that are contrary to Chriſt and oppoſers of him.

Ver. 8. Look to yourſelves, &c.] This is an exhortation to the elect lady, and her children, to look about them, and take care of themſelves, and beware of theſe deceivers, and their doctrines: that we loſe not thoſe things which we have wrought; or as the Alexandrian copy, and many other copies, and the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read, that ye loſe not thoſe things which ye have wrought; in embracing the Goſpel, making a profeſſion of it, walking in it, ſhewing a zeal, and contending for it, expreſſing a love both by words and actions to the miniſters of it, and ſuffering much reproach on the account of it; all which would be loſt, and in vain, ſhould they at laſt drop the Goſpel, and embrace the errors of the wicked; ſee Gal. iii. 4. Moreover, ſuch who don't go ſuch lengths, as to let go the head, Chriſt, but retain him as the foundation, and the fundamental doctrines of the Goſpel, yet, among many precious things, may lay much rubbiſh on this foundation; and therefore ſhould take heed, what they build upon it, ſince, tho' they themſelves may be ſaved, their works may be deſtroyed, and ſo they ſuffer loſs; ſee 1 Cor. iii. 11—15. and if we read the words, that we loſe not — which we have wrought; the ſenſe is the ſame, it being only a figure which Rhetoricians call communion, and it is frequently uſed when a common duty is exhorted to; ſee 1 John ii. 28. 2 John 5. unleſs it ſhould be thought, that this has a peculiar reference to the miniſters of the Goſpel, as it may: for tho' the Goſpel preached by them can never be loſt, being the everlaſting Goſpel, and the word which abides for ever; yet it may be received in vain, and perſons may fall from it, and imbibe error, and ſo the labour of Chriſt's faithful miniſters may be ſo far in vain, and loſt; and likewiſe, many ſouls whom they have thought they have gained to Chriſt, and that they have been inſtruments of working upon them for good, and have hoped they would be their joy and crown of rejoicing another day; when ſuch are carried away by deceivers, fall off from the truth, miniſters of the word loſe what they thought they had wrought, which muſt give them great concern; and this is improved by the Apoſtle into a reaſon and argument, why the perſons he wrote to, ſhould beware of ſeducers and their errors: but that we receive a full reward; in heaven, and which itſelf is called the recompence of reward, and the reward of the inheritance; not that this is a reward of debt due to the works of men, which are not rewardable in themſelves; for they are ſuch as are due to God before they are performed; and when they are done, they are not profitable to him, nothing is given to him, or received by him; when all is done, that can be done, men are unprofitable ſervants; but this is a reward of grace, God has of his own grace, promiſed it to thoſe who love and ſerve him; and becauſe it will be given them of his grace, after their work is over, as wages are given to a ſervant when he has done his work, it goes by this name: and whereas it is ſaid to be a full one, the meaning is not as if it was different to different perſons, for there is but one recompence of reward, or reward of the inheritance common to all the ſaints; or, as if it might be incompleat in ſome; it only ſignifies a large and exceeding great reward; ſee Gen. xv. 1. and Ruth ii. 12. in which laſt place the ſame phraſe is uſed, as here; and where the Septuagint interpreters uſe the ſame words as here; and which is thus paraphraſed by the Targumiſt, "the Lord give thee a good recompence "in this world for thy good work, and let thy re-"ward be, שלימא, full, or perfect, in the world "to come." And the Jews[g] often ſpeak of a full reward, and an equal one, to be received hereafter. Perhaps regard is here had particularly to the miniſters of the Goſpel, who have their reward in part here, for the workman is worthy of his reward, and they will have it in full hereafter. Moreover, the Apoſtle might here be concerned, that he, and every faithful miniſter, might have their full number, they expected, that none may be miſſing, and which he may call a full reward: tho' the above copies and verſions read here, as before, ye, and not we.

Ver. 9. Whoſoever tranſgreſſeth, &c.] Not the law of God, of which every one is a tranſgreſſor, and that daily, in thought, word, or deed; but who paſſes over the rule and ſtandard of doctrine, the word of God, and will not adhere to that, nor walk according to it, but rejects and deſpiſes that rule: and abideth not in the doctrine of Chriſt; which he received from his Father, and delivered to his Apoſtles, and of which he is the ſum and ſubſtance; the doctrine which is concerning his perſon as the Son of God, and as truly God, and the union of the two natures, divine and human, in his one perſon; and concerning his offices, as the mediator, ſurety, and meſſenger of the covenant, and as the prophet, prieſt, and king of his church; and concerning his incarnation, obedience, ſufferings, death, reſurrection from the dead, aſcenſion to heaven, ſeſſion at God's right hand, interceſſion for his people, and ſecond coming to judgment; concerning peace and pardon by his blood, atonement by his ſacrifice, juſtification by his righteouſneſs, and compleat ſalvation by him: this is, תלמודו של מלך המשיח, the doctrine of the king Meſſiah, or the Meſſiah's Talmud[h], to uſe the Jewiſh phraſe, and which agrees with John's. Now, whoever has embraced and profeſſed this doctrine, but errs concerning it, and rejects it, and abides not in it, as ſatan abode not in the truth, appears to be of him: hath not God; for his father, but the devil, the father of lyes; he has no true knowledge of God, for there is none but in Chriſt, whoſe doctrine ſuch an one has denied; nor has he, nor can he, have communion with him, nor any intereſt in him. He that abideth in the doctrine of Chriſt; as he hath received and profeſſed it; neither can any thing remove him from it, not the arguments of falſe teachers, nor the reproaches and perſecutions of men, or the ſnares and allurements of the world: he hath both the Father and the Son; he has an intereſt in them both, and has knowledge of each of them, and fellowſhip with them, The Alexandrian copy, and the Vulgate Latin verſion, leave out the phraſe, of Chriſt, in the preceding clauſe, and only read, in the doctrine; and the Syriac verſion, in his doctrine; the ſenſe is the ſame.

[g] Targum on Eccl. i. 3. & ii. 11. & Midraſh Kohelet, fol. 72. 4.

[h] Bereſhit Rabba, §. 98. fol. 85. 3.

Ver. 10. If there come any unto you, &c.] Under the character of a preacher: and bring not this doctrine; or does not preach the doctrine of Chriſt, as before explained, but deſpiſes it, and preaches a contrary one: receive him not into your houſe; neither into the houſe of God, ſuffer him not to preach there; nor into your own houſe, give him no entertainment there: falſe teachers always tried to creep into houſes, where they ſerved their own turn every way, both by feeding their bellies, and ſpreading their pernicious doctrines; and therefore ſuch ſhould be avoided, both publickly and privately; their miniſtry ſhould not be attended on in the church, or houſe of God; and they ſhould not be entertained in private houſes, and much leſs careſſed: neither bid him God ſpeed; or give him the uſual civil form of ſalutation, as a good day to you, all hail, all health, and proſperity attend you, the Lord be with you, and the like. The word uſed by the Jews was, אישר, which ſignifies happineſs; ſo it is ſaid [1], what do they ſalute with? אישר, God ſpeed; which was forbidden to ſay to one that was plowing in the ſeventh year. The meaning is, that with ſuch no familiar converſation ſhould be had, leſt any encouragement ſhould be given them; or it ſhould induce a ſuſpicion in the minds of other ſaints, that they are in the ſame ſentiments; or it ſhould tend to make others think favourably of them, and be a ſnare, and a ſtumbling-block to weak chriſtians.

Ver. 11. For he that biddeth him God ſpeed, &c.] Wiſhes him well, and ſucceſs in his miniſtry, or in a friendly and familiar way, converſes with him: is partaker of his evil deeds; he has fellowſhip with him, inſtead of reproving or ſhunning him, as he ought; he is an abettor of him in his principles, and ſo far joins in the propagation of them, and helps to ſpread them, and gives too much reaſon to think he is one with him in them.

Ver. 12. Having many things to write unto you, &c.] Either on a civil, or on a religious account, concerning the ſtate of the churches of Aſia, and particularly Epheſus, and of private families and perſons, and concerning the truths and doctrines of the Goſpel; not that he had any new one, or any other than what they had heard from the beginning, to communicate to them, by word of mouth, for this he denies, ver. 5, 6. wherefore this makes nothing for the unwritten traditions of the Papiſts, and as if the ſcriptures did not contain the whole of doctrine and of the will of God. I would not write with paper and ink; any more than what was written: but I truſt to come unto you; where they were, but where that was is not known; very likely in ſome parts of Aſia, and it may be, not far from Epheſus, ſince any long journey would not have been fit for the Apoſtle to have taken in this his old age: and ſpeak face to face; that is, freely and familiarly converſe together about things omitted in this Epiſtle: that our joy may be full; in ſeeing one another's faces, and thro' hearing the things that may be talked of; and ſince the converſation would doubtleſs turn on divine and evangelic things, ſo fulneſs, or a large meaſure of ſpiritual joy, may be here intended. Inſtead of our joy, the Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, and the Vulgate Latin, and the Ethiopic verſions, read, your joy.

Ver. 13. The children of thy elect ſiſter greet thee. Amen.] Not the members of a ſiſter-church, as ſome think; but the children of one who was the ſiſter of this lady, according to the fleſh; and who, as ſhe, was either a very famous and excellent perſon, or rather one choſen of God likewiſe unto eternal life, and ſalvation; and whoſe children alſo were walking in the truth, and here ſend their chriſtian ſalutation to their aunt; very likely thoſe ſiſters children lived at Epheſus, where John reſided.

The Third Epiſtle of JOHN.

THIS Epiſtle was written by the Apoſtle John, who calls himſelf an elder, as in the preceding, and is inſcribed to a friend of his, whom he mentions by name, and expreſſes a very great affection for, on account of his ſteady adherence to the truths of the Goſpel, ver. 1. he wiſhes him bodily health equal to that proſperity of ſoul he was indulged with, ver. 2. congratulates him upon the teſtimony the brethren that came from him gave him of the truth being in him, and of his walking in it, and upon hearing that his children alſo trod in the ſame path, ver. 3, 4. commends him for his hoſpitality and charity, of which teſtimonies were given before the church; and encourages him to go on doing the ſame acts of beneficence, ſince it was to ſuch perſons that went forth for the ſake of Chriſt, and preaching in his name, and had nothing of the Gentiles for ſo doing; wherefore they ought to be received, and entertained by thoſe of ability, that they might be fellow-helpers to the truth with them, ver. 5, 6, 7, 8. He complains of Diotrephes as a proud, haughty, and over-bearing man in the church, where Gaius was a member, who would neither receive the letters the Apoſtle ſent, nor the brethren that came with them; nay, forbid them that would, and caſt them out of the church for it, and prated againſt them with malicious words, whom he threatens to remember when he himſelf ſhould come thither, ver. 9, 10. wherefore he exhorts Gaius not to follow ſuch an ill example, but that which is good in any perſon; ſince he that does good appears to be of God, and he that does evil, it looks as if he had never known him, ver. 11. And particularly he recommends Demetrius, who had a good report of all men, and of the truth itſelf, and had a teſtimony from the Apoſtle, and thoſe that were with him, which was known to be a true one, ver. 12. But though he had many things to ſay, both of one, and of the other, he determines to write no more at preſent, hoping he ſhould ſhortly ſee him, and perſonally converſe together; and cloſes the Epiſtle with his own good wiſh, and with mutual ſalutations of friends, ver. 13, 14.

Ver. 1. The elder unto the well-beloved Gaius, &c.] The elder is the writer of the Epiſtle, the Apoſtle John, who ſo ſtiles himſelf on account of his age, and office, as in the preceding Epiſtle. The perſon to whom he writes, is the well-beloved Gaius; not that Gaius, who was the Apoſtle Paul's hoſt, Rom. xvi. 23. for tho' their characters agree, being both hoſpitable men, yet neither the place nor time in which they lived. The Apoſtle Paul's Gaius lived at Corinth, this is ſome place near to Epheſus, for the Apoſtle in his old age purpoſed to come and ſee him ſhortly; the other was cotemporary with Paul, this with John; there were thirty or forty years difference between them: beſides, the Corinthian Gaius was baptized by Paul, and was doubtleſs one of his ſpiritual children, or converts, whereas this Gaius was one of the Apoſtle John's ſpiritual children, ver. 4. nor does he ſeem to be the ſame with Gaius of Macedonia, Acts xix. 29. or with Gaius of Derbe, Acts xx. 4. who ſeem to be two different perſons by their country, tho' both companions in travel of the Apoſtle Paul; for which reaſon, as well as the time of their living, neither of them can be this Gaius, who was a ſettled houſe-keeper, and reſided at ſome certain place. His name is a Roman name, and the ſame with Caius, tho' he ſeems to have been a Jew, as he might, it being uſual with the Jews in other countries to take Gentile names. His character is, that he was well-beloved; that is, of God, as it appears he was from the grace beſtowed on him, from the proſperous eſtate of his ſoul, and from the truth that was in him, and his walking in it; and of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, for the ſame reaſons; and alſo of all the brethren and ſaints that knew him; he being a perſon not only truly gracious, and of faithfulneſs and integrity, but of great liberality and beneficence, which muſt gain him much love and eſteem among them; and he was well beloved by the Apoſtle John; and ſo the Syriac verſion renders it, to my beloved Gaius; tho' his love to him is expreſſed in the following clauſe, whom I love in the truth; as being in it, or for the ſake of it, or truly and ſincerely; ſee the note on 2 John 1.

[1] T. Hieroſ. Sheviith, fol. 35. 2. Vid. Taanith, fol. 64. 2.

Ver. 2. Beloved, I wiſh above all things, that thou mayeſt proſper, &c.] Or ſucceed in all temporal affairs, in the buſineſs of life, in which he was; and as ſucceſs of this ſort depends upon the bleſſing of God, which maketh rich, it is to be wiſhed and prayed for from him: and be in health; that is, of body, which above all things, above all outward mercies, is the moſt deſirable; for without this, what are the richeſt dainties, the largeſt poſſeſſions, or the beſt of friends? without this there can be no comfortable enjoyment of either of them; and therefore of this ſort of mercies, it is, in the firſt place, and above all others, to be wiſhed for, and deſired by one friend for another. The rule and meaſure of this wiſh, is according to the proſperity of his ſoul, even as thy ſoul proſpereth: the ſoul is diſeaſed with ſin, and may be ſaid to be in good health, when all its iniquities are forgiven; and may be ſaid to proſper, when having a ſpiritual appetite for the Goſpel, the ſincere milk of the word, it feeds upon it, is nouriſhed by it, and grows thereby; when it is in the lively exerciſe of faith, hope, and love; when ſpiritual knowledge is increaſed, or it grows in grace, and in the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus; when the inward man is renewed day by day with freſh ſtrength; and when it enjoys communion with God, has the light of his countenance, and the joys of his ſalvation; and when it is fruitful in every good work.

Ver. 3. For I rejoiced greatly when the brethren came, &c.] From the place where Gaius lived, to that where John now reſided; theſe brethren ſeem to be preachers of the word, who travelled from place to place to ſpread the Goſpel: and teſtified of the truth that is in thee; either of Chriſt, who was formed in him; or of the Goſpel, which had a place in his heart; or of the truth of grace that were in him, as well as of that faithfulneſs, integrity, and ſincerity he appeared to be poſſeſſed of, being an Iſraelite indeed, and without guile: even as thou walkeſt in the truth; in Chriſt, and in the Goſpel, and as became it, and with all uprightneſs; ſee 2 John 4. and this occaſioned great joy in the Apoſtle; as it is matter of joy to every one that truly loves Chriſt, and his Goſpel, or has the true grace of charity in him, which envies not the gifts and graces of others, but rejoiceth in the truth, where-ever it is found; and eſpecially to the faithful miniſters of the word, when they hear of the truth of grace in any ſouls, and that ſuch continue walking in the truth of the Goſpel, and particularly thoſe who have been wrought upon under their miniſtry, as follows.

Ver. 4. I have no greater joy, &c.] Nothing that cauſes greater joy. The Vulgate Latin verſion reads grace or thanks; and then the ſenſe is, that he had nothing to be more thankful for: than to hear that my children walk in truth; meaning his ſpiritual children, thoſe whoſe converſion he had been the inſtrument of; and among theſe it ſeems Gaius was one.

Ver. 5. Beloved, thou doſt faithfully, &c.] Or a faithful thing, and as became a faithful man, a believer in Chriſt; in all his beneficence and charity he acted the upright part; he did not do it in an hypocritical way, to be ſeen of men, and gain applauſe from them, but from a principle of love, and with a view to the glory of God: whatſoever thou doſt to the brethren, and to ſtrangers; which may deſign either different perſons; and by brethren may be meant the poor brethren of the church that Gaius belonged to, and others that were well known to him; and by the ſtrangers, not unconverted perſons, but ſuch of the ſaints as came from foreign parts, and travelled about to ſpread the Goſpel, and enlarge the intereſt of Chriſt: or elſe the ſame perſons may be intended, for the words may be read, as they are in the Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, and in the Vulgate Latin verſion, what thou doſt to the brethren, and this to ſtrangers; that is, as the Arabic verſion renders it, to ſtrange brethren; or, as the Syriac verſion, to the brethren, and eſpecially them that are ſtrangers; ſo that Gaius was a very hoſpitable man, one that entertained and lodged ſtrangers, and uſed them very civilly and courteouſly, with great liberality, and with much integrity and ſincerity.

Ver. 6. Which have born witneſs of thy charity before the church, &c.] At Epheſus, where John was; theſe brethren and ſtrangers coming thither, and being greatly affected with Gaius's kindneſs and liberality to them, could not forbear ſpeaking of it to his praiſe, in the preſence of the members of the church, as well as acquainted the Apoſtle John with it; the Syriac verſion reads, before the whole church; they bore teſtimony of his liberality in a very public manner. And this the Apoſtle mentions to encourage Gaius to go on, and continue in his kindneſs to the ſame perſons, ſince they retained ſuch a grateful ſenſe of paſt favours; and whereas they were now returning back, he deſires that he would give them ſome further aſſiſtance: whom if thou bring forward on their journey; the word here uſed ſignifies, to ſend on before, as in Acts xv. 3. and xx. 38. and xxi. 5. Rom. xv. 24. 1 Cor. xvi. 6, 11. 2 Cor. i. 16. Tit. iii. 13. and is uſed by the Septuagint in the ſame ſenſe as here, and in the above places, in Gen. xviii. 16. where 'tis ſaid, that Abraham went with them (the angels) to bring them on in the way, לשלחם, to ſend them on, or ſend them away; diſmiſs them, take his leave of them in a friendly and honourable way. The Targums of Onkelos and Jonathan render it, לאלוואיהון, to accompany them; and ſo this Greek word, which ſeems to anſwer to the Hebrew phraſe, ſignifies an honourable accompanying, leading forth, and taking leave of friends; and ſo the Apoſtle encourages Gaius to behave in like manner to the brethren and ſtrangers; meaning, either by accompanying them in perſon, or by ſending his ſervants along with them, both to direct them the way, and to ſecure them from danger, and chiefly by furniſhing them with every thing neceſſary for them; ſee Tit. iii. 13. And this he would have him do, after a godly ſort; or worthy of God; in imitation of God, who is merciful, kind, and beneficent; or as it became him whom God had called by his grace to his kingdom and glory; or as it was fit and proper ſuch ſervants of God, as thoſe brethren were, ſhould be uſed; and this would be doing well: thou ſhalt do well; what is grateful and well-pleaſing to God, and beautiful and lovely in the eyes of his people.

Ver. 7. Becauſe that for his name ſake they went forth, &c.] From Judea; either of their own accord to preach the Goſpel, or being drove out by the unbelieving Jews, for profeſſing the name of Chriſt; and be it which it will, there was good reaſon why they ſhould be regarded, and eſpecially ſince they did as follows, taking nothing of the Gentiles; even of thoſe who were converted, through their preaching the Goſpel, to whom they miniſtred, for of others, the unconverted Gentiles, they could not expect to receive; and this they did, as the Apoſtles before them, becauſe they would not be chargeable to them, and leſt it ſhould be thought they ſought their own worldly intereſt, and not the good of ſouls, and glory of Chriſt, and ſo a ſtumbling-block be laid in the way of the Goſpel, to hinder the progreſs of it. The Ethiopic verſion reads this in the ſingular number, and I went forth for his name's ſake, taking nothing of the Gentiles.

Ver. 8. We therefore ought to receive ſuch, &c.] We who are Jews, that have believed in Chriſt, for ſuch an one Gaius, it ſeems, as well as the Apoſtle, were, ought to receive ſuch preachers of the word into our houſes, and entertain them chearfully, whilſt they continue, and ſupply them with all neceſſaries when they depart: that we might be fellow-helpers to the truth; that is, to the Goſpel, and the propagation of it in the world: ſome are helpers to it, in preaching of it, by making uſe of the miniſterial gifts beſtowed upon them; and others are fellow-helpers with them, to the ſame good work, by their purſes, communicating freely to the ſupport of thoſe, who labour in the word and doctrine; and theſe latter have the honour to be co-workers, or fellow-labourers with the former, as the word here uſed ſignifies. The Alexandrian copy reads, fellow-helpers to the church, that ſo the whole burden, of taking care of theſe miniſters, might not lie upon them. The Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read, fellow-helpers of the truth.

Ver. 9. I wrote unto the church, &c.] Where Gaius was a member: thoſe who take Gaius to be the ſame with Paul's hoſt, and whom he baptized at Corinth, think the church at Corinth is here meant; but it ſeems rather to be meant of ſome church in Aſia nearer Epheſus; nor is it likely that John's firſt Epiſtle ſhould be here intended, which makes no mention of relieving the brethren, the miniſters of the Goſpel, that came from Judea: and that this Epiſtle ſhould not be preſerved, need not ſeem ſtrange; for it cannot be thought that every thing that was written by him to particular perſons, or churches, ſhould be continued. The Alexandrian copy, and one of Stephens's read, I wrote ſomething to the church; upon this head, concerning receiving and ſupporting miniſters of the Goſpel, and ſo prevents an objection, that Gaius might make, why did he not write to the church about it? The Vulgate Latin verſion reads, I ſhould, or would have wrote; and the Syriac verſion, I deſired, or wiſhed to have wrote; ſuggeſting, that tho' he had not wrote, yet it was much upon his mind, he had a great deſire to it: but Diotrephes, who loveth to have the pre-eminence among them, receiveth us not; which hindered him from writing, or was the reaſon why he wrote now to Gaius, ſince Diotrephes gave no heed to what he had wrote, ſuppreſſed his letter, and would not ſuffer it to be read to the brethren. This Diotrephes, by his name, which ſignifies one nouriſhed, or brought up by Jupiter, was a Gentile; there was one of this name, who was one of the kings of Athens[a]; and what may confirm this is, his ſlighting and rejecting the brethren that came from Judea: it is very likely he was more than a private member in the church, and that he was an officer, and it may be the paſtor; and tho' there is a pre-eminence, which of right belongs to ſuch an officer, as to preſide over the church, to govern, guide, and direct, according to the laws of Chriſt, he being ſet over the church, as a ruler, governour, and guide; yet this may be carried too far, as it was by this man, who coveted more than was his due, and lorded it over God's heritage, ruled the flock with force and cruelty, and uſurped a tyrannical power over them; whereas every thing in a church ought to be done, by paſtor and people, in love, meekneſs, and with mutual conſent. And it may be alſo, that he ſought to have the pre-eminence over the reſt of the elders of the church, for in thoſe large churches there were oftentimes more elders and paſtors than one; ſee Acts xx. 17, 28. Phil. i. 1. This ambitious ſpirit prevailed and obtained among the falſe teachers, who ſet up themſelves at the head of parties, and above the Apoſtles of Chriſt, and paved the way for antichriſt, who aſſumed the title of univerſal biſhop, which has introduced all the errors and impieties of the Romiſh church. Now this man being of ſuch an ambitious, lordly, and governing ſpirit, received not the Apoſtle John, and thoſe that were with him; meaning not their perſons, for as yet he, and they, were not in perſon where he was; but his letter, his orders, and inſtructions; theſe he paid no regard to, concealed them from the church, and would not admit them to be read: or elſe the Apoſtle's ſenſe is, that he received not the brethren that came from him, and were recommended by him, and whom he affectionately loved, and who were near and dear to him as himſelf; and therefore not receiving them, is interpreted by him, as not receiving himſelf.

Ver. 10. Wherefore if I come, &c.] Where both Gaius and Diotrephes lived, as he truſted he ſhould ſhortly, ver. 14. I will remember his deeds which he doth; meaning, not only that he would tell him of them to his face, but make mention of them, and expoſe them to the whole church, and reprove him for them: and which are as follow, prating againſt us with malicious words; it is a common thing for miniſters of the Goſpel to be prated againſt, not only by the men of the world, but by profeſſors of religion, and by ſuch who call themſelves preachers alſo; nor need it be wondered at, ſince John, an Apoſtle of Chriſt, the beloved diſciple, who was ſo harmleſs and inoffenſive in his converſation, ſo kind and loving in his diſpoſition and temper, ſo meek and humble in his deportment, and now in ſuch an advanced age, was prated againſt by a Diotrephes: and what is ſaid againſt Chriſt's miniſters, is no other than prating; ſilly, idle, trifling, and empty ſtuff, as the word uſed ſignifies; for want of greater things, they take up any little matter, and improve it againſt them; and this is often done with a malicious intent, to hurt their characters, ſpoil their uſefulneſs, and render their miniſtry unprofitable. And not content herewith; with prating againſt the Apoſtle John, and the miniſters with him, in this wicked way: neither doth he himſelf receive the brethren; the meaning is not, that he did not receive them into the church, for they were there, ſince afterwards mention is made of his caſting them out from thence; but he did not receive them into his houſe, and entertain them as he ought to have done; for a miniſter of the Goſpel, and a paſtor of a church, ought to be hoſpitable, and given to hoſpitality, and entertain ſtrangers, eſpecially thoſe who are brethren in Chriſt, and fellow-miniſters of the word; and the rather theſe were to be received, ſince they travelled about to ſpread the Goſpel among the Gentiles, and took nothing of them. And this was not all, he not only did not receive them himſelf, and reject them, but was not willing that others ſhould receive them: and forbiddeth them that would; on ſuch who had a heart, as well as ability, to receive and entertain theſe poor brethren, he laid his injunctions, and gave them ſtrict orders, in his lordly and tyrannical way, not to ſhew any reſpect unto them: and caſteth them out of the church; that is, he excommunicated them, either thoſe that entertained them, or rather the brethren themſelves; which was an abuſe of the ordinance of excommunication, as that ordinance is abuſed, when any ſingle perſon, a paſtor, or any other, as here, aſſumes the power of doing it himſelf, and does it without the church; whereas it is a puniſhment or cenſure to be inflicted by many, or to be done by the joint-ſuffrage of the church; and when it is done in a wrong cauſe, for ſome ſmall trifling matter, or none at all, and not in a caſe of hereſy or immorality, obſtinately perſiſted in; and when it is done from wrong principles, and with wrong ends, as to gratify the pride and paſſion of ſome; and not for the good of the perſon caſt out, or to prevent others from falling into the ſame ſnare, or for the honour of religion, and the glory of God. The phraſe ſeems to be taken from the Jews, who expreſſed their excommunication, or putting out of the ſynagogue, by a caſting out; ſee John ix. 34, 35.

Ver. 11. Beloved, follow not that which is evil, &c.] Follow not evil in general, it being hateful to God, contrary to his nature and will, and bad in itſelf, as well as pernicious in its conſequences; and particularly follow not, or do not imitate the particular evil or evils in Diotrephes; as his pride, ambition, love of pre-eminence, and tyrannical government in the church, and eſpecially his hard-heartedneſs, cruelty, and inhoſpitality to the poor ſaints; and ſo the Arabic verſion reads, do not imitate him in evil; the examples of perſons in office and authority have great influence, eſpecially in caſes of charity, when men can be excuſed thereby, and ſave their money, or be freed from an expence: but that which is good; follow and imitate that, be a follower of God, imitate him in acts of kindneſs and beneficence, be merciful as he is; copy after Jeſus Chriſt, who went about doing good, and declared it to be more bleſſed to give than to receive; and tread in the ſteps of thoſe good men, who have ſhown love to the name of Chriſt, by miniſtring to his ſaints; for tho' the Apoſtle may mean every thing that is good, which is to be followed and imitated in any, yet he chiefly deſigns acts of kindneſs and beneficence to poor ſaints and miniſters: to which he encourages by the following, he that doth good is of God; he is a child of God, he appears to be ſo, in that he is like to his heavenly Father, who is kind and merciful; he is born of God, he is paſſed from death to life, which his love to the brethren ſhows; he has the grace of God, and ſtrength from Chriſt, and the aſſiſtance of the Spirit, without either of which, he could not do that which is good: but he that doth evil, hath not ſeen God; has had no ſpiritual ſaving ſight of God in Chriſt; for if he had, he would abhor that which is evil, and, with Job, abhor himſelf for it, and reckon himſelf, with Iſaiah, as undone, Job xlii. 6. Iſ. vi. 5. for ſuch effects has the ſight of God on the ſouls of men; ſuch an one knows not God, nor what it is to have communion with him: for thoſe who live in ſin, in whom it is a governing principle, cannot have fellowſhip with God; nor has ſuch an one ever felt the love of God in his ſoul, or been made a partaker of his grace, which would teach and conſtrain him to act otherwiſe. Compare this text with 1 John iii. 10. which ſhews the Apoſtle John to be the writer of this Epiſtle. The Ethiopic verſion reads, ſhall not ſee God; that is, hereafter, in the world to come.

Ver. 12. Demetrius hath good report of all men, &c.] This man was of a quite different caſt from Diotrephes, and therefore the Apoſtle makes mention of him to Gaius, to be followed by him, and not the other; he was either the ſame with Demas, which is a contraction of this name, or the perſon, that John ſent from Epheſus with this letter: we read of an Epheſian of this name, Acts xix. 24. tho' not the ſame perſon; or elſe one that alſo was a member of the ſame church with Gaius and Diotrephes; and he being kind and beneficent, obtained a good report of the generality of men, not only of the brethren, but of thoſe that were without; for a liberal man is univerſally reſpected. The Syriac verſion adds, and of the church itſelf; as diſtinct from all men, or the generality of the men of the world: and of the truth itſelf; that is, whoever ſpeaks truth muſt give him a good character, for this cannot be underſtood with any propriety of the Goſpel, nor of Jeſus Chriſt: yea, and we alſo bear record; or a teſtimony to the character of Demetrius; that is, I John, the Apoſtle, and the ſaints at Epheſus: and ye know that our record is true; faithful, and to be depended upon. The Alexandrian copy, and ſeveral others, read, thou knoweſt, as does alſo the Vulgate Latin verſion, which ſeems moſt agreeable, ſince this Epiſtle is directed to a ſingle perſon; compare this with John xix. 35. and it will give a further proof of this Epiſtle, being the Apoſtle John's.

Ver. 13. I have many things to write, &c.] With regard to churches, and particular perſons, and concerning hoſpitality to the poor brethren: but I will not with ink and pen write unto thee; ſuggeſting, he ſhould take another method of communicating his mind to him, which he next mentions.

Ver. 14. But I truſt I ſhall ſhortly ſee thee, &c.] Either at Epheſus, where John was, or rather at the place where Gaius lived, ſee ver. 10. and we ſhall ſpeak face to face; freely and familiarly converſe together about theſe things, which were not thought proper to be committed to writing: peace be to thee; which was the uſual form of ſalutation with the Jews, and John was one; ſee the note on John xx. 19. our friends ſalute thee; or ſend their chriſtian ſalutation to thee, wiſhing all health and proſperity in ſoul and body; meaning the members of the church at Epheſus: the Arabic verſion reads, thy friends; ſuch at Epheſus as had a particular knowledge of him, and affection for him. The Vulgate Latin verſion reads, the friends; the members in general; and the Alexandrian copy reads, the brethren; and the Syriac verſion our brethren: and then the Epiſtle is cloſed thus, greet the friends by name; meaning thoſe that were where Gaius lived, to whom the Apoſtle ſends his ſalutation, and deſires it might be delivered to each of them, as if they had been mentioned by name. This, and the Epiſtle of James, are the only Epiſtles which are concluded without the word Amen.

The General Epiſtle of JUDE.

THAT this Epiſtle was written by Jude, one of the twelve Apoſtles of Chriſt, and not by Jude the fifteenth biſhop of Jeruſalem, who lived in the time of Trajan, a little before Bar Cocab, the falſe Meſſiah, as Grotius thought, is evident, from his being called in the Epiſtle itſelf, the brother of James, and which is confirmed by all copies; and its agreement with the ſecond Epiſtle of Peter ſhows it to have been written about the ſame time, and upon the ſame occaſion. As to Jude's not calling himſelf an Apoſtle, but a ſervant of Jeſus Chriſt, it may be obſerved, that the latter is much the ſame with the former, and the Apoſtle Paul ſometimes uſes them both, as in Rom. i. 1. Tit. i. 1. and ſometimes neither, as in 1 Theſſ. i. 1. 2 Theſſ. i. 1. Philem. 1. and ſometimes only ſervant, as Jude does here, Phil. i. 1. tho' in ſome copies of the title of this Epiſtle, he is called Jude the Apoſtle; and as to Jude's making mention of the Apoſtles as if he was later than they, and not of their number, ver. 17. it may be returned for anſwer to it, that the Apoſtle Peter expreſſes himſelf much in the ſame manner, 2 Pet. iii. 2. where ſome copies, inſtead of us the Apoſtles, read your Apoſtles; ſee the note there; moreover, Jude ſeems to cite a paſſage out of Peter, as Peter in the ſame chapter cites the Apoſtle Paul, which only ſhows agreement in their doctrine and writing; and at moſt it only follows from hence, that Jude wrote after ſome of the Apoſtles, as Paul and Peter, who had foretold there would be mockers in the laſt time; and that Jude had lived to be a witneſs of the truth of what they had ſaid; nor does he exclude himſelf from their number. And that this Epiſtle is a genuine one, appears from the majeſty of its ſtile, the truth of doctrine contained in it, and its agreement with the ſecond Epiſtle of Peter, and from the early reception of it in the churches. Euſebius [a] ſays, it was reckoned among the ſeven catholic Epiſtles, and was publiſhed in moſt churches; tho' he obſerves, that many of the antients make no mention of it: but certain it is, that ſeveral of the antient writers before him do make mention of it, and cite it as genuine, as Clemens Alexandrinus [b], Tertullian [c], and Origen [d]: and as for the prophecy of Enoch, cited in this Epiſtle, it is not taken out of an apochrypal book, that bears that name, for the Apoſtle makes no mention of any writing of his, but of a prophecy; and had he cited it out of that book, as it was truth, it can no more prejudice the authority of this Epiſtle, than the citations made by the Apoſtle Paul out of the heathen poets, can affect his Epiſtles: and whereas there is an account alſo given in this Epiſtle of a diſpute about the body of Moſes, no where elſe to be met with, ſuppoſing it to be underſtood of his real body, of which ſee the note on the place; this can be no more an objection to the genuineneſs of this Epiſtle, than the mention of Jannes and Jambres, who withſtood Moſes, by the Apoſtle Paul, is an objection to an Epiſtle of his, whoſe names are not to be met with in other parts of ſcripture; but were what were known by tradition, as might be the caſe here. The Epiſtle is called catholic, or general, becauſe it is not written to any particular perſon or church, but to the ſaints in general, and it may be to the ſame perſons that Peter wrote his; ſee 1 Pet. i. 1. 2 Pet. i. 1. and who ſeem to be chiefly the believing Jews; ſee ver. 5, 17. tho' the Syriac verſion of ver. 1. reads, Jude, a ſervant of Jeſus Chriſt—לעממא, to the nations or Gentiles, called, &c. the deſign of the Epiſtle to both, is to exhort them to continue in the faith, and contend for it; and to deſcribe falſe teachers, to point out their principles, practices, and dreadful end, that ſo they might ſhun and avoid them.

THE writer of this Epiſtle deſcribes himſelf by his name, Jude; by his ſpiritual condition, a ſervant of Chriſt; and by his natural relation, a brother of James; and inſcribes it to perſons choſen of God, ſecured in Chriſt, and called by grace, ver. 1. whom he ſalutes, and wiſhes a multiplication of mercy, peace, and love unto, ver. 2. and then points at the ſubject matter of his Epiſtle, the common ſalvation; and his view in writing it, which was to exhort them to contend earneſtly for the Goſpel; which exhortation was neceſſary, ſince ſome reprobate and wicked men, abuſers of the grace of God, and blaſphemers of the perſon of Chriſt, had got in among them, ver. 3, 4. and in order to deter them from following their pernicious ways, he lays before them various inſtances of divine vengeance on ſinners; as the Iſraelites, whom God delivered out of Egypt, and yet deſtroyed them for their unbelief; the angels, who not content with their firſt eſtate, forſook their habitation, and are reſerved in chains of darkneſs to the day of judgment; and the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrha, and the adjacent cities, who for their uncleanneſs ſuffer the vengeance of eternal fire, as an example to others, ver. 5, 6, 7. in like manner the Apoſtle obſerves, theſe falſe teachers, who were filthy dreamers, defiled themſelves with ſuch ſins, and alſo deſpiſed and ſpoke evil of civil magiſtrates, ver. 8. which ſin of theirs is aggravated by Michael the archangel not railing at the devil, in a contention with him about the body of Moſes, but gently reproving him; by ſpeaking evil of what they were ignorant of, and by their brutiſh ſenſuality, in corrupting themſelves in things they had natural knowledge of, ver. 9, 10. and both their ſin and puniſhment are exemplified in the caſes of Cain, Balaam, and Core; being guilty of hatred of the brethren, of covetouſneſs, and of contradiction, ver. 11. and by various metaphors are ſet forth their intemperance, hypocriſy, inſtability, unfruitfulneſs, pride, wrath, and luſt, for whom the blackeſt darkneſs is reſerved for ever, ver. 12, 13. the certainty of which is proved from an antient prophecy of Enoch, concerning the coming of Chriſt to judgment, when vengeance will be taken on thoſe men for their ungodly deeds and hard ſpeeches, ver. 14, 15. who are further deſcribed by their murmurs and complaints; by their pride, reſpect of perſons, and covetouſneſs; by their ſcoffs, and walking after their own luſts, as had been foretold by the Apoſtles of Chriſt; by ſeparating themſelves from the ſaints, and by their ſenſuality, and not having the Spirit of God, ver. 16, 17, 18, 19. and the Apoſtle having thus at large deſcribed theſe falſe teachers, by reaſon of whom the ſaints were in danger, directs them to the uſe of means by which they might be ſecured from them; ſuch as building themſelves up in their moſt holy faith, praying in the Holy Ghoſt, keeping themſelves in the love of God, and looking for the mercy of Chriſt unto eternal life, ver. 20, 21. and he teaches them not only to be concerned for themſelves, but for others alſo, who were in danger from theſe deceivers; to deal with ſome in a tender and compaſſionate way, with others more roughly, expreſſing an hatred to a filthy converſation, ver. 22, 23. and then the Epiſtle is concluded with a doxology, or an aſcription of glory to the only wiſe God our Saviour, who is able to keep his people from falling into ſuch pernicious principles and practices, and to preſent them faultleſs before his glorious preſence with exceeding joy, ver. 24, 25.

[d] In Joſh. Homil. 7. fol. 156. E. & Comment. in Matth. p. 223. Ed. Huet.

Ver. 1. Jude the ſervant of Jeſus Chriſt, &c.] The author of this Epiſtle is the ſame who is elſewhere called Judas, Luke vi. 16. and John xiv. 22. who was one of the twelve Apoſtles of Chriſt, whoſe name was alſo Lebbeus, and whoſe ſurname was Thaddeus, Matt. x. 3. the name is the ſame with Jehudah, Gen. xxix. 35. and xlix. 8. which comes from a word that ſignifies to praiſe or confeſs; and in the Rabbinical dialect is called יודא, Juda[e], as here. He ſtiles himſelf the ſervant of Jeſus Chriſt; ſee the note on Rom. i. 1. tho' this is a title common to all believers, yet here, and in ſome other places, it is peculiar to an Apoſtle, or miniſter of the Goſpel; and therefore is uſed not merely in humility, and to acknowledge obedience to Chriſt, but as a title of dignity and honour: and the Apoſtle goes on to deſcribe himſelf by his natural relation, and brother of James; not the ſon of Zebedee, but of Alpheus, Matt. x. 2, 3. and this he mentions partly to diſtinguiſh himſelf from others of that name, as Judas Iſcariot, and Judas called Barſabas; and partly for the ſake of honour and credit, James being a very great man, a man of great note and eſteem, and who ſeemed to be a pillar in the church, and was called the brother of our Lord, Gal. ii. 9. and i. 19. an account of the perſons to whom this Epiſtle is inſcribed next follows, to them that are ſanctified by God the Father; which is to be underſtood not of internal ſanctification, which is uſually aſcribed to the Spirit of God, but of the act of eternal election, which is peculiar to God the Father; in which ſenſe Chriſt is ſaid to be ſanctified by the Father, and men ordained and appointed to an office, and veſſels are ſet apart for the owners uſe; John x. 36. Jer. i. 5. 2 Tim. ii. 21. the language is taken from the ceremonial law, by which perſons and things were ſanctified, or ſet apart for ſacred uſe and ſervice; ſee Exod. xiii. 2, 12. Lev. xxvii. 14, 16. and ſo the elect of God are by God the Father ſanctified and ſet apart in the act of election, which is expreſſed by this word; partly becauſe of its ſeparating nature, men being by it ſeparated from the reſt of the world, to the uſe and ſervice of God, and for his glory, ſo that they are a diſtinct and peculiar people; and partly becauſe ſuch are choſen through ſanctification of the Spirit, and unto holineſs both in this world and that which is to come; ſo that the doctrine of election is no licentious doctrine; for tho' holineſs is not the cauſe of it, yet is a means fixed in it, and is certain by it, and an evidence of it: the Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, and the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions read, to them that are loved by God the Father; election is the fruit and effect of love; thoſe that are ſanctified or ſet apart by the Father in election, are loved by him. The Ethiopic verſion renders it quite otherwiſe, to them that love God the Father; which flows from the Father's love to them: and preſerved in Jeſus Chriſt; thoſe who are ſanctified, or ſet apart by God the Father in election, are in Chriſt, for they are choſen in him; they have a place in his heart, and they are put into his hands, and are in him, and united to him as members to an head, and were repreſented by him in the covenant of grace; and being in him, they are preſerved by him, and that before they are called, as well as after; wherefore this character is put before that of being called, tho' the Syriac verſion puts that in the firſt place: there is a ſecret preſervation of them in Chriſt before calling, from condemnation and the ſecond death; they were not preſerved from falling in Adam, with the reſt of mankind, nor from the corruption of human nature, nor from actual ſins and tranſgreſſions; yet, notwithſtanding theſe, were ſo preſerved that the law could not execute the ſentence of condemnation on them, nor ſin damn them, nor ſatan, who led them captive, hale them to priſon; and after calling, they are preſerved not from indwelling ſin, nor from the temptations of ſatan, nor from doubts and fears and unbelief, nor from ſlips and falls into ſin; but from the tyranny and dominion of ſin, from being devoured by ſatan, and from a total and final falling away: they are preſerved in the love of God, and of Chriſt; in the covenant of grace; in a ſtate of juſtification and adoption; and in the paths of truth, faith, and holineſs; and are preſerved ſafe to the heavenly kingdom and glory: their other character follows, and called; not merely externally by the miniſtry of the word, but internally by the ſpirit and grace of God; ſo that this is to be underſtood of a ſpecial and effectual call, whereby ſouls are called out of darkneſs into light, and from bondage to liberty; and from a dependance on themſelves to the grace and righteouſneſs of Chriſt; and from ſociety with the men of the world to fellowſhip with him; and to eternal glory, ſo as to have faith and hope concerning it.

Ver. 2. Mercy unto you, and peace and love be multiplied.] In this ſalutation the Apoſtle wiſhes for a multiplication of mercy, from God the Father, by whom theſe perſons were ſanctified: mercy is a perfection in God; and ſhows itſelf in a ſpecial manner towards the elect, in the covenant of grace, in the proviſion of Chriſt as a ſaviour, in the miſſion of him into this world, in redemption by him, in the forgiveneſs of ſin, in regeneration, and in their whole ſalvation; and the multiplication of it intends an enlarged view and freſh application of it, which they ſometimes ſtand in need of, as under deſertions, when they want the ſenſe and manifeſtation of it to them; and under temptations and afflictions, when they need ſympathy and compaſſion; and when they fall into ſin they ſtand in need of the freſh diſcoveries and application of pardoning mercy to them. Moreover, herein is wiſhed for a multiplication of peace from Chriſt, in whom theſe choſen ones were preſerved; and may deſign a freſh and enlarged view of peace being made for them by his blood, and an increaſe of conſcience-peace in their own hearts, as the effect of it; and may include peace, and an abundance of it, among themſelves, as well as all proſperity, both external, internal, and eternal: likewiſe in the ſalutation, love, and a multiplication of it is wiſhed for from the Spirit of God, by whom they were called; and may be underſtood of the love with which God loved them; and which may be ſaid to be multiplied, when it is gradually ſhed abroad in their hearts by the Spirit, and they are by degrees led into it more and more, and the acts of it are drawn out and ſet before them one after another, and freſh manifeſtations of it are made unto them; as in afflictive providences, after the hidings of God's face, and under temptations: and it may deſign the love with which they love God, which may be increaſed and made to abound more and more.

Ver. 3. Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you, &c.] The Apoſtle calls the perſons he writes unto beloved; as they were of God, and by him and other ſaints; and he ſignifies his diligence in writing to them: and the ſubject of his writing was, of the common ſalvation; which deſigns either the Goſpel, ſometimes called ſalvation, in oppoſition to the law, which is a miniſtration of condemnation; and becauſe it is a declaration of ſalvation, and a means of it; and may be ſaid to be common, becauſe preached to all, Jews and Gentiles: or Jeſus Chriſt the Saviour himſelf, who is alſo ſometimes called ſalvation, becauſe he was called and appointed to it, and undertook it, and is become the author of it; and may be ſaid to be a common ſaviour, not of all men, but of all his people; of his whole body, the church, and every member of it, and of all ſorts of men, in all nations: or elſe that ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation wrought out by him, which is common, not to all men, for all are not ſaved with it, but to all the elect of God, and true believers in Chriſt; the love of God is common to them all alike; the choice of them to eternal ſalvation is the ſame; the covenant of grace, the bleſſings and promiſes of it, are equally ſhared by them; and they are bought with the ſame price of Chriſt's blood, and are juſtified by the ſame righteouſneſs, and are regenerated, ſanctified, and called by the ſame grace, and ſhall poſſeſs the ſame glory: there is but one way of ſalvation, and that is not confined to any nation, family, community, or ſect among men. The Alexandrian copy, and two of Beza's, and the Syriac verſion read, our common ſalvation; and two other of Beza's copies, and the Vulgate Latin verſion read, your common ſalvation; the ſenſe is the ſame: it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you, that ye ſhould earneſtly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the ſaints; by the faith is meant the doctrine of faith, in which ſenſe it is uſed whenever faith is ſaid to be preached, obeyed, departed, or erred from, or denied, or made ſhipwrack of, or when exhortations are made to ſtand faſt, and continue in it, or to ſtrive and contend for it, as here; and which is ſometimes called the word of faith, the faith of the Goſpel, the myſtery of faith, or moſt holy faith, the common faith, and as here, faith only; and deſigns the whole ſcheme of evangelical truths to be believed; ſuch as the doctrine of the Trinity, the deity and Sonſhip of Chriſt, the divinity and perſonality of the Spirit; what regards the ſtate and condition of man by nature, as the doctrines of the imputation of Adam's ſin to his poſterity, the corruption of nature, and the impotence of men to that which is good; what concerns the acts of grace in the Father, Son, and Spirit, towards, and upon the ſons of men; as the doctrines of everlaſting love, eternal election, the covenant of grace, particular redemption, juſtification by the imputed righteouſneſs of Chriſt, pardon and reconciliation by his blood, regeneration and ſanctification by the grace of the Spirit, final perſeverance, the reſurrection of the dead, and the future glory of the ſaints with Chriſt. This is ſaid to be delivered to the ſaints; it was delivered by God the Father to Chriſt as mediator, and by him to his Apoſtles, who may more eſpecially be meant by the ſaints, or holy men; who were choſen to be holy, and to whom Chriſt was made ſanctification, and who were ſanctified by the Spirit of God; and this faith being a moſt holy faith, is fit for holy men, and only proper to be delivered to them, and preached by them; and by them it was delivered to the churches, both by word and writing; and this delivery of it ſuppoſes that it is not an invention of men, that it is of God, and a gift of his, and given in truſt in order to be kept, held forth, and held faſt; and it was but once delivered, in oppoſition to the ſundry times and divers manners in which the mind of God was formerly made known; and deſigns the uniformity, perfection, and continuance of the doctrine of faith; there is no alteration to be made in it, or addition to it; no new revelations are to be expected, it has been delivered all at once: and therefore ſhould be earneſtly contended for; for could it be loſt, another could not be had; and the whole of it is to be contended for; not only the fundamentals, but the leſſer matters of faith; and not things eſſential only, but alſo what are circumſtantial to faith and religion; every truth, ordinance, and duty, and particularly the purity of faith, and its conſiſtency: and this contention includes a care and ſolicitude for it, to have it, own it, and hold it faſt, and adorn it; and for the preſervation of it, and for the ſpread of it, and that it might be tranſmitted to poſterity: and it denotes a conflict, a combat, or a fighting for it, a ſtriving even to an agony: the perſons to be contended with on account of it, are ſuch who deny, or depreciate any of the perſons in the Godhead, the aſſerters of the purity and power of human nature, and the deniers of ſovereign, efficacious, and perſevering grace: the perſons who are to contend with them are all the ſaints in general, to whom it is delivered; which they may do by bearing an experimental teſtimony to it, by praying for the continuance and ſucceſs of it, by ſtanding faſt in one ſpirit in it, and by dying for it; and particularly the miniſters of the Goſpel, by preaching it boldly, openly, fully, and faithfully, by diſputing for it, and writing in the defence of it, and by laying down their lives, when called for: the manner in which this is to be done, is earneſtly, heartily, in good earneſt, and without deceit, zealouſly, and conſtantly.

Ver. 4. For there are certain men crept in unawares, &c.] Theſe words contain a reaſon, why the doctrine of faith ſhould be contended for, becauſe of falſe teachers, who are deſcribed as being then upon the ſpot; the Apoſtles, Peter and Paul, had foretold, that they would come, but Jude here ſpeaks of them as in being; wherefore preſent vigour and vigilance were neceſſary to be uſed: their names are not mentioned nor their number, only that there were certain, or ſome men; which is done to ſtir up the ſaints to ſelf-examination, whether they were in the faith; to diligence, in finding out theſe men; to vigour, in oppoſing them; and to care, to nip error and hereſy in the bud: and they are ſaid to have crept in unawares; either into private houſes, as was the cuſtom of thoſe men; or into the churches, and become members of them, being the tares the enemy ſows among the wheat; or into the miniſtry, aſſuming that office to themſelves, without being called and ſent of God; and ſo into the public aſſemblies of the ſaints, ſpreading their poiſonous doctrines among them; and alſo into their affections, until diſcovered; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion reads here, becauſe ungodly men have entred into your hearts; and all this was at an unawares, privily, ſecretly, without any thought about them, or ſuſpicion of them: who were before of old ordained to this condemnation; or judgment; meaning either judicial blindneſs of heart, they were given up to, in embracing and ſpreading errors and hereſies; ſo that theſe are not caſual things, but fall under the ordination and decree of God, which does not make God the author of them, nor excuſe the men that hold them; and they are ordained and ordered for many valuable ends; on the part of God, to ſhew his power and wiſdom; and on the part of truth, that it might be tried and appear the brighter, and to manifeſt his people and their graces: or elſe puniſhment is deſigned, even everlaſting condemnation, to which ſome are pre-ordained of God; for this act of pre-ordination reſpects perſons, and not mere actions and events; and is not a naked preſcience, but a real decree, and which is ſure, certain and irrevocable; is God's act, and ſprings from his ſovereignty, is agreeable to his juſtice and holineſs; nor is it contrary to his goodneſs, and is for his glory: the date of this act is of old; or as the Syriac verſion renders it, מן שוריא, from the beginning; that is, from eternity; ſee 2 Theſſ. ii. 13. Prov. viii. 22. for reprobation is of the ſame date with election; if the one is from eternity, the other muſt be ſo too, ſince there cannot be one without the other: if ſome were choſen before the foundation of the world, others muſt be left or paſſed by as early; and if ſome were appointed unto ſalvation from the beginning, others muſt be fore-ordained to condemnation from the beginning alſo; for theſe words cannot be underſtood of any prophecy of old, in which it was fore-written, or propheſied of theſe men, that they ſhould be condemned for their ungodlineſs; not in Matt. xxiv. in which no ſuch perſons are deſcribed, as here, nor any mention made of their puniſhment or condemnation; nor in 2 Pet. ii. 1, 2, 3. for then the Apoſtle would never have ſaid that they were of old, a long while ago, before written, or propheſied of, ſince according to the common calculation, that Epiſtle of Peter's, and this of Jude's, were written in the ſame year; nor in the prophecy of Enoch, ver. 14. for Enoch's prophecy was not written, as we know of; and therefore theſe men could not be ſaid to be before written in it; beſides, that prophecy is ſpoken of as ſomething diſtinct from theſe perſons being before written, to condemnation; and after all, was a prophecy referred to, the ſenſe would be the ſame, ſince ſuch a prophecy concerning them muſt be founded upon an antecedent ordination and appointment of God; the word here uſed does not intend their being fore-written in any book of the ſcriptures, but in the book of God's eternal purpoſes and decrees; and the juſtice of ſuch a pre-ordination, appears by the following characters of them, ungodly men: all men are by nature ungodly, ſome are notoriouſly ſo, and falſe teachers are generally ſuch; here it ſignifies ſuch who are deſtitute of the fear of God, and of all internal devotion, and powerful godlineſs; and who did not worſhip God externally, according to his inſtitutions and appointments, and much leſs ſincerely, and in a ſpiritual manner; and who even ſeparated themſelves from the true worſhippers of God, and gave themſelves up to ſenſuality, and therefore their condemnation was juſt: turning the grace of our God into laſciviouſneſs; not the love and favour of God, as in his own heart, or as ſhed abroad in the hearts of others; for that can never be turned to ſuch a purpoſe, it always working in a contrary way; nor the principle of grace wrought in the ſoul, which being of a ſpiritual nature, luſteth againſt the fleſh, and cannot be turned into it; more likely the goodneſs of God in his providential diſpenſations, which is deſpiſed by ſome, and abuſed by others; but rather the doctrine of grace, which tho' laſciviouſneſs is not in its nature, nor has it any natural tendency to it, yet wicked men turn or transfer it from its original nature, deſign and uſe, to a foreign one: and they may be ſaid to turn it into laſciviouſneſs, either by aſſerting it to be a licentious doctrine, when it is not; or by treating it in a wanton and ludicrous manner, ſcoffing at it, and lampooning it; or by making the doctrine of grace univerſal, extending it equally alike to all mankind, and thereby harden and encourage men in ſin. And denying the only Lord God; God the Father, who is the only ſovereign Lord, both in providence and grace; and the only God, not to the excluſion of the Son and Spirit, but in oppoſition to nominal and fictitious deities, or heathen gods; and he was denied by theſe men, if not in words, yet in works: the word, God, is left out in the Alexandrian copy and in the Vulgate Latin verſion. And our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; as his deity, or Sonſhip, or humanity, or that he was the Meſſiah, or the alone ſaviour, or his ſacrifice, ſatisfaction, and righteouſneſs; with reſpect to either of which he may be ſaid to be denied doctrinally, as he is alſo practically, when men don't walk worthy of their profeſſion of him; and both might be true of theſe men, and therefore their condemnation was righteous. The copulative and is omitted in the Syriac verſion, which ſeems to make this clauſe explanative of the former.

Ver. 5. I will therefore put you in remembrance, tho' ye once knew this, &c.] The Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, and the Vulgate Latin verſion read, knew all things; but rather it is to be reſtrained by the following inſtance of God's vengeance on unbelievers; which with others is produced, to vindicate the divine conduct in the condemnation of the above perſons, and to ſhew that that is certain, and may be expected, ſince God has always dealt thus with ſuch perſons; and this they knew by reading of the ſcriptures; at leaſt they had known it once, tho' it might now be forgotten by them; and they had known it once, for all; they had been perfectly accquainted with it; which is ſaid, leſt the Apoſtle ſhould be thought to write to perſons ignorant, and rude in knowledge, and to ſhow that he wrote nothing new and unheard-of, and ſo ſhould have the more weight and influence upon them; and he thought fit to remind them of it, tho' they had known it: it is one part of the work of the miniſters of the word, to put people in mind of what they have known; which is neceſſary, becauſe of the inattentiveneſs of hearers, their forgetfulneſs, and loſs of knowledge, and the weakneſs of ſome capacities to take in, and retain things; and if the judgment is not more informed hereby, yet the affections may be afreſh raiſed, and grace be drawn out into exerciſe, and the mind be eſtabliſhed and confirmed. The inſtance follows, how that the Lord having ſaved the people out of the land of Egypt; that is, the people of Iſrael, who were the choſen people of God, a ſpecial people, above all others, and had peculiar privileges; theſe the Lord brought out of the land of Egypt, with an high hand, and a mighty arm, and ſaved them out of their bondage, and delivered out of their oppreſſions and afflictions: the Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, the Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic verſions, inſtead of, the Lord, read, Jeſus: and yet, tho' they were a ſpecial people, and notwithſtanding this wonderful deliverance, and great ſalvation, he afterward deſtroyed them that believed not; their carcaſſes fell in the wilderneſs, by one judgment, or another, upon them; ſo that of all that came out of Egypt, but two entred into the land of Canaan: this ſhows the evil nature of unbelief; and that God will not ſuffer ſin to go unobſerved in any; no outward privileges and profeſſion will ſkreen any from divine vengeance; God ſometimes makes ſevere examples of mere nominal profeſſors; nor muſt falſe teachers, deniers of Chriſt, and perverters of his Goſpel, expect to go free: moreover, it may be obſerved that God may do great things for perſons, and yet after all deſtroy them; great riches and honours may be conferred on ſome, great natural gifts on others; ſome may ſeem as if they had the grace of God, and were brought out of ſpiritual Egypt, and enjoy great mercies and favours, and have many deliverances wrought for them, and yet at laſt periſh.

Ver. 6. And the angels which kept not their firſt eſtate, &c.] Or principality; that holy, honourable, and happy condition, in which they were created; for they were created in perfect holineſs and righteouſneſs, ſtood in the relation of ſons to God, and were, for the luſtre of their nature, comparable to the morning ſtars; they were among the thrones, dominions, principalities, and powers; were a ſuperior rank of creatures to men, and who beheld the face, and enjoyed the preſence of God; but this eſtate they kept not, for being mutable creatures, one of them firſt ſinning, the reſt were were drawn into it, by him, and ſo were not what they were before, nor in the ſame eſtate, or place: but left their own habitation; by attempting to riſe higher; or by quitting their ſtation and poſts of honour, being unwilling to be ſubject to God, and eſpecially to the Son of God, who was to aſſume human nature, and in it be above them, which they could not bear; and by gathering together in a body, in another place, with ſatan at the head of them; tho' this may be conſidered as a part of their puniſhment, and they may be ſaid to do, what they were forced to; for they were drove out of their native habitation, heaven; they were turned out of it, and caſt down to hell; ſee 2 Pet. ii. 4. And this their habitation, which they left, or fell from, or they were caſt out of, is by the Jews frequently called the place of their holineſs, or their holy place[g]. He hath reſerved in everlaſting chains, under darkneſs; by theſe everlaſting chains may be meant, the power and providence of God over them, which always abide upon them; or their ſins, and the guilt of them upon their conſciences, under which they are continually held; or the decrees and purpoſes of God concerning their final puniſhment and deſtruction, which are immutable and irreverſible, and from which there is no freeing themſelves: the phraſe, under darkneſs, may refer to the chains, as in 2 Pet. ii. 4. where they are called chains of darkneſs; either becauſe the power, providence, and purpoſes of God are inviſible; ſo the Syriac verſion reads, in unknown chains; or becauſe horror and black deſpair are the effects of ſin, and its guilt, with which their conſciences are continually filled: or it may denote the place and ſtate where they are, either in the darkneſs of the air, or in the dark parts of the earth, or in hell, where is utter darkneſs, even blackneſs of darkneſs; or that they are under the power of ſin, which is darkneſs, and without the light of God's countenance, or any ſpiritual knowledge, or comfort: and they are reſerved in theſe chains, and under this darkneſs; or in priſon, as the Arabic verſion renders it; which denotes the cuſtody of them, and their continuance in it, in which they are kept by Jeſus Chriſt, who can bind and looſe ſatan at his pleaſure; and it ſhows, that they are not as yet in full torment, but are like malefactors that are kept in priſon, until the aſſize comes: ſo theſe are laid in chains, and kept in cuſtody unto the judgment of the great day; that is, the future and laſt judgment of men and devils, which is certain, and will be univerſal, and executed with the ſtricteſt juſtice: this is called a day, which is fixed by God, tho' unknown to men and angels; and becauſe of the evidence, and quick diſpatch of things, the matters judged will be as clear as the day, and finiſhed at once; and a great one, for the judge will appear in great glory; great things will be done, the dead will be raiſed, and all nations will be gathered together, and the proceſs will be with great ſolemnity; the thrones will be ſet, the books opened, the ſeveral ſentences pronounced, and all punctually executed; the judgment of the great day, is the ſame the Jews call, יום דינא רבא, the day of the great judgment[h]. This account ſhews the impriſoned ſtate of the devils, that they are not their own lords, and can't do as they would; they are under reſtraints, and in chains, and not to be feared; which muſt be a great mortification to their proud and malicious ſpirits: and ſince this is the caſe of fallen angels, what ſeverity may be expected from God againſt the oppoſers of the truths of the Goſpel?

Ver. 7. Even as Sodom and Gomorrha, and the cities about them, &c.] Admah and Zeboim, for Zoar was ſpared. This is a third inſtance of God's vengeance on ſinners; and which, like that of the Iſraelites, and of the angels, was after great favours had been enjoyed: theſe places were delightfully ſituated, and very fruitful as the garden of God; they were under a form of government, had kings over them, and had lately had a very great deliverance from the kings, that carried them captive, being reſcued by Abraham; they had a righteous Lot among them, who was a reprover in the gate, and Abraham made interceſſion for them with God. But they in like manner giving themſelves over to fornication; not as the angels, who are not capable of ſinning in ſuch a manner; tho' the Jews make this to be a ſin of theirs, and ſo interpret Gen. vi. 2, 4[i]. but rather the Iſraelites, among whom this ſin prevailed, 1 Cor. x. 8. tho' it ſeems beſt of all to refer it to the falſe teachers that turned the grace of God into laſciviouſneſs, and were very criminal this way; and then the ſenſe is, that in like manner as they, the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrha, gave themſelves over to the ſin of fornication; wherefore theſe men might expect the ſame judgments that fell upon them, ſince their ſin was alike; which ſin is a work of the fleſh, contrary to the law of God, is againſt the body, and attended with many evils; expoſes to judgment here and hereafter, and unfits for the communion of the ſaints, and for the kingdom of heaven: and going after ſtrange fleſh; or other fleſh; meaning not other women beſides their own wives, but men; and deſigns that deteſtable and unnatural ſin, which, from theſe people, is called Sodomy to this day; and which is an exceeding great ſin, contrary to the light of nature, and law of God, diſhonourable to human nature, and ſcandalous to a nation and people, and commonly prevails where idolatry and infidelity do, as among the Papiſts and Mahometans; and aroſe from idleneſs and fullneſs of bread in Sodom, and was committed in the ſight of God, with great impudence: their puniſhment follows, are ſet forth for an example; being deſtroyed by fire from heaven, and their cities turned into a ſulphurous lake, which continues to this day, as a monument of God's vengeance, and an example to all ſuch who commit the ſame ſins, and who may expect the ſame equitable puniſhment; and to all who live ungodly lives, tho' they may not be guilty of the ſame crimes; and to all that ſlight and reject the Goſpel revelation, with whom it will be more intolerable than for Sodom and Gomorrha; and to antichriſt, who bears the ſame name, and ſpiritually is called Sodom and Egypt; and particularly to all falſe teachers, who beſides their ſtrange doctrines, go after ſtrange fleſh: ſuffering the vengeance of eternal fire; which may be underſtood of that fire, with which thoſe cities, and the inhabitants of it, were conſumed; which Philo the [k] Jew ſays, burnt till his time, and muſt be burning when Jude wrote this Epiſtle. The effects of which ſtill continues, the land being now brimſtone, ſalt, and burning; and is an emblem and repreſentation of hell-fire, between which there is a great likeneſs; as in the matter of them, both being fire; in the efficient cauſe of them, both from the Lord; and in the inſtruments thereof, the angels, who, as then, will hereafter be employed in the delivery of the righteous, and in the burning of the wicked; and in the circumſtance attending both, ſuddenly, at an unawares, when not thought of, and expected; and in the nature of them, being a deſtruction total, irreparable, and everlaſting: and this agrees with the ſentiments of the Jews, who ſay[l], that "the men of Sodom have no part or portion in the "world to come, and ſhall not ſee the world to "come." And ſays R. Iſaac, "Sodom is judged, "בדינא דגיהנם, with the judgment of hell[m]."

Ver. 8. Likewiſe alſo theſe filthy dreamers defile the fleſh, &c.] Which may be literally underſtood, either of the Jewiſh doctors, who pretended to be interpreters of dreams, as R. Akiba, R. Lazar, and others[n]; or of the falſe teachers in the Apoſtle's time, and of their filthy dreams, and nocturnal pollutions in them; which ſenſe the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions confirm; the former rendering the words thus, ſo theſe retiring in the time of ſleep, defile their own fleſh; and the latter thus, and likewiſe theſe, who in their own ſleep, pollute their own fleſh; as alſo of their pretenſions to divine aſſiſtance and intelligence by dreams; and likewiſe may be figuratively underſtood of them; for falſe doctrines are dreams, and the teachers of them dreamers, Jer. xxiii. 25, 27, 28, 32. as are all thoſe doctrines of men that oppoſe the Trinity of perſons in the Godhead; that contradict the deity and Sonſhip of Chriſt; that depreciate any of his offices; that leſſen the glory of the perſon and grace of the Spirit; that cry up the purity, power, and righteouſneſs of human nature, and are contrary to the free grace of God. Theſe ariſe from the darkneſs of the underſtanding, and a ſpirit of ſlumber upon them; are the fictions of their own brain, and of their roving imagination; are illuſory and deceitful, and are in themſelves vanities, and like dreams paſs away. And the dreamers of theſe dreams may be ſaid to defile the fleſh; ſince they appear to follow and walk after the dictates of corrupt nature; and becauſe by their unclean practices, mentioned in the preceding verſe, they defile the fleſh, that is, the body: all ſin is of a defiling nature, and all men are defiled with it; but theſe were notoriouſly ſo; and often ſo it is, that unclean practices follow upon erroneous principles. Deſpiſe dominion; either the government of the world by God, denying or ſpeaking evil of his providence; the Ethiopic verſion renders it, they deny their own God, either his being, or rather his providence; or the dominion and kingly power of Chriſt, to which they cared not to be ſubject; or rather civil magiſtracy, which they deſpiſed, as ſuppoſing it to be inconſiſtent with their chriſtian liberty, and rejected it as being a reſtraint on their luſts; chuſing rather anarchy and confuſion, that they might do as they pleaſed, though magiſtracy is God's ordinance, and magiſtrates are God's repreſentatives: and ſpeak evil of dignities; or glories; the Arabic verſion reads, the God of glory: this is to be underſtood either of angels, thoſe glorious creatures, called thrones, dominions, &c. or eccleſiaſtical governours, who are ſet in the firſt and higheſt place in the church, and are the glory of the churches; or elſe civil magiſtrates, as before, who are the higher powers, and ſit in high places of honour and grandeur. Falſe teachers are injurious to themſelves, diſturbers of churches, and pernicious to civil government.

Ver. 9. Yet Michael the archangel, &c.] By whom is meant, not a created angel, but an increated one, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, as appears from his name Michael, which ſignifies, who is as God; and who is as God, or like unto him, but the Son of God, who is equal with God? and from his character as the archangel, or prince of angels, for Chriſt is the head of all principality and power; and from what is elſewhere ſaid of Michael, as that he is the great prince, and on the ſide of the people of God, and to have angels under him, and at his command, Dan. x. 21. and xii. 1. Rev. xii. 7. So Philo the Jew [o] calls the moſt ancient Word, firſt-born of God, the archangel; in 2 Eſdras iv. 36. Uriel is called the archangel: when contending with the devil he diſputed about the body of Moſes; which ſome underſtand literally of the fleſhly and natural body of Moſes, buried by the Lord himſelf, partly out of reſpect to him; and partly, as ſome think, leſt the Iſraelites ſhould be tempted to an idolatrous worſhip of him; but rather it was to ſhow that the law of Moſes was to be aboliſhed and buried by Chriſt, never to riſe more: and they think, that this diſpute was either about the burying of his body, or the taking of it up again; ſatan on the one hand inſiſting upon the taking of it up, in order to induce the Iſraelites to worſhip him, and Michael, on the other hand, oppoſing it, to prevent this idolatry; but then the difficulty is, where Jude ſhould have this account, ſince the ſcriptures are ſilent about it. Some have thought, that he took it out of an Apocryphal book, called the Aſcenſion of Moſes, as Origen [p], which is not likely; others, that he had it by tradition, by which means the Apoſtle Paul came by the names of the Egyptian magicians, Jannes and Jambres; and ſome paſſages are referred to in ſome of their writings [q], as having ſome traces of this diſpute; but in them the diſcourſe is not concerning the body, but the ſoul of Moſes; not concerning burying or taking up of his body, when buried, but concerning the taking away of his ſoul, when he was alive; which none of the angels caring to undertake, at length Samael, the chief of devils, did, but without ſucceſs, whereſore God took it away with a kiſs himſelf: beſides, the Apoſtle produces this hiſtory as a thing well known; nor is it reaſonable to ſuppoſe that ſuch an altercation ſhould be between Michael, and the devil, on ſuch an account; or that it was in order to draw Iſrael into idolatry on the one hand, and on the other hand to prevent it; ſince it never was the cuſtom of the Iſraelites to worſhip their progenitors or heroes; nor did they ſeem ſo well-diſpoſed to Moſes in his life-time; nor was there any neceſſity of taking up his body, were they inclined to give him honour and worſhip; yea, the ſight of his dead body would rather have prevented than have encouraged it: but this is to be underſtood figuratively; and reference is had to the hiſtory in Zech. iii. 1, 2. as appears from the latter part of this verſe: ſome think the prieſthood of Chriſt is intended, which was the end, the ſum and ſubſtance of the law of Moſes; and ſeeing that Joſhua, the high-prieſt, was a type of Chriſt, and the angel of the Lord contended with ſatan about him, he might be ſaid to diſpute with him about the body of Moſes; but this ſenſe makes a type of a type, and Chriſt to contend about himſelf; beſides, this ſhould rather be called the body of Chriſt, than of Moſes. Others think that the temple of the Jews is meant, about the rebuilding of which the contention is thought to be; and which may be called the body of Moſes, as the church is called the body of Chriſt; tho' it ſhould be obſerved, that the temple is never ſo called, and that not the place where the church meets, but the church itſelf, is called the body of Chriſt: but it is beſt of all to underſtand it of the law of Moſes, which is ſometimes called Moſes himſelf, John v. 45. Acts xv. 21. and xxi. 21. 2 Cor. iii. 15. and ſo the body of Moſes, or the body of his laws, the ſyſtem of them; juſt as we call a ſyſtem of laws, and of divinity, ſuch an one's body of laws, and ſuch an one's body of divinity: and this agrees with the language of the Jews, who ſay [r], of ſtatutes, ſervice, purification, &c. that they are, גופי התורה, the bodies of the law; and ſo of Miſnic treatiſes, as thoſe which concern the offerings of turtle doves, and the purification of menſtruous women, that they are, גופי, the bodies of the traditions [s], that is, the ſum and ſubſtance of them: ſo the decalogue is ſaid [t] to be the body of the Shema, or hear, O Iſrael, Deut. vi. 4. ſo Clemens of Alexandria [u] ſays, that there are ſome who conſider the body of the ſcriptures, the words and names, as if they were, το ϲωμα τȣ Μωσεως, the body of Moſes [w]. Now the law of Moſes was reſtored in the time of Joſhua the high-prieſt, by Ezra and Nehemiah. Joſhua breaks ſome of theſe laws, and is charged by ſatan as guilty, who contended and inſiſted upon it, that he ſhould ſuffer for it; ſo that this diſpute or contention might be ſaid to be about the body of Moſes, that is, the body of Moſes's law, which Joſhua had broken; in which diſpute Michael, or the angel of the Lord, even the Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, durſt not bring againſt him a railing accuſation; that is, not that he was afraid of the devil, but though he could have given harder words, or ſeverer language, and which the other deſerved, yet he choſe not to do it, he would not do it; in which ſenſe the word durſt, or dare, is uſed in Rom. v. 7. but ſaid, the Lord rebuke thee; for thy malice and inſolence; ſee Zech. iii. 2. and this mild and gentle way of uſing even the devil himſelf, agrees with Chriſt's conduct towards him, when tempted by him in the wilderneſs, and when in his agony with him in the garden, and amidſt all his reproaches and ſufferings on the croſs. And now the argument is from the greater to the leſſer, that if Chriſt, the prince of angels, did not chuſe to give a railing word to the devil, who is ſo much inferior to him, and when there was ſo much reaſon and occaſion for it; then how great is the inſolence of theſe men, that ſpeak evil of civil and eccleſiaſtical rulers, without any juſt cauſe at all?

Ver. 10. But theſe ſpeak evil of thoſe things which they know not, &c.] Which may more particularly refer to dignities, ver. 8. either angels, who are little known, and not at all, but by revelation, and yet were blaſphemed, or evil ſpoken of by theſe men; either by aſcribing too much to them, as the creation of the world; or by ſaying ſuch things of them, as were below, and unworthy of them, as their congreſs with women, &c. Or civil magiſtrates; theſe men were ignorant of the nature, uſe, and end of magiſtracy, and civil government, and ſo treated it with contempt; or the miniſters of the Goſpel, whoſe uſefulneſs was not known, at leaſt not acknowledged by them, and ſo became the object of their ſcorn and reproach: or it may refer more generally to the ſcriptures, which falſe teachers are ignorant of, and yet ſpeak evil of; either by denying them to be the word of God, or by putting falſe gloſſes on them; and ſo to the ſeveral parts of the ſcriptures, as to the law, the nature, uſe, and end of which they are not acquainted with; and therefore blaſpheme it, by not walking according to it, or by denying it to be of God, and to be good, or by making the obſervance of it neceſſary to juſtification and ſalvation; and alſo to the Goſpel, the doctrines and ordinances of it, which they ſpeak evil of, deſpiſe and reject, not knowing the nature, value, and deſign of them: but what they know naturally as brute beaſts; man originally had a large ſhare of natural knowledge, and there is in man ſtill, notwithſtanding the fall, by which his knowledge is impaired, a natural knowledge of God, and of things natural, civil, and moral; and there is a ſenſitive knowledge in man, which he has in common with the brutes, and which is here meant: and ſuch was the brutiſh ſenſuality of theſe men, that in thoſe things they corrupt themſelves; and act as brute beaſts without ſhame and fear; yea, worſe than brute beaſts, as in the acts of unnatural luſt, mentioned in ver. 7. whereby they corrupt both their ſouls and bodies, and ſo ſhall be deſtroyed and periſh in their corruption.

Ver. 11. Wo unto them, &c.] This may be conſidered as a commiſeration of their caſe, or as a denunciation of deſerved puniſhment, or as a prediction of what would befal them. The Arabic verſion prefaces theſe words with an addreſs to the ſaints, O my beloved; that what was about to be ſaid might be attended to, as a caution and inſtruction to them. For they have gone in the way of Cain; which was a way of envy, for Cain envied the acceptance of his brother's gift, and that notice which the Lord took of him; ſo theſe men envied the gifts beſtowed on Chriſt's faithful miniſters, and the ſucceſs that attended their labours, and the honour that was put upon them by Chriſt, and that was given them by the churches; which ſhows, that they were deſtitute of grace, and particularly of the grace of charity, or love, which envies not, and that they were in an unregenerate eſtate, and upon the brink of ruin and deſtruction. Moreover, the way of Cain was a way of hatred, and murther of his brother, which his envy led him to; ſo theſe men hated the brethren, perſecuted them unto death, as well as were guilty of the murder of the ſouls of men, by their falſe doctrine: to which may be added, as another of Cain's ways, in conſequence of the former, abſence from the preſence of God, or the place of his worſhip; ſo theſe men ſeparated themſelves, and went out from the churches, forſook the aſſembling together with them, and ſo might expect Cain's puniſhment, to be driven from the face of God; yea, to be bid go as curſed into everlaſting burnings: and ran greedily after the error of Balaam for reward; Balaam's error which he himſelf was guilty of, was covetouſneſs, or an immoderate love of money, 2 Pet. ii. 15. which, as it is the root of all evil, is the bane of religion, and the ſource of hereſy, and what the falſe teachers were greatly addicted to; and where it prevails, it is inſatiable, and not to be checked, and ſtopped, as in theſe men; and is a damnable ſin, and excludes from the kingdom of heaven, as well as is diſhonourable to religion; hence ſuch particular notice is taken of it, leſt it be found in a miniſter of the word: this character exactly agrees with the followers of Simon Magus. The error which Balaam led others into, was both idolatry and adultery, Rev. ii. 14. which theſe falſe teachers were both guilty of themſelves, and taught others, and indulged them therein; and which, both teachers and people, ran greedily after. Balaam is one of the four private perſons, who, according to the Jews, ſhall have no part or portion in the world to come [w]. And periſhed in the gainſaying of Core; the ſame with Korah, Numb. xvi. 1. The Septuagint there call him Core, and ſo does Philo the Jew [x], as the Apoſtle does here, and by Joſephus he is called [y] Cores: now the gainſaying or contradiction of theſe men, was like Korah's; as his was againſt Moſes, the ruler of the people, ſo theirs was againſt magiſtracy, ver. 8. which was gainſaying God's own ordinance, and a contradiction of that which is for the good of men; the ground of which contradiction was love of liberty, and their own luſts; and generally ſpeaking, men periſh in their factions and rebellions againſt good and lawful magiſtrates: alſo, as Korah gainſayed Aaron, the prieſt of the Lord, ſo theſe men contradicted and oppoſed the miniſters of Chriſt, whom they would have thruſt out, in order to put in themſelves, and whoſe perſons they reviled, and contradicted their doctrines, which to do is of dangerous conſequence; and they might be ſaid to periſh in his gainſaying, as a type and example of their deſtruction, which would be ſwift and ſudden, as his was; and to denote the certainty of it. So the Jews [z] ſay of Korah, and his company, that they ſhall never aſcend, or riſe up and ſtand in judgment, and that they ſhall have no part or portion in the world to come [a].

Ver. 12. Theſe are ſpots in your feaſts of charity, &c.] Or love. The Jews ſpeak of, סעודתיה, דמהימנתא, of a feaſt of faith [b]. Theſe here ſeem to be the Agapæ, or love-feaſts of the primitive chriſtians; the deſign of which was to maintain and promote brotherly love, from whence they took their name; and to refreſh the poor ſaints, that they might have a full and comfortable meal now and then: their manner of keeping them was this; they began and ended them with prayer and ſinging; and they obſerved them with great temperance and frugality; and they were attended with much joy and gladneſs, and ſimplicity of heart: but were quickly abuſed, by judaizing chriſtians, as obſerving them in imitation of the paſſover; and by intemperance in eating and drinking; and by excluding the poor, for whoſe benefit they were chiefly deſigned; and by ſetting up ſeparate meetings for them, and by admitting unfit perſons unto them; ſuch as here are ſaid to be ſpots in them, blemiſhes, which brought great reproach and ſcandal upon them, being perſons of infamous characters and converſations. The alluſion is either to ſpots in garments, or in faces, or in ſacrifices; or to a ſort of earth that defiles; or elſe to rocks and hollow ſtones on ſhores, lakes, and rivers, which collect filth and ſlime; all which ſerve to expoſe and point out the perſons deſigned. The Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, read, theſe are in their own deceivings, ſpots, απαταις, inſtead of αγαπαις, as in 2 Pet. ii. 13. when they feaſt with you; which ſhows, that they were among them, continued members with them, and partook with them in their ſolemn feaſts, and were admitted to communion; and carries in it a kind of reproof to the ſaints, that they ſuffered ſuch perſons among them, and allowed them ſuch privilege, intimacy, and familiarity with them: feeding themſelves without fear; theſe were like the ſhepherds of Iſrael, who fed themſelves, and not the flock, and were very impious, and impudent, open and bare-faced in their iniquities, neither fearing God, nor regarding man. Clouds they are, without water; they are compared to clouds for their number, being many falſe prophets and antichriſts that were come out into the world; and for their ſudden riſe, having at once, and at an unawares, crept into the churches; and for the general darkneſs they ſpread over the churches, making it, by their doctrines and practices, to be a dark and cloudy day, a day of darkneſs, and gloomineſs, a day of clouds, and of thick darkneſs, a day of trouble, rebuke, and blaſphemy; and for the ſtorms, factions, rents, and diviſions they made; as alſo for their ſituation and height, ſoaring aloft, and being vainly puft up in their fleſhy mind; as well as for their ſudden deſtruction, diſappearing at once. And to clouds without water, becauſe deſtitute of the true grace of God, and of true evangelical doctrine; which, like rain, is from above, from heaven; and which, like that, refreſhes, ſoftens, and fructifies. Now theſe falſe teachers looked like clouds, that promiſed rain, boaſted of Goſpel-light, and knowledge, but were deſtitute of it, wherefore their miniſtry was uncomfortable, and unprofitable. Carried about of winds; either of falſe doctrines, or of their own luſts, and paſſions, or of ſatan's temptations: trees whoſe fruit withereth; or trees in autumn; either like to them, which put forth at that ſeaſon of the year, and ſo come to nothing; or like to trees which are bare of leaves, as well as fruit, it being the time when the leaves fall from the trees; and ſo may be expreſſive of theſe perſons caſting off the leaves of an outward profeſſion, of their going out from the churches, ſeparating from them, and forſaking the aſſembling together with them, when, what fruit of holineſs, and good works, they ſeemed to have, came to nothing; and ſo were without fruit, either of Goſpel doctrine, or of Goſpel holineſs and righteouſneſs; nor did they make any true converts, but what they made, were like the Phariſees, as bad, or worſe than themſelves; and from their unfruitfulneſs in all reſpects, it appeared that they were not in Chriſt the true vine, and were not ſent forth by him, nor with his Goſpel, and that they were deſtitute of the Spirit of God. Twice dead; that is, entirely, thoroughly, and really dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, notwithſtanding their pretenſions to religion and godlineſs; or the ſenſe may be, that they were not only liable to a corporal death, common to them with all mankind, but alſo to an eternal one, or to the death both of ſoul and body in hell. Homer calls [d] thoſe, διθανεις, twice dead, that go to hell alive: or rather the ſenſe is this, that they were dead in ſin by nature, as all men are, and again having made a profeſſion of religion, were now become dead to that profeſſion; and ſo were twice dead, once as they were born, and a ſecond time as they had apoſtatized: plucked up by the roots; either by ſeparating themſelves from the churches, where they had been externally planted; or by the act of the church in cutting them off, and caſting them out; or by the judgment of God upon them.

Ver. 13. Raging waves of the ſea, &c.] Falſe teachers are ſo called, for their ſwelling pride and vanity; which, as it is what prevails in human nature, is a governing vice in ſuch perſons, for knowledge, without grace, puffs up; and this ſhows that they had not received the doctrine of grace in truth, for that humbles; as alſo for their arrogance, boaſting, and oſtentation; and for their noiſineſs, their reſtleſs, uneaſy, and turbulent ſpirits, for their furious and wrathful diſpoſitions; as well as for their levity and inconſtancy, and for their turpitude and filthineſs: foaming out their own ſhame; wrathful words, frothy and obſcene language, and filthy doctrines; and which expreſſes the iſſue of their noiſy and bluſtring miniſtry, which ends in uncleanneſs, ſhame, emptineſs, and ruin. Wandring ſtars; they are called ſtars, becauſe they have the appearance of ſuch, and blaze for a while, in ſeeming light, zeal, and warmth, and in fame and reputation; and wandring ones, not comparable to the planets, which go their regular courſe, but to fiery exhalations, gliding, and running ſtars; becauſe they wander about from houſe to houſe, as well as from one nation to another, and being never ſettled in their principles, nor at a point in religion; and wander alſo after their own carnal luſts, and cauſe others to wander likewiſe, and at laſt become falling ſtars; not from real grace and ſanctified knowledge, which they never had; but from truth to error, and from a ſeemingly holy life and converſation, to a vicious one; and from a profeſſion of religion, to open prophaneneſs; and whoſe fall is irrecoverable, as that of ſtars: to whom is reſerved the blackneſs of darkneſs for ever; or the blackeſt darkneſs, even utter darkneſs; which phraſe not only expreſſes the dreadful nature of their puniſhment, their moſt miſerable and uncomfortable condition; but alſo the certainty of it, it is reſerved for them among the treaſures of divine wrath and vengeance, by the righteous appointment of God, according to the juſt demerit of their ſins; and likewiſe the duration of it, it will be for ever; there will never be any light or comfort, but a continual everlaſting black deſpair, a worm that dieth not, a fire that will not be quenched, the ſmoke and blackneſs of which will aſcend for ever and ever; hell is meant by it, which the Jews repreſent as a place of darkneſs: the Egyptian darkneſs, they ſay, came from the darkneſs of hell, and in hell the wicked will be covered with darkneſs; the darkneſs which was upon the face of the deep, at the creation, they interpret of hell [e].

Ver. 14. And Enoch alſo, the ſeventh from Adam, &c.] This was Enoch the ſon of Jared; his name ſignifies one inſtructed, or trained up; as he doubtleſs was by his father, in the true religion, in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, and was one that had much communion with God; he walked with him, and was tranſlated by him, body and ſoul to heaven, and did not ſee death; Gen. v. 18, 22, 24. he is ſaid to be the ſeventh from Adam; not the ſeventh man from him that was born into the world, for there were no doubt thouſands born before him; but he was, as the Jews expreſs it [f], דור שביעי, the ſeventh generation from him; and they have an obſervation [g] that all ſevenths are always beloved by God; the ſeventh in lands, and the ſeventh in generations; Adam, Seth, Enos, Cainan, Mahaleel, Jared, Enoch, as it is written, Gen. v. 24. and this is ſaid partly to diſtinguiſh him from others of the ſame name, and particularly from Enoch the ſon of Cain, the third from Adam in his line, as this was the ſeventh from Adam in the line of Seth; and partly to obſerve the antiquity of the following prophecy of his: for it is ſaid he propheſied of theſe; of theſe falſe teachers, and ſuch as they; what would be their ſad ſtate and condition at the ſecond coming of Chriſt to judgment: that he had a ſpirit of prophecy is evident, from the name he gave to his ſon Methuſelah, which ſignifies, when he dies is the emiſſion, or the ſending out of the waters of the flood, which came to paſs the very year he did die. The Arabic writers[h] call him Edris the prophet; and the Jews ſay[i], that he was in a higher degree than Moſes or Elias; they alſo call[k] him Metatron, the great ſcribe, a name which they ſometimes give to the angel that went before the children of Iſrael in the wilderneſs, and which ſeems to belong to the Meſſiah: that Enoch wrote a prophecy, and left it behind him in writing, does not appear from hence, or elſewhere; the Jews, in ſome of their writings, do cite and make mention of the book of Enoch; and there is a fragment now which bears his name, but is a ſpurious piece, and has nothing like this prophecy in it: wherefore Jude took this not from a book called the Apocalypſe of Enoch, but from tradition; this prophecy being handed down from age to age; and was in full credit with the Jews, and therefore the Apoſtle very appoſitely produces it; or rather he had it by divine inſpiration, and is as follows: ſaying, behold the Lord cometh with ten thouſand of his ſaints; by the Lord is meant the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is ordained the judge of quick and dead, and for which he is richly qualified, being omniſcient and omnipotent, and faithful and righteous, and who will certainly come again to judge the world in righteouſneſs; for not of his firſt coming, which was not to judge and condemn, but to ſeek and ſave, but of his ſecond coming at the laſt day is this to be underſtood; and this is expreſſed in the preſent tenſe, cometh, in the manner of the prophets, who ſpeak of things future as if they already were, as Iſaiah does of the incarnation, ſufferings, and death of Chriſt, and to awaken the attention of perſons to it, as if it was near at hand, as alſo to ſignify the certainty of it: and when he comes, he'll be attended with ten thouſand of his ſaints; meaning either the ſouls of glorified ſaints, even all of them, 1 Theſſ. iii. 13. which will come with Chriſt, and meet the living ones, and be re-united to their own bodies, which will then be raiſed; or elſe the holy angels, as in Deut. xxxiii. 2. and ſo ſome copies, and the Arabic verſion read; which will be both for the ſhewing forth of his glory and majeſty, and for ſervice in gathering his elect together, as well as for terror to the wicked; and a behold is prefixed to all this, to denote the certainty of Chriſt's coming, and the importance and wonderfulneſs of it: the ends of his coming follow.

Ver. 15. To execute judgment upon all, &c.] Quick and dead, ſmall and great, high and low, rich and poor, good and bad, righteous and wicked, ſheep and goats; to paſs the definitive ſentence on each, that of abſolution, life, and happineſs on his own people, and that of condemnation, death, and miſery on the wicked; which will be done in the moſt ſtrict and righteous manner: and to convince all that are ungodly among them; thoſe who are without God, the fear of him, love to him, or faith in him; who have lived without the worſhip of him, or in a falſe worſhip; and particularly falſe teachers are here meant, the ſame as in ver. 4. who will then be convicted in their own conſciences, by that clear evidence, and full light in which things will be ſet: of all their ungodly deeds; both againſt law and Goſpel: which they have ungodly committed; which they lived in the commiſſion of, and continually practiſed in a vile manner, publickly, and in defiance of heaven, and with ſeared conſciences: and of all their hard ſpeeches, which ungodly ſinners have ſpoken againſt him; either againſt God, as the Vulgate Latin verſion reads, againſt his being, his perfections, his providence, his purpoſes, his word, and worſhip; or rather againſt Jeſus Chriſt the Lord, who will come to judge them; againſt his perſon and offices, his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice; his miniſters and people, his truths and ordinances.

Ver. 16. Theſe are murmurers, &c.] That is, at others; ſecretly, inwardly, in a muttering way, grunting out their murmurs like ſwine; to which, for their filthineſs and apoſtacy, falſe teachers may be fitly compared: and their murmurs might be both againſt God and men; againſt God, againſt the being of God, denying, or at leaſt wiſhing there was no God, and uneaſy becauſe there is one; againſt the perfections of God, particularly his ſovereignty over all, his ſpecial goodneſs to ſome; his wiſdom, juſtice, truth, and faithfulneſs; againſt his purpoſes and decrees, both with reſpect to things temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal; againſt the providence of God and his government of the world, and the unequal diſtribution of things in it; and eſpecially againſt the doctrines of free grace, and the ordinances of the Goſpel: and not only are they murmurers againſt God, and all divine things and perſons, but alſo againſt men; particularly againſt civil magiſtrates, who reſtrain them, and are a terror to them; and againſt the miniſters of the Goſpel, whoſe gifts and uſefulneſs they envy; and indeed againſt all men, their neighbours, and what they enjoy; and at every thing that goes beſides themſelves: it follows, complainers; ſome join the above character and this together, and read, as the Vulgate Latin verſion, complaining murmurers; others, as the Syriac verſion, place not only a comma, but a copulative between them; and as the former may deſign ſecret and inward murmuring, this may intend outward complaining, in words; not of their own ſins and corruptions, nor of the ſins of others, with any concern for the honour of religion; or of the decay of powerful godlineſs in themſelves or others; or of the unſucceſsfulneſs of the Goſpel, and the decreaſe of the intereſt of Chriſt; but either of God, that he has not made them equal to others in the good things of life, as the Arabic verſion renders it, complaining of their own lots; or that he lays ſo much affliction upon them more than on others; or of men, that their ſalaries are not ſufficient, and that they are not enough reſpected according to their merit; and indeed, as the Syriac verſion reads, they complain of every thing, and are never ſatisfied and eaſy: walking after their own luſts; which are carnal and worldly, ſee the note on 2 Pet. iii. 3. and their mouth ſpeaketh great ſwelling words; both againſt God and men; and this may point at their boaſt of knowledge, their great oſtentation of learning, their vain and empty doctrines, their high flights, their rhetorical ſtile, and bombaſt language: having mens perſons in admiration becauſe of advantage; crying up men of their own ſtamp for the advantage of the party; and giving flattering titles to men of wealth and riches, for the ſake of their money; ſo the Ethiopic opic verſion, they ſtudied to pleaſe perſons, to make gain of them; they were reſpecters of perſons; ſo the phraſe is uſed by the Septuagint in Deut. x. 17. and xxviii. 50. and in Job xxii. 8. and xxxii. 22. and xxxiv. 19. and in Prov. xviii. 5. and in Iſ. ix. 15.

Ver. 17. But beloved, &c.] Or my beloved, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions read; or our brethren, as the Ethiopic verſion; the Apoſtle addreſſes the ſaints in this manner, to diſtinguiſh them from the falſe teachers, and to ſhow that he had a different opinion of them from them; and that he would have them beware of them, and not be ſurprized at them, ſince it was no other than what was foretold; and alſo to engage their attention and regard to the following exhortation: remember ye the words which were ſpoken before of the Apoſtles of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; theſe words mean not the doctrines of the Apoſtles in general, but particularly the prophecies delivered out by them, as by the Apoſtles Paul and Peter, concerning the falſe teachers that ſhould ariſe; and theſe being ſpoken of before, and by Apoſtles, even by the Apoſtles of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, were worthy of regard, and deſerved to be remembred; a remembrance of which is a preſervative from error, and a relief in the worſt of times, whether of perſecution, or hereſy. This does not ſuppoſe that Jude was not an Apoſtle, only that there were other Apoſtles beſides him; and that theſe, ſome of them at leaſt, had propheſied of theſe men, and that he had lived to ſee their predictions verified; nor does he exclude himſelf from being one of them; yea, the Ethiopic verſion reads, which we the Apoſtles of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt have formerly declared unto you; ſee 2 Pet. iii. 2.

Ver. 18. How that they told you that there ſhould be mockers in the laſt time, &c.] See the note on 2 Pet. iii. 3.

Ver. 19. Theſe be they who ſeparate themſelves, &c.] Not from ſinners openly prophane; ſuch a ſeparation is commendable, being according to the will and word of God, to the mind and practice of Chriſt, and which tends to the good of men, and to the glory of God; but from the ſaints and people of God; it is poſſible that a child of God may for a time leave the fellowſhip of the ſaints, but an entire and total forſaking of them, and of aſſembling with them, looks with an ill aſpect; nor did they ſeparate themſelves from ſuperſtition and will-worſhip, and every falſe way of worſhip, which would have been right, but from the pure worſhip, ordinances, and diſcipline of God's houſe, by a perverſion of them, and as being above them, or unwilling to be under any notice and government; nor from errors and hereſies, and perſons that held them, with theſe they herded; but from the pure doctrines of the Goſpel, and miniſters of the word, and made diviſions and ſeparations among the churches, for worldly ends, and thro' pride and affectation of vain-glory, as if they were more knowing, more holy, and more ſpiritual than other men: when they were ſenſual; ſuch as gave themſelves up to ſenſual luſts and pleaſures; and at beſt were but natural men, who had only natural and rational abilities, but without ſpiritual and experimental knowledge: hence it follows, having not the Spirit; tho' they might have ſome external gifts of the Spirit, yet not the graces and fruits of the Spirit; or he himſelf dwelling in them, as a ſpirit of conviction and illumination, as a ſpirit of regeneration and ſanctification, as a ſpirit of faith and comfort, as a ſpirit of adoption, and as the earneſt and pledge of the heavenly glory; they were not under his influence, nor did they feel the operations of his grace, nor had they communion with him: hence they appeared to be none of Chriſt's, nor could they claim intereſt in him, and were without life, and ſo could not perſevere.

Ver. 20. But ye, beloved, &c.] See the note on ver. 17. building up yourſelves on your moſt holy faith; ſome copies, and the Complutenſian edition read, our moſt holy faith; meaning the doctrine of faith in all its branches, which is holy, a moſt holy doctrine; which diſplays the holineſs of God, and is a means of beginning and increaſing internal holineſs in the ſaints, and of encouraging and exciting them to external holineſs of life and converſation: this phraſe, מהימנותא קדישא, holy faith, is in uſe with the Jews[k]: and it becomes the ſaints to build up one another upon this; the doctrine of faith is a foundation to build upon, particularly what regards the perſon, offices, and grace of Chriſt, and is itſelf of an edifying nature; and they ſhould not content themſelves with their preſent knowledge of it, but ſeek for an improvement in it; and tho' they were paſſive when firſt built on Chriſt and his doctrines, and tho' miniſters are greatly inſtruments in building of them up more and more, yet they are capable of building up themſelves, and one another, by attending on the miniſtry of the word, and by private converſation with each other, and particularly by praying in the Holy Ghoſt; which is a ſpecial means of increaſe and eſtabliſhment in the doctrine of faith: the Holy Ghoſt is the author and enditer of prayer, and an aſſiſter in it; without him ſaints cannot call God their father, nor pray with faith and fervency, or with freedom and liberty.

Ver. 21. Keep yourſelves in the love of God, &c.] By which may be meant either the grace and favour of God, that love with which God loves his people; and then the exhortation to the ſaints to keep themſelves in it is, to ſet it always before them, to keep it conſtantly in view, to exerciſe faith on it, firmly believing their intereſt in it; as alſo to meditate on it, give themſelves up wholly to the contemplation of it, and employ their thoughts conſtantly about it, which is the foundation of all grace here, and glory hereafter; or to preſerve themſelves by it, for ſo the words may be rendered, preſerve yourſelves by the love of God; againſt ſatan's temptations, the ſnares of the world, and the luſts of the fleſh; whenever ſatan ſollicits to ſin, and any ſnare is laid to draw into it, and the fleſh attempts to be predominant, ſaints ſhould betake themſelves to the love of God, as to a ſtrong hold and preſervative againſt ſin, and reaſon as Joſeph did, Gen. xxxix. 9. for the love of God, and continuance in it, do not depend on any thing that can be done by men; nor is there any danger of real believers falling from it, or loſing it, ſince it is unchangeable, and is from everlaſting to everlaſting: or elſe by the love of God we are to underſtand that love with which his people love him, and of which he is the object, Luke xi. 42. and then the meaning of the exhortation is, that though this grace of love cannot be loſt, yet, inaſmuch as the fervour of it may be abated, and the people of God grow cold and indifferent in their expreſſions of it, it becomes them to make uſe of all proper means to maintain and increaſe it in themſelves and others; ſuch as are mentioned in the context, as converſing together in an edifying way about the doctrines of the Goſpel, and praying either ſeparately or together, under the influences of the Holy Spirit, and looking forward for the grace and mercy of Chriſt unto everlaſting life; all which, with many other things, by the bleſſing of God, may ſerve to maintain and revive the grace of love, and blow it up into a flame: tho' perhaps this phraſe may chiefly deſign that love, peace, and concord, which ought to ſubſiſt among ſaints as brethren, and which they ſhould be careful to preſerve; and may be called the love of God, juſt as the ſame thing is ſtiled the peace of God, Col. iii. 15. becauſe it is what God requires, what he calls unto, which is of him, and is taught by him in regeneration, and what his love engages to, and without which there is no true love to him; and he takes love ſhewn to his people as if ſhewn to himſelf; and this ſenſe is favoured by the context, both by the words in the preceding verſe, and in the following ones: looking for the mercy of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt unto eternal life. The mercy of Chriſt may be conſidered either as paſt, which was ſhown in eternity, in his covenant-tranſactions with his Father, in engaging in the cauſe of his people, in eſpouſing them to himſelf, and in the care of their perſons, grace and glory; and in time, in aſſuming their nature, in his tender concern for the bodies and ſouls of men, in bearing the ſins and ſorrows of his people, in the redemption of them, and in their regeneration and vocation; and there is the preſent mercy of Chriſt, in interceding for his people, in ſympathizing with them under all their afflictions, in ſuccouring them under all their temptations, in ſuiting himſelf, as the great ſhepherd, to all the circumſtances of his flock; and there is the future mercy of Chriſt, which will be ſhown at death, in the grave, and at the reſurrection, at the day of judgment, and in the merciful ſentence he'll pronounce on his people; and this ſeems to be deſigned here; the conſequent of which, or what is annexed to it, and in which it iſſues, is eternal life; which is not owing to the works of men, but to the grace of God, and mercy of Chriſt; eternal life is in him, and is given thro' him, and to his mercy ſhould men look for it. Chriſt himſelf is to be looked for, who will certainly come a ſecond time; and eternal life is to be looked for by him; and this is only to be expected thro' his grace and mercy; and this is to be looked for by faith, in the love of it, with delight and pleaſure, and chearfulneſs, with eagerneſs, and yet with patience.

[k] Zohar in Gen. fol. 47. 4.

Ver. 22. And of ſome have compaſſion, &c.] That is, of ſuch who have gone aſtray, being drawn aſide; who are ſimple and ignorant, and out of the way; who ſin thro' infirmity, and the force of temptation; and who are tractable and open to conviction, and whoſe miſtakes are in leſſer matters of religion; as alſo ſuch who are convicted and wounded in their conſciences for their ſins and miſtakes: and to theſe compaſſion is to be ſhewn, by praying with them, and for them, with ardency and affection; inſtructing them in meekneſs; giving friendly and brotherly reproofs to them; expreſſing on all occaſions a tender concern for their good; doing them all the good that can be done, both for their ſouls and bodies: and good reaſon there is why compaſſion ſhould be ſhown them, becauſe God is a God of compaſſion; Chriſt is a merciful high-prieſt; a contrary ſpirit is grieving to the Holy Ghoſt; ſaints ſhould conſider what they themſelves were, and what they now are, and that compaſſion has been ſhewn to them, and they may want it again. The Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, and the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions read, reprove. Making a difference; between one and another; uſing ſome more tenderly, others more ſeverely, as the nature and circumſtances of their caſe appear to be. The Syriac verſion renders the whole, when they repent, have compaſſion on them.

Ver. 23. And others ſave with fear, &c.] Meaning falſe teachers, who lead others into errors, and ſuch as give themſelves over unto ſin, whether teachers or hearers, and who are obſtinate and irreclaimable; even ſuch as theſe, means ſhould be uſed to ſave, if poſſible, by ſharp admonitions and ſevere language; by denouncing the awful judgments of God, which threaten them; by inflicting on them church cenſures in a terrible manner; by declaring the terrors of the Lord, and of hell, and of everlaſting damnation: pulling them out of the fire; of their ſoul-deſtroying doctrines, and of their filthy and unnatural luſts, and as it were out of the fire of hell, of which they are in great danger: hating even the garment ſpotted by the fleſh; by which may be meant the converſation of thoſe men, even their filthy converſation, which is to be hated, tho' their perſons are not; but all ways and means ſhould be uſed to ſave them; and this is one way, by ſhowing a diſlike unto, and a reſentment at their wicked way of living, excluding them from church communion for it, and ſhunning all converſation with them. The alluſion is not to garments defiled by profluvious perſons, or menſtruous women, as ſome think, but to garments ſpotted with nocturnal pollutions, or thro' unnatural luſts, which theſe perſons were addicted to [l]. It was reckoned very diſhonourable for religious perſons, in the time of divine ſervice, or on a ſabbath-day, to have on a garment ſpotted with any thing; if a prieſt's garments were ſpotted, and he performed ſervice in them, that ſervice was not right [m]; and if a diſciple of a wiſe man had any greaſe on his garments (on a ſabbath-day) he was guilty of death [n].

Ver. 24. Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling, &c.] The people of God are liable to falling, into temptation, into ſin, into errors and miſtakes, from an exerciſe of grace, or from a degree of ſtedfaſtneſs in Goſpel truths, and even into a final and total apoſtacy, were it not for divine power; and they are not able to keep themſelves. Adam, in his ſtate of innocence, could not keep himſelf from falling; nor could the angels, many of whom fell, and the reſt are preſerved by the grace of God; wherefore, much leſs can imperfect ſinful men keep themſelves, they want both ſkill and power to do it; nor can any, ſhort of Chriſt, keep them, and it is his work and office to preſerve them; they were given to him with this view, and he undertook to do it; and ſenſible ſinners commit themſelves to him, as being appointed for that purpoſe; and this is a work Chriſt has been, and is employed in, and he is every way qualified for it: he is able to do it, for he is the mighty God, the creator and upholder of all things; and as mediator, he has all power in heaven and in earth; inſtances of perſons kept by him prove it; and there is ſuch evidence of it, that believers may be, and are perſuaded of it: and he is as willing as he is able; it is his Father's will he ſhould keep them, and in that he delights; and as he has undertook to keep them, he is accountable for them; beſides, he has an intereſt in them, and the greateſt love and affection for them; to which may be added, that the glory of the Father, Son, and Spirit, in man's ſalvation, depends on the keeping ing of them: and what he keeps them from is, from falling by temptations, not from being tempted by ſatan, but from ſinking under his temptations, and from being devoured by him; and from falling by ſin, not from the being or commiſſion of ſin, but from the dominion of it, and from falling into it, ſo as to periſh by it; and from falling into damnable hereſies; and from the true grace of God, and into final impenitence, unbelief, and total apoſtacy. Inſtead of you, the Alexandrian copy reads, us, and ſome copies them: and to preſent you faultleſs before the preſence of his glory with exceeding joy; to himſelf, in this preſent ſtate of things, as waſhed in his blood, and juſtified by his righteouſneſs, and hereafter in the millennium ſtate, and in the ultimate glory; and alſo to his Father, and this he died to do, and in ſome ſenſe did it at his death, even in the body of his fleſh thro' death, and now as the repreſentative of his people in heaven; and will at the laſt day when he'll deliver them up compleat and perfect; all which is in conſequence of his ſuretyſhip-engagements: and this preſentation is made before the preſence of his glory; either before the glorious preſence of Chriſt, or Chriſt himſelf, who is glorious and will appear in glory, in his own, and in his Father's, and in his holy angels; or elſe before the glorious preſence of God the Father, and who is glory itſelf: and the condition in which the ſaints are, and will be preſented, is faultleſs; tho' they have ſinned in Adam, and were ſo wretchedly guilty and filthy in their nature-ſtate, ſo prone to backſlidings, and guilty of ſo many after converſion, and tho' a body of ſin and death is carried by them to the grave; yet they will at laſt be preſented by Chriſt in perfect holineſs, in compleat righteouſneſs, and in the ſhining robes of immortality and glory. The manner in which they will be preſented, is with exceeding joy; in themſelves, for what they ſhall be delivered from, from ſin and ſorrow, and every enemy, and for the glory and happineſs they ſhall then enjoy; and alſo in the miniſters of the Goſpel, who will then bring their ſheaves with joy, and then will their converts be their joy and crown of rejoicing; and likewiſe this preſentation will be with the joy of angels, for if they rejoice at the converſion of men, much more at their glorification; and even with the joy of Father, Son, and Spirit.

Ver. 25. To the only wiſe God our ſaviour, &c.] By whom is meant, not the Trinity of perſons in general, nor the Father in particular; but the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is truly God, tho' not to the excluſion of the Father and Spirit; and is the wiſdom of God, and the author of all wiſdom, natural and ſpiritual; and is the only ſaviour of his people; and to him may be, as is aſcribed the glory of his deity, and divine Sonſhip, of his mediatorial works, and of ſalvation: and majeſty; which belongs to him as God, and which he has in his human nature, being crowned with glory, and honour, and enthroned and ſet down at the right hand of God: dominion; both natural, the kingdom of nature and providence belonging to him, and mediatorial, which is above all, reaches far and wide, and will laſt for ever: and power; in making and upholding all things; in redeeming his people; in protecting and defending them, and in deſtroying his and their enemies; in raiſing the dead, and judging the world. Tho' the Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, and the Vulgate Latin verſion read, to the only God our ſaviour, by Jeſus Chriſt our Lord, and leave out the word wiſe; and ſo they are to be underſtood of God the Father; but the Ethiopic verſion reads, this is the only God our ſaviour Jeſus Chriſt, to whom, &c. And all this is to be attributed to him, both now, and ever; in the preſent life, and to all eternity. Amen; which is an aſſent unto it, that ſo it ſhould be; and a wiſh, that ſo it may be; and an expreſſion of faith, and ſtrong aſſeveration, that ſo it ſhall be.

AN EXPOSITION, &c.

The Revelation of St. JOHN the Divine.

THAT this book was written by the Apoſtle and Evangeliſt John, is clear, not only from the expreſs mention of his name, and from his office, a ſervant of Jeſus Chriſt, ver. 1. but alſo from the character this writer gives of himſelf, ver. 2. as being an eye-witneſs of the eſſential Logos, or Word of God, and who bore a faithful record of him as ſuch, as John did in his Goſpel, in a very peculiar and remarkable manner, and from this writer's being in the iſle of Patmos when he wrote, ver. 9. for of what other John can this be ſaid? to which may be added the teſtimonies of the ancient writers, as Juſtin Martyr [a], who lived within fifty years of the Apoſtle, and Irenæus [b], who was the diſciple of Polycarp an hearer of this Apoſtle, and Clemens Alexandrinus [c], Tertullian [d], Origen [e], and others, who aſcribe it to him. It was a moſt monſtrouſly ſtupid notion of Caius, Dionyſius of Alexandria mentions [f], that it was written by Cerinthus the heretick, when his hereſies concerning the divinity and humanity of Chriſt, are moſt ſtrongly refuted in it. What ſeems to have led to ſuch a thought is, that the account of the thouſand years reign, and the deſcent of the new Jeruſalem from heaven, ſeemed to favour the judaiſm of this man, and his carnal notions of an earthly paradiſe, whereas they have no ſuch tendency. And as for its being written by another John, who is ſaid to be preſbyter at Epheſus, after the Apoſtle, it is not certain there ever was ſuch a man; and if there was, he muſt be too late to be the writer of this book; nor to him can the above characters agree. What is obſerved in favour of him, that the penman of this book is called in the title, John the Divine, and not the Evangeliſt, or Apoſtle, will do him no ſervice; for to whom does this character ſo well agree, as to the Evangeliſt John, who wrote of divine things in ſo divine a manner, and particularly concerning the divinity of Chriſt? hence this book was ſometimes called Θεολογία, Divinity [g]: beſides, the title of the book is not original, but is what has been affixed to it by others, and varies; for in the Complutenſian edition it runs thus, "the Revelation of the holy "Apoſtle and Evangeliſt John the Divine." In the Vulgate Latin verſion it is called, the Apocalypſe of the bleſſed John the Apoſtle; and in the Syriac verſion, the Revelation which was made to John the Evangeliſt; and in the Arabic verſion, the Viſion of John, the Apoſtle and Evangeliſt, to wit, the Apocalypſe. All which acknowledge the Apoſtle John to be the writer of it, and ſhew the ſenſe of the ancients concerning it. Nor is it of any moment what is alledged, that this writer makes mention of his name ſeveral times, whereas it was uſual with John, both in his Goſpel and Epiſtles, to conceal his name; ſince there is a wide difference between writing an hiſtory and epiſtles to friends, and prophecy, which requires the author's name, on whom the authority and truth of the prophecy greatly depend: and ſo likewiſe the diſagreement of ſtile obſerved in this book, with the other writings of John, has no force in it; ſince the prophetic ſtile is always different from an hiſtorical and epiſtolary one; and yet, after all, in many things, there is an agreement; John in this, as in his other writings, ſpeaks of Chriſt as the Word and Son of God, and under the character of the Lamb; and likewiſe the following paſſages may be compared together, as ch. i. 2. with John xix. 35. and 1 John i. 1, 2. and ch. i. 5. with 1 John i. 7. All which being obſerved, there is no room to doubt, neither of the writer, nor of the authority of this book; eſpecially, when the agreement of the doctrine contained in it, with other parts of the ſcripture; the majeſty of its ſtile, and above all, the many prophecies of things to come to paſs in it, ſeveral of which have been already fulfilled, are conſidered; and tho' it was called in queſtion, and rejected by ſome heretical men, becauſe ſome things in it did not ſuit with their tenets, yet we have not the leaſt reaſon to doubt of its being authentic, who have lived to ſee ſo much of it already accompliſhed, and which could come from no other but God. As for the time of its writing, this is not agreed upon on all hands; the place where, ſeems to be the iſle of Patmos, which yet ſome queſtion. Some think it was written in the times of Claudius Cæſar [h], before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. In the title of the Syriac verſion, this revelation is ſaid to be made to John in the iſle of Patmos, into which he was caſt by Nero Cæſar. But the more commonly received opinion is, that he had this viſion there, at the latter end of Domitian's reign[1], by whom he was there baniſhed, about the year 95, or 96. But be this as it will, the book is certainly of divine authority, and exceeding uſeful and inſtructive; and contains in it the moſt momentous and important doctrines of the Goſpel, concerning a Trinity of perſons in the Godhead, the deity and Sonſhip of Chriſt, the divinity and perſonality of the Spirit, the offices of Chriſt, the ſtate and condition of man by nature, juſtification, pardon, and reconciliation by the blood of Chriſt; and it recommends the ſeveral duties of religion, and encourages to the exerciſe of every grace; and gives a very particular account of the riſe, power, and fall of antichriſt, and of the ſtate of the church of Chriſt in all the periods of time to the end of the world. And tho' it is written in an uncommon ſtile, yet may be underſtood, by the uſe of proper means, as by prayer and meditation, by comparing it with other prophetic writings, and the hiſtory of paſt times, by which many things in it will appear to have had their accompliſhment; and it ought to be obſerved, that it is a revelation, and not a hidden thing; that it is now not a ſealed book, but an open one; and that ſuch are pronounced bleſſed, that read and hear it, and obſerve the things in it, ch. i. 3. and which is no ſmall encouragement to attempt an explanation of it.

CHAP. I.

THIS chapter contains the preface and introduction to the book, and the firſt viſion in it. The preface begins with the title of the book, in which the ſubject-matter of it is pointed at, a Revelation; the author of it, Jeſus Chriſt, who had it from his Father; the miniſter of it, an angel; the perſon to whom it was made known, deſcribed by his name, office, and the teſtimony he bore to Chriſt, his Goſpel, and to whatever he ſaw; and for encouragement to perſons to read, hear, and obſerve it, happineſs is pronounced on them; ver. 1, 2, 3. the inſcription of the book follows, in which are the name of the writer, and the place where, the churches, to whom it is inſcribed, were, with a ſalutation of them; in which grace and peace are wiſhed for them, from God the Father, from the Holy Spirit, and from Jeſus Chriſt; who is deſcribed by characters expreſſing his prophetic, prieſtly, and kingly offices, and by the benefits, favours, and honours beſtowed by him on his people, to whom a doxology or aſcription of glory is made, ver. 4, 5, 6. who is further deſcribed, firſt by his future viſible coming in the clouds, which will greatly affect the inhabitants of the earth, and then by himſelf, as the eternal and almighty God, ver. 7, 8. and in order to introduce the viſion, hereafter related in this chapter, he that ſaw it gives an account of himſelf, by his name, by his relation to the churches, and by his partnerſhip with them in affliction, and of the place he was in; and for what, and of the time when he had the viſion, and the frame he was in, and what awakened his attention to it, ver. 9, 10, 11. and how, that adverting to it he ſaw ſeven golden candleſticks, and in the midſt of them one like the Son of man, who is deſcribed by his clothes and girdle, by his head, hair, and eyes, by his feet and voice, by what he had in his right hand, and by what went out of his mouth, and by his face ſhining like the ſun in its ſtrength, ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. next is related the effect this viſion had on John, who upon it fell down as one dead, but was comforted by Chriſt, laying his right hand on him, and telling him who he was, and bidding him write what he had ſeen, or ſhould ſee, ver. 17, 18, 19. and the chapter is concluded with an interpretation of the myſtery of the ſeven ſtars, and the ſeven candleſticks, ver. 20.

Ver. 1. The Revelation of Jeſus Chriſt, &c.] Either of which he is the author; for it was he that ſent and ſhewed it by his angel to John; it was he, the lion of the tribe of Judah, that took the book, and opened the ſeals of it, and which is a very conſiderable proof of his deity; ſince none but God could foreknow and foretel things to come, or declare the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet, as is done in this book: or of which he is the ſubject; for it treats much of his perſon, offices, and grace, and of Chriſt myſtical, of the ſtate of his church, in the ſeveral ages of time; or it is that Revelation which was firſt made unto him, to which ſenſe the following words incline: which God gave unto him; not to him as he is God, for as ſuch he is omniſcient, and foreknew whatever would come to paſs, and needed no revelation to be made to him, but as he was man and mediator; and this was given him by God the Father, and put into his hands, to make known, as being a part of the adminiſtration of his prophetic office: the end of its being given him was, to ſhew unto his ſervant things which muſt ſhortly come to paſs; the Arabic verſion adds, in future ages; things that were to be hereafter, the accompliſhment of which was neceſſary, becauſe of the certain and unalterable decree of God, the good of his people, and his own glory; and theſe were to come to paſs quickly, in a very little time; not that they would all be fulfilled in a ſhort ſpace of time, for there are ſome things not fulfilled yet, tho' it is ſixteen hundred years ago, and more, ſince this revelation was made; and we are ſure there are ſome things that will not be accompliſhed till a thouſand years hence, and more, for the millennium is not yet begun; and after that is ended, there's to be a ſecond reſurrection, and a deſtruction of the Gog and Magog army; but the ſenſe is, that theſe things ſhould very quickly begin to be fulfilled, and from thence forward go on fulfilling till all were accompliſhed. Now to ſhew, to repreſent theſe things, in a clear manner, as the nature of them would admit of, to the ſervants of Chriſt, all true believers, that read and hear and diligently obſerve them, and eſpecially to the miniſters of the Goſpel, whoſe buſineſs it is to ſearch into them, and point them out to others, and particularly to his ſervant John, was this revelation made by Chriſt, who immediately anſwered this end: and he ſent, and ſignified it by his angel unto his ſervant John; he who is the Lord of angels, and to whom they are miniſtring ſpirits, ſometimes ſent one angel and ſometimes another; and by various emblems, ſigns, and viſions, repreſented and ſet before John, a faithful ſervant, and a beloved diſciple of his, the whole of this revelation.

Ver. 2. Who bore record of the word of God, &c.] Of the eſſential and eternal word of God, his only begotten Son; as John the Apoſtle did in his Goſpel, and in his Epiſtles, and alſo in this book; and which is a clear evidence of his being the writer of it. And of the teſtimony of Jeſus Chriſt; that is, the Goſpel, which teſtifies of the perſon of Chriſt, of the truth of his divinity, and reality of his human nature; of the union of the two natures, divine and human, in his perſon; of his ſeveral offices, of prophet, prieſt and king; of what he did and ſuffered for his people; and of the bleſſings of grace which they receive by him: and of all things that he ſaw; with his bodily eyes, as the human body of Chriſt, the miracles he wrought in it, the transfiguration of it on the mount, the crucifixion of it, and the piercing of it with a ſpear, and the reſurrection of it from the dead; and alſo all the viſions recorded in this book; and ſuch a faithful witneſs ſerves greatly to confirm the authority of this book, and to recommend the peruſal of it. The Complutenſian edition, and the Arabic verſion read, which are, and which ſhall, or muſt be hereafter, as in ver. 19.

Ver. 3. Bleſſed is he that readeth, &c.] This book of the revelation, privately, in his cloſet or family, carefully and diligently, with a deſire of underſtanding it; or publickly in the church of God, and endeavours to open and explain it to others; and may allude to the reading of the law and the prophets in the ſynagogues, which were not barely read, but expounded; ſee Acts xiii. 15. and xv. 21. and the rather this may be thought to be the ſenſe of the words, ſince there is a change of number in the next clauſe, and they that hear the words of this prophecy; that liſten attentively to the reading and expoſition of this book, and have ears to hear, ſo as to underſtand the prophecies contained in it; for the whole, when delivered to John, was a prophecy of things to come: but ſome verſions read the number alike in both clauſes; as either, bleſſed is he that readeth, and he that heareth, as the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions; or bleſſed are they that read, and they that hear, as the Arabic verſion: and keep thoſe things which are written therein; the laſt verſion adds, concerning this frail world; who not only read, and hear, but put in practice what they read and hear; for there are ſome things in this book which are of a practical nature, eſpecially in the Epiſtles to the ſeven churches; or the ſenſe is, happy are thoſe perſons that obſerve, and take notice of what is written herein, and meditate upon them, and well weigh them in their minds, and retain them in their memories. Now, tho' eternal happineſs does not depend upon, nor is procured by any of theſe means, as reading, hearing, and obſerving; yet there is a real happineſs, a true pleaſure, that does attend theſe things, which may ſtir up to a regard unto them; and for which purpoſe, the following words are added: for the time is at hand; when theſe things ſhould begin to be fulfilled.

Ver. 4. John to the ſeven churches which are in Aſia, &c.] In leſſer Aſia; their names are mentioned in ver. 11. grace be unto you, and peace; which is the common ſalutation of the Apoſtles in all their Epiſtles, and includes all bleſſings of grace, and all proſperity, inward and outward; ſee the note on Rom. i. 7. The perſons from whom they are wiſhed, are very particularly deſcribed, from him which is, and which was, and which is to come; which ſome underſtand of the whole Trinity; the Father by him, which is, being the I am that I am; the Son by him, which was, which was with God the Father, and was God; and the Spirit by him, which is to come, who was promiſed to come from the Father and the Son, as a comforter, and the Spirit of truth: others think Chriſt is here only intended, as he is in ver. 8. by the ſame expreſſions; and is he which is, ſince before Abraham he was the I am; and he which was, the eternal Logos or Word; and is to come, as the judge of quick and dead. But rather this is to be underſtood of the firſt perſon, of God the Father; and the phraſes are expreſſive both of his eternity, he being God from everlaſting to everlaſting; and of his immutability, he being now what he always was, and will be what he now is, and ever was, without any variableneſs, or ſhadow of turning: they are a periphraſis, and an explanation of the word Jehovah; which includes all tenſes, paſt, preſent, and to come. So the Jews explain this name in Exod. iii. 14. "Says R. Iſaac[k], the holy bleſſed God ſaid to Moſes, ſay unto them, I am he that was, and I am he that now is, and I am he that is to come, wherefore, אהיה, is written three times." And ſuch a periphraſis of God is frequent in their writings[l]. And from the ſeven ſpirits which are before his throne; either before the throne of God the Father; or as the Ethiopic verſion reads, before the throne of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; by whom are meant not angels, tho' theſe are ſpirits, and ſtand before the throne of God, and are ready to do his will: this is the ſenſe of ſome interpreters, who think ſuch a number of them is mentioned with reference to the ſeven angels of the churches; or to the ſeven laſt Sephirot, or numbers in the Cabaliſtic tree of the Jews; the three firſt they ſuppoſe deſign the three perſons in the Godhead, expreſſed in the preceding clauſe, and the ſeven laſt the whole company of angels: or to the ſeven principal angels the Jews ſpeak of. Indeed, in Tobit xii. 15. Raphael is ſaid to be one of the ſeven angels; but it does not appear to be a generally received notion of theirs, that there were ſeven principal angels. The Chaldee paraphraſe on Gen. xi. 7. is miſunderſtood by Mr. Mede, for not ſeven, but ſeventy angels are there addreſſed. It was uſual with the Jews only to ſpeak of four principal angels, who ſtand round about the throne of God; and their names are Michael, Uriel, Gabriel, and Raphael; according to them, Michael ſtands at his right hand, Uriel at his left, Gabriel before him, and Raphael behind him[m]. However, it does not ſeem likely that angels ſhould be placed in ſuch a ſituation between the divine perſons, the Father and the Son; and ſtill leſs, that grace and peace ſhould be wiſhed for from them, as from God the Father, and the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and that any countenance ſhould be given to angel-worſhip, in a book in which angels are ſo often repreſented as worſhippers, and in which worſhip is more than once forbidden them, and that by themſelves: but by theſe ſeven ſpirits are intended the Holy Spirit of God, who is one in his perſon, but his gifts and graces are various; and therefore he is ſignified by this number, becauſe of the fullneſs and perfection of them, and with reſpect to the ſeven churches, over whom he preſided, whom he influenced, and ſanctified, and filled, and enriched with his gifts and graces.

Ver. 5. And from Jeſus Chriſt, &c.] Who, tho' the ſecond perſon in the Trinity, is mentioned laſt, becauſe many things were to be ſaid of him; and who is deſcribed in all his offices: in his prophetic office, the faithful witneſs; as he is of his Father, of his mind and will, with reſpect to doctrine and worſhip; of his truth and faithfulneſs in his promiſes; and of his love, grace, and mercy to his choſen; and of himſelf, of his true deity, proper Sonſhip, and perfect equality with the Father; of his Meſſiahſhip, and of ſalvation through his obedience, ſufferings, and death; and of all truth in general, to which he has bore a faithful teſtimony ſeveral ways, in his miniſtry, by his miracles, at his death, and by the ſhedding of his blood to ſeal it; by his Spirit ſince, and by the miniſters of his word: he is deſcribed in his prieſtly office by the firſt-begotten of the dead; being the firſt that roſe from the dead by his own power, and to an immortal life; for tho' ſome few were raiſed before him, yet not by themſelves, nor to live for ever, but to die again. Moreover, he is the firſt-fruits of the reſurrection, the pledge and earneſt of it, as well as the efficient cauſe and exemplar of it. This character ſuppoſes that he died, as he did, for the ſins of his people; and that he roſe again from the dead, as he did, for their juſtification; and that he roſe firſt as their head and repreſentative, and opened the way of life for them. And he is deſcribed in his kingly office, for it follows, and the prince of the kings of the earth; which is not to be underſtood figuratively of the ſaints, who have power over ſin, ſatan, and the world, thro' the efficacious grace of Chriſt, and of whom he is prince or king; but literally of the kings and princes of this world, over whom Chriſt is king and Lord, who receive their crowns and kingdoms from him, and rule by him, and are accountable to him, as they one day muſt be. Next follows a doxology, or an aſcription of glory to him, unto him that hath loved us; his own, his people, his church, his choſen, and who are given him by his Father; theſe he has loved with an everlaſting and unchangeable love, with a love of complacency and delight, which paſſes knowledge, and will never end: and which he has ſhown in eſpouſing their perſons, undertaking their cauſe, aſſuming their nature, and in nothing more than in giving himſelf for them as a propitiatory ſacrifice, or in dying and ſhedding his precious blood for them, as is next expreſſed: and waſhed us from our ſins in his own blood; which ſhows, that theſe perſons were loved before waſhed; they were not firſt waſhed, and then loved, but firſt loved, and then waſhed. Love was the cauſe of waſhing, and not waſhing the cauſe of love: hence it appears, that they were in themſelves filthy, and unclean thro' ſin; and that they could not cleanſe themſelves by any thing they could do; and that ſuch was the love of Chriſt to them, that he ſhed his precious blood for them, which is a fountain opened, to waſh in for ſin, and which cleanſes from all ſin. This is to be underſtood, not of the ſanctification of their natures, which is the work of the Spirit, but of atonement for their ſins, and juſtification from them by the blood of Chriſt, whereby they are ſo removed, that they are all fair, and without ſpot. It is afterwards ſaid, that theſe ſame perſons are made prieſts; and it may be obſerved, that the prieſts were always waſhed, before they performed their ſervice, as ſuch [n]. The Alexandrian copy, and the Syriac and Arabic verſions read, and hath looſed us from our ſins in, or by his blood; that is, from the guilt of them, which was bound upon them.

Ver. 6. And hath made us kings and prieſts, &c.] The Alexandrian copy, and Complutenſian edition read, a kingdom, prieſts; and the Vulgate Latin verſion, a kingdom and prieſts; and the Arabic verſion, a kingdom of prieſthood; reference ſeems to be had to Exod. xix. 6. and ye ſhall be unto me a kingdom of prieſts; which the Jeruſalem Targum renders, ye ſhall be unto me, מלכין וכהנין, kings and prieſts; and ſo the Targum of Jonathan ben Uzziel paraphraſes it thus, and ye ſhall be before me, מלכין, kings, crowned with a crown, וכהנין, and prieſts miniſtring. Hence it is a common ſaying with the Jews, that all Iſraelites are the ſons of kings [o]; and ſometimes their doctors are called, מלכי תורה, kings of the law [p]: and they aſcribe the ſame thing to the word of the Lord, as is here attributed to Jeſus Chriſt: ſo the Targum of Jonathan on Deut. xxviii. 13. paraphraſes the words; "the word of "the Lord ſhall appoint or conſtitute you kings, "and not private perſons." Likewiſe they ſay [q], "that even a Gentile, if he ſtudies in the law, is, "ככהן גדול, as an high-prieſt." All which may ſerve to ſhow to what the reference is had in the text, and from whence the language is taken. But the words are uſed in a higher and greater ſenſe. The ſaints are made kings by Chriſt; they are ſo now; they have received a kingdom of grace, which can't be taken away; and they have the power of kings over ſin, ſatan, and the world, and all their enemies; and they live and fare like kings, and are clothed like them, in rich apparel, the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; and are attended as kings, angels being their life-guards; and they will appear much more ſo hereafter, when they ſhall reign on earth with Chriſt a thouſand years, ſhall ſit upon the ſame throne, and have a crown of life and righteouſneſs given them, and at laſt be introduced into the kingdom of glory. And they become ſuch by being the ſons of God, which power and privilege they receive from Chriſt, and ſo are heirs of God, and joint-heirs with him, and by being united to him. And he alſo makes them prieſts to offer up the ſpiritual ſacrifices of prayer and praiſe, and thoſe of a broken heart, and of a contrite ſpirit, and even their ſouls and bodies, as a holy, living, and acceptable ſacrifice unto God, by anointing and ſanctifying them by his Spirit: and they are made ſuch by him to God, and his Father; not to men, nor to angels. Now to him that has ſhown ſo much love, and beſtowed ſuch high favours and honours is the following aſcription made, to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever, Amen. The glory of his deity, and of all his offices; of his being the faithful witneſs, the firſt-begotten of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth; and of all the benefits and bleſſings, favours and honours received from him by his people: and dominion; over all creatures, and over all his ſaints, and eſpecially in his kingdom, in the laſt days, which will be an everlaſting one; and which is continually to be wiſhed and prayed for, that it would come, and come quickly. Amen; ſo let it be, and ſo it ſhall be.

Ver. 7. Behold he cometh with clouds, &c.] John carries on the account of Chriſt in his kingly office, one branch of which is to execute judgment; and deſcribes him by a future coming of his, which cannot be underſtood of his coming to take vengeance on the Jews, at the time of Jeruſalem's deſtruction, tho' that is ſometimes expreſſed in ſuch language, and with ſuch circumſtances, as here; ſee Matt. xxiv. 30. and xxvi. 64. becauſe if this revelation was made to John, in the latter end of Domitian's reign, as is commonly reported by the ancients, and in the year 95 or 96, as chronologers generally place it, it muſt be upwards of twenty years after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and therefore cannot relate to that; nor to his coming in a ſpiritual ſenſe to convert the Jews in the latter day; for this coming is perſonal, and with clouds, when he will be ſeen by every eye; all which circumſtances do not ſo well agree with that; beſides, all the kindreds of the earth will not lament on that account; the wicked will take little notice of it, the tribes of the Jews will rejoice at it, and ſo will all the converted Gentiles: it is better therefore to underſtand this of Chriſt's ſecond coming to judge the quick and dead, which is repreſented as juſt at hand, to denote the certainty of it; and a behold is prefixed to it, to excite attention, and to denote the importance of it: things of great moment, and very ſurprizing, will then be done; Chriſt will appear in great glory and majeſty, the dead in Chriſt will be raiſed, Chriſt's perſonal kingdom will take place, and the general judgment come on. The manner of his coming will be with clouds; either figuratively, with angels, who will attend him both for grandeur and ſervice, or literally, in the clouds of heaven; he ſhall deſcend in like manner, as he aſcended, and as Daniel propheſied he ſhould, Dan. vii. 13. Hence, one of the names of the Meſſiah, with the Jews, is, ענני, Anani [r], which ſignifies clouds; and his coming is ſo deſcribed, both to denote the grand and magnificent manner, in which he will come, making the clouds his chariots; and to ſtrike terror into his enemies, clouds and darkneſs being about him, thunder and lightening breaking out of them, as tokens of that vengeance, he comes to take upon them; as alſo the viſibility of his coming, he ſhall deſcend from the third heaven, where he now is, into the airy heaven, and ſit upon the clouds, as on his throne, and be viſible to all: hence it follows, and every eye ſhall ſee him; that is, every one that has eyes ſhall ſee him, or all men ſhall ſee him; the righteous ſhall ſee him, and be glad; they ſhall ſee him in his glory, as he is, and for themſelves, and be ſatisfied; they ſhall rejoice at the ſight of him; they will be filled with joy unſpeakable, and full of glory: but the wicked will ſee him and tremble; they will be filled with the utmoſt conſternation and aſtoniſhment; they will not be able to bear the ſight of him; they will flee from him, and call to the rocks and mountains to fall on them, and hide them from his face. And they alſo which pierced him; his hands, feet, and ſide, when they crucified him; both the Roman ſoldiers, who actually did it, and the body of the Jewiſh nation, the rulers and common people, who conſented to it, and at whoſe inſtigation it was done; theſe being raiſed from the dead, ſhall ſee him with their bodily eyes, whom they ſo uſed. And all kindreds of the earth ſhall wail becauſe of him; all the wicked, in the ſeveral parts of the world, will lament, and wring their hands, and expreſs the inward terror and horror of their minds, at his appearing; they will fear his reſentment of all their wicked words and actions; will dread his wrath, and tremble at his righteous judgment: even ſo, Amen; ſays John, and ſo ſay all true believers; what the wicked lament, they rejoice at; they deſire the coming of Chriſt, they love it, look and long for it; they believe it ſhall be, and wiſh it may be quickly, as in ch. xxii. 20. This expreſſion of faith in, and deſire after the coming of Chriſt, is ſignified by two words, the one Greek, and the other Hebrew; ſuggeſting, that this is an article of faith among all the ſaints of all nations, Jews and Gentiles, and is what they are wiſhing and waiting for.

Ver. 8. I am Alpha and Omega, &c.] Theſe are the words of Chriſt himſelf, appearing at once, and confirming what John had ſaid of him, concerning his perſon, offices, and future coming: Alpha is the firſt letter, and Omega the laſt in the Greek alphabet, and ſignifies that Chriſt is the firſt and the laſt, as it is interpreted in ver. 11, 17. and is a character often given to the divine being in prophetic writings; ſee Iſ. xli. 4. and xliv. 6. and xlviii. 12. and is no ſmall proof of the proper deity of Chriſt. Alpha is uſed by the Jews for the chief of perſons or things; "Macmas and Mezonicha (names of places) are "אלפא לסלת, Alpha for fine flour;" that is, the beſt fine flour is there, they are the chief places for it: and again, "Tekoah is אלפא לשמן, Alpha for "oil," or the chief place for oil; the beſt oil was to be had there [s]: ſo Chriſt, he is the Alpha, the chief as to his divine nature, being God over all, bleſſed for ever; and in his divine Sonſhip, none, angels or men, are in ſuch ſenſe the Son of God as he is; and in all his offices, of prophet, prieſt, and king; he is the prophet, the great prophet of the church, never man ſpake like him, or taught as he did; he is the moſt excellent prieſt, that exceeds Aaron and all his ſons, having an unchangeable prieſthood; and he is the king of kings, and lord of lords; he has the chief place in the church, he is the head of it, and has in all things the pre-eminence; he is the chief in honour and dignity, is at the right-hand of God, and has a name above every name: he alſo in ſome ſenſe may be ſaid to be the Omega, the laſt and the loweſt; as in his ſtate of humiliation, he was not only made lower than the angels, but than man; he was deſpiſed and rejected of men, and ſcarcely reckoned a man, a worm, and no man; and he humbled himſelf, and became obedient to death, even the death of the croſs. Moreover, theſe letters, Alpha and Omega, being the firſt and the laſt in the alphabet, may ſtand for the whole; and it ſeems to be a proverbial expreſſion taken from the Jews, who uſe the phraſe from Aleph to Tau for the whole of any thing, which two letters in the Hebrew alphabet ſtand in the ſame place as theſe; accordingly the Syriac verſion renders it Olaph and Tau; and the Arabic verſion Aleph and Ye. It is ſaid in Ezek. ix. 6. begin at my ſanctuary; "R. "Joſeph taught, do not read my ſanctuary, but "ſanctified ones; theſe are the children of men who "confirm the whole law, מאלף ועד תיו, from Aleph "to Tau;" the ſame as from Alpha to Omega, or from one end to the other: and a little after "ſays "R. Levi, Tau is the end of the ſeal of the holy "bleſſed God, for ſays R. Chanina, the ſeal of the "holy bleſſed God is אמת, truth; ſays R. Samuel "bar Nachmani, theſe are the children of men who "confirm the whole law from Aleph to Tau [t]." So Chriſt, he is the Alpha and Omega, the firſt and laſt, the chief, the whole of things; as of the covenant of grace, he is the firſt and laſt of it, he is the mediator, ſurety, and meſſenger of it, and the ratifier and confirmer of it, he is the covenant itſelf, all its bleſſings and promiſes are in him; he is the ſum and ſubſtance of the ſcriptures, both of the law and of the Goſpel; he is the fulfilling end of the law, and he is the ſubject-matter of the Goſpel; he ſtands in the firſt verſe in Geneſis, and in the laſt of the Revelation; he is the Alpha and Omega, the firſt and laſt, the whole and all in the buſineſs of ſalvation, in the affair of juſtification before God, in the ſanctification of his people, in their adoption, and eternal glorification; he ſtands firſt and laſt in the book of God's purpoſes and decrees, in the book of the covenant, in the book of the creatures, or creation, being the firſt cauſe, and laſt end of all things, in the book of providence, and in the book of the ſcriptures: likewiſe, as theſe two letters include all the reſt, this phraſe may be expreſſive of the perfection of Chriſt, who as God has the fulneſs of the Godhead, all the perfections of the divine nature in him; and as man, is in all things made like unto his brethren; and as mediator, has all fullneſs of power, wiſdom, grace, and righteouſneſs in him, in whom all the ſaints are compleat; and this may alſo denote his eternity, he having none before him, nor any after him; and which alſo is ſignified by ſome other following expreſſions: the beginning and the ending; the Alexandrian copy, the Complutenſian edition, the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions, leave out this; which ſeems to be explanative of the former clauſe, Alpha being the beginning of the alphabet, and Omega the ending of it; and properly belongs to Chriſt, who knows no beginning, nor will he have any end with reſpect to time, being from everlaſting to everlaſting; and agrees with him as the firſt cauſe of all things, both of the old and new creation, and the laſt end to which they are all referred, being made for his pleaſure, honour, and glory: theſe things now ſaith the Lord; that is, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; the Alexandrian copy, the Complutenſian edition, and the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions read, the Lord God; and the Ethiopic verſion only God: which is, and which was, and which is to come; who is God over all, was God from all eternity, and is to come as ſuch; which he will ſhow by his omniſcience and omnipotence, diſplayed in the judgment of the world: who is now a ſaviour of all that come to God by him; was ſo under the Old Teſtament diſpenſation, being the Lamb ſlain from the foundation of the world; and is to come, as ſuch, and ſhall appear a ſecond time unto ſalvation to them that look for him: particularly this phraſe is expreſſive of the eternity of Chriſt, who is, was, and ever will be; and of his immutability, who is the ſame he was, and will be for ever the ſame he is, and was, unchangeable in his perſon, in his love, and in the virtue of his blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice; he is the ſame to-day, yeſterday, and for ever. This ſame phraſe is uſed of God the Father in ver. 4. and is a further proof of the deity of Chriſt; and which is ſtill more confirmed by the following character, the Almighty; as he appears to be, by creating all things out of nothing; by upholding all creatures in their beings; by the miracles he wrought on earth; by the reſurrection of himſelf from the dead; by obtaining eternal redemption for his people; and by his having the care and government of them upon him, whom he keeps, upholds, bears, and carries to the end, thro' all their infirmities, afflictions, temptations, and trials.

Ver. 9. I John, who alſo am your brother, &c.] Here begins the narrative of the viſions and propheſies of this book, the former verſes containing a general preface to the whole; and this, and the two following verſes are the introduction to the firſt viſion, which John ſaw; who deſcribes himſelf by his name, I John, the Evangeliſt and Apoſtle, a ſervant of Chriſt, and a beloved diſciple of his; one that was well known to the ſeven churches to whom he writes, and who had no reaſon to doubt of his fidelity in the account he gives them; and alſo by his relation to them as a brother, not in a natural, but in a ſpiritual ſenſe, they and he belonging to that family that is named of Chriſt, to the houſhold of God, and of faith, and having one and the ſame Father, even God: thus, tho' he was an elder, an Evangeliſt, yea, an Apoſtle by office, yet he puts himſelf on a level with the ſeveral members of theſe churches, as he was a believer in Chriſt: and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jeſus Chriſt; many are the afflictions and tribulations of the ſaints; theſe lie in the way to the kingdom; and they are companions and partners with one another in them, both by enduring the ſame, and by their ſympathy and compaſſion with each other; and as they go ſharers in the troubles of this life, ſo they do, and ſhall in the kingdom; in the kingdom of grace now, being all of them made kings and prieſts unto God, and in the kingdom of Chriſt on earth, where they will all reign with him a thouſand years, and in the kingdom of glory, where they ſhall reign together to all eternity; and in the mean while, they join in the exerciſe of the grace of patience, of which Chriſt is the author, exemplar, and object; they are directed by the Spirit of God into a patient waiting for Chriſt, or a patient expectation of his coming, kingdom, and glory: the Alexandrian copy reads, patience in Chriſt; and the Complutenſian edition patience in Chriſt Jeſus: this ſame perſon John, who gives this account of himſelf, was in the iſle that is called Patmos; but now Palmoſa; it is one of the iſlands of the Cyclades, in the Archipelago, or Icarian Sea, and ſometimes called the Ægean Sea, and had its name from the turpentine-trees in it; it is, as Pliny [v] ſays, about thirty miles in circumference; and it lay next to the churches on the continent, and is ſaid to be about forty miles ſouth-weſt of Epheſus, from whence John came thither, and to which church he writes firſt: how he came here he does not ſay, concealing, thro' modeſty, his ſufferings; he did not come here of his own accord; Ignatius ſays [w], John εφυγαδευετο, was baniſhed to Patmos; by Domitian emperor of Rome, as Irenæus ſays [x], at the latter end of his reign, about the year 95 or 96. and as Tertullian [y], after he had been caſt into a veſſel of flaming oil, where he got no hurt: and this baniſhment was not for any immorality, any capital ſin he had committed, but for the word of God; for believing in Chriſt the eſſential Word of God, and for profeſſing and bearing record of him, both in preaching and writing: and for the teſtimony of Jeſus; for the Goſpel of Chriſt, ſee ver. 2. for embracing it, adhering to it, and publiſhing it: it is generally thought that John wrote his Revelation in this iſle, tho' ſome think it is not to be concluded from theſe words, but the contrary; that he had been here, but now was not, but at Epheſus, where he wrote what he had a viſion of here.

Ver. 10. I was in the Spirit on the Lord's-day, &c.] Not on the Jewiſh ſabbath, which was now aboliſhed, nor was that ever called the Lord's-day, and had John meant that, he would have ſaid on the ſabbath-day; much leſs the Jewiſh paſſover, but the firſt day of the week is deſigned; ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it on the firſt day; and is ſo called juſt as the ordinance of the ſupper is called the Lord's-ſupper, being inſtituted by the Lord, and the Lord's-table, 1 Cor. x. 21. and xi. 20. and that becauſe it was the day in which our Lord roſe from the dead, Mark xvi. 9. and in which he appeared at different times to his diſciples, John xx. 19, 26. and which the primitive churches ſet apart for his worſhip and ſervice, and on which they met together to hear the word, and attend on ordinances, Acts xx. 7. 1 Cor. xvi. 1. and Juſtin Martyr [z] tells us, who lived within about fifty years after this time, that on the day called τη τȣ ηλιȣ ημεϱα, Sunday (by the Greeks) the Chriſtians met together in one place, and read the ſcriptures, and prayed together, and adminiſtred the ordinance of the ſupper; and this, he adds, was the firſt day in which God created the world, and our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt roſe from the dead; yea Barnabas [a], the companion of the Apoſtle Paul, calls this day the eighth day, in diſtinction from the ſeventh-day-ſabbath of the Jews, and which he ſays is the beginning of another world; and therefore we keep the eighth day, adds he, joyfully, in which Jeſus roſe from the dead, and being manifeſted, aſcended unto heaven: and this day was known by the ancients by the name of the Lord's-day; as by Ignatius [b], Irenæus [c], Tertullian [d], Origen [e], and others; for it muſt be ſome day that was known by this name, otherwiſe it is mentioned to no purpoſe, becauſe it would not be diſtinctive from others; for which reaſon it cannot merely deſign the day in which John ſaw this viſion, becauſe the Lord appeared on it to him, for this would not diſtinguiſh it from any other day. Some have conjectured that this was not the weekly Lord's-day obſerved by the Chriſtians, but the anniverſary of Chriſt's reſurrection; and ſo the Ethiopians ſtill call Eaſter, Schambatah Croſtos, the Sabbath of Chriſt: to underſtand it of the former is beſt. Now, tho' John was driven from the houſe and worſhip of God, and could not join with the ſaints in the public worſhip of that day; yet he was employed in ſpiritual contemplations and exerciſes, and was under a more than ordinary influence of the Spirit of God; and his ſpirit or ſoul was wholly intent upon, and taken up with divine and ſpiritual things, with viſions and repreſentations that were made unto his mind, which he perceived in his ſpirit, and not with the organs of his body; he was in an extaſy of ſpirit, and knew not ſcarcely whether he was in the body or out of it: and heard behind me a great voice as of a trumpet; which was the voice of the Son of God, as appears by what it uttered, ver. 11. and is afterwards ſaid to be as the ſound of many waters; and it was behind him, as in Iſ. xxx. 21. it came to him at an unawares, and ſurprized him, while he was in deep meditation on ſpiritual things: and it was a very great one; it was the voice of a great perſon, of the Son of God, and expreſſed great things, and was very ſonorous and loud, it was like the ſound of a trumpet; and this was partly to awaken the attention of John to it, and partly to expreſs the certainty of the relation he gives of what it ſaid; had it been a low, muttering voice, it might be queſtioned whether John rightly underſtood it, and whether he might not be miſtaken in the account of what he heard; but it being ſo loud and clear, there is no room for ſuch a doubt.

Ver. 11. Saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the firſt and the laſt, &c.] Theſe characters, which are repeated here, ſee the note on ver. 8. are left out in the Alexandrian copy, the Complutenſian edition, the Vulgate Latin, Syriac and Ethiopic verſions; but are very fitly retained, to point out the perſon that ſpeaks; to expreſs his dignity, deity, and eternity; to excite the attention of John, and to give weight to what he ſaid: and what thou ſeeſt write in a book; that it might remain, and be read of all men, and be profitable to the churches in the then preſent age, and in all future ones: and ſend it unto the ſeven churches which are in Aſia; from whence it appears, that not only the ſeven following Epiſtles were ſent to the churches, but that after John had written in a book the account of all the viſions that he ſaw, the whole was ſent unto them, for their uſe and benefit; and who are particularly named: unto Epheſus; which was a city of Ionia, and which Pliny calls [f] the work of the Amazons, and the light of Aſia; it was famous for the temple of Diana, but more ſo for having a church of Chriſt in it: hither the Apoſtle Paul came and preached, and continued for the ſpace of two years; where a very famous church was planted by him, and proper officers appointed, to whom he wrote a very excellent Epiſtle: this is now a miſerable deſolate place, not a city, but a village; and is called by the Turks, Aiaſalik: of this place and church ſee the notes on Acts xviii. 19. and xx. 17. and unto Smyrna; another city of Ionia, ſo called from Smyrna, the wife of Theſeus [g], the builder of it; or from Smyrna an Amazon [h], the reliques of whoſe marble buſt are to be ſeen there to this day: it lies about forty-ſix miles from Epheſus, and is by the Turks now called Eſmir, and is ſtill a place famous, not for pompous buildings, but for number of inhabitants, riches, and commerce: and unto Pergamos; this was a city of Myſia, ſituated by the river Caicus, formerly the ſeat of the kings of Attalia, and was bequeathed by Attalus their laſt king, to the Romans: it is famous for being the native place of Galen the phyſician, and of Apollodorus the rhetorician, maſter to Auguſtus Cæſar, and for the invention of parchment in it, from whence it ſeems to have its name: it is now called by the Turks, Bergamo, and is almoſt ſixty-four miles from Smyrna: and unto Thyatira; a city of Lydia, near the river Lycus, formerly called Pelopia, and Euhippia, and now by the Turks, Ak Hiſſar, or the white camp, and is diſtant from Pergamos about forty-eight miles; ſee the note on Acts xvi. 14. and unto Sardis; this was another city of Lydia, ſituated at the ſide of mount Tmolus; it was the metropolis of Lydia, and the ſeat of king Crœſus, and is now called by the Turks, Sart; and inſtead of a famous city, it is now an obſcure little village, of mean houſes, and ſcarce any other inhabitants in it than ſhepherds and cowkeepers, and is thirty-three miles from Thyatira: and unto Philadelphia; another city of Lydia, ſituated at the foot of mount Tmolus; it had its name from Attalus Philadelphus, the builder of it; it is now called by the Turks, Alah Shahr, or The Fair City, tho' there is nothing beautiful or magnificent in it; it is diſtant from Thyatira about twenty-ſeven miles: and unto Laodicea; another city of Lydia, near the river Lycus, firſt named Dioſpolis, afterwards Rhoas, and is now, by the Turks, called Eſki Hiſſar, or The Old Camp; and is inhabited by none, unleſs it be in the night, by wolves, foxes, and jackals, as our countryman Dr. Smith affirms, in his Notitia of the ſeven churches of Aſia; from whom I have taken the account of theſe cities as they now are, and the reſt from Pliny and Ptolomy chiefly.

Ver. 12. And I turned to ſee the voice that ſpake with me, &c.] The Complutenſian edition reads, and there I turned; and ſo the Arabic verſion; that is, to ſee who it was that ſpoke, from whom the voice came, and by whom it was uttered; ſee Exod. xx. 18. and being turned, I ſaw ſeven golden candleſticks; which repreſented the ſeven churches, ver. 20. in alluſion to the ſeven lamps in the candleſtick of the ſanctuary, Exod. xxv. 37. Zech. iv. 2. compared to candleſticks, for the uſe of them, which is to hold forth light; theſe have none of themſelves, but what is put into them, and being put into them, they hold it forth; ſo the churches of Chriſt have no light of themſelves, but what is put into them; and the light which is put into them, is not the mere light of nature, nor the law of Moſes, but the Goſpel of Chriſt; which diſpels darkneſs, and is the means of enlightning ſinners, and gives light to ſaints, by which they walk and work; and this light is put into the churches by Chriſt, whoſe the Goſpel is, and who is himſelf come a light into the world; and being put here by him, it is held forth by them, eſpecially by the miniſters of it, who are the lights of the world, both by their miniſtry, and in their lives and converſations: and they are compared to golden candleſticks, becauſe of their excellency, preciouſneſs, and value, in the eſteem of Chriſt; and for their brightneſs and purity in doctrine, diſcipline, and life; and for their ſplendor, glory, and beauty; and for their ſtability and duration; and tho' they are liable to corruption and taint, yet may be melted, refined, and purified as gold.

Ver. 13. And in the midſt of the ſeven candleſticks, one like unto the Son of man, &c.] By whom is meant not an angel, for he ſpeaks of himſelf as a divine perſon, as the Alpha and Omega, the firſt and the laſt, phraſes not applicable to any created beings; and of himſelf alſo as having been dead, which angels are not capable of, and of living again, and of living for evermore, and having power over death and the grave, which no creature has; yea, he calls himſelf expreſly the Son of God, ver. 11, 17, 18. and ch. ii. 18. ſo that Chriſt is manifeſtly deſigned, who as a divine perſon, appeared in a form like that individual human nature which was at his Father's right-hand; for that human nature of his, or he as the Son of man, was not in the midſt of theſe candleſticks, or churches, but he the Son of God was in a form like to his human nature in heaven; ſo before his incarnation, he is ſaid to be like unto the Son of man, in Dan. vii. 13. to which there is a reference here, and not only in this, but in ſome other parts of the deſcription; ſo after his aſcenſion, he in a viſionary way appears, not in that real human nature he aſſumed, but in a form like unto it, that being in heaven; but when he was here on earth he is called the Son of man, and not like to one; tho' even ſuch a phraſe may expreſs the truth and reality of his humanity, for who more like to the Son of man than he who is ſo? ſee John i. 14. Phil. ii. 7. now Chriſt was ſeen by John in the midſt of the candleſticks or churches, and among whom he walked, as in ch. ii. 1. which is expreſſive of his preſence in his churches, and which he has promiſed unto the end of the world; and of the gracious viſits he makes them, and the ſweet communion and converſation he indulges them with, to their joy and comfort; as well as the walks he takes among them for his own delight and pleaſure; and where he is, abides and takes his turns, particularly as a prieſt, in which form he now appeared, as the antitype of Aaron the high-prieſt, to trim the lamps or candles in the candleſticks, to cauſe them to burn more brightly and clearly: cloathed with a garment down to the foot; which ſome underſtand of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; this is called a garment, a wedding-garment, the beſt or firſt robe, the robe of righteouſneſs; and is fitly compared to one, it being unto, and upon believers, put upon them, and which covers their perſons, keeps them warm and comfortable, and beautifies and adorns them; and is a very beautiful, pure, and ſpotleſs robe; and reaches to the feet, covers all the members of Chriſt's myſtical body, the meaneſt and loweſt, as well as the more excellent; the weakeſt believer as well, and as much, as the ſtrongeſt: but not Chriſt myſtical, but perſonal is here repreſented; others therefore think, that this long garment is a ſign of gravity and wiſdom, it being uſual for men of power and authority, and learning, as the Jewiſh Sanhedrim, Scribes and Phariſees, to wear long garments; but it ſeems rather to deſign a prieſtly robe; the robe of the ephod wore by the high-prieſt is called by this name in the Septuagint verſion of Exod. xxviii. 4, 31. and ſo it is by Joſephus [i], who ſpeaking of the hyacinthine tunic, or robe of blue, ſays, this is ποδηρης, a garment down to the foot, which in our language is called Meeir; rather it ſhould be מעיל, Meil, which is its Hebrew name; and ſo this robe is expreſſed by the ſame word here, uſed by Philo the Jew [k], and by Jerom [l]; ſo Maimonides [m] ſays, the length of his garment was to the top of his heel: and in the habit of a prieſt did Chriſt now appear; and ſo he is deſcribed in his prieſtly office, in the midſt of his churches, having made atonement for their ſins by the ſacrifice of himſelf; and now as their high-prieſt, had entered into the holieſt of all with his own blood and righteouſneſs; bore their names on his breaſt-plate, appeared in the preſence of God on their account, and ever lived to make interceſſion for them: and girt about the paps with a golden girdle; as the high-prieſt was with the girdle of the ephod, which was made of gold, of blue, purple, ſcarlet, and fine-twined linen, Exod. xxviii. 8. and with which the prieſts were girt about the paps, or breaſt, as Chriſt is here deſcribed: it is ſaid of the prieſts in Ezek. xliv. 18. they ſhall not gird themſelves with any thing that cauſeth ſweat; which ſome render in ſweating-places; and ſo ſome Jewiſh writers interpret it, which will ſerve to illuſtrate the preſent place; "ſays R. Abai [n], (upon citing Ezek. xliv. 18.) they don't gird themſelves in the place in which they ſweat; according to the tradition, when they gird themſelves they don't gird neither below their loins, nor above their arm-holes, but over-againſt their arm-holes;" the Gloſs ſays, upon their ribs, againſt their arm-pit, that is, about their breaſt, or paps; and which is ſtill more plainly expreſſed by the Targum on the above place, which paraphraſes it thus, "they ſhall not gird about their loins, but they ſhall gird על לבבהון, about their heart;" ſo Joſephus [o] ſays, the high-prieſt's garment was girt about the breaſt, a little below the arm-holes. Chriſt's girdle, as a king, is the girdle of faithfulneſs and righteouſneſs, which is about his loins; and his girdle as a prophet, is the girdle of truth; but as a prieſt, it is the girdle of love; it is that which has conſtrained him to put himſelf in the room and ſtead of his people, to aſſume their nature, give himſelf a ſacrifice for them, and intercede on their behalf: this is like a girdle, round, from everlaſting to everlaſting; is ſaid to be golden, becauſe of the excellency, purity, glory, and duration of it; and becauſe it is very ſtrong, affectionate, and hearty, it is ſaid to be a girdle about the paps, near where is the heart, the ſeat of love; and this may alſo denote the power, ſtrength, and readineſs of Chriſt to aſſiſt and help his churches in every time of need.

Ver. 14. His head and his hairs were white like wool, as white as ſnow, &c.] In alluſion to the white head and hairs of old men, ſaid to be hoary, or like the hoar froſt, and compared to an almond-tree in bloom, Eccl. xii. 5. and here to wool and ſnow for whiteneſs; ſee Ezek. xxvii. 18. and according to the Jews [p], צמר לבן, white wool, is the wool of a lamb juſt yeaned, about which a cloth is bound that it may not be defiled; now theſe metaphors are expreſſive of the antiquity of Chriſt, who is the everlaſting Father, and whoſe goings forth were of old, even from everlaſting; and of his ſenile gravity and prudence, for with the antient is wiſdom; he is the wiſdom of God, in whom all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge are hid; and alſo of his glory and majeſty, being the brightneſs of his Father's glory; and likewiſe of his true and proper deity, ſince this deſcription is the ſame with that of the antient of days in Dan. vii. 9. for by his head is not here meant either God the Father, who is ſometimes called the head of Chriſt, 1 Cor. xi. 3. nor his divine nature, which is the chief and principal in him; nor his headſhip over the church; nor do his hairs intend his elect, which grow upon him, and are nouriſhed by him, and are ſo called for their number, weakneſs, and purity: and his eyes were as a flame of fire; ſee Dan. x. 6. which may deſign the omniſcience of Chriſt, which reaches to all perſons, and things, and is very ſearching and penetrating, and diſcovers and brings to light things the moſt dark and obſcure; and alſo Chriſt's eyes of love upon his own people, which have both heat and light; Chriſt's love never waxes cold, and being ſhed abroad in the hearts of his people, warms theirs; and in the light of his gracious countenance do they ſee light; and his love like flames of fire melts their ſouls into a true and genuine repentance for ſin: or elſe, rather his eyes of wrath and vengeance, as ſet upon his enemies, are here meant; which will be fierce and furious, bring ſwift and ſudden deſtruction on them, before which there is no ſtanding, and from which there is no fleeing. It is ſaid of Auguſtus Cæſar, that he had fiery eyes [q].

Ver. 15. And his feet like unto fine braſs, as if they burned in a furnace, &c.] By which is meant, not his human nature in a ſuffering ſtate; or his people, the meaner and lower parts of his myſtical body, in a like ſtate; or his Apoſtles and miniſters, who are ſupporters of his church, and run to and fro with ſpiritual knowledge, for which, tho' they ſuffer much, are permanent and glorious; but either the power of Chriſt in bearing up and ſupporting his people, in the care and government and defence of them; or his ways, works, and walks in his churches, and all his providential adminiſtrations towards them, which are holy, juſt, and righteous, and will be manifeſt; or his wrath and vengeance in treading down and trampling upon his enemies: and his voice as the ſound of many waters; meaning his Goſpel, as preached by his Apoſtles and miniſters, which was heard far and near; ſee Rom. x. 18. and which made a great noiſe in the world; or his voice of vengeance on his enemies, which will be very terrible, and irreſiſtible.

Ver. 16. And he had in his right-hand ſeven ſtars, &c.] The angels or paſtors of the ſeven churches, ver. 20. The miniſters of the Goſpel are compared to ſtars, becauſe of their efficient cauſe, God, who has made them, and fixed them in their proper place, and for his glory; and becauſe of the matter of them, being the ſame with the heavens, ſo miniſters are of the ſame nature with the churches; and becauſe of their form, light, which they receive from the ſun, ſo preachers of the Goſpel receive their light from Chriſt; and becauſe of their multitude and variety, ſo the miniſters of the Goſpel are many, and their gifts different; and chiefly for their uſefulneſs, to give light to others, to direct to Chriſt, and point out the way of ſalvation, and to rule over the churches: nor was it unuſual with the Jews to compare good men to ſtars, and to the ſeven ſtars. The Targumiſt [r] ſays, the ſeven lamps in the candleſtick anſwer to the ſeven ſtars to which the righteous are like. Theſe are led and held in Chriſt's right-hand; which ſhows that they are dear unto him, and highly valued by him; that they are his, in his poſſeſſion, at his diſpoſe, whom he uſes as his inſtruments to do his work; and whom he upholds and ſuſtains that they ſhall not ſink under their burdens; and whom he preſerves from falling, and ſo holds them that they ſhall ſtand faſt in the faith, and not be carried away with the error of the wicked: and out of his mouth went a ſharp two-edged ſword; which deſigns the word of God; ſee Eph. vi. 17. Heb. iv. 12. This comes out of the mouth of Chriſt, it is the word of God, and not of man; and is a ſharp ſword, contains ſharp reproofs for ſin, ſevere threatnings againſt it, and gives cutting convictions of it, and is a two-edged one; and by its two edges may be meant law and Goſpel; the law lays open the ſins of men, fills with grief and anguiſh for them, yea, not only wounds, but kills; and the Goſpel cuts down the beſt in man, his wiſdom, holineſs, righteouſneſs, and carnal privileges, in which he truſts; and the worſt in man, teaching him to deny ungodlineſs and worldly luſts: or the word of God may be ſo called, becauſe it is a means both of ſaving and of deſtroying; it is the ſavour of life unto life to ſome, and the ſavour of death unto death to others; and is both an offenſive and defenſive weapon; it is for the defence of the ſaints, againſt ſatan, falſe teachers, and every other enemy; and an offenſive one to them, which cuts them down, and deſtroys them and their principles: or this may mean the judiciary ſentence of Chriſt upon the wicked, which will be a fighting againſt them, and a ſmiting of the nations of the world; ſee ch. ii. 16. and xix. 15. and Pſ. cxlix. 6. which the Jews interpret of the law [s]: and his countenance was as the ſun ſhineth in his ſtrength; at noon-day; ſuch was the countenance of Chriſt at his transfiguration, Matt. xvii. 2. and deſigns here, the manifeſtation of himſelf in the glories of his perſon, and in the riches of his grace; who is the ſun of righteouneſs that ariſes upon his people with light, heat, joy, and comfort; ſee the phraſe in Judges v. 31. which the Jewiſh writers underſtand of the ſtrength of the ſun both in the ſummer ſolſtice, and in the middle of the day, or at noon, at which time its heat is ſtrongeſt, and it uſually ſhines brighteſt; the deſign of the metaphor is to ſet forth the glory and majeſty of Chriſt.

Ver. 17. And when I ſaw him, &c.] The glorious perſon here deſcribed, who was juſt behind him, and of whom he had a full view, being ſo near him: I fell at his feet as dead; thro' conſternation and fear, the ſight was ſo amazing and terrible; the appearance of a divine perſon in any degree of majeſty and glory, has had ſome conſiderable effect upon men, even upon the beſt of men; but John ſeems to be more affected with it than any, as the viſion was the more grand and illuſtrious: Manoah was afraid he ſhould die, but did not fall down as dead; Ezekiel fell upon his face, but had his ſenſes; Daniel's comelineſs turned into corruption, and he retained no ſtrength, he fainted, and fell into a deep ſleep; ſee Judges xiii. 22. Ezek. i. 28. Dan. x. 8, 9. but John fell down at once, as dead. This pannic which good men were ſeized with, at any more than ordinary appearance of God, or apprehenſion of his preſence, aroſe from a notion that preſent death enſues a ſight of him; hence Jacob wonders, and is thankful, that he had ſeen God face to face, and yet his life was preſerved, Gen. xxxii. 30. and ſuch an effect as here, upon the body, any uncommon diſcovery of the divine being has, partly through the weakneſs of human nature, which in its preſent circumſtances is not able to bear the rays and glories of a divine perſon; hence the reſurrection of the body in power, glory, and immortality, incorruption and ſpirituality, is neceſſary to the enjoyment of God and Chriſt in a ſtate of bliſs and happineſs to all eternity; and partly thro' a conſciouſneſs of ſin, which ever ſince the fall of Adam has occaſioned fear and perturbation of mind, even in the beſt of ſaints, when they have had any ſenſe of the divine majeſty being near, in an unuſual form of glory: and he laid his right hand upon me; even the ſame in which he had, and held the ſeven ſtars; and which ſhowed what an affection he had for him, in what eſteem he had him, what care he took of him, and what power he would exert in lifting up, ſtrengthening, and ſupporting him; for he laid not his hand on him in wrath and anger, but in love; and in order to raiſe him up and revive his ſpirits, and remove his fears; hence the Ethiopic verſion renders it, and he took hold on me with his right-hand, and lifted me up; as he does all who in a ſpiritual ſenſe fall at his feet; it is always ſafe and comfortable falling there: ſaying unto me, fear not; language which John had heard from him in the days of his fleſh, and might therefore be choſe now on purpoſe that he might the ſooner know who he was, and be comforted; ſee Matt. xiv. 27. Luke xii. 32. I am the firſt and the laſt; a way of ſpeaking uſed by God when he is about to comfort his people, and remove their fears; ſee Iſ. xli. 4. and xliv. 6. and xlviii. 12. and is uſed by Chriſt for the ſame purpoſe here; and ſo is a proof of his true and proper deity, and is expreſſive of his eternity, and alſo of his dignity and excellency; he is the firſt and laſt in divine predeſtination, in the covenant of grace, in creation, in the buſineſs of ſalvation, and in his church, by whom, and for whom, are all things in it; he is the head of the body, the ſon over his own houſe, and the firſt-born among many brethren; and ſo the Alexandrian copy reads here, the firſt-born and the laſt. ראשן, the firſt, is a name of the Meſſiah with the Jews[t]; ſee the note on ver. 8.

Ver. 18. I am he that liveth, &c.] As the eternal God, who has life in himſelf, originally, eſſentially, and inderivatively, and is the fountain and author of life to others; and who ever lived as the mediator and redeemer, and ſtill does, and ever will, yea, even when he was dead as man: and was dead; he died the death of the croſs, for the ſins of his people, in due time, and but once; and it was but a ſhort time he was held under the power of death, and will never die more: and behold I am alive for evermore, Amen; he was always alive as God, or he was always the living God, and ever will be; and he is now alive as man, and will for ever continue ſo; and he is alive to God, he lives by him, with him, and to his glory; and he is alive to the benefit and advantage of his redeemed ones, for whom he died; he ever lives to make interceſſion for them; he roſe again from the dead for their juſtification; their being quickened together with him, and their being begotten again to a lively hope, are owing to his being alive; and as their reconciliation is by his death, ſo their ſalvation, or the application of it to them, is by his interceding life; and his reſurrection is the cauſe of theirs: this is very fitly ſaid to John, who was fallen as dead at the feet of Chriſt, and might be to animate him againſt the fears of death, or whatever he was to meet with on account of Chriſt; as well as to make himſelf known unto him, who had before known him, living, dying, and riſen again. The word Amen is left out in the Alexandrian copy, the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions; but is in others, and is rightly retained, either as an aſſeveration of Chriſt to the truth of what is before ſaid, or as an aſſent of John's unto it, who was a proper witneſs both of the death and reſurrection of Chriſt: and have the keys of hell and death; or of death and hell, as the words are tranſpoſed in the Alexandrian copy and Complutenſian edition, in the Vulgate Latin, and in all the Oriental verſions, agreeable to ch. vi. 8. and xx. 13, 14. by which phraſe is expreſſed the power of Chriſt over both: his power over death is ſeen in taking away perſons by death when he pleaſes, the inſtances of Ananias and Sapphira are proofs of this; and in delivering perſons from death when near it, as the centurion's ſervant, Peter's wife's mother, and the nobleman's ſon of Capernaum; and in raiſing perſons from the dead, as Jairus's daughter, the widow of Naim's ſon, and Lazarus, when he was here on earth; and in his raiſing up his own body when dead, and which will alſo appear in raiſing all the dead at the laſt day: and his power over hell, by which may be meant the grave, or the place of the departed, and ſeparate ſouls, or the place of the damned and of the devils, which are there, will be ſeen in opening the graves at the time of the reſurrection, when death and hell, or the grave, will deliver up the dead in them, at his command; and in retaining or ſending out the ſeparate ſouls in hades; and in opening the doors of hell, and caſting in the wicked, and deſtroying them ſoul and body there; and in ſhutting them up, that they cannot come out from thence who are once in; and in binding ſatan, and caſting him into the bottomleſs pit, and ſhutting him up there, the key of which he has in his hand; and in preſerving his church and people from his power and malice, ſo that the gates of hell cannot prevail againſt them. This is an expreſſion of the ſovereignty, reignty, power, and authority of Chriſt; and is deſigned to encourage and ſupport John under his preſent concern and anxiety of mind about the perſon he ſaw in this viſion: מפתח של קבורה, the key of the grave, and of the reſurrection of the dead, is frequently ſaid by the Jews to be one of the keys which are in the hands of the holy bleſſed God, and his only; not in the hands of an angel or a ſeraph, or any other [u].

Ver. 19. Write the things which thou haſt ſeen, &c.] The Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, and the Complutenſian edition read, write therefore the things, &c. meaning what he had now ſeen, the viſion of one like to the Son of man, amidſt the golden candleſticks, with ſeven ſtars in his right-hand, and as above deſcribed; this was what he had ſeen ver. 12, 13, 16. for it does not refer to what he had ſeen of Chriſt in the days of his fleſh, but to what he had now ſeen in this repreſentation of him: and the things which are; the ſtate of the churches of Chriſt in the Apoſtolic age, and at that time ſignified by the Epheſian church, and that part of the Smyrnæan which John lived to ſee: and the things which ſhall be hereafter; from hence unto the end of the world, in ſucceſſive generations, ſignified by the reſt of the churches, and in the viſions of the ſeals, trumpets, and vials.

Ver. 20. The myſtery of the ſeven ſtars which thou ſaweſt in my right-hand, &c.] The ſenſe is, that John was to write the myſtery of theſe ſtars, or the myſtical ſenſe of them: and the ſeven golden candleſticks; the myſtery, or myſterious ſenſe of them alſo; for the words are in a continued connexion with the preceding verſe, and have reſpect to the following interpretation of them, and to the Epiſtles in the following chapter, which are myſtical, and prophetical of the ſtate of the churches in all ſucceeding ages: the ſeven ſtars are the angels of the ſeven churches; that is, the ſeven ſtars which John ſaw in Chriſt's right-hand, repreſent the angels, or paſtors of the ſeven churches of Aſia, and in them all the paſtors and miniſters of the churches in all the periods of time until Chriſt's ſecond coming. Here it may be obſerved, that the miniſters of the Goſpel are not only compared to ſtars, for which ſee the note on ver. 16. but likewiſe to angels, which ſignifies meſſengers, as miniſters are ſent forth by Chriſt with the meſſage of the Goſpel, to publiſh to the ſons of men; and as the angels are Chriſt's miniſtring ſpirits, ſo are the preachers of the Goſpel the miniſters of Chriſt, that wait upon him, and ſerve him in the miniſtry of the word, and in the adminiſtration of ordinances; and there is ſome agreement between them in holineſs, knowledge, zeal, diligence, and watchfulneſs, in their work; as alſo they may be ſo called for the honour and eſteem in which they are, both with Chriſt and his churches; and who like the angels rejoice at the converſion of ſinners, and the enlargement of the intereſt of Chriſt: and the ſeven candleſticks which thou ſaweſt, are the ſeven churches; repreſent the ſeven churches of Aſia, and in them all the churches of Chriſt, in ſucceſſive ages, to the end of time; the reaſons why theſe are ſignified by candleſticks, ſee the note on ver. 12. and that they are prophetical of the churches of Chriſt in the ſeveral periods of time, until he comes again, will appear from the following conſiderations: the whole book is called a prophecy, and a revelation of things that were ſhortly to come to paſs, and it would be very ſtrange, and very unſuitable to its title ſhould the three firſt chapters contain nothing prophetical in them; the characters of the divine perſon under which theſe ſeven churches are ſaluted, as he which is, and was, and is to come, the Alpha and Omega, the firſt and the laſt, ſhow that the things written to them belong to the Goſpel-church-ſtate, from the beginning to the end of it, for what other reaſon can be given for ſuch a peculiar uſe of them? the very grand and illuſtrious appearance of Chriſt, antecedent to theſe Epiſtles, when compared with the appearance of God, previous to the opening of the ſealed book, and the ſeven ſeals of it, may induce one to conclude, that as the latter introduces the book-prophecy in this revelation, ſo the former introduces the church-prophecy; nor does it ſeem that ſuch a magnificent appearance is neceſſary to the bare ſending of ſome letters of advice to ſome particular churches: moreover, as there are ſome things in theſe Epiſtles too common to all the churches and miniſters to be reſtrained to ſome particular ones, ſuch as Chriſt's affording his preſence among them, ſignified by his walking amidſt the candleſticks, and his care of, and reſpect unto the miniſters of the Goſpel, expreſſed by holding ſeven ſtars in his right-hand; for can it be thought that Chriſt only granted his preſence to the ſeven churches in Aſia? or that the paſtors of thoſe churches were the only ones Chriſt holds in his right-hand? ſo there are others too particular to certain periods to belong to thoſe churches, as that Smyrna ſhould have a crown of life, Pergamos hidden manna, and a white ſtone, Thyatira the morning ſtar, and Philadelphia be delivered from a temptation that would reach all the world, and is not yet come; for which no reaſon can be given in the literal ſenſe of theſe Epiſtles; and it is ſtrange that only ſeven churches ſhould be ſent to, and theſe only in Aſia; why not to the churches in Africa and Europe? and theſe churches alſo, all but Epheſus, very obſcure ones; why not to the churches at Antioch, Corinth, Rome, &c. and it is ſtranger ſtill, if, as Epiphanius ſays [w], there was no church at Thyatira till after the writing of theſe letters: nothing can account for all this, but their being prophetical, there being ſomething in the number, names, ſituation and caſe of theſe churches, which were emblematical of the ſtate of the church in ſucceſſive periods of time; to which may be added, that the Epiphonema at the cloſe of every Epiſtle, he that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit ſaith unto the churches, ſhows, that each Epiſtle to every church is not deſigned for that church only, but for churches; and for what churches but for thoſe who are repreſented in that period of time, ſince they muſt be unſuitable to one another? and beſides, this concluding ſentence ſhows, that what is contained in each Epiſtle is ſomething intricate, abſtruſe, and parabolical, it being only uſed when ſome ſuch thing is delivered; ſee Matt. xi. 15. and xiii. 9, 43. There is one obſervation more to be made, and which runs through all the Epiſtles, and that is, that the names of the ſeveral churches, and the titles which Chriſt aſſumes in writing to each, as well as the ſubject-matter of the Epiſtles, have reſpect to the ſeveral diſtinct periods of the church; all which will more clearly appear in the following notes upon them.

CHAP. II.

THIS chapter contains the Epiſtles to the churches at Epheſus, Smyrna, Pergamos, and Thyatira. It begins with that to Epheſus, in which the ſender of it deſcribes himſelf by ſome of his characters mentioned in the preceding chapter; takes notice of ſome things commendable in this church, ver. 1, 2, 3. reproves her for leaving her firſt love; gives ſome advice upon it; threatens her in caſe of nonrepentance; yet notwithſtanding commends her for her deteſtation of ſome bad practices; and concludes the Epiſtle with a phraſe exciting to attention to what is written, and with a promiſe to them that are conſtant and conquering, ver. 4, 5, 6, 7. next follows the Epiſtle to the church at Smyrna, in which the ſender aſſumes ſome of his former titles; takes notice of her works in general, and of her afflictions in particular, and of the blaſphemy of others, ver. 8, 9. fortifies her againſt a great affliction to be endured, deſcribed by its author, kind, uſe, and duration; and exhorts to faithfulneſs and conſtancy, with a promiſe of a crown of life, ver. 10. and cloſes the Epiſtle in the ſame form as the preceding, promiſing ſecurity from the ſecond death, to the perſevering and conquering chriſtian, ver. 11. and next in order is the Epiſtle to the church at Pergamos, in which the ſender takes to him one of the above characters in the deſcription of him; obſerves her works and place of abode, and commends her faithfulneſs to him in the worſt of times and places, ver. 12, 13. yet exhibits a complaint againſt her for having, and conniving at perſons of bad principles and practices, called Balaamites and Nicolaitans, ver. 14, 15. exhorts to repentance, and in failure of it threatens to come and fight againſt them; and cloſes the Epiſtle in the ſame manner as the two former, with a promiſe of hidden manna, a white ſtone, and a new name to him that overcomes, ver. 16, 17. and the laſt Epiſtle in this chapter is that to the church at Thyatira, in which the ſender makes uſe of ſome other titles and characters of his, before-mentioned; takes notice of her good works, and yet ſignifies he had a controverſy with her, for permitting a falſe propheteſs to teach in her, who ſeduced men to fornication and idolatry, ver. 18, 19, 20. whoſe impenitence is complained of, and which was aggravated by having ſpace for repentance given her, ver. 21. wherefore, in caſe of continuance in impenitence, he threatens both her and her followers with tribulation and death, whereby the omniſcience and juſtice of Chriſt would be manifeſt to all the churches, ver. 22, 23. and then another and better ſort of men in this church are addreſſed, who are deſcribed as not having imbibed the doctrine of the falſe propheteſs, and as not approving the depths of ſatan, or her doctrines of devils; and theſe are told that no other burden ſhould be laid on them than was, and are exhorted to hold faſt what they had, until the coming of Chriſt, ver. 24, 25. and for their encouragement to hold on to the end, many promiſes are made unto them reſpecting their power and rule over their enemies, and the happy days that they ſhould enjoy, ver. 26, 27, 28. and the Epiſtle is concluded with the uſual epiphonema, ver. 29.

Ver. 1. Unto the angel of the church of Epheſus write, &c.] Of the city of Epheſus, ſee the notes on ch. i. 11. and on Acts xviii. 19. The church here ſeems to have been founded by the Apoſtle Paul, who continued here two years, by which means all Aſia heard the word of the Lord Jeſus, Acts xix. 10. of this church, ſee the note on Acts xx. 17. it is named firſt, becauſe it was the largeſt, moſt populous, and famous, and was neareſt to Patmos, where John now was, and moſt known to him, it being the place where he had reſided; and it was the place from whence the Goſpel came to others, and ſpread itſelf in Leſſer Aſia; but eſpecially it is firſt written to, becauſe it repreſented the church in the Apoſtolic age; ſo that this letter contains the things which are, ch. i. 19. and in its very name, to the ſtate of this church in Epheſus, there may be an alluſion; either to εφεσις, epheſis, which ſignifies deſire, and may be expreſſive of the fervent love of that pure and apoſtolical church to Jeſus Chriſt at the beginning of it; their eager deſire after more knowledge of him, and communion with him; after his word and ordinances, and the maintaining of the purity of them; after the ſpread of his Goſpel, and the enlargement of his kingdom in the world; as well as after fellowſhip with the ſaints, and the ſpiritual welfare of each other: the alluſion may be alſo to αφεσις, apheſis, which ſignifies remiſſion, or an abatement; and ſo may point out the remiſſneſs and decay of the firſt love of theſe primitive chriſtians, towards the cloſe of this ſtate; of the abatement of the fervency of it, of which complaint is made in this Epiſtle, and not without cauſe. This Epiſtle is inſcribed to the angel of this church, or the paſtor of it; why miniſters are called angels, ſee the note on ch. i. 20. ſome think this was Timothy, whom the Apoſtle Paul ſent thither, and deſired him to continue there, 1 Tim. i. 3. there was one Oneſimus biſhop of Epheſus, when Polycarp was biſhop of Smyrna, of whom he makes mention in his Epiſtle [x] to the Epheſians, and bids fair to be this angel; tho' if any credit could be given to the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions [y], the biſhop of this place was one John, who is ſaid to be ordained by the Apoſtle John, and is thought to be the ſame with John the elder [z], the maſter of Papias; but though only one is mentioned, yet all the elders of this church, for there were more than one, ſee Acts xx. 17. are included; and not they only, but the whole church over whom they preſided; for what was written was ordered to be ſent to the church, and was ſent by John, ſee ch. i. 4. 11. the letter was ſent to the paſtor, or paſtors, to the whole body of miniſters, by them to be communicated to the church; and not only to this particular church, did this letter, and the contents of it belong, but to all the churches of Chriſt within the period of the apoſtolic age, as may be concluded from ver. 7. Theſe things ſaith he that holdeth the ſeven ſtars in his right-hand; the Syriac verſion reads, that holds all things, and theſe ſeven ſtars in his right-hand; for the explanation of this character of Chriſt, ſee the note on ch. i. 16. only let it be obſerved how ſuitably this is prefixed to the church at Epheſus, and which repreſents the ſtate of the churches in the times of the Apoſtles; in which place, and during which interval, our Lord remarkably held his miniſtring ſervants as ſtars in his right-hand; he held and protected the Apoſtle Paul for two years in this place, and preſerved him and his companions ſafe amidſt the uproar raiſed by Demetrius the ſilverſmith about them; here alſo he protected Timothy at a time when there were many adverſaries, and kept the elders of this church pure, notwithſtanding the erroneous perſons that roſe up among them; and laſt of all the Apoſtle John, who here reſided, and died in peace, notwithſtanding the rage and fury of his perſecutors: likewiſe Chriſt in a very viſible manner held all his faithful miniſters during this period in his right-hand, ſafe and ſecure, until they had done the work they were ſent about; and preſerved them in purity of doctrine and converſation; ſo that their light in both reſpects ſhone brightly before men. Moreover, as this title of Chriſt is prefixed to the Epiſtle to the firſt of the churches, and its paſtor or paſtors, it may be conſidered as relating to, and holding good of all the miniſters of the Goſpel and paſtors of the other churches; and likewiſe of all the churches in ſucceſſive ages to the end of the world, as the following one alſo refers to all the churches themſelves: who walketh in the midſt of the ſeven golden candleſticks; ſee the notes on ch. i. 12, 13. Chriſt was not only preſent with, and took his walks in this church at Epheſus, but in all the churches of that period, comparable to candleſticks, which held forth the light of the Goſpel, and that in order as the antitype of Aaron, to trim theſe lamps, and likewiſe in all his churches to the end of the world; ſee Matt. xxviii. 20.

Ver. 2. I know thy works, &c.] The good works, both of miniſters and churches; no evil works are mentioned, nor any thing complained of in this church, but an abatement of the fervour of her firſt love. Chriſt, as the omniſcient God, knows all the works of his people, and the ſprings, and principles, and ends, and views of them, whether they are done in obedience to him, and ſpring from love to him, and are performed in his ſtrength, and by his grace, and are directed to his glory; and ſuch he takes notice of, approves of, and is well-pleaſed with, not as the ground of his delight in their perſons, but as the fruits of his own grace; and during the apoſtolic age, churches and miniſters were very diligent in working; yea, they were laborious, as follows: and thy labour; particularly the labour of miniſters of the Goſpel, in theſe times, in the frequent preaching of it, in ſeaſon, and out of ſeaſon; and in the conſtant adminiſtration of the ordinances; and in the diligent exerciſe of church-diſcipline. The work of the miniſtry is a laborious work, to the mind in ſtudying, and to the body in the outward diſcharge of it; and it becomes more ſo, thro' the malice and oppoſition of enemies, and the weakneſs of friends; and ſuch as are diligent and laborious deſerve reſpect, even double honour; and though they may not have it from men, yet Chriſt takes notice of them, and their labours, and commends them for them, and will reward them. And thy patience; as this may refer to the miniſters of the word, it may denote their patience in ſuffering reproaches and perſecutions for the ſake of the Goſpel, which they bore patiently, chearfully, and conſtantly; and in bearing the infirmities of weak ſaints, in their ſeveral communities; and in reclaiming and reſtoring perſons out of the way; and in waiting for the ſucceſs of their miniſtry, and their continuance and perſeverance in it. And as this may reſpect members of churches, it may point at their patience under afflictions from the hand of God, and under reproach and perſecution from men, for their embracing and profeſſing the Goſpel; and their patient waiting for the heavenly glory, and their firm expectation of it, and their perſeverance unto it. And how thou canſt not bear them that are evil; that were ſo either in their principles, or in their practices, or both; men that lived immoral lives, and held erroneous doctrines, theſe the primitive miniſters and churches could not bear; they had an inward abhorrence and deteſtation of them in their minds; they could not bear them in communion with them; they admoniſhed them according to the nature of their offence, and caſt out ſuch as were obſtinate and incorrigible; they withdrew from ſuch as were diſorderly, and rejected hereticks after the firſt and ſecond admonition; their zeal for church diſcipline is here taken notice of to their commendation. And thou haſt tried them which ſay they are apoſtles, and are not, and haſt found them liars; this doubtleſs was done in the church at Epheſus, where, after the Apoſtle Paul's departure, grievous wolves, in ſheeps clothing, entred, and men aroſe from among themſelves, ſpeaking perverſe things, Acts xx. 29, 30. yet it was not peculiar to that church, tho' it was to the apoſtolic age; for in no other could men, with any face, pretend to be the Apoſtles of Chriſt; and ſuch there were, who ſprung up in the ſeveral churches at Jeruſalem, Corinth, Galatia, and elſewhere, who called themſelves the Apoſtles of Chriſt, but were falſe Apoſtles, deceitful workers; they pretended to have their doctrine, call, miſſion, and commiſſion immediately from Chriſt, as the true Apoſtles had, and a power to work miracles, and talked of inſpirations and revelations by the Spirit of God. Now the Apoſtles, miniſters, and churches of thoſe times tried their pretenſions and doctrines by the word of God, and by the fruits, which they produced in themſelves, and others; and thro' that diſcerning of ſpirits, which they had, they found them to be liars; that they were not, nor had they what they pretended to be, and have, and expoſed them as ſuch.

Ver. 3. And haſt born, &c.] Not evil men, nor falſe Apoſtles, but burdens, as the Ethiopic verſion reads, and as the word ſignifies; meaning afflictions, reproaches, and perſecutions, which preſſed ſore, and lay heavy on theſe miniſters and churches; and yet they bore them with conſtancy and chearfulneſs, and were not moved by them. The Arabic verſion reads, and thou haſt born me; my name and Goſpel, among the Gentiles, and carried it from place to place; ſee Acts ix. 15. and haſt patience; which they had from God, as his gift, and which they had in their hearts, and in exerciſe, and found it uſeful to them. It was in exerciſe in a ſuitable time, and it continued with them; it was not worn out thro' the length and greatneſs of their trials. And for my name ſake haſt laboured; which may refer either to enduring ſufferings for Chriſt's name's ſake, for his Goſpel's ſake, for righteouſneſs ſake, for the ſake of the elect, and for the ſake of the honour, glory, and intereſt of Chriſt; or to labouring in the miniſtry, not for filthy lucre ſake, nor for party ſake, but for the honour of Chriſt, and the good of ſouls; and there never was an interval, in which this was more true: and haſt not fainted; ſo as to ſink under the burden born; to have patience quite tired out; to be weary of labouring for Chriſt's name ſake; and ſo as to give out, and quit the ſervice of Chriſt.

Ver. 4. Nevertheleſs I have ſomewhat againſt thee, &c.] So the Jews repreſent God ſaying, concerning their fathers, Abraham, &c. יש לי עליהם, I have ſomething againſt them[a]. Chriſt has nothing againſt his people, his faithful miniſters, and true churches, in a judicial way, or to their condemnation, for there is none to them that are in him; but he has often many things to complain of in them, and to rebuke and chaſtize them for, in a way of providence: and what he had againſt the church at Epheſus, and againſt the churches in the period which that repreſents, follows, becauſe thou haſt left thy firſt love; by which is meant, not hoſpitality to ſtrangers, or an affectionate care of the poor of the church, or a zealous concern to feed the flock, and maintain church-diſcipline; but the love of the ſaints to God, and Chriſt, and one another, which appeared at the beginning of this church-ſtate, when they were all of one heart, and one ſoul, as generally at firſt converſion love is the warmeſt; and ſo it was at the firſt planting of Goſpel-churches, and therefore here called firſt love. Now this, though it was not loſt, for the true grace of love can never be loſt, yet it was left; it abated in its heat and fervour; there was a remiſſneſs in the exerciſe of it; what our Lord had foretold ſhould be before the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, was fulfilled in this period of time, the love of many waxed cold, Matt. xxiv. 12. thro' the prevalence of corruption in ſome; and thro' an overlove to the world, as in Demas, and others; and thro' a deſire of eaſe and freedom from reproach and perſecution; and thro' the introduction of errors, which damp the heat of love, and ſpirit of religion; and through the contentions and diviſions among themſelves, as at Corinth, Galatia, and elſewhere, which greatly weakened their love to one another, and to divine things; and which was very diſpleaſing to Chriſt, who, for the reſtoring of them, gives the following advice. Compare with this 2 Tim. i. 15.

[a] Peſikta Rabbati apud Yalkut Simeoni, par. 2. fol. 60. 4.

Ver. 5. Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, &c.] Believers cannot totally and finally fall away from the grace which they have received; but they may fall into ſin, and from a degree of grace, and the exerciſe of it, as theſe firſt and pure churches did, from ſome degree of their love to God, and Chriſt, and one another; and therefore are called upon to remember, mind, and obſerve from what degree of it they were fallen; in order to bring them under a conviction, and acknowledgment of their evil, and a ſenſe of their preſent ſtate, and to quicken their deſires after a reſtoration to their former one: and repent; of their coldneſs and lukewarmneſs, of the remiſſneſs of their love, and of thoſe evils which brought it upon them: and do the firſt works; of faith and love, with the like zeal and fervour, which will ſhow the repentance to be ſincere and genuine; ſo the Arabic verſion reads, and exerciſe the former works, to wit, charity or love. The Jews have a ſaying [b], "if a man repents, don't ſay to him, remember, מעשיך הראשונים, thy firſt works;" which they ſeem to underſtand of evil works; but former good works are to be remembered and done, to ſhew the truth of repentance for evil ones. Or elſe I will come unto thee quickly; not in a ſpiritual way, to pay a love-viſit, nor in a judicial way, to take vengeance, or inflict puniſhment, but in a providential way, to rebuke and chaſtize: and will remove thy candleſtick out of his place, except thou repent; or thee out of the candleſtick, the paſtor from the church, either by perſecution, or by death; or elſe the church, and church-ſtate itſelf, ſignified by a candleſtick; ſee the note on ch. i. 12. and may deſign a ſhaking and an unſettling of it, which is ſometimes done by violent perſecutions, and by falſe teachers, and their doctrines, and by the diviſions and contentions of ſaints among themſelves; and by the former particularly was there a change made in the ſtate of this apoſtolic church, when it paſſed into the Smyrnæan one, which was a period of great perſecution and diſtreſs; for this cannot be underſtood of the total removing of the church-ſtate itſelf quickly, no not of Epheſus itſelf; for tho' there is not now indeed, nor has there been for many hundred years, a church of Chriſt in that place, yet there was one till the times of Conſtantine, when there was none in any of the other ſeven cities, and a long time after; ſee the note on Acts xx. 17. which ſhows, that this was not a commination to that church literally, but to the ſtate of the church, which that repreſented; nor does it intend the utter abolition of that church, for the apoſtolical church ſtill continued, tho' it ceaſed to be in the circumſtances it was before.

Ver. 6. But this thou haſt, that thou hateſt the deeds of the Nicolaitans, &c.] Tho' theſe chriſtians had left their firſt love, yet they bore an hatred to the filthy and impure practices of ſome men, who were called Nicolaitans; who committed fornication, adultery, and all uncleanneſs, and had their wives in common, and alſo eat things offered to idols; who were ſo called, as ſome think [c], from Nicolas of Antioch, one of the ſeven deacons in Acts vi. 5. tho' as to Nicolas himſelf, it is ſaid [d], that he lived with his own lawful married wife, and no other, and that his daughters continued virgins all their days, and his ſon incorrupt; and that theſe men, ſo called, only ſhrouded themſelves under his name, and abuſed a ſaying or action of his, or both, to patronize their wicked deeds: he had uſed to adviſe, ϖαραχρησθαι τη σαρκι, by which he meant a reſtraining of all carnal and unlawful luſts; but theſe men interpreted it of an indulgence in them, and ſo gave themſelves up to all uncleanneſs; and whereas, he having a beautiful wife, and being charged with jealouſy, in order to clear himſelf of it, he brought her forth, and gave free liberty to any perſon to marry her as would; which indiſcreet action of his theſe men choſe to underſtand, as allowing of community of wives. Dr. Lightfoot conjectures, that theſe Nicolaitans were not called ſo from any man, but from the word, נכולה, Nicolah, let us eat, which they often uſed, to encourage each other to eat things offered to idols. However this be, it is certain that there were ſuch a ſett of men, whoſe deeds were hateful; but neither their principles nor their practices obtained much in this period of time, tho' they afterwards did; ſee ver. 15. Profeſſors of the chriſtian religion in general abhorred ſuch impure notions and deeds, as they were by Chriſt: which alſo I hate; all ſin is hateful to Chriſt, being contrary to his nature, to his will, and to his Goſpel; and whatever is hateful to him, ſhould be to his people; and where grace is, ſin will be hateful, both in themſelves, and others; and mens deeds may be hated, when their perſons are not; and hatred of ſin is taken notice of by Chriſt, with a commendation.

Ver. 7. He that hath an ear, &c.] Such who have new ears given them, as all have, who are made new creatures; ſuch who have their ears circumciſed, and opened by the Spirit of God; who hear with underſtanding, affection, and faith; who try what they hear, and approve, embrace, and retain that which is good. Let him hear what the Spirit ſaith unto the churches; let ſuch hearken, and liſten with attention to what is ſaid by the Spirit, in what goes before, and follows after, in this Epiſtle, deſigned for the uſe of all the churches; from whence it appears, that this Epiſtle was endited by the Spirit of God, and is of divine inſpiration; that it was not intended for the ſingle uſe of the church at Epheſus, but of all the churches; and not of the ſeven churches only, tho' the Alexandrian copy reads, to the ſeven churches; but of all the churches in that period of time, which the Epheſine church repreſents; and which may alſo be uſeful to the churches of Chriſt in all other ages and periods of time. And moreover, it may be concluded from hence, that there are in this Epiſtle, and ſo in all the reſt, for the ſame words are ſubjoined to them all, ſome things which are parabolical and prophetical, and not obvious to every one's underſtanding and view; for a like expreſſion is uſed by our Lord, when he had delivered any thing in a parabolical way, or was obſcure; ſee Matt. xi. 15. and xiii. 9. To him that overcometh; the falſe Apoſtles, falſe teachers, and their doctrines; coldneſs, lukewarmneſs, and remiſſneſs in love; the impure tenets and practices of the Nicolaitans: will I give to eat of the tree of life; by which is meant Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, in alluſion to the tree of life in the garden of Eden; and is ſo called, becauſe he is the author of life, natural, ſpiritual, and eternal; and becauſe of his fruit, the bleſſings of life and grace, that are in him, of which believers may eat by faith, and which they find to be ſoul-quickening, comforting, ſtrengthening, and ſatiſfying; and which are Chriſt's gift to them, even both the food they eat, and the faith by which they eat, are his gifts. So Chriſt, under the name of wiſdom, is called the tree of life, in Prov. iii. 18. and this is a name which is ſometimes given by the Jews to the Meſſiah[e]: which is in the midſt of the paradiſe of God; as the tree of life was in the garden of Eden, Gen. ii. 9. The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read, the paradiſe of my God; the God of Chriſt, as well as of his people; and by which may be meant, either the church on earth, which is as a paradiſe, Cant. iv. 12. in the midſt of which Chriſt is, affording his gracious preſence, and reaching forth his grace, and the benefits of it, to his people; or heaven, ſee the note on 2 Cor. xii. 4. ſaid to be of God, becauſe it is of his preparing, and where he dwells, and in the midſt of which Chriſt, the tree of life, is; and this ſhows, that he is to be come at by faith, and his fruit to be eaten, and lived upon; and he is to be beheld and enjoyed by all his ſaints, as he is now, and will be more perfectly hereafter.

Ver. 8. And unto the angel of the church in Smyrna write, &c.] Of the city of Smyrna, ſee the note on ch. i. 11. That there was a church of Chriſt here is not to be doubted, tho' by whom it was founded is not certain; very likely by the Apoſtle Paul, who was in thoſe parts, and by whoſe means all Aſia heard the Goſpel of Chriſt, Acts xix. 10. Some think the preſent angel, or paſtor of this church, was Polycarp, the diſciple of John. Irenæus[f], who knew him, ſays he was appointed biſhop of Smyrna by the Apoſtles. Here he ſuffered martyrdom, and was buried: the large amphitheatre, in which he was put to death, is ſtill to be ſeen, and his ſepulchre is yet preſerved in this place[g]: a very famous epiſtle, ſent by this church at Smyrna to the churches at Pontus, giving an account of the martyrdom of Polycarp, and others, is extant in Euſebius[h]. According to the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions[i], the firſt biſhops of Smyrna were Ariſto Stratæas and Ariſto the ſecond, and Apelles, of whom mention is made in Rom. xvi. 10. and who is reckoned among the ſeventy diſciples; ſee the note on Luke x. 1. and is ſaid to be biſhop of Smyrna before Polycarp; who ſucceeded Polycarp, I do not find; but it is ſaid there was a church at Smyrna in the third century; and ſo there was in the beginning of the fourth, ſince there was a biſhop from hence in the council at Nice: and in the fifth century, mention is made of ſeveral biſhops of this place; as of Cyrus a native of Conſtantinople; and Protherius, who, 'tis thought, ſucceeded him, and was preſent in the ſynod at Chalcedon; and Æthericus, who aſſiſted at three ſynods in this century, at Conſtantinople, Epheſus, and Chalcedon: and in the ſixth century there was a biſhop of Smyrna, in the fifth ſynod held at Rome and Conſtantinople: and even in the eighth century, one Antony, a monk, ſupplied the place of the biſhop of Smyrna in the Nicene ſynod[k]. The Turks have in this place now thirteen moſques, the Jews two ſynagogues, and of the chriſtians there are two churches belonging to the Greeks, and one to the Armenians[l]. This church, and its paſtor, repreſent the ſtate of the church under the perſecutions of the Roman emperors. Smyrna ſignifies myrrhe, which being bitter of taſte, is expreſſive of the bitter afflictions, and perſecutions, and deaths, the people of God in this interval endured; and yet, as myrrhe is of a ſweet ſmell, ſo were thoſe ſaints in their ſufferings for Chriſt, exceeding grateful and well-pleaſing to him; wherefore nothing is ſaid by way of complaint to this church; not that ſhe was without fault, but it was proper to uſe her tenderly in her afflicted ſtate: and, as Dr. More obſerves, as myrrhe was uſed in the embalming of dead bodies, it may point to the many deaths and martyrdoms of the ſaints in this period, whereby their names and memories are perpetuated and eternized. Theſe things ſaith the firſt and the laſt, which was dead, and is alive. Of theſe characters of Chriſt, ſee the notes on ch. i. 8, 11, 17, 18. and they are very appoſitely mentioned, to encourage the ſaints under their ſufferings of death; ſince Chriſt, who is the eternal God, had in human nature taſted of the bitterneſs of death for them, and was riſen again; ſuggeſting, that tho' they were called to undergo the bittereſt deaths for his ſake, they ſhould be raiſed again as he was, and live with him for ever. The Ethiopic verſion reads, thus ſaith the Holy Spirit; but it can't be ſaid of him that he was dead.

Ver. 9. I know thy works, &c.] Good works, as before in ver. 2. and tribulation; this is Chriſt's legacy to his people, and which lies in their way to heaven; and never was the way of any to heaven more ſtrowed with it than was the way of the ſaints in this period. But Chriſt took notice of it, and of them in it; he knew their ſouls in adverſity, and remarked their patience under it, and their conſtancy, and cloſe adherence to him: and poverty; which was true in a literal ſenſe, thro' the ſpoiling of their goods, to which they were expoſed for the profeſſion of Chriſt: nothing is more contemptible among men than poverty, yet Chriſt takes notice of it, and owns his people in it; for this poverty came not by ſin, but by ſufferings for his ſake: but thou art rich; they were rich in faith, and heirs of a kingdom, tho' poor in this world; they were rich with the riches of Chriſt, with the bleſſings of the covenant, with the graces of the Spirit, and in good works; they were kings and prieſts unto God, had a kingdom of grace here, and a right to the kingdom of glory hereafter; and were heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Chriſt. And I know the blaſphemy of them which ſay they are Jews, and are not; who aſſerted themſelves to be the true Iſrael of God, Jews that were ſo inwardly, regenerate perſons, or truly chriſtians; for the chriſtians, baptized perſons [m], were by the heathens called Jews; but theſe were not, they profeſſed chriſtianity in words, but in works denied it; they were men of bad principles and practices, and both blaſphemed the ways and doctrines of Chriſt themſelves, and cauſed them to be blaſphemed by others alſo; they were falſe chriſtians, nominal profeſſors, and ſhunned perſecution for the Goſpel; who were not what they would be thought to be: theſe were the broachers of hereſies in this period of time, in which there was a multitude of them, and which chiefly reſpected the doctrine of the Trinity, and the perſon of Chriſt; and they were introducers of Pagan and Jewiſh rites into the church, and were men of flagitious lives and converſations, and paved the way for the man of ſin: but are the ſynagogue of ſatan; were the children of the devil, imitated him, and were influenced by him, and were the fore-runners of antichriſt, whoſe coming was after the working of ſatan.

Ver. 10. Fear none of thoſe things which thou ſhalt ſuffer, &c.] God's people undergo ſufferings of various ſorts, as the chriſtians of thoſe times did, ſcourgings, impriſonment, confiſcation of goods, and death itſelf in various ſhapes; and theſe are certain, they ſhall ſuffer them; they are all known before hand to Chriſt, and he ſometimes gives his people previous notice of them, nor ſhould they indulge a ſlaviſh fear about them. It is reported of Polycarp, biſhop of this church at Smyrna, in a letter written by the church itſelf [n], that three days before he ſuffered, he dreamed his pillow, on which he laid his head, was on fire; upon which awaking, he ſaid to thoſe that were by him, that he ſhould be burnt for Chriſt; and when he came to ſuffer, as he was led along, a voice was heard by the by-ſtanders, Polycarp, be ſtrong, and play the man. Behold, the devil ſhall caſt ſome of you into priſon; which has been the lot of many of the ſaints, and was of ſome, even of the faithful miniſters of the word in this interval; in which ſatan had an hand, inſtigating their enemies to prevent and ſtop the progreſs of the Goſpel, and deter others both from preaching and profeſſing it: the end was in the permiſſion of it, that ye may be tried; that their graces might be tried, their faith, love, zeal, courage, faithfulneſs, and conſtancy. Suffering times are trying times, whether men are real chriſtians or no; whether they have the true grace of God or not; and whether the principles they hold are right and true, and are worth, and will bear ſuffering for: and ye ſhall have tribulation ten days; meaning it may be the ten perſecutions under the Roman emperors; the firſt was under Nero, in the year 64 or 66; the ſecond was under Domitian, about the year 93; the third was under Trajan, in the year 104; the fourth was under Hadrian, in the year 125; the fifth was under Marcus Antoninus, in the year 151; the ſixth was under Septimius Severus, in the year 197; the ſeventh was under Maximinus, in the years 235, 236, 237; the eighth was under Decius, in the year 250; the ninth was under Valerianus, in the year 257; and the tenth was under Diocleſian, in the year 303. Auſtin [o] reckons the ten perſecutions thus: the firſt by Nero, the ſecond by Domitian, the third by Trajan, the fourth by Antoninus, the fifth by Severus, the ſixth by Maximus, the ſeventh by Decius, the eighth by Valerianus, the ninth by Aurelianus, the tenth by Diocleſian and Maximianus. Others, inaſmuch as Nero's perſecution was before this viſion, reckon the ten perſecutions thus: Domitian, Trajan, M. Antoninus, Verus and Lucius Severus, Maximinus, Decius, Valerianus, Aurelianus, Diocleſianus, Licinius: the Diocleſian perſecution, laſted ten years almoſt throughout; and ſome think, that this laſt perſecution, which held ten years, is here particularly meant, and not without ſome good reaſon; ſince it is uſual in prophetic writings, and in this book of the Revelation, to put days for years; ſo that theſe ten days may be the ten years, the laſt perſecution held, and at which time the period of this church-ſtate ended, and that of Pergamos took place. Be thou faithful unto death; which is an addreſs to the miniſters in this interval, to be faithful in preaching the pure and unmixed Goſpel of Chriſt; in a conſtant adminiſtration of the ordinances, as they were delivered; in watching over the ſouls of men under their care, reproving, exhorting, &c. with all long-ſuffering; continuing in the diſcharge of duty, tho' in continual danger of death, and though it iſſued in it. And alſo to the churches, and the members of them, to continue believing in Chriſt, profeſſing his name, ſtriving for his Goſpel, attending on his ordinances, and following him whitherſoever he went; though this ſhould expoſe them to ſufferings, even unto death, which it became them chearfully to undergo: and to which they are encouraged by what follows, and I will give thee a crown of life; which may refer not only to eternal life, which is ſo called, James i. 12. becauſe of the glory of that ſtate, and its everlaſting continuance, and is in the poſſeſſion and gift of Chriſt; but to the deliverance of the chriſtians from perſecution, by Conſtantine; who coming to the imperial crown, that became not only a crown of glory to him, but of life to the church, and was as life from the dead unto the ſaints: to dead men is promiſed a crown of life, in alluſion to the Gentiles, who crowned their dead [p].

Ver. 11. He that hath an ear, let him hear, &c.] See the note on ver. 7. he that overcometh; and is not intimidated by poverty, confiſcation of goods, tribulation, perſecution, and death itſelf, but thro' Chriſt is a conqueror, and more than a conqueror over all theſe things: ſhall not be hurt of the ſecond death; by which is meant eternal death, in diſtinction from a corporal and temporal one; and lies in a deſtruction of both body and ſoul in hell, and in an everlaſting ſeparation from God, and a continual ſenſe of divine wrath; but of this the ſaints ſhall never be hurt, they are ordained to eternal life; this is ſecured for them in Chriſt, and he has it in his hands for them, and will give it to them. The phraſe is Jewiſh, and is oppoſed to the firſt death, or the death of the body; which is the effect of ſin, and is appointed of God, and which the people of God die as well as others; but the ſecond death is peculiar to wicked men.——So the Jeruſalem Targum on Deut. xxxiii. 6. paraphraſes thoſe words, let Reuben live, and not die, thus; "let Reuben

Ver. 12. And to the angel of the church in Pergamos, write, &c.] Of the city of Pergamos, ſee the note on ch. i. 11. In it was a church of Chriſt, but when it begun, and how long it laſted, is not certain. Antipas, who is mentioned, ver. 13. is thought, by ſome, to have been the paſtor of it. Though according to the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions [s], Caius was the firſt biſhop of it; and it appears, that in the ſecond century there were ſeveral in this place that ſuffered martyrdom for Chriſt, as Carpus, Papulus, and a woman whoſe name was Agathonice [t]. Attalus, the martyr, who ſuffered in the ſame century, was alſo a native of this place [u]. In the fifth century there was a biſhop of Pergamus in the council at Epheſus; and in the ſixth century, there was one in the fifth ſynod at Conſtantinople; and in the ſeventh century, Theodorus, biſhop of the church here, was in the ſixth ſynod held at the ſame place; and in the eighth century one Paſtilas was biſhop of Pergamus; and in the ſame age, Baſil, biſhop of this place, was in the Nicene ſynod [w]; and the chriſtian name now is not wholly, tho' almoſt, extinct; for when our countryman, Dr. Smith [x], was there, there was a little church called St. Theodore's, whither a prieſt was frequently ſent from Smyrna, to perform divine ſervice, there being but a very few chriſtian families in it. This church repreſents the church from the time of Conſtantine, and onward, riſing up to, and enjoying great power, riches, and honour. Pergamos ſignifies high and lofty; things that were ſublime and lofty, were, by the Greeks, called, τα ϖεργαμα, and alſo all high and lofty towers [y]. It was built under a very high and ſteep mountain, upon the top of which a tower was erected, by the lords of the leſſer Aſia, which ſtill continues [z]. The church it repreſents had its principal ſeat at Rome, where ſatan dwelt, ver. 13. which ſignifies exalted likewiſe; and it introduces the man of ſin, antichriſt, the popes of Rome, who exalted themſelves above all that is called God, princes, kings, and emperors; whom they excommunicated, dethroned, trod upon their necks, kicked off their crowns, and obliged them to hold their ſtirrups whilſt they mounted their horſes, with other haughty actions too many to name. Theſe things, ſaith he, which hath the ſharp ſword with two edges; of which ſee the note on ch. i. 16. This title is uſed partly to ſhow, that the only weapon this church, and the true miniſters and members of it had, to defend themſelves againſt the growing corruptions of antichriſt, who in this interval roſe up by degrees, and was revealed, and came to the heighth of his power, was the word of God, the ſcriptures of truth; and partly to ſhow, that in proceſs of time, tho' not in this period, the man of ſin ſhould be deſtroyed, with the breath of Chriſt's mouth, and the brightneſs of his coming; of which his fighting againſt the Nicolaitans, with the ſword of his mouth, ver. 16. is an emblem.

Ver. 13. I know thy works, &c.] Both good and bad, and which in that pure part of this church, which oppoſed the growing corruptions of antichriſt, were for the moſt part good. And where thou dwelleſt, even where ſatan's ſeat is. Pergamus was a city very much given to idolatry, here ſatan reigned while it was pagan, and ſo was a fit emblem of the idolatrous church of Rome. Pauſanias ſays [a], the country the Pergamenes inhabited was ſacred to the Cabiri, the chief gods of the heathens. And the ſame writer [b] obſerves, that Æſculapius particularly was worſhipped at Pergamus; and hence he is called by Martial [c], the Pergamean god; to his temple here, men uſed to go from different parts of the world for cure of diſeaſes; hither Antoninus the emperor went for ſuch a purpoſe, as Herodian [d] relates; and this being a common thing, hence Lucian [e] ſcoffingly ſays, that Æſculapius had an apothecary's ſhop at Pergamus. As Rome, and its dominions, were the principal ſeat of the church in this period of time, it may well be called ſatan's ſeat or throne; not only becauſe it had been the ſeat of the Roman emperors, the ten horned, and ſeven headed beaſt, ch. xiii. 2. but becauſe it was the ſeat of antichriſt, which the great dragon ſatan gave him, whoſe coming was after the working of ſatan, and he was influenced by him; and who, like ſatan, exalted himſelf above all that is called God; yea, placed himſelf in the temple of God, the church, as God, ſhewing himſelf to be God, aſſuming that power to himſelf which only belonged to God. Moreover, he may be called ſo for his enmity and malice againſt the ſaints, and for his art and ſubtlety, and inſidious methods to enſnare and deſtroy them. Now to dwell where ſuch an one has his ſeat, his throne, has a kingdom, power, and authority, muſt be very uncomfortable, as well as dangerous; and required great care, circumſpection, and prudence how to behave: and yet to the commendation of this church it is ſaid, and thou holdeſt faſt my name, and haſt not denied my faith; the pure members of this church are the two witneſſes, which roſe up at the beginning of the apoſtaſy of Rome, and bore their teſtimony againſt it, and for the truth; and continued to do ſo amidſt all the corruptions and perſecutions of that ſtate: theſe are the two olive trees, that thro' the golden pipes of the word and ordinances, emptied the golden oil of Goſpel-truths out of themſelves, pure and incorrupt, and the two candleſticks that held forth the light of the Goſpel in the darkeſt times of Popery; theſe held faſt the name of Chriſt, or the Goſpel, and denied not, but confeſſed the doctrine of faith in the worſt of times. They had the truths of the Goſpel in their poſſeſſion, which were dear and valuable to them; and whereas there was danger of loſing them, they held them faſt, with great courage, magnanimity, and ſtrength, tho' the greater number was againſt them, and they were attended with reproach and perſecution: even in thoſe days wherein Antipas was my faithful martyr, who was ſlain among you where ſatan dwelleth. Antipas is the proper name of a man; ſo a ſon of Herod was called [f], even he that beheaded John, and mocked Chriſt: and there might be a man of this name at Pergamus, that might ſuffer martyrdom for the Goſpel of Chriſt; and who was an emblem of the confeſſors, witneſſes, and martyrs, that ſuffered for Chriſt, in this period of time, thro' their oppoſition to the popes of Rome; for Antipas is the contraction of Antipater, and is the ſame with Antipapas, or Antipappas, which ſignifies one that is againſt the pope, an oppoſer of that holy father; and ſo intends all thoſe that made head againſt him, upon his riſing and revelation, and when he aſſumed the power he did to himſelf; ſuch as the Waldenſes and Albigenſes particularly, who ſet themſelves againſt him, openly declared that the pope was antichriſt, and that his government was tyrannical, and his doctrines the doctrines of devils, abominable and fabulous. They bore a faithful teſtimony againſt all his corruptions and innovations, and became martyrs in the cauſe of Chriſt, many thouſands of them being ſlain for his ſake within the dominions of this firſt-born of ſatan. The Alexandrian copy reads Anteipas; and his name is left out in the Syriac and Arabic verſions.

Ver. 14. But I have a few things againſt thee, &c.] The members of this church before their open ſeparation from the apoſtacy; who ſtill continued in the communion of the corrupt church of Rome, tho' they remonſtrated againſt the errors and evil practices that crept in; and ſo were a ſtumbling-block, and a ſnare to others to join in their idolatry and ſuperſtition: becauſe thou haſt there them that hold the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balak to caſt a ſtumbling-block before the children of Iſrael, to eat things ſacrificed unto idols, and to commit fornication; which latter was in order to the former: the inſtruction Balaam gave to Balak, which is here called his doctrine, was, that Balak ſhould get ſome of the moſt beautiful women in his kingdom, to ply the men of Iſrael, and draw them into uncleanneſs, and ſo to idolatry; by which means, God being angry with them, he might get an advantage over them: that the Iſraelites did commit whoredom with the daughters of Moab, and eat things ſacrificed to idols, and bowed down to Baal Peor, is certain, Numb. xxv. 1, 2, 3. but that this was brought about thro' the counſel of Balaam, is not ſo plainly expreſſed, tho' it is hinted at in Numb. xxxi. 15, 16. but the Jewiſh writers are very expreſs about this matter. Jonathan ben Uzziel, one of their Targumiſts on Numb. xxiv. 14. has theſe words of Balaam; "Come, and I will counſel "thee, (ſpeaking to Balak) go and ſet up inns, "and place in them whoriſh women, to ſell food "and drink at a low price; and this people will "come and eat and drink, and be drunken, and "will lie with them, and deny their God; and "they will be quickly delivered into thine hands, "and many of them ſhall fall." This now was the ſtumbling-block he taught Balak to lay before them. And elſewhere [g] it is ſaid, "that Balaam, the wicked, gave counſel to Balak, the "ſon of Zippor, to cauſe the Iſraelites to fall by "the ſword; he ſaid to him, the God of this people "hates whoredom, cauſe thy daughters to "commit whoredom with them, and ye ſhall rule "over them." And then they go on to relate how they built ſhops, and placed an old woman without, and a young woman within; and when the Iſraelites came to buy, how well they uſed them, and what familiarity they admitted them to; how they made them drink of Ammonitiſh wine, which inclined to luſt; and when they ſignified their deſire, obliged them to worſhip Baal Peor, and renounce the law of Moſes. Both Philo [h] and Joſephus [i] ſpeak of this counſel of Balaam, much to the ſame purpoſe. The Samaritan chronicle ſays [k], that this counſel pleaſed the king, and he ſent into the camp of Iſrael, on a ſabbath-day, twenty-four thouſand young women, by whom the Iſraelites were ſo ſeduced, that they did every thing they deſired them, which was juſt the number of thoſe that were ſlain, Numb. xxv. 9. By Balaam may be meant the pope of Rome, for that name ſignifies, the lord of the people; and is very appoſite to him, who in this interval took upon him to be univerſal biſhop, and lorded it over both church and ſtate, in a moſt haughty and tyrannical manner; and the Balaamites were thoſe who ſubmitted to his power and authority, and received his doctrines; and by Balak, king of Moab, may be intended the ſecular powers, the emperors, kings, and princes of the earth, who were inſtructed by the popes of Rome, to draw their ſubjects into idolatry, which is ſpiritual fornication, to eat the breaden God, to worſhip the hoſt, images, and ſaints departed; and which proved a ſnare, and a ſtumbling to ſome of this church, as to the Iſraelites of old, to do the ſame things.

Ver. 15. So haſt thou alſo them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, &c.] Theſe impure hereticks ſprung up in the time of the apoſtolic church, but their doctrines were not received, and their deeds were hated; ſee ver. 6. This ſeems to deſign the doctrines of the church of Rome, which in this period took place; which forbid marriage to the prieſts, and recommended celibacy and virginity to others alſo; which were the ſource of all uncleanneſs and abominable luſts; for which pardons and indulgences were given, and, in proceſs of time, brothel-houſes were ſet up, and licenſed and encouraged by authority. Which thing I hate; the doctrine of theſe men, as well as their deeds.

Ver. 16. Repent, &c.] This is ſaid to thoſe who were truly godly in thoſe times, but ſtill retained their communion with theſe corrupt men, and had not, as yet, ſeparated from them; nor had they proteſted againſt theſe evil doctrines and practices, at leaſt but very coldly, and had too much connived at them; and therefore are called upon to repent of their lukewarmneſs, negligence, and ſinful compliances: or elſe I will come unto thee quickly; in a providential way, to rebuke and chaſtize for ſuch remiſſneſs, indifference, and evil communication: and will fight againſt them with the ſword of my mouth; of this ſword ſee the note on ch. i. 16. And it is obſervable, that Chriſt does not ſay, I will fight againſt thee, the true members of his myſtical body, tho' lax and ſupine, for Chriſt does not fight againſt his people, but for them; but he ſays, and will fight againſt them, the Balaamites and Nicolaitans, for their idolatry and uncleanneſs.

Ver. 17. He that hath an ear let him hear, &c.] See the note on ver. 7. To him that overcometh; the Balaamites and Nicolaitans, and don't give in to the doctrines and practices of the one, or of the other, whatever perſecution and trouble he meets with, and endures on that account: will I give to eat of the hidden manna; in oppoſition to eating things ſacrificed to idols, refuſed by him. The alluſion is to the manna which the Iſraelites eat of in the wilderneſs, which may be called hidden; either becauſe they knew not what it was, when they firſt ſaw it; or becauſe it was laid up in a golden pot, and put in the moſt holy place, where it was ſecret, and none but the high-prieſt could ſee it, and who entered there but once a year: or rather, becauſe it was at firſt hidden under the dew; for according to the account the Jews give of it, a dew firſt fell upon the ground, then the manna upon that, and then another dew upon the manna; ſo that there was a dew under it, and a dew over it; inſomuch that it was as if it was laid up, they ſay, in a box or cheſt [l]; and they ſuppoſed the manna had reſpect to things future [m], and do expect it in the times of the Meſſiah. They ſay [n], as the firſt, ſo the laſt redeemer will cauſe manna to deſcend from heaven; and the clouds are, by them, reckoned the mills which will grind manna for the righteous in the world to come [o]: yea, they ſpeak [p] of, מנא סתמא, hidden manna, as the food of the righteous, the very phraſe here uſed. Now this being the food of the children of Iſrael in the wilderneſs, is very fitly mentioned here; ſince the church, in this period of time, in which antichriſt aroſe, was obliged to flee into the wilderneſs, and there abide during his reign, and where ſhe is nouriſhed with this hidden manna; by which may be meant the Goſpel, which is ſoul-quickening, comforting, ſtrengthening, and ſatisfying food, by which the ſaints are nouriſhed up unto everlaſting life, and which is hid to the world, which the men of it know nothing of; and eſpecially Jeſus Chriſt, the ſum and ſubſtance of it, may be meant, and that ſecret ſpiritual conſolation enjoyed in communion with him, and by eating him, or feeding by faith upon him; in what reſpects Chriſt may be compared to manna, ſee the note on John vi. 32. And he may be ſaid to be hidden, becauſe he is unknown to men, until revealed; and is wholly hidden from carnal and unregenerate men, and is enjoyed only by believers; and it may denote the private way, in which the true church of Chriſt had communion with him in his word and ordinances in the wilderneſs, and during the dark times of Popery. Philo the Jew [q] often interprets the manna by the Logos, the Word of God, the moſt ancient Word of God. And will give him a white ſtone. The phraſe, to add a white ſtone, with the Latins, is uſed to give ones approbation of any thing; and could it be applied here, might ſignify the approbation Chriſt gives of his church and people here, amidſt the teſtimonies they bear, and the perſecutions they endure for his name ſake, and that which he will give of them before his Father, angels, and men, at the laſt day: white ſtones were uſed on various accounts. The Grecians uſed them to mark good or lucky days with them, as they called them; and could the alluſion be thought to be to this cuſtom, the ſenſe would be, that Chriſt promiſes to his people that overcome, happy days after the times of Popiſh darkneſs and perſecution were over: white ſtones were alſo given to the conquerors in the Olympic games, with their names upon them, and the value of the prize they won; and here applied, may reſpect the crown of life and glory given to them who are more than conquerors thro' Chriſt, with their right and title to it, and the excellency of it. The Romans in judgment uſed to give their ſuffrages for condemnation by caſting black ſtones into the urn, and for abſolution white ſtones; to which Ovid has reſpect, when he ſays [r],

> Mos erat antiquis, niveis atriſque lapillis,
> His damnare reos, illis abſolvere culpa.

And this is thought by many to be referred to here, and may denote, that tho' the pure members of Chriſt, and who abhorred and proteſted againſt the abominations of the church of Rome, were charged with hereſy and ſchiſm, and what not, yet Chriſt would abſolve them, and juſtify them from all thoſe charges. But rather the alluſion is to a cuſtom among the Jews, who uſed to examine the prieſts and levites before they went to their ſervice, or to the Sanhedrim, to judge and paſs ſentence, whether their ways and works were right; and if they were as they ſhould be, they gave them, חומרא דמקדשא, the ſtone of the ſanctuary; if not, they might not enter on buſineſs, as it is ſaid; and of Levi he ſaid, thy Urim and thy Thummim be with thy holy one, Deut. xxxiii. 8. [s] Now on the Urim and Thummim, the ſtones in the high-prieſt's breaſt-plate, were engraven the names of the children of Iſrael; and, as the Jews ſay, the name Jehovah, to which reference may be had in the following clauſe; and may denote that the church, tho' in the wilderneſs, is regarded by Chriſt, is bore upon his heart, and cared for by him; and alſo its ſpotleſs purity in him, and juſtification by him. And in the ſtone a new name written, which no man knoweth, ſaving he that receiveth it; by this name may be meant, either the name of Jehovah our righteouſneſs, which is the name both of Chriſt, and of his church, Jer. xxiii. 6. and xxxiii. 16. or the name of a child of God, ſometimes called a new name; ſee Iſ. lvi. 5. and lxii. 2. and ſo deſigns the bleſſing of adoption: this may be ſaid to be a new name, becauſe renewed, manifeſted to, and put upon the people of God, when they are made new creatures, tho' provided in predeſtination, and in the covenant of grace from eternity; and becauſe a renowned and excellent one, better than that of the ſons and daughters of the greateſt prince on earth; and becauſe a wonderful one, being an inſtance of amazing love and grace; and is what no man knoweth, but the receiver of it: the Father of theſe adopted ones is unknown to natural men; and ſo is Chriſt, thro' whom this bleſſing is beſtowed; and the Spirit of God alſo, who witneſſes to it; and the perſons that enjoy it, and the bleſſing itſelf, and the inheritance to which they are adopted: and this new name being on the white ſtone, may ſhew that the bleſſings of juſtification and adoption, tho' they are two diſtinct ones, yet they are inſeparable; they go together, and both give a right to the heavenly inheritance; and they are alſo, as well as the hidden manna, gifts of free grace, and not owing to the works and merit of men, and are given by Chriſt, and in and thro' him. At Rome, ſome white ſtones have been dug up, ſome leſſer, ſome greater, with names and letters, and other engravings upon them, which Pignorius [t] has given the figures of; and to ſuch ſome have thought the alluſion here is, and may ſerve to illuſtrate this paſſage. The Ethiopic verſion, inſtead of a white ſtone, reads, a famous book.

Ver. 18. And unto the angel of the church in Thyatira write, &c.] Of the city of Thyatira, ſee the note on ch. i. 11. a church was formed here very likely by the Apoſtle Paul; Lydia was a native of this place, who, and her houſhold, were converted and baptized by him at Philippi, Acts xvi. 14. tho' Epiphanius [u] ſeems to grant, what ſome hereticks objected to the authority of this book, that there was no church at Thyatira when this letter was written; however it is certain, there was one in the ſecond century, as the ſame writer obſerves, ſince, as he relates, it was over-run with the Cataphrygian hereſy; and in the fourth century there was a biſhop from Thyatira in the council of Nice; and even in the eighth century there was one Eſaias a preſbyter, who ſupplied the place of the biſhop of Thyatira in another council at Nice [w]: the Turks have now eight moſques in it, but there is not one chriſtian church or place of worſhip to be found in it [x]. Who was the angel, or paſtor of this church at the writing of this Epiſtle, is not certain; however, it is deſigned for all the miniſters and churches in the interval this church repreſents; and this period takes in the darkeſt and moſt ſuperſtitious times of popery, until the reformation. Thyatira is the ſame as Thygatira, which ſignifies a daughter; and it had its name, as Stephanus Byzantius ſays [y], from hence: Seleucus the ſon of Nicanor, being at war with Lyſimachus, and hearing that he had a daughter born, called this city Thygatira, which was before called Pelopia, and Semiramis; which is a very fit name for this church, and expreſſes the effeminacy of it, when the virgin Mary, whom the Romaniſts call the daughter of God, was more worſhipped than her Son; and was not only made a partner with him in the buſineſs of ſalvation, but even ſet above him; when there were ſuch ſwarms of monks and friars, and religious orders of ſeveral ſorts, as Franciſcans and Dominicans, who claimed her as their patroneſs; when ſuch numbers of them clad themſelves in cowls and long garments, that they looked more like women in hoods and petticoats, than really men; hence alſo the corrupt part of this church is ſignified by the woman Jezabel, the daughter of Ethbaal the Zidonian; and it ſhould not be forgot that there was once a ſhe pope, a woman that ſat in the papal chair, a whore in a literal ſenſe; wherefore antichriſt, or the popes of Rome, are fitly called the great whore, the mother of harlots. Mr. Daubuz obſerves, that the firſt chriſtian of Thyatira was a woman, and that the falſe prophets which firſt enticed the chriſtians to apoſtacy in this church, were women, as Maximilla, Quintilla, and Priſcilla; to which I would add, that according to Epiphanius, that among thoſe hereticks, and which ſwallowed up this church, their biſhops were women, and ſo were their preſbyters, or elders; and Dr. Smith [z] is of opinion that the inhabitants of this place, when heathen, were worſhippers of the goddeſs Diana; ſo that upon all accounts, the church here was a fit ſymbol of the effeminate church of Rome. Theſe things ſaith the Son of God; he who is truly, properly, naturally, and eſſentially the Son of God: this character Chriſt makes uſe of to aſſert his proper deity, as being of the ſame nature, and having the ſame perfections with his Father, as well as to command the greater regard to what he ordered to be written to the churches; and chiefly in oppoſition to the effeminate ſtate of this church: it was time for him to take to him his higheſt name, as expreſſive of his higheſt nature, and to aſſert himſelf the Son of God, when Mary his mother according to the fleſh, and who was but a mere creature, was called the daughter of God, and ſet upon a level with him, and even preferred unto him: who hath his eyes like unto a flame of fire; quick and ſharp, and penetrating through the darkneſs of this ſtate; ſeeing into, diſcovering, and expoſing the horrid actions and wickedneſſes of men done in the dark; expreſſing fury, wrath, and vengeance againſt the Romiſh antichriſt and his followers; and may alſo deſign the light of Goſpel-doctrine, which broke out in thoſe times at certain ſeaſons, to the diſpelling of Popiſh darkneſs in ſome meaſure; ſee the note on ch. i. 14. and his feet are like fine braſs; in the deſcription of Chriſt in ch. i. 14. it is added, as if they burned in a furnace; ſee the note there; and may denote the ſtrength, ſtability, and ſupport Chriſt gave his people while ſuffering for his ſake, when in the furnace, and burning for him, which kind of death was much uſed in thoſe times: hence Dr. More, to whom I am much obliged for many hints in this expoſition of the Epiſtles to the churches, thinks that Thyatira is an alluſion to ϑυητηρια, which ſignify altars for the burning of ſweet odours; and ſo may be expreſſive of the burning of the ſaints, thoſe ſweet odours, as they are to God and Chriſt, with fire and faggot; which was now practiſed, as in the other period, killing with the ſword was chiefly uſed; in the midſt of which Chriſt was preſent, ſupporting his people.

Ver. 19. I know thy works, &c.] Good works, as appears from the particular enumeration of them afterwards, and the commendation of proficiency in them, the laſt being more than the firſt, and the diſtinction from the evil ones in the next verſe; this is ſaid to the faithful followers and profeſſors of Chriſt in this interval: and charity; by which is meant not a relieving the wants of the poor; much leſs ſuch a charity as connives at the errors and hereſies of men; but the divine grace of love to God and Chriſt, and the ſaints, without which, a profeſſion of religion is a vain thing; and generally ſpeaking, this grace is moſt in excerciſe in a time of trouble and perſecution: and ſervice; or miniſtry, meaning either the miniſtry of the word, which was exerciſed by many with great zeal, diligence, and faithfulneſs, as by Wickliff, John Huſs, Jerom of Prague, and others; or the miniſtring to the neceſſities of the poor ſaints, as an evidence of their charity or love; or elſe the ſervice of God is here intended, which is but reaſonable, and is his due, and ought to be performed to him only, and that with fear and fervency, in faith, and with a pure conſcience, with humility, and without mercenary views, and in righteouſneſs and true holineſs; or the ſervice of love which the ſaints perform to one another, as praying for one another, bearing one anothers burdens, admoniſhing and reproving for ſin, reſtoring ſuch as are gone aſtray, comforting the diſtreſſed, building up one another in their moſt holy faith, and exhorting and ſtirring up each other to the duties of religion: and faith; not the doctrine of faith, as preached by the miniſters of the word, and held and maintained by the true profeſſors of it; but either the grace of faith, or the profeſſion of both; or rather the faithfulneſs, both of the miniſters and private believers of thoſe times, as the Waldenſes and Albigenſes, the Lollards and Wickliffites, who abode by, and were faithful to the light which they had received: and thy patience; in ſuffering for the ſake of Chriſt and the Goſpel; and very much it was they did endure, and yet held out to the end: and thy works, and the laſt to be more than the firſt; that is, that their works or acts of love to God and Chriſt and one another, and of ſervice to God and to the ſaints, and of faith and faithfulneſs in the cauſe of God, and of patience in ſuffering for the Goſpel of Chriſt, were more in quantity, and greater in quality, toward the cloſe of this period, which brought on the Reformation, than at the beginning of it; and which were done by the perſons before-mentioned, and by others.

Ver. 20. Notwithſtanding, I have a few things againſt thee, &c.] By way of complaint; ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, I have a certain complaint againſt thee. The impartiality of Chriſt may be obſerved in taking notice of the bad deeds, as well as of the good ones of his people, and his tenderneſs in repreſenting them as few; and theſe things he had againſt them not in a judicial way, to their condemnation, but in a providential way, in order to chaſtize them for them, for their good; and they are as follow: becauſe thou ſuffereſt that woman Jezabel; or thy wife Jezabel, as the Complutenſian edition and Syriac verſion read; the name of king Ahab's wife, who ſeduced him, in the Hebrew language is Izebel, but is read by the Septuagint in 1 Kings xvi. 31. Jezabel, as here; and by Joſephus [a] Jezabela; ſhe had her name from זבל, Zebel, dung, to which Elijah has reference in 2 Kings ix. 37. the Ethiopic verſion calls her Elzabel. By her is meant the apoſtate church of Rome, comparable to Jezabel, the wife of Ahab; as ſhe was the daughter of an heathen, ſo is Rome papal the daughter of Rome pagan; and as ſhe was the wife of Ahab, and therefore a queen, ſo the whore of Babylon calls herſelf; and as Jezabel was famous for her paintings, ſo the church of Rome for her pretenſions to religion and holineſs, and for the gaudineſs of her worſhip; and as ſhe was remarkable for her idolatry, whoredoms, witchcrafts, and cruel perſecution of the prophets of the Lord, and for murder, and innocent blood ſhe ſhed; ſo the church of Rome, for her idolatrous worſhip of images, for her whoredoms, both in a literal and ſpiritual ſenſe, and for the witchcrafts, magic, and deviliſh arts many of her popes have been addicted to, and eſpecially for her barbarities and cruelties exerciſed upon the true profeſſors of Chriſt, and for the blood of the martyrs, with which ſhe has been drunk; and as Jezabel ſtirred up Ahab againſt good and faithful men, ſo has this church ſtirred up the ſecular powers, emperors, kings, and princes, againſt the true followers of Chriſt: and the end of both of them is much alike; as ſcarce any thing was left of Jezabel, ſo Babylon the great, the mother of harlots, ſhall be caſt into the ſea, and be found no more at all: compare 2 Kings ix. 7, 22, 30, 31, 33, 37. with Rev. xvii. 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 17, 18. and xviii. 3, 7, 21, 23. which calleth herſelf a propheteſs; as perhaps Jezabel might do, ſince ſhe was ſuch a favourer of the prophets of Baal, and ſo familiarly converſed with them, and kept them, even a hundred of them at her table; and certain it is, that the antitype of her pretends to an infallible interpretation of the ſcriptures, and to have a bulk of unwritten traditions; and which interpretations and traditions are to be regarded as an infallible rule of faith and practice. Now what is complained of in the true members and followers of Chriſt, is, that they ſuffered this woman to teach; when it was inſufferable for a woman to teach, and eſpecially ſuch a ſtrumpet: and to ſeduce my ſervants to commit fornication; to deceive ſuch who called themſelves the ſervants of Chriſt, and draw them into the commiſſion of ſpiritual fornication, which is idolatry; as the idolatrous worſhip of the maſs, and of images and ſaints departed: and to eat things ſacrificed unto idols; as Balaam, or the pope, before had done, ver. 14. This may have reſpect to the latter part of this period, when the eyes of many began to be opened to ſee theſe falſe doctrines and idolatrous practices, and yet had not courage enough to oppoſe them as they ſhould.

Ver. 21. And I gave her ſpace to repent of her fornication, &c.] Or idolatry. This may have reſpect to the time of the witneſſes, the Waldenſes, and others, who bore a teſtimony againſt the Romiſh idolatry, and reproved for it, and denounced the judgment of God in caſe of impenitence; and as theſe things were repeated time after time, this may be called a ſpace given to repent in; juſt as Jezabel had a ſpace given her to repent in, from the time that Elijah declared the word of the Lord that the dogs ſhould eat her: ſo the Jews [b] ſay of the old world, that God gave them זמן לשוב, ſpace to repent, but they repented not, as here: and ſhe repented not; ſee ch. ix. 20, 21. for the time for, and means leading to repentance may be given, yet if the grace of repentance itſelf is not given, men, either particular perſons, or whole bodies of men, will never repent of their ſins. The Alexandrian copy, Complutenſian, Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions read, and ſhe would not repent.

Ver. 22. Behold I will caſt her into a bed, &c.] Of ſickneſs and languiſhing; and which denotes the ſickly, pining, and languiſhing ſtate of the church of Rome, as a juſt retaliation for her bed of luxury and deliciouſneſs, adultery and idolatry ſhe had indulged herſelf in; this was threatned, and was yet to come, and began at the time of the reformation, ſignified by the next church-ſtate; and ever ſince, the whore of Rome has been viſibly ſickening and decaying. The Alexandrian copy reads, into a priſon: and them that commit adultery with her into great tribulation; the kings of the earth, and their ſubjects, who have joined in the idolatries and corruptions of the Romiſh church, ch. xvii. 2. and xviii. 3. which may be underſtood either of that diſtreſs and uneaſineſs the reformation in ſome countries gave them; or thoſe outward troubles, wars, and deſolations they have been ſince attended with, particularly the empire of Germany; which has been in great tribulation, formerly by the Turks, and of late by inteſtine broils among themſelves, and by the armies of other princes entring into it; or it may regard that eternal vengeance that will be recompenced to all ſuch perſons: except they repent of their deeds; their ſpiritual fornication or idolatry, and all the abominations the members of that apoſtate church are guilty of. There ſeems to be an alluſion in this verſe to Ahaziah and Joram, ſons of Ahab and Jezabel, who followed their mother's idolatrous practices, and were caſt upon a bed of ſickneſs, 2 Kings i. 2. and viii. 29.

Ver. 23. And I will kill her children with death, &c.] Her popes, cardinals, prieſts, jeſuits, monks, friars, and all that join in the Romiſh apoſtacy, they ſhall be killed with death; there ſhall be an utter extirpation of them in God's own time; or they ſhall be killed with the ſecond death: מותנא, when uſed alone, or as diſtinct from any other kind of death, ſignifies the plague; compare with this 2 Kings ix. 24. and x. 1, 7. and all the churches; that ſhall be in being at the time of Rome's deſtruction: ſhall know that I am he that ſearcheth the reins and heart; or am the omniſcient God; which will be known by inflicting puniſhment on the followers of antichriſt; when their hidden things of darkneſs will be brought to light, and expoſed by him; and they ſhall receive the righteous reward of their evil practices, which they have coloured over, and gloſſed with ſpecious pretences of religion and holineſs, and a zeal for

God and his glory, when they only meant themſelves, the gratifying their carnal luſts, and ſecuring their worldly intereſts, and amaſſing riches and honours to themſelves: and I will give unto every one of you according to your works; who have connived at, and joined with them in their evil deeds; as many as were ſeduced by the falſe propheteſs to commit ſpiritual fornication with her: as Chriſt is omniſcient, and does not judge according to the outward appearance of things, but knows the principles and ends of all actions, however covert they may be; ſo he is righteous in judging and in puniſhing, which will be according as mens works are; and not one ſhall eſcape his righteous judgment, nor the due deſert of their ſins, tho' the puniſhment of ſome may be greater than that of others.

Ver. 24. But unto you I ſay, and unto the reſt in Thyatira, &c.] The copulative and is left out in the Alexandrian copy and Complutenſian edition, and if retained, it may be rendered thus, even unto the reſt; the perſons ſpoken to are the ſame, the paſtor of this church, with his collegues, and all the reſt of the faithful in it; which ſhows that this Epiſtle, and ſo the reſt, were not written to the paſtors only, but to the churches; and that the paſtor and his collegues, with others, were free from the abominable errors and corruptions before ſpoken of; and that in the worſt of times, God does, and will reſerve a people for himſelf, who are deſcribed as follows: as many as have not this doctrine; who had not given into, and embraced this doctrine of the antichriſtian church of Rome, concerning infallibility, the worſhipping of images, tranſubſtantiation, &c. the Arabic verſion reads, this new doctrine; for notwithſtanding the large pretenſions of the Romiſh church to antiquity, her doctrine is but a novel doctrine: and which have not known the depths of ſatan, as they ſpeak; that is, had not approved of the doctrines of antichriſt, which though his followers called deep things and myſteries of their holy religion, ſuch as tranſubſtantiation, &c. yet, to ſpeak in the language of the pure and faithful profeſſors of the Goſpel, they are no other than the depths of ſatan, or doctrines of devils; or elſe the ſenſe is, as Jezabel and her followers ſay, to the contempt of the faithful, arrogating knowledge to themſelves, and upbraiding them with ſimplicity and ignorance, as not knowing ſatan's devices, nor how to reſcue ſouls out of them, as they did; but the former ſenſe ſeems beſt: I will put upon you none other burden; meaning not any affliction or tribulation than the preſent one; nor any other errors and hereſies than what were broached; but no other precept or command than what follows; ſee 2 Kings ix. 25.

Ver. 25. But that which ye have already, &c.] Which was ſomething good, even the faithful word, the form of ſound words, the myſtery and doctrine of faith; this they had received from Chriſt and his Apoſtles; they had it in their hearts, and a comfortable experience of the truth and power of it, and had made a profeſſion of it, which they now held, and are here exhorted to hold faſt: hold faſt till I come; meaning the coming of Chriſt, either at the reformation by Luther, Calvin, and others, which began at the cloſe of this church-ſtate, when the hands and hearts of thoſe profeſſors would be more ſtrengthened, which ſeems to be the firſt ſenſe of the words; or to judge Jezabel, deſtroy antichriſt, which will be by the brightneſs of his coming; till which time the doctrine of the Goſpel is to be held faſt: and ſuch an exhortation will be always neceſſary, ſince till then, there will be always more or leſs an oppoſition to it, and attempts made to wreſt it out of the hands of its profeſſors, to cauſe them to heſitate about it, and to intimidate them in the profeſſion of it, by loading them with reproaches, calumnies, and perſecution.

Ver. 26. And he that overcometh, &c.] Jezabel and her idolatries, her children, and all that commit adultery with her; ſuch as are not drawn into the ſame evil practices with them, but bravely ſtand their ground againſt the Romiſh antichriſt and his followers, and bear their teſtimony againſt his impious doctrines and idolatrous practices: and keepeth my works unto the end; either of life, or of this church-ſtate, or of time, when Chriſt will perſonally appear, even at the end of the world; and by his works are meant, not the works which were done by him, as his miracles and works of mercy to the ſouls and bodies of men, and works of righteouſneſs in obedience to the law, and the work of redemption and ſalvation; tho' theſe are works to be obſerved, and kept in view, and to be preſerved in memory, and for the encouragement of faith and hope; but the works which are commanded, and required by Chriſt to be done by his people; as the public work of the miniſtry, by the preachers of the Goſpel; and every private work, both internal and external, as the work of faith, the labour of love, and every act of obedience, which is conſtantly to be diſcharged. The Arabic verſion reads, and keepeth my words and my works; things both relating to doctrine and practice: to him will I give power over the nations; or Gentiles, the Papiſts; ſo called becauſe of the pagan notions and worſhip introduced by them; and becauſe they conſiſt of many nations, tongues, and people, who are deceived, and drawn into idolatry by them: and this power over them may be underſtood in a ſpiritual ſenſe, thro' the preaching of the Goſpel, which being attended with the power of God, is the means of converting ſinners, and ſo of weakening the kingdom of ſatan, and of antichriſt; and which had its fulfillment, at leaſt in part, at the time of the reformation, and onward, and will have ſtill a greater accompliſhment in the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt and his people, under the Philadelphian church-ſtate; and it may alſo deſign the temporal power which the ſaints ſhall have over antichriſt, when they ſhall take away his dominion, and conſume and deſtroy it, and the kingdom and the dominion under the whole heaven ſhall be given to the ſaints of the moſt high; Dan. vii. 25, 26, 27.

Ver. 27. And he ſhall rule them with a rod of iron, &c.] Either with the Goſpel, which is the rod of Chriſt's ſtrength, and is the power of God unto ſalvation, and by which the kingdom of Chriſt is enlarged, and the power of the church of Chriſt over the antichriſtian party is increaſed; or it may deſign great ſtrictneſs and ſeverity, with which the man of ſin will be uſed by the ſaints of the moſt high, when they ſhall take away his dominion from him: as the veſſels of a potter ſhall they be broken to ſhivers; which may be expreſſive either of the breaking of rocky hearts in pieces at converſion, and of making ſouls humble and contrite; or of the irreparable ruin and deſtruction of antichriſt, when the ſaints ſhall conſume and deſtroy him: even as I received of my Father; Chriſt as God has an underived power and government; but as mediator, his rule and power over the nations are aſked by him, given to him, and received by him, Pſ. ii. 8, 9. This as does not intend equality, but ſimilitude; and denotes the participation the ſaints will have with Chriſt in the the judgment and deſtruction of antichriſt; and in his kingdom and power.

Ver. 28. And I will give him the morning ſtar.] So Chriſt is called, ch. xxii. 16. and here it deſigns an illuſtrious appearance of Chriſt at the cloſe of this church-ſtate, and a communication of much light and grace from him, which introduced the Sardian church-ſtate, or the reformation by Luther, Calvin, &c. which is the phoſphorus, or morning-ſtar, to the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt under the Philadelphian church-ſtate; which will be the bright, clear day of the Goſpel, when the preſent twilight, which is between the appearance of the morning-ſtar and that glorious day, will be removed: for by this morning-ſtar is not meant the glory that ſhall be put upon the bodies of the ſaints in the reſurrection morn; nor the heavenly glory itſelf, or the hope of it; but the dawning of the latter-day glory, which began at the reformation, and is promiſed the faithful profeſſors in the Thyatirian church-ſtate, who lived in the darkneſs of Popery.

Ver. 29. He that hath an ear, let him hear, &c.] See the note on ver. 7.

CHAP. III.

THIS chapter contains the Epiſtles to the churches at Sardis, Philadelphia, and Laodicea, and begins with that to Sardis; in which the ſender deſcribes himſelf by ſome things taken out of a former deſcription of him; and gives an account of the ſtate of this church; that her works were known by him, which were imperfect; and that ſhe had the name of a living church, but was dead; wherefore ſhe is exhorted to watchfulneſs and diligence, to remember how ſhe had heard and received the Goſpel, and to hold it faſt, and repent of her ſins; if not, he threatens to come as a thief unawares upon her, ver. 1, 2, 3. but excepts ſome few perſons from this general account, who were not defiled with the corruptions of the majority, and who therefore ſhould be favoured with communion with him, ver. 4. and then ſome gracious promiſes are made to perſevering ſaints, and the Epiſtle is concluded in the uſual form, ver. 5, 6. Next follows the Epiſtle to the church at Philadelphia; in which the ſender aſſumes ſome peculiar titles not before mentioned, taken from his holineſs, truth, and power, ver. 7. ſignifies his approbation of her works; declares he had ſet before her an open door, which could not be ſhut; affirms ſhe had a little ſtrength, and commends her for keeping his word, ver. 8. and for her encouragement, promiſes that ſome perſons formerly of bad characters, ſhould come and worſhip before her, and ſhould know what an intereſt ſhe had in his love; and that ſince ſhe had kept his word, he would keep her from an hour of temptation, which will be a trying time to all the world, ver. 9, 10. and in conſideration of his ſpeedy coming, he exhorts her to hold faſt what ſhe had, that ſhe might not loſe her honour and glory; and promiſes the overcomer a fixed place and name in the houſe of God; and cloſes the Epiſtle as the reſt, ver. 11, 12, 13. and then follows the laſt Epiſtle of all, which is that to the church at Laodicea; in which the ſender deſcribes himſelf by ſome characters taken from his truth and faithfulneſs, and from his eternity, power, and dominion, ver. 14. repreſents the members of this church as lukewarm, and very diſagreeable to him, ver. 15, 16. and as having a vain opinion of themſelves, being ignorant of their real ſtate and caſe, ver. 17. wherefore he gives them ſome wholeſome counſel and advice, ſuitable to their condition, ver. 18. and whereas there were ſome among them he loved, he lets them know that his rebukes and chaſtenings were from love, and with a view to ſtimulate them to zeal, and bring them to repentance, which became them, ver. 19. and then he informs them where he was, what he expected from them, and what they might upon a ſuitable behaviour enjoy with him, ver. 20. and next promiſes to the overcomer great honour and glory, ſuch as he had with his Father; and concludes the Epiſtle in his uſual manner, ver. 21, 22.

Ver. 1. And unto the angel of the church in Sardis, write, &c.] Of the city of Sardis ſee the note on ch. i. 11. when, and by whom this church was founded, and who was the preſent angel or paſtor of it, is not now to be certainly known; however, here was a church in the ſecond century, of which Melito was then paſtor; and he is thought by ſome to be the angel here intended; this man wrote upon the book of the Revelation, and an apology for the chriſtians, ſent to the emperor Antoninus Verus, in whoſe time he lived[c]; and in the third century a church remained in this place; and alſo in the fourth, as appears from the council of Nice, which makes mention of it; and likewiſe in the fifth, as is evident from the acts of the ſynod at Chalcedon, in which age it was the metropolitan church of the Lydians; and in the ſixth century there was a biſhop of this church in the fifth ſynod at Conſtantinople; and in the ſeventh century, Marinus biſhop of Sardis aſſiſted at the ſixth ſynod in the ſame place; and in the eighth century, Euthymius biſhop of it was preſent in the Nicene ſynod; and even in the ninth century mention is made of an archbiſhop of Sardis[d]: but now there are but very few chriſtians to be found here, and who have not a place to worſhip in, nor any to miniſter to them[e]. This church repreſents the ſtate of the church from the time of the reformation by Luther and others, until a more glorious ſtate of the church appears, or until the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt in the Philadelphian period; under the Sardian church-ſtate we now are: that this church is an emblem of the reformed churches from Popery, is evident, not only from its following the Thyatirian ſtate, which expreſſes the darkneſs of Popery, and the depths of ſatan in it; but from its being clear of Balaam, and thoſe that held his doctrine; and from the Nicolaitans and their tenets, and from Jezabel, and thoſe that committed adultery with her; things which the two former churches are charged with; but from theſe the preſent church reformed. This city of Sardis was once a very flouriſhing and opulent city; it was the metropolis of Lydia, and the royal ſeat of the rich king Crœſus, tho' now a very poor and mean village; and may denote the magnificence and ſplendor of this church-ſtate, at leaſt in name and figure, it has appeared in, in the world; tho' now in a very low and mean condition, and may be worſe before the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt begins in the next period: there may be ſome ſome alluſion in the name of this church to the precious ſtone ſarda, which Pliny ſays [f], was found about Sardis, and had its name from hence; the ſame with the Sardian ſtone in Rev. iv. 2. and xxi. 20. This ſtone naturaliſts ſay [g], drives away fear, gives boldneſs, chearfulneſs, and ſharpneſs of wit, and frees from witchcrafts and ſorceries; which may be expreſſive of the boldneſs and courage of the firſt reformers; of the chearfulneſs, joy, and pleaſure, which appeared in their countenances, and which they ſpread in others by preaching the doctrines of the Goſpel; and of thoſe excellent gifts and talents both of nature, learning, and grace, by which they were fitted for their ſervice; and of their being a means of delivering men from the witchcrafts of Jezabel, and the ſorceries of the whore of Rome: and perhaps ſome alluſion may be in this name, as is thought by Cocceius, to the Hebrew word שריד, ſarid, which ſignifies a remnant, ſince in this church-ſtate there was a remnant according to the election of grace, a few names, whoſe garments were undefiled; or to the word שרד, ſered, which ſignifies a carpenter's rule or line; ſince the firſt reformers were endeavouring to bring every doctrine and practice to the rule and line of God's word: theſe things ſaith he that hath the ſeven ſpirits of God; the fullneſs and perfection of the gifts and graces of the Spirit of God, as in ch. i. 4. which Chriſt as mediator has without meaſure, and are at his diſpoſe; and which he having received for men, gives unto them; and at the time of the reformation beſtowed them on many eminent ſervants of his, in a very plenteous manner; for which reaſon he aſſumes this character in writing to this church: and the ſeven ſtars; the miniſters of the Goſpel; ſee the notes on ch. i. 16. and ii. 1. theſe were filled by Chriſt at this time with evangelical light and knowledge; and were ſent, and held forth by him as lights in the world; and were inſtruments in his hand for great good; and were wonderfully held, kept, and preſerved by him, notwithſtanding the greatneſs of their work, their weakneſs in themſelves, and the power, rage, and fury of the antichriſtian party; Luther is a remarkable inſtance of this: Chriſt's making uſe of the ſame title here as in the Epiſtle to the church at Epheſus, which repreſents the apoſtolic church, may ſhow that this church-ſtate bore ſome degree of likeneſs to that, and that it was a ſort of renewing of it: I know thy works; good works chiefly; the nature and imperfection of them; and alſo bad works: that thou haſt a name that thou liveſt; the reformed churches have had a name for ſpiritual living, by faith on Chriſt's righteouſneſs only for juſtification, that article being the great article of the reformation: there was in them an appearance of livelineſs, by their zeal for Goſpel-doctrine and worſhip, and a form of living according to godlineſs; they were eſteemed, were celebrated, and famous for theſe things, eſpecially for living by faith on Chriſt's righteouſneſs: and art dead; or but art dead; for, the moſt part, or greater part of the members of theſe churches, are dead in treſpaſſes and ſins; and as for the reſt, they are very dead and liſeleſs in their frames, in the exerciſe of grace, and in the diſcharge of duties; and under great ſpiritual declenſions and decays, juſt as it were ready to die; and but few really alive in a ſpiritual ſenſe, and eſpecially lively, or in the lively exerciſe of grace, and fervent diſcharge of duty; yea, dead as to thoſe things in which they had a name to live: and this ſeems to be our caſe now, who it is to be hoped are at, or towards the cloſe of this period.

Ver. 2. Be watchful, &c.] Which may reſpect both miniſters and members: the miniſters of the Goſpel, whoſe buſineſs is to watch over themſelves, their converſation and doctrine, and watch every opportunity to preach it, and the ſucceſs of their miniſtry; and that they do not grow careleſs, or be drawn aſide thro' frowns or flatteries; and over others, as ſhepherds do, to know the ſtate of their flock; as watchmen of cities to give the time of night, and notice of approaching danger; and to ſee that the laws of Chriſt's houſe are put in execution: and this may alſo reſpect the members of theſe churches, who ought to be watchful, and conſtant attenders on the word and ordinances, and in the duty of prayer; and ſhould watch over themſelves, their hearts, thoughts, affections, words, and actions, and againſt ſin, ſatan, the world, and falſe teachers: or be awake; which ſhows that both miniſters and churches are aſleep, or much inclined to it; which is the preſent caſe of both in this period of time: and ſtrengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die; not good works; tho' theſe may be ſaid to be ready to die when men grow weary of them, are lifeleſs in the performance of them, and want zeal for them; and may be ſaid to be ſtrengthened when men do their firſt works: nor the graces of the Spirit; for the whole work of grace remains, and tho' it is imperfect, yet no part is, or can be taken away from it; yea, there is an increaſe of it, tho' it may not be diſcerned; the work of grace cannot die, or be ready to die; there may be a decline as to the exerciſe of it, and a want of livelineſs in it; and things may be ready to die in appearance, and in the apprehenſion of believers, but not in reality; and beſides it is God's work, and not man's, to ſtrengthen this: therefore they may intend the truths of the Goſpel, which at the beginning of the reformation were revived, and were preached with great life and livelineſs; but towards the cloſe of this ſtate, as now, would be juſt ready to expire, to be almoſt loſt, and dead, and buried, as they are; and which it becomes both miniſters and members of churches to hold, and hold up, eſtabliſh, and confirm: or elſe the reſt of the members of this church may be meant, thoſe of them that remained, that were not wholly ſunk and apoſtatized; and yet were in a very faint and ſickly ſtate, ſcarce any life in them, ready to give up their religion and profeſſion; which ſhould be ſtrengthened, by preaching the pure Goſpel, by faithfully adminiſtring the ordinances of it, and by ſpeaking comfortable and encouraging words to them. The Complutenſian edition, and ſome copies read, which thou art about to loſe; which ſeems a good reading; and the Arabic verſion, and ſome other copies, which thou art going to reject: for I have not found thy works perfect before God; meaning that the reformers, and reformed churches, ſtuck where they firſt began; and did not carry their works neither with reſpect to doctrine, and eſpecially with reſpect to diſcipline and worſhip, to a greater perfection, as they ought to have done; and however perfect they might appear before men, they were not ſo in the ſight of the omniſcient God, nor found ſo by Chriſt, before whom all things are naked and open: the Arabic verſion reads, before me; and the Alexandrian copy, the Complutenſian edition, the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read, before my God. This church, though ſhe has departed from the corrupt church of Rome, and from her evil doctrines and practices; yet did not go on to that perfection which might have been expected and deſired, and which would have rendered her praiſe-worthy, whereas ſhe is now diſcommended. It is an obſervation of a Jewiſh writer [h], that "if one departs from an evil way, and does not "do that which is good, he does not השלים מעשהו, "make his work perfect, and he is not pronounced "bleſſed."

Ver. 3. Remember, therefore, how thou haſt received and heard, &c.] That is, haſt received upon hearing; for hearing goes firſt, and then receiving: the deſign of the advice is to put this church in mind of the doctrines of grace ſhe had heard at the beginning of the reformation, from Luther and others; ſuch as juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, pardon thro' his blood, and atonement by his ſacrifice, doctrines now almoſt loſt and buried in forgetfulneſs; wherefore Chriſt would have her remember theſe things; how that ſhe heard them with attention, reverence, humility, and without prejudice; and with much affection, ſo as to approve and love them, believe them, feel the power of them, and taſte the goodneſs in them; and how ſhe received them, with all meekneſs, readineſs, and joy, when now they are greatly diſliked and rejected by many; very few attend to the doctrines of the reformation. This is exactly our caſe: and hold faſt; the above doctrines, tho' the majority is againſt them, and learned men deſpiſe them, and they are charged with enthuſiaſm and licentiouſneſs. It looks as if there was danger, as there is, that they would be entirely wreſted out of her hands: and repent; of her deadneſs, coldneſs, and indifference to theſe truths; of her unwatchfulneſs over them, and imperfection in them; not carrying truth to its fullneſs and perfection, reſting in her firſt light and knowledge, and even going back from that: if therefore thou ſhalt not watch; and preſerve truth, and hold faſt the form of ſound words, and keep to the order, as well as the faith of the Goſpel, and conſtantly attend divine worſhip, and look for the coming and kingdom of Chriſt. I will come on thee as a thief; in the night, and at an unawares, unthought of, and unexpected; which muſt be underſtood of coming to her in a way of rebuke and chaſtiſement, by bringing ſome affliction, or ſuffering ſome ſore diſtreſs to fall upon her: the phraſe, on thee, is left out in the Alexandrian copy, and in the Ethiopic verſion: and thou ſhalt not know what hour I will come upon thee; which tho' applicable to the ſpiritual coming of Chriſt in the next church-ſtate, and to his ſecond coming in his kingdom and glory, which will be both ſudden and unexpected, yet theſe will be to the joy and comfort of the church; whereas what is here ſpoken, is by way of threatening, and muſt relate to ſome ſevere diſpenſation on her; and which we might now juſtly expect, were we not in the unwatchful, unthoughtful, and ignorant ſituation here deſcribed.

Ver. 4. Thou haſt a few names even in Sardis, &c.] The Alexandrian copy, and others, the Complutenſian edition, the Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions, read, but thou haſt a few names, &c. or a few men, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; who were called by name, and were men of renown, excellent men, men famous for holding the truth of doctrine, and for powerful and practical godlineſs; men of great light and grace, and who were known by name to God and Chriſt: theſe are ſaid to be but few, not in compariſon of the world, in which ſenſe all the elect of God are but few, though a large number conſidered in themſelves; but in compariſon of formal lifeleſs profeſſors of religion, with which this church-ſtate abounds; and which, if we were not as dead as we are, might eaſily be obſerved; there may not only be hypocrites in churches, but a majority of them: yea, theſe few may be underſtood in compariſon of the greater number of true believers; for in this period of the church, there are but few even of them, that are lively, zealous, and careful, and are heartily concerned for the purity of doctrine, diſcipline, worſhip, and converſation; and a few there are, bleſſed be God, even in this our Sardian church-ſtate. God will have a few in whom he will be glorified in the moſt declining times; and the Lord knows, and takes notice of theſe few; and for their ſake the church-ſtate is kept up, the Goſpel, and its ordinances, are continued; nor is a church to be judged of by the number of its members, nor is a multitude to be followed to do evil. Which have not defiled their garments; the Ethiopic verſion adds, with a woman, the woman Jezabel. They were not guilty either of corporal or ſpiritual fornication, which is idolatry; they kept their outward converſation-garments pure, and maintained a profeſſion of Chriſt, and his truths, incorrupt; they did not defile it by an unbecoming walk, or by a denial of Chriſt, and a departure from him, and by embracing falſe doctrines; they were neither erroneous in their principles, nor immoral in their practices; few there are indeed of this ſort. Defiled garments, in either ſenſe, very ill become members of the reformed churches. Among the Jews [i], if a prieſt's garments were ſpotted or defiled, he might not miniſter; if he did, his ſervice was rejected. And they ſhall walk with me in white; there is a walking in Chriſt by faith; and a walking before him, as in his ſight; and a walking worthy of him, in all well-pleaſing, in his ways and ordinances; and here a walking with him, in a way of ſpecial and comfortable communion, both here and hereafter: and this is in white; in white raiment, meaning either in the robe of his own righteouſneſs, compared to fine linnen, and white; or in the ſhining robes of immortality and glory; and may be expreſſive of that ſpiritual joy, which ſuch ſhall be partakers of, as well as of their ſpotleſs purity and innocence in the other world. White raiment was uſed among the Romans as a token of joy, at feſtivals, and on birth-days, and at weddings, and ſuch like times. For they are worthy; not of themſelves, or thro' any works of righteouſneſs done by them, which are neither meritorious of grace here, nor of glory hereafter; but thro' the grace of God, and worthineſs of Chriſt. The Jews have a ſaying ſomewhat like this [k]; "they that walk with God in their life-time, "זוכים, are worthy to walk with him after their "death;" ſee 2 Eſdras ii. 40. This clauſe is left out in the Ethiopic verſion.

Ver. 5. He that overcometh, &c.] The deadneſs, formality, and imperfection of this church-ſtate; gets over theſe things, and is among the few names in it: the ſame ſhall be clothed in white raiment; the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read, thus ſhall he be clothed in white raiment; he ſhall have abundance of ſpiritual peace and joy, great ſucceſs and proſperity, both inward and outward, in himſelf, and in the church; and triumph over all his enemies, ſin, ſatan, the world, death, and every other enemy; and not only be clothed with change of raiment, the pure and ſpotleſs righteouſneſs of Chriſt, but ſhall enjoy eternal glory and happineſs: the alluſion ſeems to be to the cuſtom of the Jewiſh Sanhedrim in judging of prieſts, fit for ſervice [l]; "they examined the prieſts "concerning their genealogies and blemiſhes; "every prieſt in whom was found any thing faulty "in his genealogy, he was clothed in black, and "veiled in black, and went out of the court; but "every one that was found perfect and right, "לובש לבנים, he was clothed in white, and went "in and miniſtred with his brethren the prieſts." And I will not blot out his name out of the book of life; by which is meant the choice of perſons to everlaſting life and ſalvation; and this being ſignified by a book, and by writing names in it, ſhows the exact knowledge God has of his elect, the value he has for them, his remembrance of them, his love to them, and care for them; and that this election is of particular perſons by name, and is ſure and certain; for thoſe whoſe names are written in it, ſhall never be blotted out, they will always remain in the number of God's elect, and can never become reprobates, or ſhall ever periſh; becauſe of the unchangeableneſs of the nature and love of God, the firmneſs of his purpoſes, the omnipotence of his arm, the death and interceſſion of Chriſt for them, their union to him, and being in him, the impoſſibility of their ſeduction by falſe teachers, and the ſecurity of their perſons, grace, and glory in Chriſt, and in whoſe keeping this book of life is; which reſpects not this temporal life, that belongs to the book of providence, but a ſpiritual and eternal life, from whence it has its name. But I will confeſs his name before my Father, and before his angels; which ſhows that Chriſt has an exact and perfect knowledge of all the choſen ones, he knows them by name; and that he has a ſtrong and affectionate love for them, and is not aſhamed of them, of their cauſe, of their perſons, and of their relation to him; and that he does, and will own, acknowledge, and approve of them, both here and hereafter: and the confeſſion he will make of them will be in their praiſe; in praiſe of their perſons, and the comelineſs of them, which he has put upon them; and of their graces, tho' they are his own; and of their good works, as the fruits of grace: and this will be made before his Father, who choſe theſe perſons, and gave them to him, to preſerve and ſave; and before the angels, who rejoice at their ſalvation and happineſs; and this will be at the laſt day; ſee the note on Matt. x. 32.

Ver. 6. He that hath an ear, let him hear, &c.] See the note on ch. ii. 7.

Ver. 7. And to the angel of the church in Philadelphia, write, &c.] Of the city of Philadelphia, ſee the note on ch. i. 11. According to the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions [m], one Demetrius was ordained biſhop of this church, by the Apoſtle John; but this is not to be depended on; nor is it known who this angel was; however, certain it is there was a church in this place in the ſecond century, in the times of Ignatius, who wrote an epiſtle to it, and which then had a biſhop or paſtor over it, whom he mentions [n], tho' not his name. And in the ſame century twelve Philadelphians ſuffered martyrdom at the ſame time Polycarp did [o]; and in the third century a church remained in this place; and alſo in the fourth, ſince a biſhop of this church was in the council at Nice; and in the fifth century, a presbyter of Philadelphia was in the ſynod at Epheſus under Celeſtine; and in the ſixth century, a biſhop of this place aſſiſted at the fifth ſynod at Conſtantinople; and in the eighth century, Stephen, biſhop of the church here, was in the Nicene ſynod [p]; and there are now a pretty many that bear the name of chriſtians, of the Greek church, in this place [q]. This church is an emblem of, and repreſents the church in that period of time, in which will be the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt. Its name ſignifies brotherly love, which in this interval will be very remarkable; ſaints ſhall not envy, vex and diſtreſs one another any more; they ſhall be one in the hand of the Lord, and among themſelves. Love, which is now ſo cold, and ſo much wanting in our preſent Sardian church ſtate, will be exceeding warm, and fervent, and in its higheſt pitch in the Philadelphian ſtate. The characters Chriſt here aſſumes, point at the holineſs of life, truth of doctrine, and purity of diſcipline, for which this church-ſtate will be diſtinguiſhed: in this period of time an open door for the Goſpel will be ſet; it will be preached in its power and purity, and will be greatly ſucceeded; the fullneſs of the Gentiles will be brought in, and the Jews will be converted; hypocrites and formal profeſſors will be diſcerned, and detected; great honour and reſpect will be ſhown the church by all men; and this ſtate will be an emblem and pledge of the new Jeruſalem ſtate, of which mention is made in this Epiſtle, or the thouſand years perſonal reign of Chriſt with all his ſaints: theſe things ſaith he that is holy; which character not only agrees with Chriſt, as God, who is the holy one of Iſrael, and equally glorious in holineſs as his Father, but as man; his nature was free from original ſin; his life from any actual tranſgreſſion; his doctrines were pure and holy, and ſo were all his works, and all his adminiſtrations in each of his offices: and as mediator, he is the cauſe and author of holineſs to his people; they are ſanctified in him, and have their ſanctification from him, and are ſanctified by him: this character he chuſes now to take, becauſe he was ſending an epiſtle to ſuch as were lovers of holineſs, and famous for it, both internal an external; ſo that while he deſcribes himſelf, he points at perſons, the members of churches in this interval: he that is true; truly God, and truly man; true and faithful in the diſcharge of his ſeveral offices, and in the truſt repoſed in him, both of the grace and perſons of the ſaints, and in what he undertook to do for them: he is truth itſelf, the truth of types, promiſes, and propheſies; and the ſum and ſubſtance of all the truths of the Goſpel; and is therefore to be depended on in every prediction and promiſe; and this title of Chriſt may have ſome view to the truth of doctrine which ſhall, in this period, prevail, and to the faithfulneſs and integrity of his people to his cauſe and intereſt: he that hath the key of David; mention is made of David, becauſe he was a type of Chriſt; and becauſe from him Chriſt came according to the fleſh, and whoſe throne he was to ſit upon, in a ſpiritual ſenſe; and becauſe, in this period of time, the Jews are to be converted, who will ſeek the Lord their God, and David their king: and by the key of David is meant, the key of the houſe of David; that is, the church of Chriſt, of which David's houſe and family were a type: and this key is either the key of knowledge, or it is expreſſive of power and authority. Chriſt has the key of knowledge, he knows all the perſons of his people, all their affairs, and what they do in his houſe, and how they behave there: he has the key of knowledge in the ſcriptures, and gives it to his miniſters. And it may alſo deſign his authority in his houſe and church, in fixing the ordinances of it, in beſtowing gifts on men, and in diſpenſing the bleſſings of grace and goodneſs; this may have ſome regard to the pure diſcipline of this church, as well as to its light and knowledge in the doctrines of the Goſpel. The Targum on Iſ. xxii. 22. interprets, the key of the houſe of David, of שולטן, the dominion or government of the houſe of David. He that openeth, and no man ſhutteth, and ſhutteth, and no man openeth; he opens the ſcriptures, which are ſhut to a natural man, as he did in his own perſonal miniſtry, when here on earth, and now by his Spirit; and none can ſhut them, either men or devils, or hinder the ſpread of light and knowledge by them: he opens the door of the Goſpel, and gives an opportunity to preach it, and liberty of mind and expreſſion to his miniſters, and a door of utterance to them, and of entrance for it into the hearts of men, which none can ſhut, or hinder: he opens the door of the church, which is himſelf, and lets in his ſheep, into the ſheep-fold, into a Goſpel church-ſtate, and the ordinances of it; and he opens the door of heaven by his blood and righteouſneſs, and gives his people liberty and boldneſs to enter into the holieſt of all, and brings many ſons to glory in ſpight of all the oppoſition of men and devils: on the other hand, when he pleaſes, he ſhuts up the ſcriptures, and the eyes of men from ſeeing what is in them; he ſhuts up the door of the Goſpel, and forbids the preaching of it in this and that place; and the door of heaven will be ſhut by him at the laſt day, when all called to the marriage of the Lamb are entered, and there will be no opening. This ſhows the ſovereignity, power, and authority of Chriſt, and which he will exerciſe in this church-ſtate; ſee Job xii. 14. A like phraſe is in the Talmud[r], כיון שסוגר שוב אינו פותח, when he ſhuts again, there is none that opens.

Ver. 8. I know thy works, &c.] Good works, of faith, love, and patience; and which lay much in preaching, profeſſing, and maintaining the pure Goſpel, and in acts of charity to one another; and which were done to ſome degree of perfection, and with great ſincerity; ſince this church is not complained of, that her works were not perfect before God, as the former church is: behold, I have ſet before thee an open door, and no man can ſhut it; or which no man can ſhut, as read the Alexandrian copy, and others, the Complutenſian edition, the Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions. This open door may deſign an uncommon opportunity of preaching the Goſpel; and a very great freedom of mind in the preachers of it, and great attention in the hearers, whoſe hearts will be opened to obſerve, receive, and embrace it; and a very large gathering in of ſouls to Chriſt, and his churches; much and frequent preaching of the word with great ſucceſs, which it won't be in the power of any creature to ſtop or hinder: now will the abundance of the ſea, the forces of the Gentiles flow in, and the nation of the Jews ſhall be born at once. For thou haſt a little ſtrength; which is not to be underſtood of inward ſpiritual ſtrength, for of this the church in this period will have a great deal, as well as of courage and fortitude of mind, but outward power and authority: ſome great men, and princes of the earth, will come into the churches of Chriſt, even kings will come to the brightneſs of her riſing; for now will all thoſe propheſies have their accompliſhment, which reſpect the ſecular grandeur of the church, with regard to its numbers, power, and riches; ſee Iſ. xlix. 18—23. and lx. 3—17. And haſt kept my word; both the commands and ordinances of Chriſt in practice, and that in their primitive purity, as they were delivered by Chriſt, and his Apoſtles, particularly baptiſm and the Lord's ſupper; which have been, one or other of them, or both, moſt ſadly corrupted in all the periods of the churches hitherto, excepting the apoſtolical one, but will now be reſtored to their priſtine purity and glory; and alſo the doctrines of the Goſpel, which will be kept, not in memory only, but in the heart and life; they will be publickly and openly preached, profeſſed, and defended: and haſt not denied my name; Chriſt himſelf, his doctrine reſpecting his perſon, office, and grace, neither in words, nor in works, but both ways confeſſed and owned it.

Ver. 9. Behold, I will make them of the ſynagogue of ſatan, &c.] Which may be underſtood either of the papiſts, the followers of the man of ſin, whoſe coming was after the working of ſatan, and whoſe doctrines are the doctrines of devils, many of whom will now be converted, and brought to the true church; or rather of the Jews, who had, and have, and will have till this time, their ſynagogues for religious worſhip in their way; but they are no other than ſynagogues of ſatan; the men that aſſemble in them are of their father the devil, and do his works, and will do them: which ſay they are Jews, and are not, but do lye; they are Jews by name and nation; they are Jews outwardly, but not inwardly and ſpiritually, Rom. ii. 28, 29. they are carnal wicked men, under the influence of ſatan, tho' they pretend to be religious men, and worſhippers of God: behold, I will make them to come and worſhip before thy feet; the converſion of the Jews is here intended. The worſhip here ſpoken of, is not either a religious or civil worſhip of the church, for the church is not the object of worſhip; only, before whom, and at whoſe feet this worſhip ſhall be given to God in the moſt humble and hearty manner: the ſenſe is, that the convinced and converted Jews ſhall come to the church, and in the moſt lowly and contrite manner, acknowledge their former blindneſs, furious zeal, and violent hatred of the chriſtians, and ſhall profeſs their faith in Chriſt; ſhall join themſelves to the church, and partake of the ordinances of the Goſpel with them; and ſhall worſhip God and Jeſus Chriſt, their Lord and king, in their preſence, and at their feet: and to know that I have loved thee; the Gentile church, and the members of it, in aſſuming human nature, and dying for, and redeeming them, as well as the Jews; in ſending his Goſpel to them, and calling them by his grace, and planting them into Goſpel churches; giving them a place, and a name in his houſe, better than that of ſons and daughters.

Ver. 10. Becauſe thou haſt kept the word of my patience, &c.] The Goſpel ſo called, becauſe it gives an account of the patience of Chriſt, in the midſt of all his outward meanneſs and humiliation; and becauſe it is a means of implanting and increaſing the grace of patience, which God is the efficient cauſe of, and Chriſt is the example of; that patience, which bears a reſemblance to his, in enduring afflictions, reproaches, perſecutions, deſertions, and temptations, and in waiting for his kingdom and glory; and becauſe both the preachers and profeſſors of the word have need of patience, and ſhould exerciſe it in like manner, as Chriſt did. This word, the churches, in the Philadelphian ſtate, will keep pure and incorrupt, and obſerve the ordinances of it according to the directions given in it; and will believe the promiſe of Chriſt's perſonal coming, and patiently wait for it; wherefore, Chriſt promiſes, as follows, I alſo will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which ſhall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth; this hour ſeems to refer not to any of the vials which will be poured out on the antichriſtian ſtates, but to ſome affliction and diſtreſs which will befall the reformed churches, and will light upon the outward court worſhippers among them. It ſeems to be the laſt ſtruggle of the beaſt of Rome, and to denote ſome violent and ſharp perſecution, ſuch as what Daniel mentions, that never was before, nor ſince; but it will be but ſhort, but one hour, the twenty-fourth part of a prophetical day or year, perhaps, about a fortnight; yet it will be very extenſive; it will reach all the world, the whole Roman empire, and all that dwell upon the earth, that are called by the name of chriſtians, and will try them, whether they are ſo or no; Chriſt will now have his fan in his hand, and purge his floor of all his formal profeſſors, and hypocrites; and it will be known who are his true churches, and pure members; and theſe he'll keep cloſe to himſelf, and preſerve ſafe amidſt all the diſtreſs and confuſion the world will be in. This cannot refer to the bloody perſecutions under the Roman emperors, for from thoſe the church at Philadelphia, was not preſerved. We read [*] of twelve members of it that ſuffered with Polycarp.

[r] T. Bab. Sanhedrin, fol. 44. 2. Yalkut Simeoni, par. 2. fol. 70. 3.

Ver. 11. Behold I come quickly, &c.] To bring on this hour of temptation on the reformed churches, which will be at the beginning of this period; to help and deliver, ſave and preſerve the truly godly among them; to deſtroy antichriſt and introduce the latter day glory: hold that faſt which thou haſt; either her grace in the exerciſe of it, as her faith, patience, &c. or rather the doctrines of the Goſpel, and the ordinances of it, which ſhe had received, as delivered by Chriſt, and his Apoſtles; and which ſhe had held in the truth and purity of them, and is now exhorted to hold them faſt, ſince this hour of temptation would be a trying time, to her faith, patience, integrity, and conſtancy: that no man take thy crown; not eternal happineſs, called a crown of life, glory, and righteouſneſs, and which was prepared for her, and promiſed to her, and would be certainly given her; nor was there any danger of another's taking it from her; not but that exhortations of this kind to the ſaints are neceſſary, with reſpect to that, to excite to diligence, care, and watchfulneſs; and are no ways contrary to their final perſeverance, and certain ſalvation, but are means thereof: but either her honour for her faith, and faithfulneſs, for her integrity, ſincerity, and purity, is here meant; or the glorious things which were ſpoken of this church-ſtate, and to be accompliſhed in it, Pſ. lxxxvii. 3. ſee Iſ. lx.

Ver. 12. He that overcometh, &c.] In the hour of temptation, in this period of time; that ſtands his ground then, ſuſtains the ſhock of the beaſt, with courage and intrepidity, and overcomes him: will I make a pillar in the temple of my God; by which is meant not the church triumphant, tho' ſuch will have a place, and an abiding one there; but the church militant, ſo called in alluſion to the temple at Jeruſalem, for its author, matter, ſituation, ſtrength, ſolidity, magnificence, and ſtatelineſs, and for its holineſs; and may be ſaid to be the temple of God, becauſe it is of his building, and is the place where he dwells, and is worſhipped; and the temple of Chriſt's God, as he is man and mediator, thro' whom all worſhip is given to God in it; and thoſe who are overcomers by the grace and ſtrength of Chriſt, are made pillars by him here, in alluſion to the two pillars, Jachin and Boaz, in Solomon's temple; that is, they become very ornamental in the church, they are made hononourable members of it; they come in at the right door into it, and fill up their places, and all relative duties in it, and walk becoming their profeſſion; and like pillars, are a ſupport to it, to the intereſt of the church, the truths of the Goſpel, and to weak and poor ſaints; and as pillars, they are upright in heart and converſation, and are ſteady, firm, and conſtant: and he ſhall go no more out; out of the church, the temple of the Lord, but ſhall abide in it unto death: it is a promiſe of perſeverance both in the grace of God, and in a profeſſion of religion; there ſhall not be ſuch inſtances of apoſtacy as now. And I will write upon him the name of my God; in alluſion to inſcriptions of names on pillars; the ſenſe is, that it ſhould be manifeſt, that ſuch are intereſted in God, as their covenant God and father, in like manner as he is the God and father of Chriſt; and this ſhould be as plain and as evident, as an inſcription on a pillar, or as if it was written upon their foreheads, as the high-prieſt had on his forehead written, holineſs to the Lord; and indeed it will be by their holineſs that it will ſo clearly appear that God is their covenant God; for in this church-ſtate, or ſpiritual reign of Chriſt, holineſs unto the Lord ſhall be upon the bells of the horſes: and the name of the city of my God; which is new Jeruſalem, in alluſion to Jehovah Shammah; meaning the Goſpel church in the latter-day glory; and the ſenſe is, that ſuch ſhall be manifeſtly citizens of this city, in this new and glorious ſtate of the church, and ſhall enjoy all the privileges of it, which at this time eſpecially will be many and great. This will not be the new Jeruſalem church-ſtate, or the thouſand years reign of Chriſt in perſon, for in that there will be no temple, as in this; but it will have the name, and ſome appearance of it; it will bear ſome reſemblance to it, and be a pledge of it: which cometh down out of heaven, from my God; as it is before called new Jeruſalem, in diſtinction from the old, ſo here it is ſaid to come down from heaven, or to be the heavenly Jeruſalem, in diſtinction from the earthly one. The inhabitants of it will be born from above, and be called with an heavenly calling, and their converſation will be in heaven, and all the glory of this church will come from God. And I will write upon him my new name; either the name of Jehovah our righteouſneſs; or rather the name of King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, Rev. xix. 16. which Chriſt will now acquire, or at leaſt this will now be made more manifeſt upon the deſtruction of antichriſt, in this church-ſtate; in which conqueſt he will make all his people ſharers, and they ſhall now more openly appear to be kings, and to reign with him in his ſpiritual kingdom.

Ver. 13. He that hath an ear let him hear, &c.] See the note on ch. ii. 7.

Ver. 14. And unto the angel of the church of the Laodiceans, write, &c.] Of the city of Laodicea, ſee the note on ch. i. 11. there was a church here in the times of the Apoſtle Paul, by whom it was founded is not known; mention is made of it in Col. ii. 1, 2. and iv. 13, 15, 16. who was now the angel, or paſtor of it, whether Epaphras, who is there named, or another, is not certain. According to the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions [t], Archippus was ordained biſhop of it by the Apoſtles; ſee Col. iv. 16, 17. There was a church here in the ſecond century, for Sagaris, biſhop of it, ſuffered martyrdom in the times of Antoninus Verus [u]; and in the fourth century, this church was famous for two eminent biſhops, Theodorus and Gregory; and in the fifth century, it was the metropolitan church of Phrygia, as it was in the ſeventh century, in which age Tyberius, biſhop of this place, was in the ſixth ſynod at Conſtantinople [w]; but now it is even without inhabitants [x]. This church repreſents the ſtate of the church, from the end of the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt, till the time of his perſonal appearing and kingdom, to judge the quick and dead; for after the ſpiritual reign is over, profeſſors of religion will ſink into a formality, and into a lukewarm frame of ſpirit, and into great ſpiritual ſloth and ſecurity, ver. 15, 16. which will make thoſe times like the times of Noah and of Lot; and ſuch will be the days of the coming of the ſon of man to judge the world. Its name ſignifies either the righteouſneſs of the people; and ſo may point at that popular and external righteouſneſs, which the majority of the profeſſors of religion in this period of time, will be boaſting of, and truſting in; being ſelf-ſufficient, and ſelf-dependent, when at the ſame time they'll be naked, as well as poor, and blind, ver. 17, 18. or it ſignifies the judging of the people; for this church-ſtate, at the end of it, will bring on the general judgment; the judge will now be at the door indeed, ſtanding and knocking; and they that are ready to meet the bridegroom, when he comes, will be admitted into the nuptial chamber, and ſit down with him in his throne, in the thouſand years kingdom, at the cloſe of which will be the ſecond reſurrection, when all the people, ſmall and great, ſhall be judged, ver. 19, 20, 21. Theſe things ſaith the Amen; ſee Iſ. lxv. 16. The word Amen is the name of a divine perſon, with the Jews, and it ſeems the ſecond perſon; for ſo on thoſe words in Prov. viii. 30. then was I by him as one brought up with him, they obſerve [y] don't read Amon, the word there uſed, but Amen; and a little after Amen, they ſay is the notaricon, or ſign of, אל מלך נאמן, God the faithful king; they make [z] Amen to be one of the names of the ſecond Sephira, or number in the Cabaliſtic tree, by whom the ſecond perſon in the Godhead ſeems to be deſigned: and they ſay [a], that the word Amen, by Gematry (or numerically) anſwers to the two names Jehovah, Adonai. Chriſt may be ſo called, becauſe he is the God of truth, and truth itſelf; and it may be expreſſive of his faithfulneſs, both to God his Father, and to his people, in whom all the promiſes he either made, or received, are yea and amen; and alſo of the firmneſs, conſtancy, and immutability of Chriſt, in his nature, perſon and offices, in his love, fullneſs of grace, power, blood, and righteouſneſs; and is very appoſitely aſſumed by him now, when he was about to give the finiſhing ſtroke to all covenant-engagements, and to all promiſes and propheſies; ſee ch. i. 18. The faithful and true witneſs; who as he was in the days of his fleſh, ſee the note on ch. i. 5. ſo he will be at the day of judgment, a ſwift witneſs againſt all ungodly men; and he may the rather take up this title, not only on that account, but to ſhow that the deſcription he gives of the ſtate and condition of this church is juſt, ver. 15, 16. and to engage it to take his advice the more readily, ver. 18. and to aſſure it of the nearneſs of his coming, ver. 20. and to ſtrengthen the faith of his people, and quicken their hope and expectation of the happineſs with him promiſed, ver. 21. the ſame character is given to the logos or word of the Lord, by the Targumiſt in Jer. xlii. 5. let the word of the Lord be to us, לסהיד קשוט ומהימן, for a true and faithful witneſs; the very phraſe here uſed. The beginning of the creation of God; not the firſt creature that God made, but the firſt cauſe of the creation; the firſt parent, producer, and efficient cauſe of every creature; the author of the old creation, who made all things out of nothing in the beginning of time; and of the new creation, the everlaſting Father of every one that is made a new creature; the Father of the world to come, or of the new age, and Goſpel diſpenſation; the maker of the new heaven, and new earth; and ſo a very fit perſon to be the judge of the whole world, to ſummon all nations before him, and paſs the final ſentence on them. The phraſe is Jewiſh, and it is a title the Jews give to Metatron, by whom they ſometimes mean the Meſſiah; ſo thoſe words in Gen. xxiv. 2. and Abraham ſaid unto his eldeſt ſervant of his houſe, they paraphraſe thus [b]; "and Abraham ſaid unto "his ſervant, this is Metatron, (or the mediator) "the ſervant of God, the eldeſt of his houſe; for "he is, תהלת בריותיו של מקום, the beginning of "the creation of God, who rules over all that he has; "for to him the holy bleſſed God has given the "government of all his hoſts." Chriſt is the αρχη, the prince, or governour of all creatures.

[*] Euſeb. Eccl. Hiſt. l. 4. c. 15.

Ver. 15. I know thy works, &c.] Which were far from being perfect, and not ſo good as thoſe of the former church: that thou art neither cold nor hot; ſhe was not cold, or without ſpiritual life, at leaſt in many of her members, as all men by nature are, and carnal profeſſors be; ſhe was alive, but not lively: nor was ſhe wholly without ſpiritual affections and love, to God, and Chriſt, to his people, ways, truths, and ordinances; ſhe had love, but the fervency of it was abated: nor was ſhe without ſpiritual breathings, and deſires altogether, as dead men are; or without the light and knowledge of the Goſpel, and a profeſſion of it, and yet ſhe was not hot; her love to God and Chriſt, and the ſaints, was not ardent and flaming; it was not like coals of fire, that give a moſt vehement flame, which many waters cannot quench. She had not fervency of ſpirit in the ſervice of the Lord; nor was ſhe zealous for the truths of the Goſpel, and for the ordinances of it, and for the houſe of God, and its diſcipline; nor did ſhe warmly oppoſe all ſin, and every error, and falſe way. I would thou wert cold or hot; which muſt be underſtood, not abſolutely, but comparatively; and not that it was an indifferent thing to Chriſt, whether ſhe was one or the other; but he alludes to what is natural among men, it being generally more agreeable to have any thing entirely hot, or entirely cold, than to be neither; and ſo uſes this phraſe to ſhew his deteſtation of lukewarmneſs, and that it is better to be ignorant, and not a profeſſor of religion, than to be a vain and carnal one; Chriſt deſires not ſimply, that ſhe might be cold, but that ſhe might be ſenſible of her need of ſpiritual heat and fervency.

Ver. 16. So then becauſe thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, &c.] A lukewarm profeſſor is one that ſerves God and mammon; that halts between two opinions, and knows not what religion is beſt, and cares little for any, yet keeps in a round of duty, tho' indifferent to it, and contents himſelf with it; and is unconcerned about the life and power of godlineſs, and takes up with the external form of it; and has no thought about the glory of God, the intereſt of Chriſt and truth; and this was too much the caſe of this church, at leaſt of a great number of its members; wherefore it was very loathſome to Chriſt, hence he threatens: I will ſpue thee out of my mouth; this ſhows how nauſeous lukewarmneſs is to Chriſt, inſomuch that on account of it he would not own and acknowledge her as his; but even caſt her out, unchurch her, and have no more any ſuch imperfect church-ſtate upon earth, as he afterwards never will, this is the laſt; nor is there any church-ſtate, or any remains of one in Laodicea; it is indeed quite uninhabited.

Ver. 17. Becauſe thou ſayeſt I am rich, &c.] In worldly goods, which occaſioned her lukewarmneſs, as riches often do, and her vanity, pride, and arrogance, afterwards expreſſed. Laodicea was a very rich city, and ſo will be this church-ſtate, thro' the acceſſion of kings and princes, and great men of the earth unto it, in the former period: riches ſeldom do any good to the churches of Chriſt, they did not in Conſtantine's time; and it ſeems that even at the cloſe of the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt they will be of bad conſequence, ſince they will uſher in the Laodicean church-ſtate: or her meaning is, that ſhe was rich in ſpiritual things; not in grace, but in external gifts, which ſtill remained, upon the very great pouring forth of the Spirit in the laſt church-ſtate; and in good works, on which ſhe too much truſted for ſalvation, placing her righteouſneſs in them: ſhe is one whom the Jews [c] call עשיר בתורה, rich in the law: and increaſed with goods; with outward peace and proſperity, with much natural and divine light and knowledge, with the purity of Goſpel ordinances, even beyond the former church-ſtate in her own imagination: and have need of nothing; contenting herſelf with theſe external things: true believers, as conſidered in Chriſt, ſtand in need of nothing indeed, they are compleat in him, and have every thing in him; but as conſidered in themſelves, they are daily in need of daily food for their ſouls, as for their bodies, of freſh light and life, ſtrength and comfort, and of new ſupplies of grace; wherefore this church ſhows great ignorance of herſelf, as well as great pride and arrogance, to expreſs herſelf in this manner: and knoweſt not that thou art wretched; as all men are in a ſtate of nature and unregeneracy; which may be the caſe of many profeſſors, and they be ignorant of it; as to be under a ſentence of wrath, obnoxious to the curſes of the law, in danger of hell and deſtruction, loſt and undone, and unable to extricate themſelves out of ſuch a ſtate: true believers account themſelves wretched, as the Apoſtle Paul did, on account of indwelling ſin, and the plague of their own hearts, which the members of this church, the greater part of them, were ignorant of: and miſerable; a miſerable man is one that is attended with outward afflictions, but this was not the caſe of this church; and with ſpiritual poverty, blindneſs, and nakedneſs, and this was her caſe; ſome perſons neither know their miſery, nor their need of mercy: and poor; not in purſe, nor in ſpirit, nor with reſpect to outward afflictions, nor as to her church-ſtate, but in a ſpiritual ſenſe; one whom the Jews call [d] רש בתורה, poor in the law; as ſuch may be ſaid to be who have nothing to eat that is fit to eat; nothing to wear but rags, and have no money to buy either; who are in debt, and not able to pay, nor to help themſelves on any account; and this may be the caſe of profeſſors, and yet not known and conſidered by them: and blind; natural men are blind as to a ſaving knowledge of God in Chriſt, as to the way of ſalvation by Chriſt, as to the plague of their own hearts, as to the work of the Spirit of God upon the ſoul, and as to the truths of the Goſpel, in the power of them; but here it regards blindneſs with reſpect to her church-ſtate, and its imperfection: and naked; ſin has ſtripped man of his moral cloathing; man's own righteouſneſs will not cover his nakedneſs; and whoever is deſtitute of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt is a naked perſon.

Ver. 18. I counſel thee, &c.] Chriſt is a counſellor, and is every way fit to be one, for he is the all-wiſe God, the antient of days, and the father of his people, and as mediator, the wiſdom of God; and he was concerned in the council of peace from everlaſting; and when he was here on earth he gave counſel in perſon, and now he gives it by his Spirit, and by his word and miniſters; and the ſubſtance of it is, to come to him for grace, life, and ſalvation; for pardon, peace, and righteouſneſs; for ſpiritual light and knowledge, and every ſupply of grace; and his advice is always wholeſome, good, and ſuitable, is hearty, ſincere, and faithful, and is freely given, and is wiſe and prudent; and being taken, infallibly ſucceeds; the counſel here given follows: to buy of me gold tried in the fire; by which is meant either a more pure and glorious ſtate of the church, ſuch as was in the former period, or greater; or a larger meaſure of light and knowledge in the Goſpel, which is better than fine gold; or ſome particular graces, and a comfortable exerciſe of them, as fervent love, and ſtrong faith, which is much more precious than gold; or rather, all ſpiritual riches in general, which are in Chriſt, and are unſearchable, ſolid, ſubſtantial, and ſatisfying, are laſting and durable, precious, excellent, and incorruptible: and the buying of this gold is not to be underſtood in a proper ſenſe, by giving a valuable conſideration for it, for no ſuch is to be given, but in an improper ſenſe; it is a buying without money and without price; Chriſt and his grace are given freely; Chriſt, of whom it is to be had, and of him only, does not ſell it, but he gives it to thoſe that come to him for it, and deſire to have it, and are willing to part with all ſo they may but enjoy it; for that it is to be underſtood in ſuch a ſenſe, is clear from the character of the perſons who are adviſed to buy, who were poor, or beggars, ver. 17. the end of it is, that thou mayeſt be rich; for tho' this church was rich, yet not in ſpirituals; and tho' ſhe was rich in her own conceit, yet not really ſo; perſons are not to be accounted truly rich who have only this world's goods; none are rich but thoſe who have an intereſt in Chriſt and his grace; and they who are poor in this world, and yet have grace, are really rich: the next thing adviſed to is, and white raiment; that is, and buy white raiment, by which ſome underſtand the heavenly glory, robes of immortality, a being clothed upon with the houſe which is from heaven; this may be compared to raiment, for it is a glory, an immortality, an incorruption to be put on; and fitly enough to white raiment, for the purity and ſpotleſſneſs of it; and being clothed with this, no nakedneſs, or ſhame of it will appear; and this is to be had from Chriſt, and in the ſame way as gold is to be bought of him; the deſign of this advice may be to quicken the deſires of the church after heavenly things; tho' it rather ſeems to reſpect ſomething ſuitable to her in this preſent ſtate: wherefore others think, that by it are meant good works, holineſs of life and converſation; but theſe are never called white raiment, but even rags, yea filthy ones in the beſt; and whatever cover they may be from nakedneſs in the ſight of men, they are no cover from it in the ſight of God, nor do they preſerve from ſhame and bluſhing: rather than by it is meant the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which may be compared to raiment; it is upon the ſaints, and is put upon them as ſuch; it covers as a garment does, protects from injuries, keeps warm, beautifies and adorns as raiment does; and it may be compared to white raiment, for its purity and perfection; now this to be bought of Chriſt, it is to be had of him, and is to be had of him freely, without money and without price; it is a free gift of grace; and even faith itſelf, which receives it, is the gift of God: the ends of giving this advice are, that thou mayeſt be clothed, and that the ſhame of thy nakedneſs do not appear; the ſoul may be naked when the body is well clothed; and notwithſtanding a man's moral righteouſneſs, he may not be clothed; they, and they only are clothed, who have on the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; nakedneſs ariſes from want of righteouſneſs, which is only covered by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt; and from hence alſo ſprings ſhame, which Chriſt's righteouſneſs hides: and anoint thine eyes with eye-ſalve; by which may be meant the word of God, particularly the Goſpel; and anointing with it is making uſe of it for the gaining of light and knowledge: all without this divine revelation are in darkneſs, and ſuch who reject the authority of it go aſtray; the ſcriptures are the only directory, and rule of faith and practice; the law is a means of enlightning perſons to ſee their ſin and miſery, and the danger they are in; and the Goſpel is a light, whereby is beheld the glory of Chriſt, of his perſon and office, of his grace and righteouſneſs, and of ſalvation by him; and this is the Goſpel of Chriſt, and is to be had of him freely, even the ſaving knowledge of it. The Jews have adopted the very Greek word here uſed, into their language, and apply it to the law; ſays R. Chija[e], ſpeaking of the law, "קילוריח לעין, it is a ſalve "for the eye, a plaiſter for a wound, &c. it is a "ſalve for the eyes, as is written Pſ. xix. 8." or elſe the illumination of the Spirit is meant, by which the eyes of the underſtanding being enlightned, men ſee themſelves, the impurity of their hearts and nature, the imperfection of their righteouſneſs, their impotency to all that is ſpiritually good, and that they are loſt and undone in themſelves; and by which they ſee Chriſt and ſalvation by him, that it is in him, and in no other, and that it is full and ſuitable, and for the chief of ſinners, and that it is all of free grace, and that they have an intereſt in it; by this they have light into the doctrines of the Goſpel, and have ſome glimpſe of the glories of another world; and this is to be had of Chriſt, who gives his Spirit freely, and an underſtanding to know ſpiritual things: and the end of the advice is, that thou mayeſt ſee; who, notwithſtanding the conceit ſhe had of herſelf, was blind; perſons may have much human prudence, much knowledge in things moral, yea, in things evangelical, notionally, and yet be blind as to true ſpiritual light and experience; they only ſee ſpiritually and ſavingly who have the Spirit of God.

Ver. 19. As many as I love I rebuke and chaſten, &c.] The perſons, the objects of Chriſt's love here intended, are not angels, but the ſons of men; and theſe not all of them, yet many of them, even all who are his own by his Father's gift and his own purchaſe; and who are called his church, and ſometimes repreſented as ſuch who love him and obey his commands: the inſtances of his love to them are many; as his ſuretyſhip-engagements for them, his aſſumption of their nature, dying in their room and ſtead, paying their debts, procuring their peace and pardon, bringing in a righteouſneſs for them, purchaſing their perſons, his interceſſion for them, preparations in heaven, ſupplies of grace, and frequent viſits in a kind and familiar manner; and as for the nature of his love, it is free and ſovereign, everlaſting and immutable, and it is matchleſs and unconceiveable, it is ſtrong and affectionate, and as his Father loved him; and ſuch are rebuked by Chriſt, not in a way of wrath, but in a tender manner, in order to bring them under a conviction of their ſin, and of their duty, and of their folly in truſting in, or loving any creature more than himſelf, and of all their wrong ways; and they are chaſtened by him, not in a vindictive, but in a fatherly way, which is inſtructive and teaching to them, and for their good. This ſeems to refer to ſome afflictions which Chriſt was about to bring upon this church, by ſome means or another, to awaken her out of her ſloth and ſecurity, and which would be in love to her, and the end be to rouſe her zeal, and bring her to repentance. Some think this reſpects the Gog and Magog army, which will encompaſs the camp of the ſaints, and the beloved city; but that will not be till after the thouſand years reign, and beſides will be no affliction to them; rather it deſigns the unchurching them, ſignified by ſpueing them out of his mouth, ver. 16. be zealous, therefore, and repent; zeal was what was wanting in this church; which is nothing elſe than hot, fervent, and ardent love, love in a flame; whereas ſhe was neither cold nor hot, but lukewarm, Chriſt would have her be zealous for God; for his cauſe and intereſt, for his Goſpel, ordinances, and the diſcipline of his houſe, and againſt every thing that is evil; againſt all falſe worſhip, all errors in doctrine, all ſin and iniquity; and to be zealous of good works, and in the worſhip of God, both private and public: and repent; in an evangelical way, of her lukewarmneſs, remiſſneſs, and ſupineneſs; of her pride, arrogance, and vain boaſtings of herſelf; and of her ſelf-ſufficience, ſelf-dependence, and ſelf-confidence.

Ver. 20. Behold I ſtand at the door and knock, &c.] The phraſe of ſtanding at the door, may be expreſſive of the near approach, or ſudden coming of Chriſt to judgment, ſee James v. 9. and his knocking may ſignify the notice that will be given of it, by ſome of the immediate forerunners and ſigns of his coming; which yet will be obſerved but by a few, ſuch a general ſleepineſs will have ſeized all profeſſors of religion; and particularly may intend the midnight-cry, which will, in its iſſue, rouſe them all: if any man hear my voice; in the appearances of things, and providences in the world: and open the door; or ſhew a readineſs for the coming of Chriſt, look and wait for it, and be like ſuch that will receive him with a welcome: I will come unto him, and ſup with him, and he with me; to and among theſe will Chriſt appear when he comes in perſon; and theſe being like wiſe virgins, ready, having his grace in their hearts, and his righteouſneſs upon them, he'll take them at once into the marriage-chamber, and ſhut the door upon the reſt; when they ſhall enjoy a thouſand years communion with him in perſon here on earth; when the lamb on the throne will feed them with the fruit of the tree of life, and lead them to fountains of living water, and his tabernacle ſhall be among them.

Ver. 21. To him that overcometh, &c.] The lukewarmneſs, and ſelf-confidence, and ſecurity of this ſtate: will I grant to ſit with me in my throne; at the cloſe of this church-ſtate, which will be the laſt of this kind, conſiſting of imperfect ſaints, Chriſt will deſcend from heaven, with the ſouls of all the righteous, and raiſe their bodies, and unite them to them; which, with the living ſaints, will make one general aſſembly and church of the firſt-born, all perfect in ſoul and body; among theſe he'll place his tabernacle, and fix his throne; and they being all made kings, as well as prieſts to him, ſhall now reign on earth with him, and that for the ſpace of a thouſand years: and this is the bleſſing promiſed the overcomers in the Laodicean ſtate, that when Chriſt ſhall ſet up his kingdom among men, and reign gloriouſly before his ancients, they ſhall ſit on the ſame throne with him, or ſhare with him in his kingdom and glory; ſee ch. v. 10. and xx. 4. and Dan. vii. 27. even as I alſo overcame; ſin, ſatan, the world, death, and hell: and am ſet down with my Father in his throne; in heaven, at his right hand; which is expreſſive of equality to him, diſtinction from him, communion with him, and of the honour and glory he is poſſeſſed of; but it is not on this throne that the ſaints will ſit, only Chriſt ſits on the ſame throne with the Father in heaven; it is on Chriſt's throne on earth, or in his perſonal reign there, that the ſaints ſhall ſit down with him; and which honour they ſhall all have, all that are more than conquerors thro' him, and are made kings by him. And when this reign is over, then will follow the ſecond reſurrection, or the reſurrection of the wicked, when will come on the judgment of the people, as Laodicea ſignifies; and when theſe, with the devils, will form themſelves into the Gog and Magog army, and attack the beloved city, the church of glorified ſaints on earth, under Chriſt their king, which will iſſue in the everlaſting deſtruction of the former; and thus theſe ſeven churches bring us to the end of all things.

CHAP. IV.

THIS chapter contains an account of the ſecond viſion John ſaw, as preparatory to the ſealed book, and the opening of it, as the firſt viſion was to the Epiſtles to the ſeven churches. The preface to this viſion, or the introduction to it, and preparation of John for it, are in ver. 1, 2. which declare the time of it, the poſition John was in, what he ſaw and heard, a call to him to come up, and the effect it had upon him; and then follows the viſion itſelf, which is of a throne, deſcribed by the place where it was ſet, in heaven; and by him that ſat upon it, ver. 2. who was like to a jaſper and a ſardine ſtone; and by what was about it, firſt a rainbow of an emerald colour, ver. 3. then four and twenty ſeats, with as many elders upon them, ſitting cloathed and crowned, ver. 4. and by what went out from it, lightenings, thunderings, and voices; and by what were before it, ſeven burning lamps, which are the ſeven ſpirits of God, ver. 5. and a ſea of glaſs like chryſtal; and by what were between it all around, and the elders, four living creatures, deſcribed in general, by their being full of eyes, before and behind, ver. 6. in particular, the firſt by its likeneſs to a lion, the ſecond by its likeneſs to a calf, the third by its likeneſs to a man, and the fourth by its likeneſs to a flying eagle, ver. 7. and by what were common to them, firſt by their wings, of which they had each of them ſix; and by their eyes, they were full of within; and by their conſtant employment in celebrating the perfections of God, and in giving glory, honour, and thanks unto him, ver. 8, 9. at which time alſo the four and twenty elders appear in a worſhipping poſture, and give adoration to God; partly by deeds, caſting their crowns before his throne; and partly by words, aſcribing glory, honour, and power to him; giving a reaſon for it, taken from his creating all things for his pleaſure, ver. 10, 11.

Ver. 1. After this I looked, &c.] After John had ſeen the viſion of Chriſt, in the midſt of the golden candleſticks, with ſeven ſtars in his right hand; after he was bid to write what he had ſeen, and what were, and ſhould be hereafter; and after he had by order written the ſeven epiſtles to the ſeven churches, he looked about him to ſee what elſe he could, having his deſires and expectations raiſed of ſeeing more, and other things, for the eye is never ſatisfied with ſeeing; tho' this is to be underſtood, not of looking with the eyes of his body, but with the eyes of his mind; of his beholding things in a viſionary way, as the prophets did, whence they are called ſeers, and their propheſies viſions: how long this was after the firſt viſion is not certain, it may be but a few minutes; and it is to be obſerved, that as the firſt chapter of this book, with the viſion in it, is the preface or introduction to the church prophecy delivered out in the ſeven epiſtles; ſo this, and the following chapter, with the viſion therein, contain the preface or introduction to the book-prophecy exhibited in the opening of the ſeven ſeals of the ſealed book: and behold a door was opened in heaven; not in a literal ſenſe, as the heavens were opened at Chriſt's baptiſm, and at Stephen's martyrdom, but in a figurative ſenſe; and the phraſe is to be underſtood of a diſcovery of things that were, or were to be in the church of God, which in this book is oftentimes ſignified by heaven; and it muſt be conceived as done in a viſionary way, juſt as Ezekiel, in the viſions of God, was brought to Jeruſalem, and the temple there, and in at a door was ſhown all the abominations committed in the court and temple; ſo John, in a viſionary way, thro' an opened door, had a ſcene of things in the church preſented to him, as follows: and the firſt voice which I heard was, as it were, of a trumpet talking with me; this voice is not called the firſt voice with reſpect to any other voices that were to follow; but it deſigns the former voice, the voice that John heard behind him, when he ſaw the firſt viſion; and this, as that, was clear, loud, and ſonorous as a trumpet, ſo that he thoroughly heard, and rightly underſtood what was ſaid; it was the ſame perſon that made the following repreſentations of things as did then, even he who is the Alpha and the Omega, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the author of the whole revelation; the word firſt is left out in the Arabic verſion: the alluſion is to the blowing of trumpets at the opening of the door of the temple; "every day there "were one and twenty ſoundings of a trumpet in "the temple, three, לפתיחת שערים, at the open-"ing of the doors, and nine at the daily morning "ſacrifice, and nine at the daily evening ſacrifice [f]." And one of them was called the great door of the temple; and he that ſlew the daily ſacrifice, did not ſlay till he heard the ſound of that door when it was opened [g]; ſo here at the opening of the door in heaven, in the church, of which the temple was a type, the voice of the Son of God is heard, as the ſound of a trumpet, talking loudly and familiarly to John: which ſaid, come up hither; from the iſle of Patmos, where he was, up to heaven; not into the third heaven, where Paul was caught up, but rather up into the Goſpel church, the Jeruſalem which is above; tho' this, as before, is to be underſtood in a viſionary way, in like manner as Ezekiel was lifted up by the Spirit between the earth and the heavens; and ſo John, in a viſion, was called up from Patmos, into the air, where he had a repreſentation of the church made unto him: and I will ſhew thee things which muſt be hereafter; in the world, in the Roman empire, and in the church of God, to the end of the world; not but that there were ſome things ſhown him, as before, in the church-prophecy, which had been, and were, and which was done to give him a complete view of things from firſt to laſt: and theſe things were ſhewn in the following viſions of the ſeals, trumpets, and vials, and by the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who talked with him, and to whom this revelation was given to ſhew unto his ſervants; and it was of things that muſt be, becauſe determined and reſolved upon in the unalterable purpoſes and decrees of God.

Ver. 2. And immediately I was in the Spirit, &c.] As he had been before, ch. i. 10. it ſeems he had been ſome little time out of his exſtacy, how long cannot be ſaid, and now upon this new ſcene of things, returned to it; upon the opening of the door in heaven, and hearing the former voice, and the things it ſaid, the Spirit of God at once poſſeſſed and filled him, in an extraordinary manner; and his ſoul or ſpirit was immediately taken from the conſideration of all ſenſible objects, and was fixed and intent upon the things preſented to it in the viſion, ſo that it was, as if it was out of the body. The Arabic verſion reads, then therefore I went in the Spirit; in obedience to the voice that called him up, in which he was aſſiſted by the Spirit of God, who lifted him up as he did Ezekiel, when he ſaw what follows: and behold, a throne was ſet in heaven; not for the final judgment, on which the ſon of man will ſit, when he comes to judge the quick and dead, for he is not the perſon that fills this throne; but this is a ſymbol of the power, authority, and dominion now exerciſed by God, not over the world in general, who has prepared his throne in the heavens, and governs among the nations, according to his ſovereign will, and pleaſure, but which he exerciſes in his church, ſignified by heaven. The alluſion is to the temple, and the throne of God in it, Iſ. vi. 1. Jer. xvii. 12. The temple was an emblem of the Goſpel church, Jeruſalem, or the Goſpel church-ſtate, and was to be called the throne of the Lord, Jer. iii. 17. and now his throne is ſet there. Here he exerciſes a juriſdiction and government; he is king and lawgiver in it; he has enacted laws, and he writes them on the hearts of his people, and puts his Spirit within them, and makes them both able and willing to obey them. And one ſat on the throne; not the Trinity of perſons in the Godhead, which ſome think are ſignified by the three pretious ſtones in the next verſe, the Jaſper, Sardine, and Emerald; for as diſtinct from him that ſat upon the throne, the Lamb is ſaid to be in the midſt of it, and the ſeven Spirits of God are ſaid to be before it: nor is Jeſus Chriſt intended, and his two natures; his divine nature by the Jaſper, and his human nature by the red and blood coloured Sardine; ſince he, the Lamb, is repreſented as in the midſt of the throne, and is often diſtinguiſhed from him that ſat upon it; ſee ch. v. 6, 7, 13. and vii. 10. but God the Father is deſigned, who ſits on the throne, tho' not to the excluſion of the Son and Spirit, yet in diſtinction from them. This clauſe is left out in the Ethiopic verſion.

Ver. 3. And he that ſat, was to look upon like a Jaſper, &c.] For the brightneſs, glory, and majeſty of his countenance, and for his being light itſelf, clothed with it, and dwelling in it; ſee ch. xxi. 11, 18, 19. and for the various perfections of his nature, as eternity, infinity, immutability, omniſcience, omnipotence, omnipreſence, wiſdom power, goodneſs, truth, love, grace, and mercy; for the Jaſper, at leaſt one ſort of them, is of various colours, and ſpotted with divers ſpots; that which is moſt valued, is the green, ſpotted with red, or purple [h]: hence, this ſtone, which is the twelfth in the high-prieſt's breaſt-plate, and on which the name of Benjamin was written, is called, by the Chaldee paraphraſe of Onkelos on Exod. xxviii. 20. Pantere, and of ben Uzziel, on the ſame place, Apanturin, and on Cant. v. 14. Apantor, becauſe ſome are variegated and ſpotted like Panthers. And a Sardine ſtone; the ſame with the Sardius; and ſo read here the Alexandrian copy, the Syriac and Arabic verſions, as in ch. xxi. 20. and in Exod. xxviii. 17. on which Reuben's name was written; this is of a red, or blood colour, as its name, אדם, in Hebrew, ſhews, and the ſame that is called a Cornelian; and is expreſſive of the fiery indignation of God, whoſe fury is poured out like fire, and who, nakedly and abſolutely conſidered, is a conſuming fire to the wicked, his enemies, and the enemies of his church and people. Some Jaſpers being white and ſky coloured, and the white colour being moſt agreeable to deity, as Cicero ſays [i], and the Sardine being red, and a gem of the ruby kind, make up the deſcription of the church's beloved; Cant. v. 10. and may denote in general his purity, glory, and excellency, and in particular good-will to his people, and wrath to his enemies. And to the comfort of the former 'tis added, and there was a rainbow round about the throne; which ſignifies the covenant of grace; ſee Gen. ix. 12, 16. Iſ. liv. 9, 10. Ezek. i. 28. The rainbow is a reverberation, or a reflection of the beams of the ſun upon a thin watry cloud; and the covenant of grace is owing to Jeſus Chriſt, the ſun of righteouſneſs; it is he that has formed it, and filled it with bleſſings and promiſes; he is the mediator, ſurety, and meſſenger of it, and who in ch. x. 1. is repreſented as clothed with a cloud, and a rainbow on his head: the rainbow is of various colours, and fitly expreſſes the various promiſes and bleſſings in the covenant of grace, and the various providences, both proſperous and adverſe, verſe, with reſpect to ſoul and body; and as the rainbow was an emblem of mercy, peace, and reconciliation, in God to man, after he had deſtroyed the world by a flood, ſo the covenant is a covenant of grace and mercy; it ſprings from it, and is full of it, and provides for the peace and reconciliation of the people of God, by the blood of Chriſt; whence it is called a covenant of peace: and as the rainbow is a ſecurity to the world, and the inhabitents of it, from a deſtruction by a flood any more, ſo the covenant is a ſecurity to thoſe who are intereſted in it, from eternal deſtruction, and wrath to come; herein lies all their ſalvation, and this is the ſecurity of it: to which may be added, that God calls it, my bow, as he often calls the covenant of grace, my covenant, in diſtinction from man's; ſee Gen. ix. 12. Pſ. lxxxix. 28, 34. Ezek. xvi. 60, 61, 62. and this being round about the throne of God, ſhows, that the covenant of grace does, as it were, include and incloſe God in his perſons, and in his perfections; all the three divine perſons have a concern in it, and all the divine perfections are glorified by it; and it being around it, it is always in his view; he is ever mindful of it, and conſtantly remembers it for the good of his people, and faithfully keeps it; and it being in this form, denotes, that in whatſoever way he comes forth unto his people, it is always in a covenant way, whether it be in things temporal or ſpiritual, in adverſity or proſperity, with regard to the things of time and eternity; nor is there any coming to him with comfort, but as he is encompaſſed with the rainbow of the covenant; ſtript of this, he is like the jaſper and ſardine ſtones, full of ſparkling majeſty, dread and terror, ſo that there is no coming nigh him; but being encircled with the rainbow, he may be approached as a covenant God, as the God of all grace, ſeated on a throne of grace, whither believers may come with boldneſs, freedom, and chearfulneſs: and this rainbow was in ſight like unto an emerald; the ſtone on which Judah's name was written, in the high-prieſt's breaſt-plate; this is of a green colour, which colour is the prevailing one in the rainbow; it is of an exceeding fine green, very delightful to the eye, and gives pleaſure to the mind to look upon it: and what a lovely and delightful ſight is the covenant of grace to a believer! to ſee God as a covenant-God, Chriſt as the mediator of it, the exceeding great and precious promiſes and bleſſings, both of grace and glory, which are in it, yields an unſpeakable pleaſure to ſuch perſons; the covenant of grace, like the emerald, is ever green, it is always new; its promiſes and bleſſings are always freſh, and like that, it is durable; it is ſure, and can't be broken, and is more immoveable than rocks and mountains: the emerald is very bright, clear, and tranſparent; it is reported of Nero [k], that he could ſee in his emerald the combat of the gladiators in the theatre; in the covenant of grace, as in a glaſs, may be ſeen the glory of all the three perſons in the Godhead, for it is ordered in all things for the glory of each perſon; as alſo all the perfections of the divine nature; here God appears abundant in goodneſs and truth; here mercy and truth meet together, and righteouſneſs and peace kiſs each other: to which may be added, that the emerald is ſaid [l] to help and refreſh the memory; now tho' God ſtands in no need of any thing to bring things to his remembrance, yet ſuch is his condeſcenſion to men, that he ſets the rainbow in the cloud, to look at, that he might remember his everlaſting covenant; and ſo he allows his people to put him in remembrance, by making mention of the covenant of his grace, and pleading the promiſes of it. The Alexandrian copy, and the Ethiopic verſion, inſtead of ιρις, a rainbow, read ιερεις, prieſts.

Ver. 4. And round about the throne were four and twenty ſeats, &c.] In a ſemicircular form, as the rainbow alſo was; the throne being at the upper end, theſe ſeats, or thrones in the above form, came to both ends, or ſides of it; juſt as in the Sanhedrim, or great court of judicature among the Jews ſat [m], the Naſi, or prince, ſat in the uppermoſt ſeat, at his right-hand was Ab beth din, or the father of the Sanhedrim, and at his left-hand a doctor or wiſe man, and all the reſt of the members ſat in a ſemicircular form upon ſeats before them, ſo that they could ſee them all; and to this the alluſion might be thought to be, did their numbers agree, but in the great Sanhedrim there were ſeventy-one, and in the leſſer, twenty-three, which laſt comes very near the number here: and upon the ſeats I ſaw four and twenty elders ſitting; by whom are meant not the twenty-four books of the Old Teſtament, as ſome of the antients thought, and alſo ſome of the modern writers, as lord Napeir, and others; for the things ſaid of them are ſuch as cannot be applied to inanimate things, ſuch as ſitting on ſeats, being clothed with white raiment, having golden crowns on their heads, falling down before the throne, and worſhipping him that ſat on it; and beſides, in ch. v. 8, 9. they are ſaid to be redeemed by the blood of the lamb, out of every kindred, tongue, people, and nation; for which laſt reaſon, angels alſo cannot be deſigned, and who moreover, in the place referred to, are manifeſtly diſtinguiſhed from theſe elders; nor are they to be underſtood as the repreſentatives of the Jewiſh church, or of the Jewiſh and chriſtian church together, as triumphant in heaven, and ſo be ſignified by the twelve patriarchs and twelve Apoſtles, which together make up twenty-four; but rather the members of the Goſpel church-ſtate, throughout the whole of it, in every ſucceſſion and period of time, are here meant; and are expreſſed by the number twenty-four, in alluſion to the twenty-four courſes of the prieſts, into which they were divided by David, 1 Chron. xxiv. 1, 4, 18. and to the twenty-four ſtations of the Levites, who in turn attended the ſervice of the temple daily, and repreſented the whole body of the people of Iſrael, in putting their hands upon the ſacrifices, and praying for them; of which ſee the note on Luke i. 5. add to this, that in twenty-four places the prieſts and Levites kept watch in the temple [n]; ſo theſe twenty-four elders before the throne of God, in his temple, repreſent the whole Iſrael of God, all the members of the Goſpel church-ſtate, from the firſt to the laſt of it: and they are ſtiled elders, not on account of office, as paſtors of the churches are called, but becauſe of their ſenile gravity, prudence, and knowledge; they having a greater degree of ſpiritual knowledge of the manifold wiſdom of God, than the Jewiſh church, which was in a ſtate of infancy, and under tutors and governours had; but the Goſpel church is in a ſtate of manhood, and no longer under a ſchool-maſter, and ſo fitly expreſſed by elders; and theſe are repreſented as ſitting on their ſeats, not only to hear the word of God, but as judging in caſes that come before them, reſpecting the admiſſion or excluſion of members, the laying on, or taking off of cenſures, &c. and theſe, their ſeats being around and near unto the throne, denote their nearneſs to God, and their communion with him, in his houſe and ordinances, and his dwelling in the midſt of them. Clothed in white raiment; in the pure and ſpotleſs robe of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, which is comparable to fine linnen, clean and white; and is the righteouſneſs of the ſaints in common, of every true member of Chriſt's body. And they had on their heads crowns of gold; being made by Chriſt kings, as well as prieſts, unto God; for ſo theſe four and twenty elders are ſaid to be, in ch. v. 10. and they now reign as kings over ſin, ſatan, and the world, and have a kingdom of grace which ſhall never be removed; and they ſhall reign with Chriſt on earth a thouſand years, and then reign with him to all eternity in heaven. It is a common ſaying with "the Jews [o], that there is no eating and drinking in the world to come, but the righteous are ſitting, ועטרותיהם בראשיהם, and their crowns upon their heads."

Ver. 5. And out of the throne proceeded lightenings, and thunderings, and voices, &c.] Which may be underſtood either of the doctrines of the Goſpel, which come out of Zion, and out of Jeruſalem, the church of God, where he has his throne; and which are comparable to lightening, both for the light and knowledge they give, and for the ſwiftneſs with which they were ſpread over the world, by the Apoſtles of Chriſt; and to thunderings for the awfulneſs, authority, and majeſty of them, eſpecially as they were delivered out by the Boanergeſſes, or ſons of thunder; and as the propheſies of the prophets are called the voices of the prophets, Acts xiii. 27. ſo may the doctrines of the Goſpel be called voices, as they are the voice of God, and of Chriſt, and of his miniſters; and are voices of love, grace, mercy, peace, pardon, righteouſneſs, and eternal life. The alluſion is to the giving of the law on mount Sinai, when ſuch things were ſeen and heard, Exod. xix. 16. or elſe the judgments of God, and the puniſhments inflicted upon his enemies, and, the enemies of his church and people, and his awful threatnings of them, may be deſigned; ſee Pſ. xviii. 13, 14. Joel iii. 16. with which compare Rev. viii. 5. And there were ſeven lamps of burning fire before the throne, which are the ſeven ſpirits of God; in alluſion to the ſeven lamps in the tabernacle and temple, which were trimmed by the prieſts, and always kept burning, and are expreſſive of the Spirit, and his gifts; and theſe being ſignified by the number ſeven, denote the fullneſs and perfection of them; and being ſaid to be before the throne, ſhew that there is always a ſufficiency of them for the ſupply of the churches in all ages, to fit and qualify proper perſons to miniſter the word, and adminiſter ordinances; and theſe being called lamps of burning fire, point at the light, the Spirit of God in his gifts communicates to the churches; and that warmth and heat, comfort and refreſhment, conveyed to them, thro' the preaching of the Goſpel, and the diſpenſation of the ordinances of it, under his illuminating and quickening influences.

Ver. 6. And before the throne there was a ſea of glaſs like unto chryſtal, &c.] By which is meant, not heaven, nor the ſouls of the bleſſed there, nor the multitude of the holy angels, nor the firſt converts to chriſtianity at Jeruſalem; for thoſe that got the victory over the beaſt are ſaid to ſtand upon this ſea, chap. xv. 2. which theſe ſenſes, eſpecially the three laſt, will by no means admit of. Some by it underſtand the world, which may be compared to a ſea, for the multitude of people in it, as many waters in this book ſignify people and nations, ch. xvii. 15. and to a ſea of glaſs, which is brittle, for the frailty and tranſitorineſs of the world, of the faſhion of it, and of men and things in it; and to the clear chryſtal, becauſe all things in it are open and manifeſt to the omniſcient eye of God; but the world, and men of it, uſed not to be compared to a ſtill and quiet ſea, as this is, but to one diſturbed and troubled by winds and tempeſts, whoſe waters caſt up mire and dirt, Iſ. lvii. 20. Others think the ordinance of baptiſm is deſigned, of which the red ſea, thro' which the Iſraelites paſſed under the cloud, was an emblem; and which may be compared to a ſea of glaſs, for its tranſparency, it clearly expreſſing the ſufferings, burial, and reſurrection of Chriſt; and to chryſtal for its purity; and to all this for its cleanſing nature, as it leads unto the blood of Chriſt; and its being before the throne, may denote its being the way of entrance into the Goſpel church. Others think the blood of Chriſt is meant, in alluſion to the brazen ſea in the tabernacle, which was made of the looking-glaſſes the women brought, and for the prieſts to waſh in, before they entred on buſineſs, Exod. xxx. 18. and xxxviii. 8. and to the molten ſea in the temple, which was for the ſame purpoſe, 1 Kings vii. 23. Chriſt's blood is the fountain opened to waſh in for ſin, and may be compared to a ſea for its abundant efficacy in cleanſing from all ſin; and it is this which makes way to the throne, and to him that ſits on it; and is a ſpecial privilege enjoyed by thoſe who come to mount Zion, or into a Goſpel church-ſtate; there is always this laver to waſh their garments in, and make them white: tho' this ſea being of glaſs, ſeems not ſo much deſigned to waſh in; and therefore rather I think by it is meant the Goſpel, compared to a ſea for the deep things of God, and myſteries of grace which are in it; to a ſea of glaſs, becauſe in it is beheld, as in a glaſs, the glory of the Lord, of his perſon, office, and righteouſneſs, as well as many other wondrous things; and to one like chryſtal, for the clearneſs, perſpicuity, and evidence of the truths contained in it; and to a fixed, ſtill, and quiet ſea, becauſe it is the Goſpel of peace, love, grace, and mercy, and brings peace, joy, and tranquillity to troubled minds, when the law works wrath: but here are no toſſing, foaming, raging waves of wrath, and fury, but all ſmooth, ſtable, ſolid, tranquil, and quiet. And this is ſaid to be before the throne, where the rainbow of the covenant is, of which the Goſpel is a tranſcript; and where the four and twenty elders, or members of churches be, for their delight and comfort; and where the ſeven ſpirits of God are, to furniſh men with gifts to preach it; and where the four living creatures, or miniſters of the word, have their place, who officiate in it. Agreeable to this figurative way of ſpeaking, the Jews call [p] the law, ימא דאוריתא, the ſea of the law, and the ſea of wiſdom; and frequently give the characters of ſuch and ſuch a doctor, as being very expert and converſant, בים התלמוד, in the ſea of the Talmud, or doctrine [q]. The Alexandrian copy, the Complutenſian edition, the Vulgate Latin, and Syriac verſions read, there was as a ſea of glaſs, ſomewhat that looked like one.

[q] Ganz. Tzemach David, par. 1. fol. 46. 2. & 47. 1, 2.

The word glaſs is left out in the Ethiopic verſion, but very aptly is it ſo deſcribed, the colour of the ſea being ſometimes green like that of glaſs. And in the midſt of the throne, and round about the throne, were four beaſts; or living creatures, as the word may be better rendered, agreeable to Ezek. i. 5. to which reference is here had; and by whom are meant not the angels, tho' there are many things which agree with them; they are ſaid to be the four ſpirits of the heavens, which go forth from ſtanding before the Lord of all the earth, Zech. vi. 5. They may be rightly called living creatures, ſince they live a moſt happy life in heaven; their ſituation is before the throne, and in the preſence of God; and their being ſo ſedulous, diligent, and watchful in doing the will of God, may be ſignified by their being full of eyes behind, and before, and within; their ſtrength may be fitly expreſſed by the lion; their indefatigableneſs in the ſervice of God, by the ox; their wiſdom, prudence, and knowledge by the face of a man; and their ſwiftneſs in obeying the divine commands by the flying eagle; their number of wings agrees with that of the ſeraphim in Iſ. vi. 2. to which the alluſion ſeems to be; and their work in continually aſcribing glory to God, ſuits with them: to which may be added, that the Jews often ſpeak of four angels, סיבב לכסאו, round about his throne, that is, the throne of God; whoſe names are Michael, Gabriel, Uriel, and Raphael; the three firſt they place in this manner, Michael at his right hand, Uriel at his left, and Gabriel before him [r]. Sometimes thus, Michael on his right hand, Gabriel on his left, Uriel before him, and Raphael behind him, and the holy bleſſed God in the middle; and they are expreſly called [s] by them the four living creatures, meaning in Ezekiel's viſion; and they make mention of the intellectual living creatures, which are, סחרין לכרסיא, round about the throne [t]. Notwithſtanding all this, the angels cannot be intended, becauſe theſe four living creatures, are ſaid to be redeemed by the blood of Chriſt, and are diſtinguiſhed from angels in ch. v. 8, 9, 10, 11. nor are the four Goſpels, with the four Evangeliſts, here meant; for whatever agreement may be fancied there is between theſe, and the likeneſs of the living creatures; as that Matthew may be ſignified by the creature that has the face of a man, becauſe he begins his Goſpel with the genealogy of Chriſt, as man; and Mark by the lion, becauſe he begins his Goſpel with the voice of one crying in the wilderneſs; and Luke by the ox, becauſe he begins his Goſpel with an account of Zacharias the prieſt, offering in the temple; and John by the eagle, becauſe he begins his Goſpel, the firſt face or leaf of it in a very high ſtile, and with the divinity of Chriſt: and with what truth ſoever it may be ſaid of theſe, that they are full of divine light and knowledge, and ſwiftly ſpread it in the world, and are continually giving glory to God; yet it cannot be ſaid of them, with any propriety, as is ſaid of theſe four living creatures, that they fall down before God, and worſhip him, and are redeemed by the blood of the Lamb: beſides, theſe four are repreſented as calling to John at the opening of the firſt four ſeals, to come and ſee what was to be ſeen; and one of them is ſaid to give to the ſeven angels the vials of wrath to pour out, ch. v. 8, 9. and vi. 1, 3, 5, 7. and xv. 7. to which may be added, that this ſenſe is attended with this inconvenience, that it makes John to be one of the four creatures which he ſaw: nor are four particular Apoſtles, as Peter and John, Paul and Barnabas, pointed at, as others think; nor the pure apoſtolical church, for the church is repreſented by the four and twenty elders, and theſe four living creatures are diſtinguiſhed from the hundred and forty-four thouſand on mount Zion, in ch. xiv. 1, 3. Dr. Goodwin has a very ingenious thought upon theſe words, could it be ſupported; he thinks, that theſe four living creatures deſign the four officers in the chriſtian church, the ruling elder, the paſtor, the deacon, and the teacher; the ruling elder by the lion, who needs courage to deal with men in caſe of ſins; the paſtor by the ox, for his labouriouſneſs in treading out the corn; the deacon by that which has the face of a man, it being neceſſary that he ſhould be merciful and pitiful to the poor, as is the heart of a man; and the teacher by the flying eagle, who is quick to eſpy errors, and ſoars aloft into high myſteries: but then it ſhould be obſerved, that there is no ſuch officer as a ruling elder in the church, diſtinct from the paſtor; and that the paſtor and teacher are one; ſo that there are but two ſorts of officers in the church, paſtor and deacon; ſee Phil. i. 1. to which may be added, that the four living creatures are all in the ſame ſituation, and are alike full of eyes, and have the ſame number of wings, and are employed in the ſame work; all which cannot be ſaid equally of church-officers. By theſe four living creatures, I apprehend, we are to underſtand the miniſters of the Goſpel in general, in the ſucceſſive ages of the church, to whom all the characters do well agree. And tho' they may not be all found in every one, at leaſt not in all alike, yet they are in one or another of them, and in them as together conſidered. They are ſaid to be four, being fewer in number than the members of the church, which are ſignified by the twenty-four elders, and yet a ſufficient number; and in alluſion to the four ſtandards of the camp of Iſrael in the wilderneſs, to which there ſeems to be ſome reference in the whole of this account; as the tabernacle there was placed in the midſt, ſo the throne of God here; as the prieſts and Levites were round about that, ſo the four and twenty elders here; as there were ſeven lamps, over-againſt the candleſtick in the tabernacle, continually burning, ſo there are ſeven ſpirits here before the throne; and as there were four princes, who were ſtandard-bearers, placed at the four corners of the camp, ſo here four living creatures, or miniſters of the word, who are ſtandard-bearers: the ſtandard of Judah, with Iſſachar, and Zabulon under him, was at the eaſt of the tabernacle; and Ephraim, with Menaſſeh and Benjamin, at the weſt; Reuben, with Simeon and Gad at the ſouth; and Dan, with Aſher and Nephthali at the north; and the Jewiſh writers ſay [u], that on Judah's ſtandard was the figure of a lion, on Ephraim's the figure of an ox, on Reuben's the figure of a man, and on Dan's the figure of an eagle; and to which the four living creatures are likened here. And this number four may be the rather mentioned, with reſpect to the four parts of the world, and corners of the earth, whither the miniſters of the Goſpel are ſent to preach, and whither their commiſſion reaches; there being of the elect of God in all parts to be gathered in by their miniſtry: and very properly may they be called living creatures, becauſe they are alive in themſelves, being quickened by the Spirit of God, or otherwiſe they would not be fit for their work; and becauſe their work requires livelineſs in the exerciſe of grace, and fervency in the performance of duty; and becauſe they are a means in the hand of God of quickening dead ſinners, and of reviving drooping ſaints by the word of life, which they hold forth: the ſituation of theſe four living creatures agrees with them, who are ſaid to be both in the midſt of, and round about the throne, and ſo were nearer to it than the four and twenty elders, and were between that and them; as the miniſters of the Goſpel are ſet in the firſt place in the church; have nearneſs to God, and much of his preſence, which is particularly promiſed them; and ſtand between God and the people, and receive from the one, and communicate to the other, and lead on the worſhip of God, as theſe four do; ſee ver. 9, 10. And theſe are ſaid to be full of eyes; of ſpiritual light, and evangelical knowledge; and they have need of all the eyes they have to look into the ſcriptures of truth, to ſearch and pry into them, and find out the ſenſe and meaning of them; to overlook the flock committed to them, they have taken the overſight of; to look to themſelves, their doctrine, and their converſation; to eſpy enemies and dangers, and give notice of them to the churches; to look to God upon the throne, and to the Lamb in the midſt of it, for freſh ſupplies of gifts and grace; and to ſee to it, that all their miniſtrations tend to the glory of God, the honour of a redeemer, and the good of ſouls. And they had eyes before and behind; before them, to look to the word of God, and the deep things in it, which continually lies before them, and to the things that are yet to come relating to the kingdom and church of Chriſt; and behind them, to obſerve, how all ſacrifices and types, predictions and promiſes have had their accompliſhment in Chriſt; they have eyes before them to watch over the church, they are in the midſt of, and which is the flock that is before them; and eyes behind, to guard againſt ſatan, and his emiſſaries, falſe teachers, who ſometimes ſlyly and ſecretly come upon the back of them; they have eyes before them, to look to him that ſits upon the throne, on whom their dependance, and from whom their expectations are; and they have eyes behind them, to look to the four and twenty elders, the members of churches, to whom they miniſter.

Ver. 7. And the firſt beaſt was like a lion, &c.] And this figure expreſſes the ſtrength of the miniſters of the word, the lion being the ſtrongeſt among beaſts, Prov. xxx. 30. to do the work they are called to, to endure hardneſs, as good ſoldiers of Chriſt, and to bear the infirmities of the weak; and alſo it denotes their courage and boldneſs in preaching the Goſpel of Chriſt, without fearing the faces of men, or of being afraid of their revilings: and the ſecond beaſt like a calf; or ox, for ſo the word here uſed ſignifies in the Helleniſtic language, and with the Septuagint interpreters, and agrees with Ezek. i. 10. and deſigns the laboriousneſs of Chriſt's faithful miniſters in treading out the corn of Goſpel truth, who labour in the word and doctrine, and are labourers with God; as alſo their humility, meekneſs, and patience in bearing inſults, reproaches and ſufferings for Chriſt, and inſtructing thoſe that oppoſe themſelves: and the third beaſt had a face as a man; and points at the humanity and tenderheartedneſs, the wiſdom, prudence, knowledge, and underſtanding, and the uſe of the reaſoning faculty, together with a manly ſpirit in abiding by the Goſpel at any rate; all which are ſo neceſſary in the miniſters of the word. And the fourth beaſt was like a flying eagle; which ſets forth the ſagacity and penetration of Goſpel-miniſters into the deep things of God, and myſteries of grace, and their readineſs and ſwiftneſs to do the will of God, in publiſhing the everlaſting Goſpel; ſee ch. xiv. 6.

Ver. 8. And the four beaſts had each of them ſix wings about him, &c.] As the ſeraphim in Iſ. vi. 2. with two of which they might cover their faces as they did, teſtifying thereby their reverence of God, when in his preſence; and with the other two cover their feet, ſignifying their ſenſe of their ſinfulneſs, weakneſs, and imperfection, in their converſation, even in their beſt works, and in the miniſtry of the word; and with the other two fly about, as denoting their readineſs to miniſter the word and ordinances, to viſit the members of the church, and do all good offices of love and ſervice to them that lie in their power: and they were full of eyes within; to look into the ſin and corruption of their own hearts, which is a means of keeping them humble amidſt all their attainments, gifts, and graces, and of qualifying them to ſpeak aptly of the caſes of others; and they have eyes within, to look into and conſult their own experience; for beſides the word of God, which lies before them, they have a teſtimony in themſelves of the truth of the doctrines of the Goſpel, which they do well to attend unto; and they have theſe inward eyes to look into that treaſure which God has put into their earthen veſſels, in order to bring out of it things new and old. And they reſt not day and night; they give up themſelves to the miniſtry of the word, and prayer; are wholly in theſe things, meditate on the word continually, and preach the Goſpel in ſeaſon, and out of ſeaſon: ſaying, holy, holy, holy Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come; living under a continual ſenſe of the holineſs of God, Father, Son, and Spirit; and how neceſſary holineſs is in themſelves, who bear the veſſels of the Lord, and in the churches and houſe of God; taking care that all their doctrines are according to godlineſs, and ſerve to promote holineſs of life and converſation; and alſo under a ſenſe of the power of God, and of their need of it, to carry them thro' their work, and make their miniſtry ſucceſsful; and of the eternity and immutability of God, which is a wonderful ſupport unto them amidſt all the difficulties and troubles that attend them. The word holy is three times uſed here, as by the ſeraphim in Iſ. vi. 3. and in ſome copies 'tis repeated ſix times, and in others nine times, as in the Complutenſian edition.

Ver. 9. And when theſe beaſts give glory, &c.] When they give God the glory of all his perfections, covenant, and promiſes, and of all the gifts and grace beſtowed on them, and of the ſucceſs of their miniſtry; and in it glorify Father, Son, and Spirit, who bear their reſpective parts in the buſineſs of ſalvation; and aſcribe to each their due glory in election, redemption, and ſanctification: and honour; in the ſeveral parts of religious worſhip performed by them; and not with their lips only, but with their hearts alſo: and thanks; for all bleſſings, temporal and ſpiritual, beſtowed on them, and on the ſaints: even to him that ſat on the throne; God the Father, ver. 3. who liveth for ever and ever; he who is the living God, and will always continue ſo.

Ver. 10. The four and twenty elders fall down before him that ſat on the throne, &c.] The miniſters of the Goſpel begin the worſhip of God, and lead in it, who are the four living creatures; when the members of churches, who are the four and twenty elders follow, and approach the divine being in a moſt humble manner: and worſhip him that liveth for ever and ever; in Spirit, and in truth, with faith and fervency, in every part of duty they are directed to: and caſt their crowns before the throne; ſignifying, that they received them from him that ſits upon it, being by the grace of God what they are; and that they are unworthy to wear them in his preſence, being but unprofitable ſervants in all they do; and hereby alſo acknowledging their ſubjection to him as their king and lawgiver. Something like this the Jews relate of the family above; they ſay, "when the holy bleſſed God aſcends the "glorious throne of judgment, the whole family "above tremble; and when they ſee the holy "bleſſed God, they take their crowns from off their "heads —— and pray and ſeek mercy for Iſrael; "and immediately he aſcends the throne of mercy [w]." And ſuch like actions have been done by kings and princes to one another, in token of ſubjection. Thus Tigranes, king of Armenia, fell down at the feet of Pompey, and caſt his crown from his head, which Pompey replaced; and having commanded him certain things, ordered him to enjoy his kingdom [x]: ſo Herod meeting Auguſtus Cæſar at Rhode, when he entered the city took off his crown, and after a ſpeech made to him, with which Cæſar was pleaſed, he ſet it on him again [y]. Saying; as follows, Ver. 11. Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory, honour, and power, &c.] The Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, the Complutenſian edition, the Vulgate Latin verſion, and all the Oriental ones read, thou art worthy, O Lord, and our God, to receive; that is, to receive the acknowledgment and aſcription of glory, honour, and power; for otherwiſe, God cannot be ſaid to receive theſe from his creatures, than by their confeſſing and declaring that they belong unto him: and that for the reaſons following, for thou haſt created all things; the whole univerſe, the heavens, the earth, and ſea, and all that in them are: and for thy pleaſure they are and were created; God is the firſt cauſe, and the laſt end of all things; by his power they are made, and according to his will, and for his own glory, and therefore is worthy of ſuch a doxology; ſee Prov. xvi. 4. Rom. xi. 36. What is here ſaid is contrary to a notion imbibed by the Jews [z], that the world was not created but for the ſake of the Iſraelites: and elſewhere [a] they ſay, "the world "was not created but for David; and one ſays for "Moſes; and Rabbi Jochanan ſays for the Meſ-"ſiah;" which laſt is trueſt.

CHAP. V.

THIS chapter contains the viſion of the ſealed book, and the opening of it by Chriſt, which occaſions univerſal joy among all ranks and ſorts of creatures. The book is deſcribed by the place where it was, in the right hand of God; by the uncommon manner in which it was written within and without; and by the ſeven ſeals it was ſealed with, ver. 1. next follows a proclamation made by a mighty angel, with a loud voice, to find out a perſon worthy and able to open this book, and looſe its ſeals, ver. 2. upon which a declaration is made, that none could be found in heaven, earth, or hell, ver. 3. which had ſuch an effect upon John, that it ſet him a weeping, ver. 4. but was comforted by one of the elders ſuggeſting, that there was a perſon that could, and would do it, whom he calls the lion of the tribe of Judah, and the root of David, which are names of Chriſt, ver. 5. of which he was aſſured by what he quickly ſaw, namely, the ſame perſon the elder ſpoke of, deſcribed by his poſition, ſtanding between the throne, and the living creatures, and elders; and by his ſimilitude and likeneſs, as a lamb that had been lately ſlain, with ſeven horns and eyes in him; and by what he did, he went and took the book out of the right hand of God, his Father, ver 6, 7. This occaſioned a general joy among all kind of creatures; firſt among the four living creatures, and four and twenty elders, who are deſcribed by what they had, harps and golden vials, the one for praiſe, the other for prayer; and by what they did, they fell down in a worſhipping poſture before the Lamb, and ſung the new ſong of redeeming love to him; in which they aſcribe worthineſs to him, to take the book and open its ſeals; declare their redemption unto God, by his blood, out of all nations of the earth; take notice of the honour done them by him, in making them kings and prieſts to God; and expreſs their aſſurance, that they ſhall reign with him on earth, ver. 8, 9, 10. and next an innumerable company of angels join the living creatures and elders, in a doxology or aſcription of glory to him, ver. 11, 12. yea, every creature in heaven and earth, upon it, and under it, and in the ſea, are introduced as giving glory both to him that ſat upon the throne, and to the Lamb, ver. 13, and the whole is cloſed by the living creatures ſaying, Amen, to all, and by the elders proſtrating themſelves, and worſhipping the living and eternal God, ver. 14.

Ver. 1. And I ſaw on the right hand of him that ſat on the throne, &c.] Of this throne, and who it was that ſat upon it, ſee the note on ch. iv. 2. and who had in his right hand, or at, or upon his right hand, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions render it, lying by, or near his right hand; tho' according to ver. 7. the book appears to have been in his right hand, as our verſion, and others render it: a book written within, and on the backſide, ſealed with ſeven ſeals; this book was very much like Ezekiel's roll, Ezek. ii. 9, 10. which was written, פנים ואחור, within and without, before and behind, and indeed it was in the form of a roll: the manner of writings in thoſe times was on ſheets of parchment, which, when finiſhed, were rolled up in the form of a Cylinder; hence a book is called a volume. This book ſeems to have conſiſted of ſeven rolls, to which was annexed ſeven ſeals; and there being not room enough within, contrary to the common way of writing, ſome things were written upon the backſide of the outermoſt roll; and ſuch writings were by the ancients called Opiſtographi; and the word is uſed by them ſometimes for very prolix writings [b]. By this book ſome underſtand the ſcriptures of the Old Teſtament, which were written in rolls; ſee Heb. x. 5. Luke iv. 17, 20. and which came out of the right hand of God, and were given forth by him; and being written within, and on the backſide, may denote the fullneſs of them, they containing a variety of matter, uſeful and profitable, for different purpoſes; or elſe the literal, and myſtical, or ſpiritual meaning of ſome parts of them: or, as others think, the more clear explanation of the books of the Old Teſtament, by thoſe of the New, is meant; and its being ſealed may ſignify the authentickneſs of thoſe writings, having the ſeal of God's truth, and the impreſs of his wiſdom, power, and goodneſs on them; and alſo the hidden ſenſe and meaning of them, they being eſpecially in the prophetic and ſpiritual part of them, a ſealed book to natural men, and of which Chriſt is the trueſt and beſt interpreter; but then this book was opened, and looked into, and read, and, in ſome meaſure, underſtood, even by the Old Teſtament ſaints, and had been before this time expounded by Chriſt, concerning himſelf; yea, he had opened the underſtandings of his diſciples to underſtand thoſe ſcriptures, and had counted them, and others worthy, to open and explain this book to others, and had ſent them into all the world for this purpoſe; and for the ſame reaſons it can't be underſtood of the Goſpel publiſhed to Jews and Gentiles, the one within, and the other without; rather therefore the book of God's decrees is here meant, which reſpects all creatures, and all occurrences, and events in the whole world, from the beginning to the end of time; and ſo Ezekiel's roll, according to the Targum on Ezek. ii. 10. which was written before and behind, ſignified, that which was, מן שרויא, from the beginning, and which, דעתיד למהוי בסופא, ſhall be in the end, or hereafter. This book God holds in his right hand, as the rule and meaſure of all he does, and of the government of the world, and which he conſtantly fulfills and executes; and its being written within and without, may denote the perfection and comprehenſiveneſs of it, it reaching to all creatures, and things, even the moſt minute; and its being ſealed, ſhews the certainty of its fulfillment, and the ſecrecy and hiddenneſs of it, until accompliſhed; tho' it ſeems beſt of all to underſtand it of that part of God's decrees relating to the church and world, particularly the Roman empire, which from henceforward, to the end of time, was to be fulfilled; and ſo is no other than the book of the Revelation itſelf, exhibited in the following ſcenes and viſions; and this may be truly ſaid to be in the right hand of God, and from thence taken by the Lamb, it being the revelation of Jeſus Chriſt, which God gave unto him, ch. i. 1. and may be ſaid to be written, both within and on the backſide, to ſhew, that it contains a large account of things, a long train of events to be accompliſhed; as alſo to ſignify, that it regards the church, and the members of it, who are thoſe that are within, in the ſeveral ages of time, and the world, or thoſe that are without; for this book-prophecy regards both the ſtate of the Roman empire, and of the chriſtian church; and its being ſealed, ſhews the authentickneſs, certainty, and alſo the obſcurity of what was contained therein; and with ſeven ſeals, with reſpect to the ſeven periods of time, in which the propheſies in it are to be fulfilled.

Ver. 2. And I ſaw a ſtrong angel proclaiming with a loud voice, &c.] This was not the increated angel, Jeſus Chriſt; for he is after ſpoken of as the lion of the tribe of Judah, and as the lamb in the midſt of the throne, but a created one; tho' who he was, whether Gabriel, as ſome ſay, becauſe his name ſignifies the ſtrong or mighty one of God, is not material to be known; angels are ſaid to be mighty, and to excel in ſtrength: this is called ſo here, chiefly with reſpect to his voice, which he, by reaſon of his great ſtrength, exerted ſo loudly, as to be heard by all the creatures in heaven, and in earth, and under the earth; however, this was not John the Baptiſt, but if a miniſter of the Goſpel, rather ſome one ſince, making the following proclamation: who is worthy to open the book, and to looſe the ſeals thereof? ſuggeſting, that if there was any ſuch perſon, that he was deſired to come, and do it; and it ſeems, that he muſt not only be one of power and ability, but of dignity and authority, a perſon of greatneſs and worth, from whence his ability ariſes; as he ought to be that can engage his heart to draw nigh to God, and take a book out of his right hand, this myſterious book of the revelation, as it was indeed whilſt ſealed; and open and explain it to others, unſeal it or exhibit it, as it afterwards was in the following ſcenes and viſions, and give a view of all that is contained in it; and not only ſo, but fulfill and accompliſh all the prophecies in it; and who can, or is worthy to do all this, but he that ſits at the right hand of God? and who is God as well as man: and this proclamation was made to ſtir up an earneſt deſire in John, and all the ſaints he repreſents, to know what was in this book; and to ſhow the impotence of all creatures, to make any diſcovery of it; and to illuſtrate, and ſet off with a greater foil, the glory, excellency, ability, and worth of Jeſus Chriſt. There ſeems to be an alluſion to the preſident of the temple calling to the prieſts under him, to attend to the ſeveral parts of ſervice aſſigned them, ſaying unto them, מי שזכה, whoſoever is worthy, let him do ſo and ſo[c].

Ver. 3. And no man in heaven, &c.] Or no one in heaven, whether angels, or the ſouls of departed ſaints; neither the one nor the other know any thing of what is to come, until it is revealed unto them: nor in earth; among all the men on earth, even thoſe of the greateſt ſagacity and penetration, the wiſe, the prudent, the ſcribe, the diſputer of this world, ſuch who are moſt converſant with books, and have the greateſt reach into the things of nature, or of grace: neither under the earth; the dead buried there, good or bad; which may be ſaid agreeable to the notions of the ancient Jews, who believed the immortality of ſouls, and that they were rewarded or puniſhed, υπο χθόνος, under the earth, according to their virtue or vice in life[d]: or the devils in hell; or whoever on the earth are influenced by them, as magicians, ſorcerers, ſoothſayers, and necromancers: was able to open the book, neither to look thereon; or in it, ſo as to read it, underſtand it, and ſhow to John what was in it; for the ſenſe is, there was no creature in heaven, earth or hell, who were maſters of the deepeſt knowledge, and made pretenſions to any, that were able to foreſee and foretel things to come; or to exhibit the prophecies in this book, and repreſent them to John in the manner they afterwards were, and much leſs to accompliſh them.

Ver. 4. And I wept much, &c.] Not ſo much on his own account, becauſe he feared his curioſity would not be gratified, and that ſtrong deſire anſwered which were raiſed in him upon ſight of the book, and increaſed by the angel's proclamation; but for the ſake of the church of God, whoſe repreſentative he was, and to whom the knowledge of this book, and the things contained in it, he judged muſt be very uſeful and profitable. The Ethiopic verſion reads, and many wept; many of thoſe that were about the throne, as well as John: becauſe no man was found worthy to open and to read the book, neither to look thereon; becauſe there was no creature in heaven, earth, or under it, that were of dignity and authority, as well as of ability, to open the book by unſealing it; and read and deliver out the prophecies in it upon the taking off of every ſeal; and ſo not to look into it, and foreſee and foretel what was hereafter to come to paſs, in the church and world: the phraſe of being worthy to look on it, ſeems to be Jewiſh; of the book of the generation of Adam, Gen. v. 1. The Jews ſay [e], that "it deſcended to the firſt man, and by it he knew the wiſdom which is above; and this book came to the ſons of God, the wiſe men of the age, מאן דזכי לאשגחא ביה, whoever is worthy to look in it, knows by it the wiſdom which is from above." This whole verſe is left out in the Alexandrian copy; and the phraſe, to read, is neither in the Vulgate Latin, nor in any of the Oriental verſions.

[c] Miſna Tamid, c. 1. §. 4. & c. 5. §. 4, 5.

Ver. 5. And one of the elders ſaid unto me, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion reads, one of theſe elders; that is, one of the four and twenty elders that were round about the throne; not the firſt of the four and twenty books of the Old Teſtament; nor the patriarch Jacob, becauſe of the prophecy concerning Shiloh, Judah's ſon, which ſtands in Gen. xlix. 10. nor Moſes, who ſpoke of the Meſſiah as the great prophet of the church; nor John the Baptiſt, who pointed out the Lamb of God; theſe are all fancies and conjectures. It was one of the members of the chriſtian church, who was near the throne of God, had communion with him, and knowledge of his will, who in this viſionary way is repreſented as comforting John under his ſorrow and concern, and giving him information: and ſometimes perſons of ſuperior abilities may receive inſtruction from meaner perſons, as did Apollos from Aquila and Priſcilla: the ſame ſaid unto John, weep not; ceaſe ſorrowing, don't be caſt down, nor deſpair: behold the lion of the tribe of Judah; by whom is meant Chriſt, who, according to the fleſh, was to come of the tribe of Judah; and certain it is, that our Lord ſprang from thence: and he is ſaid to be the lion of that tribe, in alluſion to the prophecy concerning Judah in Gen. xlix. 9. where he is ſaid to be a lion, an old lion ſtooping down and couching, and on whoſe ſtandard was the figure of a lion. Chriſt may be compared to one, becauſe of his great ſtrength, he being the mighty God, the able ſaviour, and ſtrong redeemer, and protector of his church and people, and the avenger of their enemies; and becauſe of his courage and intrepidity, when he engaged with ſatan, and his principalities and powers, when he bore the ſins of his people, ſuſtained his Father's wrath, and the terrors of death ſet themſelves in array againſt him; and becauſe of the fierceneſs of his wrath, and fury againſt the wicked, and for his generoſity and lenity towards thoſe that ſtoop unto him, and obey him. So the Jews ſay [f], that "of Meſſiah, the ſon of David, who comes forth from Judah, is it ſaid, Gen. xlix. 9. Judah is a lion's whelp;" and a little after, Meſſiah, the ſon of David, who is, אריה, a lion, ſhall be on his right hand, and Meſſiah, the ſon of Joſeph, who is an ox, on his left hand; ſo the word of the Lord frequently, in the Chaldee paraphraſe, is ſaid to be as a lion [g]. The root of David; in like manner is Chriſt called the root of Jeſſe in Iſa. xi. 10. and the meaning either is, that he is a branch that ſprings out of the roots of Jeſſe and David, is David's ſon and offspring, according to his human nature; ſee ch. xxii. 16. or that he is David's Lord, according to his divine nature: and the metaphor of a root well agrees with him as mediator, he being hidden out of ſight, and unknown to a natural man; and may denote his meanneſs in his ſtate of humiliation, when he was as a root out of a dry ground; and becauſe he is the root from whence all the elect of God ſpring, in whom they have their being, and by whom they are bore and ſupported, and from whom are derived to them all the bleſſings of grace, all their ſpiritual life, holineſs, fruitfulneſs, and perſeverance. Now this illuſtrious perſon, ſo deſcribed, hath prevailed; or overcome all difficulties, being one of worth and value, of great authority and ability: to open the book, and to looſe the ſeven ſeals thereof; and deliver out all the propheſies in it, and fulfill them; and this thro' the merits of his blood, and in conſequence of his ſufferings and death: hence, in the next verſe, he is repreſented as a lamb as it had been ſlain; and the four living creatures, and the four and twenty elders, put his worthineſs to take the book, and open it, upon his having been ſlain, and having redeemed them by his blood, ver. 9. And as he, upon his reſurrection from the dead, had all power in heaven and in earth given him, as mediator, for the protection of his church, ſo he was deſerving; and it was fit and neceſſary that he, as the great prophet of the church, ſhould have and deliver out the prophecies concerning the ſtate and condition of his redeemed ones in all ages.

Ver. 6. And I beheld, and lo in the midſt of the throne, and of the four beaſts, &c.] Theſe words, in the midſt of the throne, and of the four beaſts, are left out in the Syriac verſion: and in the midſt of the elders ſtood a lamb; John, upon the intimation given him by the elder, lift up his eyes, and with great earneſtneſs looked about, and ſaw the perſon he pointed at, tho' not in the form of a lion, but in the appearance of a lamb, to which Chriſt, both in the Old and New Teſtament, is often compared; and that very aptly, for his innocence and purity of nature; for his harmleſs and inoffenſive converſation; and for his meek and humble deportment throughout the whole of his life; and for his patience at the time of his ſufferings and death; and for his uſefulneſs both for food and cloathing to his people; and chiefly for his ſacrifice for them, typified both by the paſſover-lamb, and by the lambs of the daily ſacrifice: hence it follows, as it had been ſlain; or as having been ſlain; Chriſt had been really ſlain by the wicked hands of the Jews, and not in appearance only; the as here, is not a note of mere ſimilitude and likeneſs, but of reality and truth; ſee John i. 14. Phil. ii. 7. but he was now riſen from the dead, and therefore is ſaid to have been ſlain ſome time before, tho' now alive; and he appeared to have the marks of his ſufferings and death upon him, as he had after his reſurrection the print of the nails and ſpear, in his hands, feet, and ſide; and he was as a lamb that had been newly or lately ſlain: and it may denote the continued efficacy of his blood, to cleanſe from all ſin, and of his ſacrifice to take it away; he was as a lamb ſlain from the foundation of the world, with reſpect to the continual virtue of his blood and ſacrifice; and he will be on the ſame account, the lamb as it had been ſlain, unto the end of the world.

[e] Zohar in Gen. fol. 28. 2.

[f] Raya Mehimna in Zohar in Exod. fol. 49. 3, 4.

[g] Targum in Hoſ. v. 14. & xi. 10. & xiii. 7.

The poſition and ſituation of this lamb were, he ſtood in the midſt of the throne, and of the four beaſts, and in the midſt of the elders; he ſtood, being riſen from the dead, and aſcended up into heaven, but was not as yet ſet down upon the throne with his Father, but was very near it; he ſtood before it, ready to be placed upon it, and receive his power and his kingdom; he ſtood between the throne, and between the living creatures, and the elders, being the mediator between God, and his church, and people; he appeared before the throne, for them, as their advocate, and ſtood ready to give them all the aſſiſtance, and do them all the good he could: and this his ſituation may alſo denote, that he is continually in view, is always in the ſight of God, as the lamb that had been ſlain; his blood is carried within the vail, is ſprinkled upon the mercy-ſeat, and is always in ſight, and calls for peace and pardon; and God the Father always looks upon it, and to his righteouſneſs, ſacrifice, and ſatisfaction, on account of his people: moreover, his being in the midſt of the four living creatures, and elders, may ſignify his preſence in his churches, and with his miniſters, which he has promiſed them to the end of the world. This lamb is further repreſented, as having ſeven horns; it is very unuſual for a lamb to have horns, and eſpecially ſeven: theſe horns are expreſſive of the power of Chriſt, of his dominion and government, even of his kingly power and authority; ſo kings are ſignified by horns in Dan. viii. 20, 21. and vii. 24. and Chriſt himſelf is called the horn of David, and the horn of ſalvation, Pſ. cxxxii. 17. Luke i. 69. and ſignify, that upon his reſurrection from the dead, and aſcenſion to heaven, he was made and declared Lord and Chriſt; and the number ſeven expreſſes the fullneſs, and perfection of his power and authority, having, as mediator, all power in heaven and in earth given him; and what is above all power, might, dominion, and every name in this world, and that to come; and may have ſome relation to the ſeven ſtates of his churches in ſo many periods of time; and ſhew not only that he has power ſufficient to protect and defend his people in all times, and to puſh at and deſtroy his and their enemies, but to open the then ſealed book, and unlooſe the ſeals: and as another qualification for this work, it follows, and ſeven eyes, which are the ſeven ſpirits of God ſent into all the earth; which ſome underſtand of angels, and of a ſufficient number of them, which belong to Chriſt, and are at his command, and who are ready to do his will, and to be ſent forth by him, into the ſeveral parts of the earth, to execute his pleaſure: but theſe rather deſign the Spirit of God, and his gifts, which Chriſt received without meaſure, both in his human nature, at his incarnation, and after his reſurrection from the dead, and aſcenſion; which he beſtowed on his apoſtles and miniſtring ſervants, whom he ſent forth into all the world, to preach his Goſpel with them; and which he has, more or leſs, ever ſince continued to do. The Ethiopic verſion reads in the ſingular number, and this is the Spirit of God which is ſent into all the earth; ſee the note on ch. i. 4. theſe ſeven eyes may deſign the perfect knowledge of Chriſt, his foreſight of future events, and his all-wiſe providence, which is always, and every where concerned to fulfill and accompliſh them; ſo that he is every way qualified to take the book of future events, as to the church and world, and reveal it, open and explain it, and fulfill the things contained in it; ſee Zech. iii. 9. and iv. 10.

Ver. 7. And he came, &c.] He drew nigh to the throne of God, he engaged his heart to approach unto him, and came up even to his ſeat, which a mere creature, without a mediator, cannot do: and took the book out of the right hand of him that ſat upon the throne; ſee the note on ver. 1. it being given unto him, as in ch. i. 1. and a commiſſion and authority to open it, and make it manifeſt to others, and to accompliſh the ſeveral events, in the ſeveral periods of time, it points unto.

Ver. 8. And when he had taken the book, &c.] The Vulgate Latin verſion reads, when he had opened the book, very wrongly; for the opening of it by unlooſing the ſeals, one after another, is hereafter mentioned, in ch. 6. but when it was obſerved, that the lamb took the book, and his commiſſion to open, unſeal, and fulfill it, the four beaſts, and four and twenty elders, fell down before the lamb; by way of religious worſhip and adoration of him; which ſhows, that he was not a mere creature, who aſſumed human nature, ſuffered, and died, and is the mediator between God and men, but is truly God, and is the proper object of worſhip; and ſo he is regarded by all his faithful miniſters, and true churches, which are here ſignified by the four living creatures, and four and twenty elders; who are repreſented as having every one of them harps; which were inſtruments of muſic, and with which the ſaints formerly uſed to praiſe God, Pſ. xxxiii. 2. and ſo may here intend the praiſes and thankſgivings of the ſaints, of every one of them, greater or leſſer, upon the preſent occaſion; having their hearts in right tune, making melody with them to the Lord, and giving thanks unto him for all their bleſſings, temporal and ſpiritual, and particularly for the Lamb, and his worthineſs to open the book, and unlooſe the ſeals: and golden vials full of odours, which are the prayers of ſaints; this is ſaid in alluſion to the golden cenſers full of incenſe, which aſcended upwards, and was of a ſweet ſmell; the veſſels on the ſhew-bread table, in which incenſe was put, are by Joſephus[b] called golden vials, as here; his words are, upon the loaves were put two φιαλαι χρυσεαι, golden vials, full of incenſe: the prayers of the ſaints are compared to odours, or incenſe, as the word may be rendered, and as they are called, Pſ. cxli. 2. partly becauſe as incenſe goes upwards, ſo do they go up to God, and are received, regarded, and had in remembrance by him; and partly becauſe as incenſe is of a ſweet ſmell, ſo the prayers of the ſaints, put up in the name and faith of Chriſt, are very grateful and acceptable to God: the golden vials ſaid to be full of them, may deſign the hearts of believers, in which they firſt are, and from whence they proceed; true prayer is that which is inwrought in the ſoul, and comes from the heart, even from a heart pure like gold, purified by faith in the blood of Chriſt, a true heart, that aſks in faith, nothing wavering; ſuch as are really ſaints, true believers in Chriſt, are praying ſouls; they are full of prayers for themſelves, and others; they pray always, and for all ſaints: this makes nothing for praying to angels and ſaints departed; for theſe prayers were their own, and not others; and beſides, theſe four living creatures, and four and twenty elders, were not angels, for they are ſaid to be redeemed by the blood of Chriſt, and are diſtinguiſhed from angels in the following verſes; nor the ſaints in heaven, but miniſters and churches on earth, and who were to reign with Chriſt on earth, ver. 10. it may be obſerved, that the Jews ſometimes repreſent prayer in ſuch like figures as here; "prayer, they "ſay, aſcends with thoſe ſpices which are mentioned "in Cant. iv. 14. and at the time that prayer aſcends "it is perfumed with myrrh and frankincenſe, and "of this the holy bleſſed God aſks, who is this that "comes up, &c.[i] Cant. iii. 6." and they ſay, prayer is greater than all offerings[k]. See ch. viii. 3.

[b] Antiq. l. 3. c. 6. §. 6.

Ver. 9. And they ſung a new ſong, &c.] Upon a new occaſion and ſubject, redemption by the blood of the lamb, and his worthineſs to open the ſealed book; and in diſtinction from the old ſong of Moſes and the children of Iſrael at the red ſea; and this was a moſt famous and excellent ſong, an unheard of one, and which none could learn, or ſing, but the redeemed of the Lamb: ſaying, thou art worthy to take the book, and open the ſeals thereof. The Arabic verſion reads, thou, O Lamb; the reaſons why they aſcribe ſuch fitneſs, ability, and dignity to him, are as follow: for thou waſt ſlain; by men, and for the ſins of men; whereby, as he became worthy in his prieſtly office to take away the ſins of his people, and to have all the glory of their ſalvation, and in his kingly office, to have all power and authority, and to be exalted above every name, ſo in his prophetic office, to have perfect knowledge as man and mediator, of all the future events that were to befall his church and people, and to make them known, and fulfill them: and haſt redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred and tongue, and people, and nation; this ſhows that as the four living creatures, and four and twenty elders were not angels, ſo they were not the repreſentatives of the Jewiſh church; or the patriarchs and prophets of the Old Teſtament; nor even the Apoſtles of the New; for they were all Jews, and could not be ſaid to be redeemed out of every tongue, nation, and people; and alſo that not the Jews only were redeemed by Chriſt, but the Gentiles alſo, and not all mankind, or every individual of human nature, but ſome out of all the nations of the earth; for God has choſen ſome, both of Jews and Gentiles, and theſe Chriſt has redeemed; and therefore the Goſpel is ſent unto all nations, that theſe among them may be called and ſaved. This redemption of them, ſuppoſes them to have been in a ſtate of ſlavery and bondage, as they are by nature, to ſin, ſatan, and the law; and ſignifies a deliverance from ſuch a ſtate, which Chriſt has obtained, not barely by power, but by price, as the word here uſed ſignifies, and may be rendered, and haſt bought us; and the price with which he has bought them is his own blood, and which is of full and ſufficient value, it being not only the blood of a man, of an innocent man, but of one that is God as well as man: and this price was paid to God, and to his juſtice, againſt whom men have ſinned, whoſe law they have broken, and whoſe juſtice they have injured and affronted, that he might reconcile them to God, bring them near to him, and that they might ſerve him in righteouſneſs and true holineſs.

Ver. 10. And haſt made us unto our God kings and prieſts, &c.] See the note on ch. i. 6. The Alexandrian copy, and Complutenſian edition, and the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read them, inſtead of us: and we ſhall reign on the earth; meaning not merely in a ſpiritual ſenſe, thro' grace reigning over ſin and corruption, thro' ſatan being bruiſed under their feet, and thro' the victory they have in Chriſt over the world, but in the millennium-ſtate, in the thouſand years reign with Chriſt in the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteouſneſs; ſee Rev. xx. 4, 5, 6. The Alexandrian copy, and Complutenſian edition, Syriac and Arabic verſions read, they ſhall reign.

Ver. 11. And I beheld, and heard the voice of many angels, &c.] Immaterial ſpirits, made by Chriſt, and worſhippers of him, and miniſtring ſpirits to him and his, the holy and elect angels, who are confirmed in their ſtate by Chriſt; theſe John beheld in a viſionary way, and heard the voices and articulate ſounds formed by them; and there were many of them; how many there are, or were here, cannot be ſaid; we read of a multitude of the heavenly hoſt that appeared at the incarnation of Chriſt, and of more than twelve legions of angels, that Chriſt could have had of his father for a word ſpeaking, at the time of his apprehenſion, who would have reſcued him out of the hands of his enemies; yea, that company is innumerable. The Syriac verſion reads, as the voice of many waters: theſe were round about the throne; were near to God, ſtood before him, beheld his face, hearkened to his voice, and obſerved his orders: ſo with the Jews, the four angels Michael, Gabriel, Uriel, and Raphael, are ſaid[l] to be סיבב לכסאו, round about his throne, the throne of God: it follows here, and the beaſts and the elders; the ſenſe is not, that John heard the voice of the living creatures, and of the elders, as well as, and together with the voice of many angels; for he had heard their voice and ſong before, but that the angels whoſe voice he heard, as they were round about the throne, ſo they were round about the living creatures, and round about the elders: the angels are near unto, and encompaſs the miniſters of the Goſpel; they are about them, and give them intimations and diſcoveries of the mind and will of God, as an angel did to John, Rev. i. 1. and another to Paul, Acts xxvii. 23, 24. and ſometimes direct them where to go and preach the Goſpel, as in Acts xvi. 9, 10. and ſurround them for their ſafety and protection; ſo horſes and chariots of fire, by whom angels are meant, were round about the prophet Eliſha, 2 Kings vi. 16, 17. and they were alſo round about the elders, the churches, and particular believers; angels and ſaints are near to one another; the angels are very friendly to the ſaints, and do them many good offices; they all belong to the ſame family, and are ſocial worſhippers of God; the angels are the guards that encamp round about them that fear the Lord, and often protect them from enemies and dangers: and it may be obſerved, that the ſaints are nearer the lamb and the throne than the angels be; according to this account, there was a throne, and one that ſat on it, who is the living God; neareſt to the throne ſtood the Lamb; next to the Lamb ſtood the four living creatures, the miniſters of the Goſpel; next to them the elders, or churches, and members thereof; and in the outermoſt ring, and as encompaſſing all, ſtood the miniſtring angels, they being ſervants; whereas the ſaints are the heirs of ſalvation, and the bride, the Lamb's wife, and therefore nearer him: and the number of them was ten thouſand times ten thouſand, and thouſands of thouſands; that is, an innumerable company of them; a like number is mentioned in Dan. vii. 10. to which this ſeems to refer; ſee Pſ. lxviii. 17. The Jews ſpeak of nine hundred and ſix thouſand millions of miniſtring angels, that ſtand continually before the Lord[m].

Ver. 12. Saying with a loud voice, &c.] To ſignify their zeal, fervour, and affection for Chriſt, and to make a free, open, and public acknowledgment of him, and that all might hear of his worthineſs, and of the praiſe and glory that were due unto him: worthy is the Lamb that was ſlain; they addreſs him as the Lamb, and not as the Lord of Lords, and their Lord; and ſpeak of him as having been ſlain, and celebrate the virtue and efficacy of his ſufferings and death, and aſcribe his worthineſs to receive glory and honour thereunto; but do not add, as the living creatures and elders do, and haſt redeemed us to God by thy blood; becauſe, tho' they were the ſubjects and objects of confirming grace by Chriſt, yet not of redeeming grace: it follows, to receive power and riches, and wiſdom, and ſtrength, and honour, and glory, and bleſſing; as the book had ſeven ſeals to be unlooſed, and Chriſt had ſeven horns of power and ability to looſe them, and fulfill the things contained in it, and ſeven eyes to look into it, and diſcover and reveal what is in it, ſo here are ſeven words made uſe of, to expreſs the praiſe that was due unto him; a like number is uſed by the angels in ch. vii. 12. and when he is ſaid to be worthy to receive theſe, it is not to be underſtood of his receiving the things themſelves, but of the praiſe of them; and that theſe are to be obſerved in him, and to be aſcribed to him: power belongs to him, as he is the mighty God; and as the Saviour and redeemer of his people; and as riſen from the dead, and as exalted at God's right-hand, and made or declared Lord and Chriſt; having all power in heaven and in earth: riches may well be aſcribed to him, who has all the perfections of deity in him; whoſe are the heavens and the earth, and the fullneſs thereof; and who as mediator, is heir of all things, and has both the riches of grace and glory in his hands: wiſdom alſo is his; he is wiſdom itſelf, he is the only wiſe God; and he is the author of all wiſdom, natural and ſpiritual; and as mediator, he has the ſpirit of wiſdom and knowledge reſting on him, and the treaſures of both hid in him: and ſtrength may be well attributed to him, which he has ſhown in making, and ſupporting all things; in ſaving and redeeming his people with a mighty hand and ſtretched-out arm; and in ſubduing and vanquiſhing all his and their enemies; and in giving ſtrength to them to diſcharge their duty, reſiſt temptations, oppoſe corruptions, and do their generation-work: honour is due to him, as the Son of God, he being to be honoured equally as the Father; and who, as man and mediator, is crowned with glory and honour: glory is what ought to be aſcribed unto him, even the glory of true and proper deity, and alſo the glory of ſalvation; and who as mediator, had a glory promiſed him, and which was due unto him upon his having finiſhed his work, and which he now enjoys: wherefore bleſſing is to be given to him, who is God over all, bleſſed for evermore, in himſelf and the perfections of his nature; in whom all ſpiritual bleſſings are, and in whom all the nations of the earth are bleſſed; and to whom praiſe and thanks are to be rendered, for the bleſſings of pardoning, juſtifying, and redeeming grace, and for all other.

Ver. 13. And every creature which is in heaven, &c.] Animate or inanimate, angels, and the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect, ſun, moon, and ſtars, and the fowls of the air: and on the earth; men and beaſts, and every creeping thing, mountains, hills, fruitful trees, and all cedars: and under the earth; in the bowels of it, metals, minerals, and every thing of that kind: and ſuch as are in the ſea; that ſail in ſhips upon the mighty waters, and fiſhes great and ſmall that are therein: and all that are in them; in heaven, earth, and ſea: heard I ſaying, bleſſing, and honour, and glory, and power, be unto him that ſitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever; all creatures in their way praiſe God, and are ſubſervient to the glory and intereſt of Chriſt, and are the occaſion of glorifying of both; and even the enemies of Chriſt, wicked men and devils, will be obliged to own Chriſt to be Lord, to the glory of God the Father, as well as angels and ſaints; and the ſame glory and honour which are given to the one, are aſcribed to the other, which ſhows the proper deity of Chriſt, and his equality with the Father. The Syriac verſion reads, and I heard him who ſitteth upon the throne, ſaying, to the Lamb be given bleſſing and honour, &c. with which compare John v. 22, 23.

Ver. 14. And the four beaſts ſaid Amen, &c.] Giving their aſſent to what the angels and every creature ſaid, and expreſſing their deſires and wiſhes that ſo it might be, and alſo their faith, that ſo it was, and would be: and the four and twenty elders fell down and worſhipped him that liveth for ever and ever; either God the Father, who ſat upon the throne, and is ſo deſcribed, ch. iv. 9, 10. or elſe the Lamb who had been ſlain, and was now alive, and lives for evermore; or both of them, for the Alexandrian copy, the Complutenſian edition, and the Syriac and Arabic verſions omit the words, him that liveth for ever and ever, and leave it to be underſtood of either of them, or both; and the Ethiopic verſion reads, and the elders worſhipped him; as the four living creatures and four and twenty elders led the chorus, and begun the ſong, ſo they cloſe it, as being the perſons more immediately concerned in the death and ſufferings of the Lamb, and redemption by him, and in the ſealed book, and in the things contained in it; the ſeals of which are next opened, and an account is given of them in ſome following chapters.

CHAP. VI.

THIS chapter contains the viſion of the opening ſix of the ſeals of the ſealed book, by the Lamb, and of the events following thereupon. The preparation to the viſion of the firſt ſeal is in ver. 1. the Lamb opens it, John hears a noiſe like thunder, and one of the living creatures bids him come and ſee; upon which he ſaw a horſe, of a white colour, and a rider on it, who is deſcribed by a bow and crown given him, and by the victory he obtained, ver. 2. at the opening of the ſecond ſeal, the ſecond living creature invites him as before; and he ſees a horſe, of a red colour, with a rider on it, deſcribed by his power, to take peace from the earth, and ſuffer men to kill one another, and by a great ſword given him, ver. 3, 4. at the opening of the third ſeal, the third living creature addreſſes him in like manner as the other; and he ſees a horſe, of a black colour, and a rider on it, with a pair of balances in his hands; and hears a voice from among the four living creatures, expreſſing dearneſs of proviſions, and a charge not to hurt the oil and wine, ver. 5, 6. at the opening of the fourth ſeal, the fourth living creature ſpeaks to John, as the reſt; and he ſees a horſe, of a pale colour, and a rider on it, deſcribed by his name, Death, by his follower, hell, or the grave, and by his power to deſtroy a fourth part of the earth with the ſword, famine, peſtilence, and wild beaſts, ver. 7, 8. at the opening of the fifth ſeal, John ſaw the ſouls of the martyrs, under the altar; hears their cry for vengeance; obſerves that white robes were given them, and that they were bid to be quiet until the ſlaying and ſuffering time of their brethren was over, ver. 9, 10, 11. at the opening of the ſixth ſeal, follow an earthquake, ſtrange changes in the heavens, the ſun becomes black as ſackcloth, the moon becomes as blood, the ſtars fall, and the heaven itſelf departs, and every iſland and mountain are moved out of their places, ver. 12, 13, 14. the kings and great men of the earth, and even all ſorts of men, upon this, fly to the rocks and mountains to hide them from the face of God the Father, that ſits upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb, the opener of the ſealed book; giving this as a reaſon for it, that the time of his great wrath was come, and none could ſtand before him, ver. 15, 16, 17.

Ver. 1. And I ſaw, when the Lamb opened one of the ſeals, &c.] Of the ſealed book; one of the ſeven ſeals of it, as read the Alexandrian copy, the Vulgate Latin, and the Oriental verſions, and the Compluten-ſian edition; that is, the firſt; ſo one is uſed for firſt in Gen. i. 5. Matt. xxviii. 1. and as appears from the following ſeals being called ſecond, third, fourth, &c. Theſe ſeals expreſs events to be fulfilled; and therefore cannot reſpect the ſteps towards, and the ſigns of Jeruſalem's deſtruction, and that itſelf, which had been accompliſhed ſome years before the viſion of the ſeals; and which viſion would have been needleſs: and theſe are called ſeals, becauſe they were ſealed among God's treaſure, or were reſolved on, and decreed by him; and becauſe they were hidden and unknown until they came to paſs; and when they were come to paſs, they were pledges of what God would do in the deſtruction of Rome papal, as here in the deſtruction of Rome pagan: for theſe ſeals, at leaſt the firſt ſix of them, concern the pagan empire, and the ſtate of the church in it; and are ſo many gradual ſteps to the ruin of it, and to the advancing and increaſing of the kingdom of Chriſt; and theſe, with the ſeven trumpets, which the laſt ſeal introduces, reach from the times of the Apoſtles to the end of time, as appears from ch. x. 6, 7. Now the opening of theſe ſeals, is the revealing of the events ſignified by them, and expreſſed in the hieroglyphicks here made uſe of, and the fulfillment of them: and I heard as it were the noiſe of thunder; a voice very loud and ſonorous, exciting the attention of John: one of the four beaſts ſaying, come and ſee; this was the firſt of the four living creatures, for the word one is uſed in the ſame ſenſe as in the foregoing clauſe; and this creature was like to a lion, ch. iv. 7. wherefore his voice was loud, as when a lion roars, ch. x. 3. and is fitly compared to thunder: there is no need to look out for any particular perſon, as intended by this living creature; or to conclude him to be Peter, as Grotius, who was dead before this ſeal was opened; or Quadratus, Ariſtides, and Juſtin Martyr, who courageouſly appeared in the chriſtian cauſe, and made very excellent apologies for it, with ſucceſs, ſince theſe lived under the ſecond ſeal; it is enough in general to underſtand the miniſters of the Goſpel, who, as ſons of thunder, loudly and publickly preached the Goſpel, and as lions, boldly and bravely defended, and took notice of the power and providence of God in ſucceeding their miniſtry, and in weakening the kingdom of ſatan in the Gentile world, and particularly in the Roman empire; and therefore are repreſented as calling to John to come and ſee; obſerve and take notice of the following hieroglyphick, repreſenting the ſucceſs of the Goſpel miniſtry. תא חזי, come and ſee, is a phraſe often uſed by the Jews, to ſtir up attention to what is about to be ſaid; ſee the note on John i. 46.

Ver. 2. And I ſaw and behold a white horſe, &c.] Repreſenting the miniſtration of the Goſpel in the times of the Apoſtles, which were juſt now finiſhing, John being the laſt of them, who ſaw this viſion; and the horſe being a ſwift, majeſtic, and warlike creature, and fearleſs of oppoſition and war, may deſign the ſwift progreſs of the Goſpel in the world, the majeſty, power, and authority with which it came, and the oppoſition it met with, and which was bore down before it; and its white colour may denote the purity of Goſpel truths, the peace it proclaims, the joy it brings, and the triumph that attends it, on account of victories obtained by it, and which is afterwards ſuggeſted: white horſes were uſed in triumphs, in token of victory [n]; a white horſe in a dream, is a good ſign with the Jews [o]; and Aſtrampſychus ſays [p], a viſion of white horſes is an apparition of angels; and ſo one of thoſe angels which the Jews ſuppoſe to have the care of men, and the preſervation of them, is ſaid [q] to ride by him, and at his right-hand, upon a white horſe; but the rider here is not an angel, but the head of all principality and power: and he that ſat on him had a bow, with arrows; the bow is the word of the Goſpel, and the arrows the doctrines of it; ſee Hab. iii. 9. Pſ. xlv. 5. ſo called for their ſwift motion, ſudden and ſecret ſtriking, piercing, and penetrating nature, reaching to the very hearts of men; laying open the ſecret thoughts and iniquity thereof; wounding, and cauſing them to fall, and ſubmit themſelves to the ſceptre of Chriſt's kingdom: and a crown was given unto him; by God the Father; expreſſive of Chriſt's regal power and authority, of his honour and dignity, and of his victories and conqueſts: and he went forth, conquering and to conquer; in the miniſtration of the Goſpel, which went forth, as did all the firſt miniſters of it, from Jeruſalem, to the ſeveral parts of the world; from the eaſt, on which ſide of the throne was the firſt living creature, who called upon John to come and ſee this ſight, as the ſtandard of the tribe of Judah, which had a lion upon it, was on the eaſt ſide of the camp of Iſrael; and out of Zion, went forth the word of the Lord, which was very victorious, both among Jews and Gentiles, to the converſion of thouſands of them, and to the planting of a multitude of churches among them, and to the ſetting up and advancing the kingdom of Chriſt; but inaſmuch as yet all things are not made ſubject to him, he is repreſented as going forth in the Goſpel, ſtill conquering, and to conquer, what remain to be conquered: that Chriſt is deſigned by him that ſat on the white horſe, and is thus deſcribed, is evident from ch. xix. 11, 12, 13. with which compare Pſ. xlv. 3, 4. tho' as this emblem may reſpect the Roman empire, the white horſe may be an emblem of the ſtrong, warlike, and conquering ſtate of it; and the rider with a bow and crown, may deſign Veſpaſian, whom Chriſt made uſe of as an inſtrument to conquer his enemies the Jews, and who in conſequence thereof, had the imperial crown put upon him; and it may be further obſerved, that tho' his conqueſt of them was a very great one, yet they afterwards roſe up in the empire, in great numbers, rebelled, and did much miſchief, when they were entirely conquered by Trajan and Hadrian, who ſeem to be intended in the next ſeal.

Ver. 3. And when he had opened the ſecond ſeal, &c.] Of the ſealed book; that is, the Lamb, as before: I heard the ſecond beaſt ſay, come and ſee; this living creature was the ox, whoſe ſituation was on the weſt ſide of the throne, as the ſtandard of Ephraim, on which was an ox, was on the weſt of the camp of Iſrael; no mention is made of the noiſe of thunder, as before, the voice of the ox being lower than that of the lion; and this perhaps may point out a decreaſe in the Goſpel miniſtry; to fix on any particular perſon, as with Grotius, the Evangeliſt Matthew, becauſe he ſays, Matt. xxiv. 7. nation ſhall riſe againſt nation, which carries in it ſome likeneſs to what is ſaid at the opening of this ſeal; or, as with Brightman, Juſtin Martyr, whoſe ſecond apology was not regarded by the emperor, is mere conjecture; the miniſters of the Goſpel are intended who lived under this ſeal, who, tho' they might not be ſtrong and courageous like the lion, or their predeceſſors, yet were like the ox, laborious in preaching, and patient in ſuffering; and theſe are repreſented in this viſion as inviting John to behold and obſerve the following hieroglyphick.

Ver. 4. And there went out another horſe, that was red, &c.] Which may be an emblem either of the ſuffering ſtate of the church, being anſwerable to the Smyrnæan one, as the purity and power of the Goſpel, repreſented in the former ſeal, may anſwer to the Epheſine church; or elſe of thoſe contentions and diviſions occaſioned among men thro' the Goſpel, which, tho' of a peaceable nature, yet thro' the corruption and depravity of men, brings not peace, but a ſword; or rather of thoſe bloody wars within the period of time ſignified by this ſeal, which came as puniſhments on the enemies of the Goſpel: and power was given to him that ſat thereon; not the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is ſaid to ride on a red horſe, Zech. i. 8. tho' indeed he preſides over his church and people, and takes the care of them when the moſt deſolating judgments are in the earth, and cauſes all things to work together for good; nor ſatan, the red dragon, who was a murderer from the beginning, and delights in effuſion of blood, and in ſtirring up of men to deſtroy one another, whenever he is permitted; but Trajan the Roman emperor, in whoſe reign John died; and who came from the weſt, and was a Spaniard, as was Hadrian his ſucceſſor, who may be joined with him; which was the ſide, or quarter, on which the living creature was that ſpoke to John; and in the times of theſe emperors were very bloody and inteſtine wars: wherefore power is ſaid to be given him, to take peace from the earth; that is, from the Roman empire, which is ſometimes called the whole world; and which could not have been done, if power had not been given from him who makes peace, and creates evil: and that they ſhould kill one another; which refers not to the havock and ſlaughter which the Jews made one of another at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, but to the Jews murdering of the Greeks and Romans, and the Romans the Jews, in the times of the above emperors. In Trajan's time, the Jews who dwelt about Cyrene, under the conduct of one Andrew, fell upon the Romans and Greeks, and killed many, fed on their fleſh, eat their bowels, beſmeared themſelves with their blood, and covered themſelves with their ſkins; many of them they ſawed aſunder, from the crown of the head down to the middle; many of them they threw to the wild beaſts, and many of them they forced to fight among themſelves, till they had deſtroyed above two hundred and twenty thouſand men; in Egypt and Cyprus they committed the ſame kind of outrages, their leader being one Artemion, where two hundred and forty thouſand men periſhed [r]; Libya was almoſt emptied of men by them; ſo that Hadrian, the ſucceſſor of Trajan, was obliged to ſend colonies to re-people the places they had made deſolate. But at length they were overcome by Lupus, governor of Egypt, and by Marcius Turbo, and by Lucius, whom Trajan ſent againſt them [s], and deſtroyed great numbers of them; and for the ſpace of about fourteen years, they were quiet; but in Hadrian's time, they roſe again, and ſet one Bar Cochab, a falſe Meſſiah, at the head of them, whom they proclaimed king; when Hadrian ſent forces againſt them, and with great difficulty ſubdued them, took the city Bither, where they were, and deſtroyed at times five hundred and eighty thouſand of them [t]; the Jews ſay, that he put men, women, and children to death in ſuch numbers, that their blood ran down into the main ſea, yea, that a horſe might go up to his noſe in blood [u]; they ſay that he deſtroyed in Bither double the number of thoſe that came out of Egypt, even twelve hundred thouſand men [w]; ſome of their accounts are very extravagant, and exceed all bounds [x]; however, the ſlaughter was very great, that it may well be ſaid, and there was given unto him a great ſword; to ſlay men with; tho' Hadrian on his death-bed, amidſt his pains, would fain have had a ſword given to him, to have diſpatched his own life, and could not obtain one [y]: the Jews ſay he deſtroyed all the land of Judea [z].

Ver. 5. And when he had opened the third ſeal, &c.] Of the ſealed book: I heard the third beaſt ſay, come and ſee; this living creature was that which was like a man, who was on the ſouth ſide of the throne, as the ſtandard of Reuben, which had the figure of a man, was on the ſouth ſide of the camp of Iſrael; this was not the Apoſtle Paul, as Grotius thinks, to whom was made a propheſy of a famine in the days of Claudius Cæſar; nor Tertullian, who made an apology for the chriſtians in the times of this ſeal, as Brightman conjectures; but the miniſters of the Goſpel, whoſe voice was neither the voice of the lion nor of the ox, but of a man, which was ſtill lower, but yet they retained their humanity, reaſoning, prudence, and wiſdom; and theſe are repreſented as calling upon John to come and ſee, and take notice of the following hieroglyphick: and I beheld, and lo a black horſe; an emblem either of the afflicted ſtate of the church, ſtill anſwering to the Smyrnæan one, being black with perſecutions, ſchiſms, errors, and hereſies, which were many; or particularly of the hereſies and hereticks of thoſe times, who might be compared to a horſe for their pride and ambition, ſpeaking great ſwelling words of vanity, and to a black one, for their hidden things of diſhoneſty, and works of darkneſs, for the darkneſs in themſelves, and which they ſpread over others; or rather of a famine, not in a ſpiritual ſenſe, of hearing of the word, but in a literal ſenſe; ſee Lam. iv. 7, 8. and v. 10. not what was at the ſiege of Jeruſalem, or in the times of Claudius Cæſar, Acts xi. 28. but in the times of the emperor Severus, and others, as the hiſtorians of thoſe times [a], and the writings of Tertullian ſhow; when the heathens aſcribed the ſcarcity that was among them to the wickedneſs of the chriſtians [b], whereas it was a judgment upon them for their perſecution of them: and he that ſat on him had a pair of balances in his hand; by whom is meant not ſome noted heretick, or hereticks, who had balances of deceit in their hands to prove their tenets by, ſuch as ſpurious writings, &c. or who made pretenſions to the ſcriptures, the balance of the ſanctuary, to weigh doctrines in; nor Chriſt, whoſe name hereticks ſhrouded themſelves under, and profeſſed, and who over-ruled and made uſe of their hereſies for the good of his people, that they might be made manifeſt. Mr. Mede thinks that Septimius Severus, the Roman emperor, who came from Africa, from the ſouth, on which ſide was the living creature that ſpoke to John, is intended, and in which country black horſes were in great eſteem; and he was the only African that ever was emperor of Rome before [c]: and the ſame author thinks, that his having a pair of balances in his hand, expreſſes the ſtrict juſtice that emperor was famous for; but rather it ſignifies famine, and ſuch a ſcarcity as that bread is delivered out by weight to men; ſee Lev. xxvi. 26.

Ver. 6. And I heard a voice in the midſt of the four beaſts ſay, &c.] Not the voice of Agabus to the Apoſtle Paul, Acts xi. 28. but rather of Chriſt, who was in the midſt of them, ch. v. 6. the Ethiopic verſion adds, as the voice of an eagle: a meaſure of wheat for a penny, and three meaſures of barley for a penny; Chœnix, the meaſure here uſed, ſignifies as much as was ſufficient for a man for one day, as a penny was the uſual hire of a labourer for a day, Matt. xx. 2. ſo a chœnix of corn was allowed to each man in Xerxes's army for a day, according to Herodotus [d]; the ſame quantity for a day was given by the Romans to their ſhepherds and ſervants, and is generally ſaid to be about two pounds; according to Agricola it was two pounds and a quarter [e]. This meaſure was very different; the Attic chœnix was a meaſure that held three pounds, the Italic chœnix four pounds, and the military chœnix five pounds, and anſwers to the Hebrew Kab [f]; and in the Septuagint verſion of Ezek. xlv. 10, 11. it anſwers to the Bath; and ſome make it to be the fourth part of a buſhel, and others half a buſhel [g]; the firſt account of its being about two pounds, and the allowance of a man for a day, ſeems beſt to agree with this place: ſo that this phraſe expreſſes ſuch a ſcarcity, as that a man's daily wages would be but juſt enough to buy himſelf bread, without any thing to eat with it; and when he would have nothing left for clothes, and other things, nor any thing for his wife and children: and ſee that thou hurt not the oil and wine; ſignifying that this ſcarcity ſhould fall not upon the ſuperfluities, ſuch as oil and wine, which may be ſpared, and men can live without; but upon the neceſſaries of life, particularly bread: ſome render the words, and be not unjuſt in the oil and wine; and ſo think they refer to the laws of the Roman emperors, in relation to wine and oil, and to the juſt execution of them, that there mig[illegible] be plenty of them; and others underſtand them in an allegorical ſenſe, of the principal doctrines of the Goſpel, comparable to oil and wine, and which Chriſt takes care of, that they ſhall not be hurt and deſtroyed by hereticks and falſe teachers, even when they prevail the moſt, and bring on a famine of the word, and when the church is blackened and darkened with them; and indeed theſe may much better be applied to the Goſpel than, as they are by the Jews, to the law; who frequently ſay [h] that the law is called oil, and ſpeak of יינה של תורה, the wine of the law [i].

Ver. 7. And when he had opened the fourth ſeal, &c.] Of the ſeven ſeals of the ſealed book; that is, when the Lamb had opened it, or took it off, as in ver. 1. I heard the voice of the fourth beaſt ſay, come and ſee; this living creature was that which was like an eagle, and was on the north ſide of the throne, anſwerable to the ſtandard of Dan, which was on the north of the camp of Iſrael, and had the figure of an eagle upon it; and the opening of this ſeal begins with Maximinus the Roman emperor, who came from Thrace, far north. This living creature was not James, the brother of our Lord, who had been dead long ago, as Grotius imagines; nor Cyprian, as Brightman thinks, tho' he lived under this ſeal; but the miniſters of the Goſpel in general in the times referred to are intended: and it may denote ſome decline in the Goſpel miniſtry, that they had not the courage and ſtrength of the lion, as the firſt Goſpel preachers; nor the patience and laborioufneſs of the ox, the next ſett of miniſters; nor the ſolidity and prudence of the man, the miniſters that followed them; and yet they retained ſome degree of light and knowledge, ſagacity and penetration, and contempt of the world, ſignified by the eagle; theſe invite John in a viſionary way to come and ſee the following hieroglyphick.

Ver. 8. And I looked, and behold a pale horſe, &c.] An emblem either of the ſtate of the church, pale not with perſecution, as ſome think, for thro' that it was red; but with the hypocriſy and ſuperſtition of many of its members, who were paving the way for the man of ſin, and on account of whom the church was grown ſickly and dying; or rather this is an emblem of the ſickly and dying ſtate of the pagan Roman empire, thro' a complication of judgments upon it, hereafter mentioned, as war, famine, peſtilence, and wild beaſts: and his name that ſat on him was death; not ſatan, who has the power of death, but death itſelf; who is repreſented as a perſon, as he elſewhere is, ſometimes as a king, Rom. v. 14. and as an enemy, 1 Cor. xv. 25. ſee Iſ. xxviii. 15. and this was a very antient way of ſpeaking of death among the heathens; in the theology of the Phœnicians, according to Sanchoniathon [k], who wrote before the Trojan wars, a ſon of Saturn by Rhea was called Muth, whom the Phœnicians ſometimes called Death, and ſometimes Pluto; which is manifeſtly the ſame with the Hebrew word מות, Death: the name of the rider of this horſe may well be called death, both with reſpect to the various kinds of death under this ſeal, and with reſpect to the ſhort lives of the emperors; for in leſs than fifty years time, which is the period of this ſeal, namely from Maximinus, A. D. 235. or 237. to Diocleſian, A. D. 284. or 286. there were more than twenty emperors, and who moſt of them were cut off by violent deaths; beſides the thirty tyrants who ſprung up under one of them, as ſo many muſhrooms, and were ſoon deſtroyed. This is the only rider that has a name given him; and from hence we may learn what to call the reſt, as the rider of the white horſe truth, or Chriſt, who is truth itſelf; the rider of the red horſe war; and the rider of the black horſe famine; and becauſe both the laſt, with other judgments, meet together under this ſeal, the rider of this horſe is emphatically called death: and hell followed with him; that is, the grave, which attended on death, or followed after him, and was a ſort of an undertaker, to bury the dead killed by death; ſo theſe two are put together, ch. i. 18. and xx. 13, 14. and power was given unto them; to death and hell, or the grave, or rather to death only, for the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read, to him: and the power that was given him reached over the fourth part of the earth; not of the church, which is never called the earth in this book, but is diſtinguiſhed from it, ch. xii. 16. nor the land of Judea, but the Roman empire; ſome underſtand it of Europe, the fourth part of the world: to kill with the ſword; Maximinus, with whom this ſeal begins, was of a very barbarous diſpoſition, and a more cruel creature, it is ſaid, was not upon earth; and beſides his perſecution of the chriſtians, he acted a moſt inhuman part to the pagan Romans themſelves, ſo that the ſenate dreaded him; and the women and children at Rome, having heard of his barbarities, deprecated his ever ſeeing that city; and he was called by the names of the worſt of tyrants; more than four thouſand men he killed, without any charge or judicial proceſs againſt them, and yet his blood-thirſty mind was not ſatiſfied [l]: Gallienus, another emperor after him, emptied many cities entirely of men, and killed three or four thouſand a day of his own ſoldiers, whom he underſtood had thoughts of a new emperor [m]; under him thirty tyrants ſprung up together in the empire, who made great havock before they were cut off; and in his time the Alemanni (a people in Germany) having waſted France, broke into Italy; Dacia, which beyond the Danube was added by Trajan (to the Roman empire) was loſt; Greece, Macedonia, Pontus, and Aſia, were deſtroyed by the Goths; Pannonia was depopulated by (the people called) Sarmatæ and Quadi; the Germans penetrated into Spain, and took the famous city of Tarracon; the Parthians having ſeized Meſopotamia, began to claim Syria to themſelves; ſo that as the Roman hiſtorian obſerves [n], things were now deſperate, and the Roman empire was almoſt deſtroyed: not to take notice of the multitudes that were killed in after wars and perſecutions, under other emperors during this ſeal: and with hunger; or famine; there was a grievous famine in the times of Gallus and Voluſianus, which Dionyſius biſhop of Alexandria makes mention of [o]; and Cyprian, who lived under this ſeal, alſo ſpeaks of famine, and indeed of all theſe three, war, famine, and peſtilence, as then imputed to the chriſtians, and to their irreligion, which charge he removes [p]: and with death; that is with the peſtilence, which by the Targumiſt [q], and other Jewiſh writers [r], is commonly called מותנא, death, becauſe it ſweeps away and carries off ſuch large numbers with it: now in the reign of the laſt-mentioned emperors was a very noiſome peſtilence, which raged moſt cruelly; the Roman hiſtorian ſays [s], that their reign is only known, or was famous, for the peſtilence, diſeaſes, and and ſickneſſes; Hoſtilianus, who was created emperor by the ſenate, died of it [t]; Dionyſius of Alexandria has given a moſt ſhocking account of it, who lived at the ſame time [u]; it began in Ethiopia, and went thro' the eaſt, and thro' all parts of the Roman empire, and laſted fifteen years; to which perhaps, for its large extent and long duration, there never was the like: and with the beaſts of the earth; by which many of the chriſtians were deſtroyed in the perſecutions of thoſe times; and is alſo one of God's four judgments, and which goes about with the ſword, famine, and peſtilence, Ezek. xiv. 21. and may be literally underſtood of deſtruction by wild beaſts, as Arnobius, who lived at this time obſerves [w]; or allegorically, of men comparable to wild beaſts, as Herod is called a fox, and Nero a lion; and ſuch ſavage creatures were moſt of the Roman emperors, and particularly the thirty tyrants under Gallienus: ſo the Targum on Jer. iii. 12. interprets the beaſts of the field, מלכי עממיא, the kings of the nations. The Alexandrian copy reads, and upon the fourth part of the beaſts, as if the power of death reached to them as well as to men. Under this ſeal all the judgments of God on Rome pagan meet together; and it is obſervable that Maximinus a Roman emperor, and one of the laſt of the pagans, boaſted, that for worſhipping of the gods, and perſecuting of the chriſtians, neither peſtilence, famine, nor war, were in his times, when on a ſudden all theſe three came together at once [x]; to which may be added the following obſervation, that though the ſeveral ſteps and methods which God took to puniſh, weaken, and deſtroy the Roman pagan empire, were remarkably ſeen in the diſtinct periods to which theſe firſt four ſeals belong, yet they muſt not be entirely reſtrained and limited to theſe periods, as if they were not made uſe of in others; ſo tho' the Goſpel proceeded with remarkable ſucceſs under the firſt ſeal, in the times of the Apoſtles, to the ſubduing of multitudes in the Roman empire, it was alſo preached with great ſucceſs under the following ſeals; and tho' there were moſt grievous wars under the ſecond ſeal, in the times of Trajan and Adrian, ſo there were alſo in after-times; that was not the only period of war, tho' it was remarkably ſo; likewiſe there was a famine in the times of Claudius, under the firſt ſeal, Acts xi. 28. and in the time of Trajan, under the ſecond ſeal [y], and of Commodus [z], as well as under the third; and there were peſtilences alſo in thoſe times, as well as under the fourth ſeal; and becauſe God did by each of theſe weaken, break, and at laſt bring to ruin that empire, they are ſhewed to John one after another.

Ver. 9. And when he had opened the fifth ſeal, &c.] Of the ſeven ſeals of the ſealed book; here is no beaſt ſpeaking here, nor horſe and rider preſented to view; it was now a very dark time both with reſpect to the church of God and miniſtry of the word, and the Roman empire. This ſeal refers to the times of Diocleſian, and the perſecution under him; and inſtead of the voice of one of the living creatures, John hears the voice of martyrs: I ſaw under the altar the ſouls of them that were ſlain; theſe include not only all the martyrs that were put to death in the perſecution of Diocleſian, but all thoſe that ſuffered in all the perſecutions preceding; for this being the laſt, involves them all. Souls being immaterial and incorporeal, are inviſible to the bodily eye; theſe therefore were either clothed with corporeal forms, as angels ſometimes are, or rather John ſaw them in a viſionary way, as he ſaw the angels: and theſe were the ſouls of ſuch as were ſlain; their bodies were dead, but their ſouls were alive; which ſhows the immortality of ſouls, and that they die not with their bodies, and that they live after them in a ſeparate ſtate: נשמתין דקטולי, the ſouls of them that are ſlain, is a phraſe uſed by Jewiſh writers [a], and who have a notion that the ſouls of thoſe that are ſlain are kept in certain palaces, under the care of one appointed by God [b]: and theſe were ſeen under the altar; either this is ſaid in alluſion to the blood of the ſacrifices, which was poured out at the bottom of the altar, Lev. iv. 7. and v. 9. in which the life and ſoul of the creature is; or becauſe that martyrdom is a ſacrifice of mens lives, and an offering of them in the cauſe of God and truth, Phil. ii. 17. 2 Tim. iv. 7. or with ſome reference to a common notion of the Jews, that the ſouls of the righteous are treaſured up under the throne of glory [c]; they have alſo a ſaying, every one that is buried in the land of Iſrael is as if he was buried under the altar [d]; for they think that being buried there expiates their ſins [e]; to which they add, that whoever is buried under the altar, is as if he was buried under the throne of glory [f]; yea, they talk of an altar above, upon which Michael the high-prieſt cauſes the ſouls of the righteous to aſcend [g]. Chriſt may be meant by the altar here, as he is in Heb. xiii. 10. who is both altar, ſacrifice, and prieſt, and is the altar that ſanctifies the gift, and from off which every ſacrifice of prayer and praiſe comes up with acceptance before God; and the ſouls of the martyrs being under this altar, denotes their being in the preſence of Chriſt, and enjoying communion with him, and being in his hands, into whoſe hands they commit their ſouls at death, as Stephen did, and being under his care and protection until the reſurrection morn, when they ſhall be re-united to their bodies which ſleep in Jeſus: and they were ſlain for the word of God; both for the eſſential Word of God, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, whoſe faith they profeſſed; and for the written word, they made the rule of their faith and practice, and which Diocleſian forbid the reading of, and ſought utterly to deſtroy; and for the Goſpel principally, which is contained in it: and for the teſtimony which they held; the Syriac and Arabic verſions read, for the teſtimony of the Lamb; and ſo the Complutenſian edition; either for the Goſpel, which is a teſtimony of the perſon, office, and grace of Chriſt, the Lamb, which they embraced, profeſſed, and held faſt; or for the witneſs they bore to him, and the profeſſion which they made thereof, and in which they continued.

Ver. 10. And they cried with a loud voice, &c.] With great ardour and fervency, being very preſſing and importunate; and which ſhows that they were awake, and not aſleep, and that the ſoul does not ſleep with the body in the grave, or is after the death of that in a ſtate of inſenſibility and inactivity, as ſome imagine: ſaying, how long, O Lord, holy and true; the perſon they addreſs is either the Lamb in the midſt of the throne, with whom they were, and under the ſhelter of whom they were ſafe and happy; or God the Father, who ſat upon the throne, whom they call holy, becauſe being ſo in his nature, and as appears in all his works, he could not but hate, and ſo revenge the evil that was done to them by their cruel perſecutors; and whereas he is true to all his threatnings, as well as his promiſes, and faithful to every word of his, they doubted not but he would judge and avenge them of their enemies; but they ſeem deſirous to know how long it would be firſt: ſaying, doſt thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth; the men of the world, idolatrous perſons, earthly princes, who had ſhed their blood; and which they deſire not out of any ſinful or malicious affection, but that the holineſs and juſtice of God might appear, and alſo his truth and faithfulneſs in his promiſes to them, and threatnings to his enemies; and that God in all things might be glorified, and his church and people on earth might be ſupported and delivered; ſee Job xxiv. 12.

Ver. 11. And white robes were given to every one of them, &c.] The Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, read in the ſingular number, a white robe, and ſo does the Syriac verſion; as a token of their innocence, that they did not ſuffer, or were ſlain, for any capital crime or immorality they were guilty of; and of their purity and perfection they now enjoyed; as alſo of that ſpiritual delight and pleaſure, which was unſpeakable and full of glory, they now had in the preſence of God and Chriſt; and in ſhort, of that happineſs and glory which ſouls in a ſeparate ſtate, before the reſurrection morn, are partakers of; who beſides the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, comparable to fine linen clean and white, walk with Chriſt in white, in the ſhining robes of bliſs and glory: and it was ſaid unto them that they ſhould reſt; or have reſt; eternal reſt from all their toil and labour, from all their ſorrows and ſufferings of every kind, which reſt remains for the people of God, and into which theſe were now entered; or that they ſhould ceaſe from expoſtulating and enquiring after the above manner, and reſt ſatisfied and contented, exerciſing the graces of faith, hope, and patience, believing, looking, and waiting: yet for a little ſeaſon; either until the end of this perſecution by Diocleſian, when vengeance would be taken of the Roman empire, and it would be no more as pagan; or until the day of judgment, when full vengeance will be inflicted on the perſecutors of the ſaints; and which is but a little while with God, with whom a thouſand years is as one day, and in compariſon of that eternity of bleſſedneſs glorified ſaints are partakers of: until their fellow ſervants alſo, and their brethren that ſhould be killed as they were, ſhould be fulfilled; meaning either the reſt of the ſaints that ſhould ſuffer martyrdom in the following part of this perſecution; or thoſe who ſhould ſuffer under the Arian perſecution, when the empire would become chriſtian; or under Rome papal, and in all the perſecutions of the apoſtacy, unto the end of that ſtate: theſe are called the fellow ſervants and brethren of the ſaints in heaven; for they all worſhip and ſerve the ſame God, and belong to the ſame family, in heaven and in earth; and the ſelf-ſame reaſon that is made uſe of to animate the ſaints below to courage, faith, and patience in ſuffering, 1 Pet. v. 9. is uſed to keep up the expectation of the ſaints in heaven, of that vengeance that will be executed on their enemies, and to point out the time when it will be; and it may be obſerved, that the number of martyrs, or of thoſe that ſhall ſuffer and die in the cauſe of Chriſt, and for his Goſpel, is fixed and determined by God; and that number ſhall be perfected and compleated, and when that is done, he'll pour out all his wrath on them that have perſecuted them and put them to death: and ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, that the number of their companions and brethren, and of thoſe who are to be killed as they have been killed, is fulfilled; ſee 2 Eſdras ii. 39, 40, 41. Now tho' this ſeal does not introduce any judgment to be executed on the Roman empire, as the others do; yet ſince it introduces all the martyrs with one united voice requiring vengeance on their blood, it may very well be conſidered as a ſtep towards, and as making way for, the utter ruin of that empire; and which the next ſeal being opened brings on, and is a full anſwer to the cry of theſe ſouls.

Ver. 12. And I beheld when he had opened the ſixth ſeal, &c.] Of the ſealed book, which the Lamb took out of the hand of him that ſat upon the throne, in order to open it, and unlooſe its ſeals. About this ſeal interpreters much differ; ſome refer this to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, becauſe of the likeneſs of expreſſions here uſed, and in Matt. xxiv. 7, 29. Luke xxi. 25, 26. and xxiii. 29, 30. but this was paſt many years before this ſeal was opened; and beſides, tho' that time was a day of wrath to the uttermoſt upon the Jewiſh people, and it was the Lamb's day of wrath, taking vengeance on them for their unbelief and rejection of him as the Meſſiah; yet they had no ſenſe of the Lamb, nor any apprehenſion of his wrath at that time, nor have they now, but imputed their calamity to their diviſions and quarrels among themſelves. Others think this ſeal belongs to the deſtruction of the Roman empire by the Goths, Hunns, Vandals, &c. but it ſhould be obſerved, that the empire ſtood ſome hundreds of years after the end of the fifth ſeal and the opening of this; and it was after the ſeventh ſeal, and at the ſounding of the trumpets, that that deſtruction came on; moreover, that calamity was by the ſavageneſs of ſome barbarous nations which over-run the empire, but this here ſpoken of comes from the wrath of the Lamb; add to which, that that calamity diſtreſſed the chriſtians in the empire, and them chiefly, whereas this falls only upon the enemies of the Lamb, and the perſecutors of his people. Others are of opinion that this has reſpect to the ſtrange change of affairs in the church of Chriſt, through the riſe, power, and tyranny of antichriſt; by the earthquake they ſuppoſe is meant the ſhaking of both church and ſtate by the man of ſin; who ſhook the doctrines, ordinances, and diſcipline of the church, and threw all into confuſion, and introduced a new face of things; and alſo ſhook the kingdoms of the earth, and the thrones and crowns of princes: by the ſun becoming black, they think is meant the ſun of righteouſneſs, Jeſus Chriſt, who was obſcured in the doctrines concerning him, as the one and only mediator, and juſtification by his righteouſneſs, and pardon through his blood, by introducing the mediation of angels and ſaints, the doctrine of juſtification by works, and the doctrine of merit, works of ſupererogation, indulgences, pardons, pennance, and purgatory: by the moon they underſtand the church, which receives all its light, grace, righteouſneſs, and holineſs from Chriſt, and which like the moon is changeable as to its outward form and circumſtances; and this became as blood thro' the perſecutions, maſſacres, and cruelties of the Romiſh antichriſt, who has been made drunk with the blood of the ſaints and martyrs of Jeſus: the ſtars they take to be the miniſters of the word; either hypocritical ones, who were like unripe figs, deſtitute of true grace, and ſo were eaſily ſhaken with the wind of papal power, and fell into the earth, and apoſtatized from the faith, and conformed to the corruptions of antichriſt; or the true miniſters of the Goſpel, who were put to death, and that to an untimely and violent one, ſignified by the ſhaking of untimely figs by a mighty wind: by the heaven departing as a ſcroll rolled up, they ſuppoſe is deſigned either the church, which fled into the wilderneſs, and remained inviſible during the papal power and cruelty; or elſe the ſcriptures, which the pope made himſelf ſole judge and interpreter of, and ſhut up from the common people in an unknown language, and forbid the laity the reading of them: by mountains they think are intended the kings and princes of the earth, who were obliged to ſubmit to the Romiſh antichriſt, and give their kingdoms to him, and receive their crowns and kingdoms from him, and be his vaſſals: and by the iſlands, the people their ſubjects, who were forced to acknowledge him as the ſupreme head, and receive his mark in their right-hand or forehead, or they could not buy and ſell: and by all ranks and degrees of men, as kings, &c. hiding themſelves in rocks and mountains, and calling upon them to fall on them and cover them, they apply either to their invoking the virgin Mary, and other ſaints, to intercede for them, and ſkreen them from the wrath of God and Chriſt, on account of their ſins; or elſe to the perſecutors of the ſaints, of every rank and in every age, and to the puniſhments that ſhall fall upon them. But however feaſible this interpretation may ſeem to be, it is certain that this was not the face of things at the cloſe of the fifth ſeal, or the Diocleſian perſecution, and at the opening of the ſixth, when Conſtantine came to the imperial throne, for then the church appeared as ſhe is deſcribed in Rev. xii. 1. which is juſt the reverſe of this. There are others, who becauſe of the very awful things here ſpoken of, and the very awful language in which they are expreſſed, conclude that this ſeal reſpects the day of judgment; not conſidering that the fifth ſeal ends about the year 313. at the cloſe of the laſt of the ten perſecutions, and that the ſixth ſeal begins where that ends; and tho' above 1400 years have elapſed ſince that time, yet the day of judgment is not come, and we know not when it will; beſides, here is another ſeal, a ſeventh ſeal, which follows, and introduces puniſhments on the Roman empire, and ſeven vials follow, which pour out plagues upon antichriſt, all which can never be thought to be after the day of judgment; moreover, the account of the day of judgment ſtands in its proper place in Rev. xx. 12. after the deſtruction of Babylon, the firſt reſurrection, and the ſaints thouſand years reign with Chriſt. But to proceed; the buſineſs which is the ſubject of this ſeal, is the removing of paganiſm, and pagan governors out of the Roman empire; this was the thing the rider upon the white horſe, under the firſt ſeal, ſet out upon to effect, and never ceaſed until he had accompliſhed it; and this is what enſued upon the cloſe of the fifth ſeal, when pagan perſecution ceaſed, on Conſtantine a chriſtian emperor having the reins of power in his hands; and it cannot be thought that ſo wonderful a change of things as this ſhould be omitted in this prophetic hiſtory; and it is eaſy to obſerve that changes in kingdoms and governments, both as to the polity and religion of them, are ſometimes expreſſed in ſuch like figurative terms as here; ſee Iſ. xiii. 9, 10, 13, 17, 19. and xxxiv. 4, 5. and Haggai ii. 21, 22. and which may be accommodated to this event as follows: and lo there was a great earthquake; or ſhaking, both of the heavens and earth, and which, as it denotes in Hagg. ii. 6, 7. compared with Heb. xii. 26, 27. the removing of Jewiſh worſhip and ordinances, in order to make way for the chriſtian ordinances and inſtitutions, which were to remain; ſo here it intends the removing of pagan worſhip and idolatry, and of pagan magiſtrates, that the chriſtian religion, and chriſtian magiſtrates might take place. This, with what follows, concerning the darkneſs of the ſun and moon, might be literally true; and it ſeems by hiſtorians, that there were ſuch phænomena about thoſe times; for 'tis aſſerted [h], that a very great earthquake in Syria followed the Diocleſian perſecution, which ſhook, and cauſed to fall the tops of houſes at Tyre and Sidon, and killed many thouſands; and ſome ſuch like happened at Rome, and at Spoletum, where above three hundred and fifty pagans periſhed, as they were ſerving their idols. It is alſo obſerved [i], that the moon was turned into blood in the times of Galerius, who ſucceeded Diocleſian; and that the ſun failed, and the ſtars ſhined for four hours, when Licinius was conquered by Conſtantine; but then theſe may be conſidered as ſymbols of the change in the empire. And the ſun became black as ſackcloth of hair; which is made of black hairs; ſee Iſ. l. 3. as when eclipſed. The ſun was the chief deity worſhipped by the heathens, under various names, and this becoming black, may deſign the removing of their principal gods from their honour and glory, or the downfal of idolatry, which the Jews [k] call, שמשה של עבודה זרה, the ſun of idolatry, which they ſuppoſe is meant in Cant. i. 6. And ſatan, the god of this world, who was worſhipped in different forms, now fell, as Lucifer, the ſon of the morning, and as lightening from heaven, and was caſt down from all his dignity, influence, and power to the earth; for the caſting out of the red dragon, the old ſerpent, and ſatan, after his combat with Michael, and his angels, in Rev. xii. 3, 7, 8, 9. refers to this very time; likewiſe the chief magiſtrate, the heathen Roman emperor may be included; and it is remarkable, that Diocleſian the emperor, who had now retired from the imperial government, and was under a cloud, under diſgrace, and in diſtreſs, had, in the zenith of his glory, cauſed himſelf to be worſhipped as a god, and as the brother of the ſun and moon. And the moon became as blood; as when obſcured; the Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, the Complutenſian edition, the Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions read, the whole moon; this may deſign the next heathen deity, or claſs of deities, for the moon was alſo worſhipped by the heathens, under different names; and may likewiſe include the pagan prieſthood, which was next, and was annexed to the imperial dignity; and which was diſuſed by Conſtantine, and his ſucceſſors; and even the very title, and the robe, which was a ſymbol of it, were laid aſide as unworthy of chriſtian princes; ſee Mede upon the place.

Ver. 13. And the ſtars of heaven fell unto the earth, &c.] All the other inferior deities loſt their eſteem, worſhip, and honour; for the idol temples being now opened, the idols and ſtatues were expoſed to the common people, and were found to be ſtuffed with hay and ſtraw, which brought them into great contempt [l]. Moreover, as ſtars ſometimes ſignify the miniſters of the Goſpel in the chriſtian church, ch. i. 20. and ſometimes the prieſts in the Jewiſh church, Dan. viii. 10. ſo they may here likewiſe include the idolatrous prieſts, among the heathens, who were diſcharged and removed by Conſtantine, and had their poſts and profits taken away from them; yea, Maximinus, an heathen emperor, or tyrant, being beaten by Licinius, who was then Conſtantine's collegue, killed many of the prieſts and prophets of his gods, which were formerly had in great admiration by him, as deceivers and betrayers of him, by whoſe oracles he was animated to the war [m]. And in like manner Licinius put to death the prieſts and prophets of the new idol at Antioch [n]. Even as a fig-tree caſteth her untimely figs, when ſhe is ſhaken of a mighty wind; which figs being young and green, and not fixed, fall off eaſily, and in great numbers, when a bluſtring wind beats upon them; and ſo the rabble of pagan deities, and idolatrous prieſts, were eaſily, and in great numbers, removed thro' the power of Conſtantine, which carried all before it.

Ver. 14. And the heaven departed as a ſcroll when it is rolled together, &c.] The manner of writing formerly was on rolls of parchment; hence the word volume is uſed for a book, which, when rolled up, the writing within could not be ſeen, not a ſyllable nor letter of it. In like manner the Roman empire, as pagan, which was like a large ſheet, or rather like the expanſe or firmament of the heaven, ſtretched out over all the earth, was now, as to the paganiſm of it, rolled up together, ſo that there were no more heathen gods, nor heathen prieſts; no more idolatry, and idolatrous worſhip of that kind were to be ſeen, and not ſo much as the names of heathen gods to be heard of in the empire. And every mountain and iſland were moved out of their places; by every mountain may be meant, the places of idolatrous worſhip, which were uſually upon mountains; ſee Jer. iii. 6, 23. which were now ſhut up, or demoliſhed, or uſed for chriſtian worſhip; and every iſland being moved alſo may ſhow, that paganiſm was not only rooted out of the provinces of the empire, upon the continent, but out of the iſlands alſo; and the eccleſiaſtical hiſtory of theſe times informs us, that there were chriſtian churches in the iſles, which enjoyed the Goſpel free of perſecution and diſtreſs; as in the iſles of Cyprus, Crete, the Cyclades, Sardinia, Sicily, Corſica, and in ours of England, Scotland, and Ireland [o]. Mr. Daubuz thinks, that as mountains deſign the temples of idols, iſlands ſignify the revenues of them, which were now taken away, and applied to other uſes.

Ver. 15. And the kings of the earth, and the great men, &c.] The Roman emperors, and other principal magiſtrates, governours of provinces and cities: and the rich men; among the commonalty; theſe three may deſign perhaps more particularly the emperors, nobles, and ſenate of Rome: and the chief captains; or captains of thouſands, that had the command of the Roman legions: and the mighty men; the ſoldiers, that were under them, men of ſtrength, courage, and valour: and every bondman, and every freeman; which takes in all the inhabitants of the Roman empire, of every ſtate and condition, and which was an uſual diſtinction among the Romans: theſe hid themſelves in the dens, and in the rocks of the mountains; where, through their cruel perſecutions, they had forced multitudes of chriſtians to flee, and therefore, lex talionis, the law of retaliation was righteouſly inflicted on them; and not to take notice of any other, this was remarkably true of their kings or emperors. Diocleſian and Herculius Maximianus, who were emperors together, in the heighth of their imperial glory and grandeur, the one being at Nicomedia, and the other at Milan, did, on one and the ſame day, of their own accord, abdicate the empire, and diveſted themſelves of their imperial crown and government, and retired to a private life; pretending in publick, that old age, and the weight of buſineſs, were the cauſe, but to their friends they owned, that it was thro' deſpair, becauſe they could not extinguiſh the chriſtian religion [p]. Some aſcribed this to phrenzy and madneſs [q]; but the true reaſon was, that the wrath of the Lamb was let into their conſciences, and which they could not bear, and which obliged them to take this ſtep, to the amazement of the whole world. Maximinus, who ſucceeded them, being overcome by Licinius, laid aſide his imperial habit, and hid himſelf among the common people, and ſkulked about in fields and villages [r]. Maxentius, another emperor, fled from Conſtantine, the inſtrument of the wrath of the Lamb, and the pouring it out upon his enemies, and fell into the river Tyber, from the Mylvian bridge, where he periſhed; and which was the very place in which he had laid ſnares for Conſtantine [s].

Ver. 16. And ſaid to the mountains and rocks fall on us, &c.] They choſe death rather than life. Diocleſian being invited by Conſtantine to a marriage-feaſt, excuſed himſelf by reaſon of his old age; but receiving threatening letters, the hiſtorian [t] ſays, in which he was charged with having favoured Maxentius, and with favouring Maximinus, he poiſoned himſelf; and others of the emperors are ſaid to lay violent hands upon themſelves: and hide us from the face of him that ſitteth upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb; thus they owned the proper deity, and almighty power of God, and Chriſt, which they dreaded; ſo Maximinus being afflicted with a moſt horrible diſeaſe, of which he died, aſked pardon of the God of the chriſtians, and owned that he ſuffered juſtly, for his reproaches of Chriſt. [u] Licinius, who ſometimes pretended to be a chriſtian, and joined with Conſtantine, but afterwards revolted and fought againſt him, being conquered and taken, was put to death; at which time he, and they that ſuffered death with him, confeſſed, that the God of Conſtantine was the only true God [w]. This paſſage ſhows, that Chriſt, God's firſt-born, is higher than the kings of the earth; yea, that he is equal with him that ſits upon the throne, with God his Father, ſince his wrath is equally dreaded, as his; and that, tho' he is a Lamb, mild, meek, and gentle, yet there is wrath, fury, and indignation in him, againſt his enemies, which is very dreadful and intolerable; ſee Pſ. ii. 12.

Ver. 17. For the great day of his wrath is come, &c.] The Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions read, of their wrath; both of him that ſits upon the throne, and of the Lamb, againſt the heathen gods and heathen perſecutors, in anſwer to the cry of the martyrs in ver. 9, 10. And who ſhall be able to ſtand? againſt either of them, or in their preſence, and ſo as to bear their wrath and diſpleaſure; all which expreſſes guilt, ſhame, fear, and deſpair.

CHAP. VII.

THIS chapter contains a viſion ſeen at the end of the ſixth, and at the opening of the ſeventh ſeal, which expreſſes the ſecurity of the ſaints in all ages following, the praiſes of angels and men on that account, and the happineſs of all the people of God in the millennium ſtate. Firſt, a viſion of four angels is ſeen reſtraining the winds from blowing on the earth, ſea, and trees, ver. 1. then of another angel deſcribed by the place from whence he came, the eaſt; by what he had, the ſeal of the living God, and by his cry to the four angels not to hurt the earth, ſea, and trees, until the ſervants of God were ſealed, ver. 2, 3. and then follows the number of the ſealed ones in general, ver. 4. and the particular number of them out of each tribe of Iſrael, ver. 5, 6, 7, 8. After which is another viſion of all the elect of God together, deſcribed by the numberleſs multitude of them; by their deſcent from all nations; by their poſition and ſituation before the throne, and the lamb; by their habit and attire, and by their loud cry, aſcribing ſalvation to God, and to the Lamb, ver. 9, 10. who are joined by all the angels around them, worſhipping God, and aſcribing glory to him, ver. 11, 12. And next is deſcribed the happineſs of this numerous company, in the thouſand years reign, introduced by ſome diſcourſe which paſſed between John, and one of the elders, ver. 13, 14. who are ſaid to be before the throne, to ſerve God continually, and to have his preſence, ver. 15. to be free from every thing troubleſome and diſtreſſing, ver. 16. and to be fed by the Lamb, and to be led by him to fountains of living water, and to have all their tears wiped away from them, ver. 17.

Ver. 1. And after theſe things, &c.] After the opening of ſix of the ſeals of the ſealed book, and after the demolition of heathen deities, and of heathen worſhip, and of heathen magiſtrates, in the Roman empire, and the repreſentation of theſe to John, he had the following viſion; and which therefore does not refer to the preſervation of the chriſtians, before and at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, which was under the firſt ſeal; nor to the ſecurity of the ſaints from the wrath of the Lamb, when it fell upon the pagan worſhippers of all ranks and degrees, which was under the ſixth ſeal, and was now over; but rather it reſpects an intermediate ſpace of time between the ſixth and ſeventh ſeal, as reaching from Conſtantine to Theodoſius; for upon Conſtantine's being ſole emperor, the church enjoyed great peace and tranquillity after the bluſtring ſtorms of pagan perſecution ceaſed; and great numbers of God's elect were converted and ſealed, and the winds of heathen perſecution were held, and blew no more, unleſs for a ſhort time under the emperor Julian; tho' the church was not free from the wind of error and hereſy, and the ſtorms of contention which aroſe about them, nor from the tempeſt of Arian perſecutions, which were very grievous; wherefore this refers to what ſhould be between the ſixth and ſeventh ſeal, which brings on the ſeven trumpets: and now before John ſees that ſeal opened, a pauſe is made, and this viſion is ſhown him, to fortify his mind, and all other ſaints, that are obſervers of theſe things, who by the opening of the following ſeal would ſee, what judgments and plagues would come upon the empire, now become chriſtian, and what changes and revolutions would be made in it, and might fear that the church of God would be wholly ſwallowed up and loſt; wherefore this viſion is exhibited to ſhow, that notwithſtanding the devaſtations by the Goths and Vandals, and the riſe, progreſs, and power of Mahomet, and the dreadful apoſtacy of the church of Rome, and all the miſeries of it, and the plagues that ſhould come upon the church for it; yet God would have throughout all this, and in every age of time, a ſealed number, a true church, hidden and ſecured, even until the ſeventh angel has ſounded his trumpet, and time ſhall be no more, and the myſtery of God will be finiſhed. I ſaw four angels ſtanding on the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that the wind ſhould not blow on the earth, nor on the ſea, nor on any trees. Four angels are mentioned, in alluſion to the four ſpirits of the heavens, in Zech. vi. 5. and tho' the earth is not a plain ſquare with angles, but round and globular, yet it is ſaid to have four corners, with reſpect to the four points of the heavens; and tho' there is but one wind, which blows ſometimes one way, and ſometimes another, yet four are named with regard to the above points, eaſt, weſt, north, and ſouth, from whence it blows. Theſe are commonly called the four winds of heaven, Dan. viii. 8. and xi. 4. but here, of the earth, as in the Targum on Iſ. xi. 12. and he ſhall bring near the captivity of Judah, מארבע רוחי ארעא, from the four winds of the earth. And ſuch things as are chiefly affected with winds, are particularly obſerved, as the earth, upon which buildings are thrown down by them; and the ſea, in which ſhips are wrecked; and trees, which by the violence of them, are blown down, and torn up by the roots. Some by theſe angels underſtand evil angels, who are ſometimes called angels, without any additional epithet to diſtinguiſh them, and that becauſe a deſire of hurting ſeems to have been in them, as well as a power, ver. 2, 3. and who are in every part of the world, ſeeking to do all the miſchief they can; and may be ſaid to hold the winds, not in a literal ſenſe, for God only gathers the wind in his fiſt, and holds it there, and lets it looſe at his pleaſure; but in a myſtical ſenſe, as theſe may refer to the word, and the miniſters of the word, whoſe progreſs and ſucceſs are often hindered by ſatan and his emiſſaries; and ſome particularly underſtand by them the four monarchies of the Babylonian, Perſian, Grecian, and Roman; others the four emperors, after that Diocleſian and Maximianus had reſigned, as Maximinus, Galerius, Maxentius, and Licinius; others Mahomet, or the Turk, in the eaſt, who hindered the Goſpel by his wars and devaſtations, as well as by falſe worſhip; the kings of France and Spain on the weſt, by fire, and faggot, and ſword; and the pope in the ſouth, by bulls and excommunications; and the empire and emperors of Germany on the north, by public edicts; or, in general, all the popiſh tribe, popes, cardinals, biſhops, prieſts, monks, and friars, by their decrees, anathema's, ſermons, writings, and lying miracles, did all they could that the Goſpel might not be preached neither in the earth, on the continent, nor in the ſea, or in the iſlands of it; or that any of the ſaints, the trees of righteouſneſs, who lived in woods and mountainous places, or were forced to fly into woods, might have any advantage by it. But after all, rather this is to be underſtood of good angels, and either of their reſtraining evil angels from doing miſchief, ſee Dan. x. 13, 20, 21. Rev. xii. 4, 7. or keeping back the winds of falſe doctrines and hereſies from the churches of Chriſt, in the ſeveral parts of the world; or rather, and which is the true ſenſe, of their holding in the ſtorms of calamities and war to the deſtruction of kingdoms, provinces, iſlands, and the ſeveral inhabitants of them, and intends a general peace throughout the world; ſee Jer. xlix. 36. and li. 1, 2. This myſtical way of ſpeaking ſeems to agree with the notions of the Jews, who ſpeak of angels ſtanding at the gates of the four winds, ומפתחי רוח, and the keys of the wind in their hands, whoſe names they give us[x]; and make mention of, מלאכי רוחא, the angels of the wind[y]; and the Magi among the Perſians call the angel of the wind Bad, or Bad-ran[z].

Ver. 2. And I ſaw another angel, &c.] Not Conſtantine, who came from the eaſtern parts to the empire, with the true knowledge of God, and the authority of God to propagate it; and who repreſſed the four angels, or evil ſpirits, contention, ambition, hereſy, and war, from doing the miſchief they otherwiſe would; and ſealed the ſaints, by giving them a platform of doctrine at the council of Nice, as Brightman and others think. But the increated angel, the angel of the covenant, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; for who but he ſhould have the privy-ſeal of heaven, who is the angel of the great council, as the Septuagint render Iſ. ix. 6? and who could ſpeak in ſuch an authoritative manner to the four angels, ſaying, hurt not the earth, &c. but he who is the head of all principality and power? and who ſhould ſeal the ſervants of the Lord, but he who has them in his hands, and keeps them by his power, ſo that none of them ſhall periſh? And to him agrees all that follows: aſcending from the eaſt; from Judea, from Zion, from whence Chriſt, as the ſalvation, or ſaviour of Iſrael, came, Pſ. xiv. 7. and whoſe name is the eaſt, as ſome render Zech. iii. 8. he is the day ſpring from on high, the ſun of righteouſneſs, who roſe from the eaſt, the place of the riſing ſun, and brought light, life, and joy to his people, when he came to ſeal them. Compare with this Ezek. xliii. 1, 2, 4. and xliv. 1, 2, 3, 4. and xlvi. 1, 2. and xlvii. 1. Having the ſeal of the living God; having the impreſs of deity upon him, being the brightneſs of his Father's glory, and the expreſs image or character of his perſon; having a teſtimony, an authentic proof and demonſtration of his being the Son of God, of his being the true and living God; as alſo a commiſſion from God, as mediator, being ſealed by him; and having all power and authority from him, to ſeal and ſecure the people which were given unto him, and for which purpoſe he now came: to which may be added, that Chriſt has the Spirit, with his gifts and graces, without meaſure, by which the ſaints are ſealed unto the day of redemption; and moreover has likewiſe the ſeal of the book of life, or of eternal election in his hands; the elect are choſen in him, and the book of life, in which their names are written to eternal life, is in his keeping, and is therefore called the lamb's book of life. The Jews ſpeak[a] of the eaſt gate of one of the palaces they ſuppoſe above, which they ſay is ſhut all the ſix days, and on the ſabbath-day is opened; and the governour of this palace has two miniſters, one on his right hand, and one on his left, and two ſeals in their hands, חותם חיים, the ſeal of life, and the ſeal of death, and all the books of the world before them; and ſome are ſealed to life, and ſome to death, with which this paſſage may be compared. They ſpeak alſo of an angel that preſides at the eaſtern part of the heavens, who receives the prayers of the Iſraelites, whoſe name they call Gazardia [b], as this ſame angel is ſaid to offer up the prayers of the ſaints, ch. viii. 3. And he cried with a loud voice to the four angels; to ſhow his power and authority over them, they being his creatures and miniſters; and to expreſs his great concern for his people, his care of them, and affection for them; and to ſignify the danger they were in thro' the calamities that were coming on, ſhould they not be ſealed: to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the ſea; they had a commiſſion from God to let looſe the winds, or to bring on wars, devaſtations, calamities, and plagues, of various ſorts, upon the Roman empire, now chriſtian; and on the ſeat of the beaſt, not only on the continent, but upon the iſlands alſo, even upon all the nations, tongues, and people, ſubject to the ſee of Rome.

Ver. 3. Saying, hurt not the earth, neither the ſea, nor the trees, &c.] That is, as yet, for their commiſſion was not contradicted, nor taken away by Chriſt; and at the time appointed, at the blowing of the ſeveral trumpets, they let looſe the winds, and let in the Goths, Hunns, and Vandals, the Saracens and Turks into the empire, and after that poured out the vials of God's wrath upon the Romiſh antichriſt: this retarding of them was but in appearance, that there might be an opportunity to ſhow to John, what care would be taken all along of the church of Chriſt, and true ſervants of the living God: till we have ſealed the ſervants of our God in their foreheads; the ſervants of ſin, ſatan, and the beaſt of Rome, were took no notice nor care of; they were the perſons to be hurt by the winds, ſignified by the earth, ſea, and trees, even idolaters, ſmall and great; but the ſervants of our God, who ſerve him with grace in their hearts, from a principle of love, in the exerciſe of faith, without ſervile fear, and with reverence and godly fear, in righteouſneſs and true holineſs, and with a view to his glory; and are worſhippers of him in ſpirit and in truth, being followers of the lamb, whitherſoever he goes; and ſo are the ſervants of his God, and their God: the ſealing of them does not deſign the ſealing of them with the ſeal of election, this was done in eternity; nor with the ſeal of the Spirit, which is common to all the ſaints in all ages; but it denotes the hiding and concealing, and ſo ſecuring the ſaints amidſt all the calamities of the empire, and throughout the whole time of the Romiſh apoſtacy, from firſt to laſt; and reſpects the time when the church fled into the wilderneſs, and was hid, and nouriſhed with the hidden manna, for a time, and times, and half a time, Rev. xii. 14. Chriſt ſet a mark upon them, as was upon the houſes of the Iſraelites, when the deſtroying angel paſſed thro' Egypt, and deſtroyed the firſt-born in it; and as was upon the foreheads of thoſe that ſighed and cried in Jeruſalem, when orders were given to ſlay young and old, Exod. xii. 23. Ezek. ix. 4. Chriſt will have a people in the worſt of times; he knows who are his, and he'll take care of them; he has his chambers of protection to hide them in, till the the indignation is over-paſt: the ſealers, we, are either Father, Son, and Spirit, who are all jointly concerned for the welfare of the elect; or Chriſt and his miniſtring angels, that attend him, whom he employs for the good and ſafety of the heirs of ſalvation: the ſeal with which theſe are ſealed, is the ſeal of the living God, the fore-knowledge, love, care, and power of God; and the name of God, even Chriſt's Father's name, and their Father's name in their foreheads; the new name of children of God, by and under which they are known and preſerved by him: and this is ſaid to be in their foreheads, in alluſion to ſervants, who uſed to be marked in their foreheads; hence they are called by Apuleius [c] frontes literati; and by Martial, a ſervant, is called fronte notatus [d]: but then theſe were ſuch who had committed faults, and this was done by way of puniſhment [e]; wherefore it can hardly be thought that the ſervants of God ſhould be ſealed, in alluſion to them: but rather with reference to the mitre on the high-prieſt's forehead, as ſome think; or it may be to Ezek. ix. 4. and ſhows, that tho' theſe perſons were hid and concealed from men, they were well known to God and Chriſt; nor were they aſhamed to make a publick and open confeſſion of Chriſt before men, as did the true and faithful witneſſes of Chriſt, the Waldenſes and Albigenſes, in the midſt of the greateſt darkneſs of popery, and of danger from men; and who ſeem to be chiefly intended.

Ver. 4. And I heard the number of them which were ſealed, &c.] And therefore could be ſure of the exact number, which did not depend upon his ſight, and telling them, in which ſome miſtake might have been made, but he heard the number expreſſed: and there were ſealed an hundred and forty, and four thouſand; which is a ſquare number ariſing from twelve, the ſquare root of it, being juſt twelve times twelve thouſand; and may denote their being the true and genuine offspring of the twelve Apoſtles of the Lamb, holding their doctrine, and being built on their foundation; ſee ch. xxi. 14. and theſe were of all the tribes of the children of Iſrael; not that theſe were all Jews in a literal ſenſe, for the time of their converſion, in great numbers, is not yet come. Dr. Goodwin thinks, that theſe ſealed ones deſign the believers of the Greek and Armenian churches, and his reaſons are not deſpicable; but this is to limit and reſtrain them to a particular part of the church of Chriſt; whereas they take in all the ſaints within this long tract of time, even all that are the true Iſrael of God, who are Jews inwardly, of what nation, kindred, tongue, and people ſoever; and is a certain and determinate number for an uncertain and indeterminate one; and only intends a large number of perſons known to God and Chriſt; ſee 2 Eſdras ii. 38.

Ver. 5. Of the tribe of Judah were ſealed twelve thouſand, &c.] Judah is mentioned firſt, becauſe Chriſt ſprung from that tribe, and the pure worſhip of God was preſerved in it; and that itſelf was preſerved a diſtinct tribe until the coming of Shiloh; its name ſignifies, praiſe God, Gen. xxix. 35. and ſhows, that it becomes all the ſealed ones, all true believers, and every member of the church of God, to praiſe him, for all favours and bleſſings, temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal. Of the tribe of Reuben were ſealed twelve thouſand; Reuben was Jacob's firſt-born, but by his ſin he loſt the honour and privilege of birth-right, and therefore is mentioned after Judah, who prevailed above him, and the reſt of his brethren; his name ſignifies ſee the Son, Gen. xxix. 32. and ſhews, that the Son of God is to be looked unto for righteouſneſs, life, and ſalvation, by all that expect to be ſaved, and to him does the true church look for eternal life and happineſs. Of the tribe of Gad were ſealed twelve thouſand; his name ſignifies a troop, Gen. xxx. 11. and may denote that there would be a numerous company of ſaints, and faithful witneſſes during the time of ſealing, and amidſt all the troubles and afflictions that would attend the church and people of God, and who in the iſſue would be conquerors, and more than conquerors, thro' Chriſt; ſee Gen. xlix. 19.

Ver. 6. Of the tribe of Aſer were ſealed twelve thouſand, &c.] Aſher, which the Septuagint pronounce Aſer, as here, ſignifies bleſſed, Gen. xxx. 13. as all the ſealed ones are, bleſſed with all ſpiritual bleſſings, with grace here, and glory hereafter. Of the tribe of Nephthalim were ſealed twelve thouſand; the name of this tribe ſignifies wreſtlings, Gen. xxx. 8. and may deſign the wreſtlings of ſaints, both with God in prayer, and with their enemies, ſin, ſatan, and the world, and alſo their ſtrivings together for the faith of the Goſpel. Of the tribe of Manaſſes were ſealed twelve thouſand; this word ſignifies forgetting, Gen. xli. 51. and ſhows that the followers of Chriſt ſhould forget the things that are behind, their ſinful luſts and pleaſures, the onions and garlick in Egypt, and their former company and acquaintance, their own people, and their father's houſe, and all their labours and ſufferings for the ſake of Chriſt.

Ver. 7. Of the tribe of Simeon were ſealed twelve thouſand, &c.] The name of this tribe ſignifies hearing, Gen. xxix. 33. and ſuch an hearing as is attended with obedience; and denotes the ſpiritual and practical hearing of the Goſpel by thoſe who hear, and underſtand, and believe, and practice what they hear, and yield the obedience of faith unto it. Of the tribe of Levi were ſealed twelve thouſand; this name ſignifies joined, Gen. xxix. 34. and denotes, that theſe ſealed ones were not only joined one to another in love, and holy fellowſhip, but to Chriſt, and were one ſpirit with him, and were members of his body, fleſh, and bones, and cleaved to him with full purpoſe of heart. Of the tribe of Iſſachar were ſealed twelve thouſand; the interpretation of this name is hire or reward, Gen. xxx. 18. and may deſign thoſe rewards of grace, which God beſtows upon his faithful ſervants, in times of tribulation.

Ver. 8. Of the tribe of Zabulon were ſealed twelve thouſand, &c.] Which ſignifies dwelling, Gen. xxx. 20. and was the tribe in which Chriſt had his dwelling, and where he much converſed; and may denote his gracious inhabitation, as well as that of God the Father, and of the Spirit, among the ſaints and ſealed ones. Of the tribe of Joſeph were ſealed twelve thouſand; whoſe name ſignifies adding, Gen. xxx. 24. and may intend the additions both of numbers, and of gifts and grace to the churches of thoſe times. Of the tribe of Benjamin were ſealed twelve thouſand; this word ſignifies the ſon of the right hand, Gen. xxxv. 18. ſhewing, that theſe ſealed ones are as a ſignet on God's right hand, and are as near and dear unto him as a man's right hand is to him; ſee Pſ. lxxx. 17. Now twelve thouſand out of each tribe, make juſt the number of a hundred forty and four thouſand, ver. 4. The tribe of Dan is not mentioned, it may be, becauſe of the apoſtaſy of that tribe, one of Jeroboam's golden calves being ſet up there; ſhewing that God had no ſealed ones of that ſort, and inſtead of him Levi is reckoned; tho' that tribe had no part in the diviſion of the land of Iſrael, yet had a part in Chriſt, and is therefore mentioned in this myſtical account. Nor is the name of Ephraim uſed, it may be for the ſame reaſon; there having been a great defection in that tribe from the pure worſhip of God, and inſtead of him the name of Joſeph appears.

Ver. 9. After this I beheld, &c.] What follows is a diſtinct viſion from the preceding one, and is not a continuation of that, as if the ſealing of the Jewiſh believers was deſigned by the former, and the ſealing of the Gentiles in this latter; whereas in this viſion, there is no mention made of ſealing, nor was there, or will there be any need of it in the time it refers unto; and which is not the time of the reformation; nor when the vials began to be poured out upon the ſeat of the beaſt; for tho' there were great numbers converted in many nations, kindreds, people, and tongues, yet not in all; nor do the characters of this great multitude, and the happineſs they ſhall enjoy, ſeem to ſuit with perſons in a ſtate of mortality and imperfection, ver. 14, 15, 16, 17. wherefore many interpreters underſtand this viſion of the ſaints in heaven: but it rather reſpects the millennium ſtate, or thouſand years reign of Chriſt with his ſaints on earth, with which all that is here ſaid agrees; compare ver. 14. with ch. xx. 4. and ver. 15. with ch. xxii. 3. and ver. 16, 17. with ch. xxi. 4, 6. And the deſign of this viſion is to ſhow to John, and every diligent obſerver, that after the ſeventh ſeal is opened, the trumpets are blown, and the vials poured out; during which time there will be a number ſealed, that will profeſs Chriſt; and at the cloſe and winding up of all things, in the days of the voice of the ſeventh angel, Chriſt will deſcend, and all the ſaints with him; their bodies will be raiſed, and the living ſaints changed, and make one general aſſembly, who are ſhown to John here, as in ch. xxi. 9, 10. to relieve his mind, and ſupport his ſpirits, in a view of the calamities uſhered in by the opening of the ſeventh ſeal. And lo a great multitude, which no man could number; which deſign all the elect of God in the new Jeruſalem church-ſtate, the bride, the Lamb's wife, or the new Jeruſalem deſcending from God out of heaven; theſe will appear to be a great multitude, not in compariſon of the inhabitants that ſhall have dwelt upon earth, nor of the profeſſors of religion in one ſhape or another; for with reſpect to each of theſe, they are but a few, a ſeed, a remnant, a little flock; but as conſidered in themſelves, and ſo they are many who are ordained to eternal life, whoſe ſins Chriſt has bore, for whom his blood has been ſhed, and whom he juſtifies, and who are called by his grace, and are brought to glory; and who make up ſuch a number as no man can number: God indeed can number them, but not man; for they are a ſett of particular perſons choſen by God, and redeemed by Chriſt, and who are perfectly and diſtinctly known by them; their number and names are with them; their names are written in the Lamb's book of life; and God and Chriſt can, and do call them by their name; and when they were given to Chriſt, they paſſed under the rod of him that telleth them; and he will give an exact account of them, of every individual perſon, another day. But then they are not to be numbered by men; and they will be of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues; and therefore muſt conſiſt both of Jews and Gentiles; theſe were not all nations, &c. but of all nations, ſome of all nations; and ſuch God has choſen, Chriſt has redeemed, and the Spirit calls; God has not choſen all the Jews, but a remnant, according to the election of grace, nor all the Gentiles, but has taken out of them a people for his name; and ſo Chriſt has redeemed, by his blood, ſome out of every kindred, tongue, people, and nation, of Jew and Gentile: and hence the Goſpel has been ſent into all the world, and to all nations, for the gathering of theſe perſons out of them; and when they are all gathered in, they'll all meet together in the new Jeruſalem church-ſtate, and make up the body here preſented to view. Stood before the throne, and before the Lamb; the throne of God, and of the Lamb, will be in the midſt of the new Jeruſalem church; the tabernacle of God will be with men, and he will dwell among them; and before the preſence of his glory will all the ſaints be preſented; and the Lamb will then preſent to himſelf his whole church, without ſpot, or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing; and they'll behold his glory, and ſee him as he is: and as they are deſcribed before by their number, and their deſcent, ſo here by their poſition and ſituation, and, as follows, by their habit and attire, clothed with white robes; agreeable to their princely and prieſtly characters: it was uſual for princes and noblemen to be arrayed in veſtures of linnen, as Joſeph was in Pharaoh's court; and the Jewiſh prieſts wore garments of linnen, in their daily miniſtry and ſervice; and in the thouſand years reign the ſaints will appear to be kings and prieſts, Rev. v. 10. and xx. 6. and accordingly will be clothed as ſuch: and this may alſo be expreſſive of their entire freedom from ſin by the blood of Chriſt, ver. 14. and their compleat juſtification by his righteouſneſs, which is ſometimes compared to white raiment, and is called fine linnen, clean, and white; and likewiſe their ſpotleſs purity and holineſs, ſanctification in them being now perfect, which was before imperfect: and theſe robes may alſo deſign their ſhining robes of glory and immortality; for they will now be clothed upon with their houſe from heaven, and will have put off mortality and corruption, and have put on immortality and incorruption, and appear with Chriſt in glory; for ſuch will be the then ſtate of things: and palms in their hands; or branches of palm-trees, as in John xii. 13. as an emblem of their uprightneſs and faithfulneſs, which they had ſhown in the cauſe of Chriſt even unto death, the palm-tree being a very upright tree, Jer. x. 5. Cant. vii. 7. or of their bearing up under a variety of preſſures and afflictions, by which they were not caſt down and deſtroyed, but bravely ſtood up under them, and were now come out of them; the palm-tree being of ſuch a nature, as is reported, that the more weight is hung upon it, the higher it riſes, and the ſtraighter it grows; ſee Pſ. xcii. 12. and chiefly as an emblem of victory and triumph over their enemies, as ſin, ſatan, the world and death, which they had been ſtruggling with, in a ſtate of imperfection, but were now more than conquerors over them; the palm-tree is well known to be a token of victory. So Philo the Jew [f] ſays, the palm-tree is συμϐολον νικης, a ſymbol of victory. Conquerors uſed to carry palm-tree branches in their hands [g]: thoſe who conquered in the combats and plays among the Greeks, uſed not only to have crowns of palm-trees given them, but carried branches of it in their hands [h]; as did alſo the Romans in their triumphs; yea, they ſometimes wore toga palmata, a garment with the figures of palm-trees on it, which were interwoven in it [i]: and hence here palms are mentioned along with white garments; and ſome have been tempted to render the words thus, clothed with white robes, and palms on their ſides; that is, on the ſides of their robes [k]. The medal which was ſtruck by Titus Veſpaſian at the taking of Jeruſalem, had on it a palm-tree, and a captive woman ſitting under it, with this inſcription on it, Judæa capta, Judea is taken. And when our Lord rode in triumph to Jeruſalem, the people met him with branches of palm-trees in their hands, and cried, Hoſanna to him. So the Jews, at the feaſt of tabernacles, which they kept in commemoration of their having dwelt in tents in the wilderneſs, carried Lulabs, or palm-tree branches in their hands, in token of joy, Lev. xxiii. 40. and in like manner, theſe being come out of the wilderneſs of the world, and the tabernacle of God being among them, expreſs their joy in this way; ſee the note on John xii. 13.

Ver. 10. And cried with a loud voice, &c.] To ſhew the ſtrength of their affection, and the greatneſs of their joy, and how ſenſible they were of the favour they enjoyed, and how hearty they were in the following aſcription of glory to God, and the Lamb. Saying, ſalvation to our God which ſitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb; by ſalvation is meant, not only temporal ſalvation, and thoſe many deliverances, which God had wrought for them, and particularly in bringing them out of great tribulation, ver. 14. but ſpiritual and eternal ſalvation, which is the ſalvation of the ſoul, and is owing to the free grace of God, and the blood of Chriſt; and the ſenſe is, that God and the Lamb are the ſole authors of it, and the glory of it ought to be given to them, and to no other: God the Father, who ſits upon the throne, reſolved upon it in his eternal purpoſes and decrees, and contrived and formed the ſcheme of it in the council of peace, and he made ſufficient proviſion for it in the covenant of grace; and as he from eternity appointed his Son to be his ſalvation to the ends of the earth, ſo in the fullneſs of time he ſent him to be the ſaviour of the world, and delivered him up for all his people, unto death itſelf, and ſpared him not, but awoke the ſword of juſtice againſt him, and ſheathed it in him; and ſince he had ſuch a concern in ſalvation, the glory of it in right belongs to him: and the Lamb, the Son of God, he engaged to do the will and work of God, and from everlaſting became the ſurety of the better teſtament; and in time he came to ſeek and to ſave loſt ſinners, and he is become the author of eternal ſalvation to them; his own arm has brought it, and it is in him, and in no other, even a ſalvation from ſin, ſatan, the law, the world, hell, and death, and wrath to come; and it will be the employment of the ſaints, both in the new Jeruſalem church-ſtate, during the thouſand years reign, and in heaven to all eternity, to aſcribe the glory of all this, not to themſelves, to their merits and works of righteouſneſs, or to any creature whatever, but to God and the Lamb only.

Ver. 11. And all the angels ſtood round about the throne, &c.] The holy and elect angels, even all of them, the ten thouſand times ten thouſand, and thouſands of thouſands, the innumerable company of them, who are repreſented in the ſame poſition, ch. v. 11. ſee the note there: and about the elders, and the four beaſts; the churches and miniſters; yea, round about the great multitude before mentioned, the camp of the ſaints, and the beloved city; whoſe guardians they will be, and to whom they will always be miniſtring ſpirits. And fall before the throne on their faces; in token of ſubmiſſion and reverence: and worſhipped God; by celebrating the perfections of his nature, and aſcribing to him the glory of all his works.

Ver. 12. Saying, Amen, &c.] As approving and confirming what the great multitude of men had ſaid in ver. 10. in aſcribing the glory of ſalvation to God, and the Lamb: the angels, tho' they have no part in it themſelves, yet highly approve of it as right and juſt, that men ſhould give the glory of it where it is due. Bleſſing, and glory, and wiſdom, and thankſgiving, and honour, and power, and might be unto our God for ever and ever. Amen. Here a ſevenfold praiſe is given to God by the angels, as to the Lamb, in ch. v. 12. and in words much the ſame. They rightly aſcribe bleſſing to God, who is bleſſed in himſelf, and is the ſource of all bleſſedneſs to his creatures, angels and men. And alſo glory; the glory of his divine perfections, who is the God of glory; and of all his works of nature and providence, and eſpecially of the ſalvation of men by Chriſt. And wiſdom; he being the only wiſe God, whoſe wiſdom is to be ſeen in all the works of creation, and in the government of the world, and in nothing more than in the ſcheme of redemption by the Son of God: and thankſgiving; for all mercies and favours, temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal, enjoyed by angels, or by men: and honour; which is due to him from all his creatures, as he is the creator of them; and from all his children, as he is their father; and from all his ſervants, as he is their maſter: and power; which he has exerted, in making all things out of nothing, in ſupporting the whole univerſe in its being, and in ſaving and preſerving his own people: and might; or ſtrength, he being the almighty God, the ſtrength of Iſrael, and the rock of ages, in whom is everlaſting ſtrength; and the praiſe and aſcription of all this, the angels wiſh to be given him by themſelves and others, to all eternity; and as deſiring that ſo it might be, and as believing that ſo it would be, they add their Amen to it.

Ver. 13. And one of the elders anſwered, ſaying unto me, &c.] This elder was not the Apoſtle Peter, as ſome popiſh interpreters have thought; and ſtill leſs pope Silveſter, who lived in the times of Conſtantine; he is much more likely, according to others, to be Conſtantine himſelf, the firſt of the elders, or the chief magiſtrate when the church ſprung out of its troubles, and enjoyed reſt and peace; though ſome have thought of the prophet Iſaiah, ſince many things, ſaid by this elder, are to be found in his prophecy; compare ver. 14, 16, 17. with Iſ. i. 18. and xlix. 10. and xxv. 8. but it is needleſs to enquire who the particular perſon was; it is enough to ſay, that he was one of the four and twenty elders about the throne, one that belonged to the church, perhaps the ſame as in ch. v. 5. who, in a viſionary way, is repreſented as accoſting John upon the above ſight. The word anſwered is a common Hebraiſm of the New Teſtament, which is often uſed, when nothing goes before, to which a return is made; and only ſignifies here, that the elder opened his mouth, began to ſpeak, and called to John, and ſaid as follows: what are theſe which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they? This he ſaid, not as being ignorant of them, or of the reaſon of their being clothed in this manner, nor of the place and ſtate from whence they came, as appears by the account afterwards given of them by him; but to ſtir up John to take more notice of them, as being a body of men that were worthy of obſervation and contemplation, and were worth his while to conſider well who they were, and from whence they came; and alſo to try him whether he knew them or no, and to bring him to a confeſſion of his ignorance; and that he might have an opportunity of giving him ſome hints about them, which might be uſeful to him, and to the churches, and for the explanation of this viſion, and other parts of this prophecy.

Ver. 14. And I ſaid unto him, ſir, thou knoweſt, &c.] John replies in a very humble, modeſt, and reſpectful manner, to the elder, calling him ſir, according to the uſage of the Eaſtern people; and it is obſervable, that this word is much uſed in his Goſpel, and more than in any other book; ſee John iv. 11, 15, 19, 49. and v. 7. and xii. 21. and xx. 15. Some copies, and the Complutenſian edition read, my Lord; and ſo do the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions. John confeſſes his ignorance, and aſcribes knowledge to the elder, and deſires information of him; for the ſenſe is, that the elder knew who they were, and from whence they came, but he did not, and therefore deſires that he would inform him; and ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, and my Lord, thou art more learned; that is, than I am, and therefore inſtruct me, as he accordingly did: and he ſaid to me, theſe are they which came out of great tribulation; ſeeing this company deſigns all the elect of God, that ever were, are, or ſhall be in the world; the great tribulation, out of which they came, is not to be reſtrained to any particular time of trouble, but includes all that has been, is, or ſhall be; as all the afflictions of the ſaints under the Old Teſtament, from righteous Abel to Zechariah; and all the troubles of the people of God in the times of the Maccabees, Heb. xi. 35—38. all the perſecutions of the chriſtians by the Jews, at the firſt publication of the Goſpel; and the perſecutions under the Roman emperors, both Pagan and Arian; and the cruelties and barbarities of the Romiſh antichriſt, during the whole time of the apoſtacy; and particularly the laſt ſtruggle of the beaſt, which will be the hour of temptation, that will come upon all the world; and in general all the afflictions, reproaches, perſecutions, and many tribulations of all the ſaints, and every member of Chriſt in this world, who in the new Jeruſalem church-ſtate will be come out of them; which ſuppoſes them to have been in them, and yet were not overwhelmed by them, and loſt in them; but by divine ſupport and aſſiſtance, waded thro' them, and were now quite clear of them, and never more to be annoyed with them; ſee Rev. xxi. 4. And have waſhed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb; not in the blood of bulls and goats, which could not take away ſin; nor in their own blood, their ſufferings for Chriſt, on which they did not depend, knowing there's no compariſon between them, and the glory revealed in them; nor in any works of righteouſneſs done by them, which are imperfect and filthy, and need waſhing; but in the blood of Chriſt, which cleanſeth from all ſin. The robes which they waſhed in his blood, may either deſign themſelves, their conſciences, which this blood purges from dead works; or their outward converſation-garments, which have their ſpots, and need continual waſhing; or elſe the robe of righteouſneſs, and garments of ſalvation, or their juſtification, which is by the blood of Chriſt, Rom. v. 9. The act of waſhing from ſin, by the blood of Chriſt, is ſometimes aſcribed to Chriſt himſelf, as in ch. i. 5. but here to the ſaints, and deſigns the concern which faith has in the blood of Chriſt, which deals with it for juſtification, peace, and pardon, for the removing of ſin from the conſcience, and for cleanſing from all impurity, both of fleſh and ſpirit: and the effect of this is, that their robes were made white; that is, that they were freed from all ſin, were without fault before the throne, not having ſpot, or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing. This ſhows, that theſe perſons had no truſt in themſelves, or dependence on their own merits, and works of righteouſneſs, but wholly truſted to, and depended on the blood and righteouſneſs of Chriſt; which is the only way to come out of tribulation, and enter the kingdom.

Ver. 15. Therefore are they before the throne of God, &c.] As in ver. 9. ſee the note there, not becauſe of their great tribulations, but becauſe they were brought thro' them, and out of them, by the grace and power of God; nor becauſe of their robes, or converſation-garments, but becauſe thoſe were waſhed and made white in the blood of the Lamb; or becauſe of the blood of the Lamb, and their juſtification, pardon, and cleanſing by it: and ſerve him day and night in his temple; not in any material temple, but in the new Jeruſalem, the general aſſembly and church of the firſt-born, the temple of the living God; for in this ſtate there will be no material temple, or place of worſhip, but God and the Lamb will be the temple thereof, ch. xxi. 22. nor will there be any night there, ch. xxii. 5. wherefore this phraſe, day and night, only denotes the conſtancy and uninterruption of their ſervice, there being nothing to obſtruct them in it, or break them off from it, as now; in alluſion to the prieſts and levites, who were one, or other of them, night and day, in the ſervice of the temple: and the ſervice of theſe perſons in the new Jeruſalem ſtate, will not lie in attending on the word and ordinances, or in the miniſtration of them, as in the preſent ſtate; but in praiſing God, ſinging Hallelujahs to him, adoring the perfections of his nature, and admiring his wonderful works of providence, and grace, and aſcribing the glory of ſalvation to him, and to the Lamb; and this their ſervice will be the glorious liberty of the children of God. Hence the Ethiopic verſion renders it, and they praiſe him day and night; this will be the employment of the ſaints in the millennium ſtate, and to all eternity: and he that ſitteth on the throne ſhall dwell among them; or tabernacle over them; for the tabernacle of God ſhall be now among men, and he will dwell among the ſaints; they ſhall enjoy his preſence, and have the moſt intimate communion with him; it will appear moſt manifeſt, that he is their covenant God, and they are his covenant people; and he will be a tabernacle, not only of inhabitation, but of protection for them; and the name of this city, this new Jeruſalem, will be Jehovah Shammah, the Lord is there.

Ver. 16. They ſhall hunger no more, nor thirſt any more, &c.] The words are taken out of Iſ. xlix. 10. and will be true in a literal and corporal ſenſe. Now the ſaints are often in hunger and thirſt, then they ſhall be ſo no more; and in a myſtical and ſpiritual ſenſe, there will be no famine of the word; for tho' there will not be the outward miniſtration of the word, as now, the ſubſtance of it will be enjoyed, to full ſatisfaction; nor will there be any uneaſy deſires after ſpiritual things, and much leſs any hungrings and thirſtings, or luſting after carnal, ſenſual, and earthly things. Neither ſhall the ſun light on them, nor any heat; not the ſun of perſecution, ſee Matt. xiii. 6, 22. nor the heat of ſatan's temptations, or his fiery darts; nor of any fiery trial, or ſore affliction; nor of the divine diſpleaſure, or any fearful ſenſe and apprehenſion of it; nor of toil and labour, called the burden and heat of the day, from all which they will be now free.

Ver. 17. For the Lamb, which is in the midſt of the throne, &c.] See ch. v. 6. not before the throne, as the great multitude are ſaid to be, ver. 9. nor round about it, as the angels in ver. 11. but in the midſt of it, being equal to him that ſits upon it; ſitting on the ſame throne with him, and having the ſame power and authority, he ſhall feed them as a ſhepherd his flock; for this Lamb is a ſhepherd, and this great multitude are his flock; whom he will feed in this ſtate, not by his miniſters, word, and ordinances, as now; but in perſon, and with the rich diſcoveries of himſelf, and of his love, ſignified by a feaſt, by new wine in his Father's kingdom, and his own, and by eating and drinking at his table, in the kingdom appointed by him to his followers; and hence it is they ſhall never hunger more: or ſhall rule them, as the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it; for the ſame word ſignifies to feed, and to rule, as a king rules his ſubjects; Chriſt will now be viſibly king of ſaints, and king over all the earth, and will reign before his ancients gloriouſly; and in theſe days of his, Judah ſhall be ſaved, and Iſrael ſhall dwell ſafely under his power and protection: and ſhall lead them unto living fountains of water; by water is meant the grace, love, and free favour of God in Chriſt, that pure river of water of life, which proceeds from the throne of God, and of the Lamb, from divine ſovereignty; and with which the ſaints, in this ſtate ſhall be ſweetly and fully ſolaced and refreſhed; and hence they ſhall never thirſt more: and this is ſaid to be living, becauſe not only refreſhing and reviving, but becauſe it will laſt for ever; the love of God is from everlaſting to everlaſting; and it is ſignified by fountains, to denote the abundance of it, even as it will be perceived and enjoyed by the ſaints now; for theſe waters will not be only up to the ankles, and knees, but a broad river to ſwim in, which can't be paſſed over; and hither will Chriſt lead his people, which is one branch of his office as a ſhepherd; and which ſhows his care of them, and affection for them. And God ſhall wipe away all tears from their eyes; or out of their eyes, as the Alexandrian copy reads; ſee Iſ. xxv. 8. The ſenſe is, that that which is now the occaſion of tears, will ceaſe, as the ſin and corruptions of God's people, which now are the cauſe of many tears; as alſo ſatan's temptations, the hidings of God's face, and the various afflictions of this life, and the perſecutions of the men of the world; there will be no more of either of theſe; all will be made to ceaſe; ſee Rev. xxi. 4. and in the room of them full and everlaſting joy will take place, Iſ. xxxv. 10. Mr. Daubuz thinks, that the whole of this chapter belongs to the ſixth ſeal, and that the promiſes in it are ſuch as were to be accompliſhed at the opening of the ſeventh, and do not belong to the millennium ſtate; but had their fulfillment in the times of Conſtantine, who he ſuppoſes is the angel that came from the eaſt, who reſtrained the perſecutors of the church, and introduced a general peace in church and ſtate; and as he came with the ſeal of the living God, which he underſtands of the croſs of Chriſt he put upon his ſtandard, and on the ſhields of his ſoldiers, ſo he ſealed the ſervants of God on their foreheads with it, by allowing them to make a publick profeſſion of a crucified Chriſt, and by protecting them in that profeſſion, even men of all nations, Jews and Gentiles; and particularly he thinks the innumerable palm-bearing company may deſign the council of Nice, gathered by him, which conſiſted of the repreſentatives of the whole chriſtian church in the ſeveral nations of the world, who had great honour, freedom, and immunities conferred upon them; and that the angels are the chriſtian magiſtrates, ſubmitting to the chriſtian religion, and defending the church, which was now come out of the great tribulation of heathen perſecution, and had temples and places of publick worſhip opened for them; in which they had full liberty to ſerve the Lord continually, without interruption, and were ſecure from all affliction and perſecution, and were filled with joy and gladneſs; and the Lamb, by the means of Conſtantine, as Chriſt's vicar and ſervant, he declared himſelf to be, fed and protected the church in peace and quietneſs; all which are accompliſhed during the reſt, or ſilence, under the next ſeal; and which I ſhould very readily agree to, ſince this interpretation carries on the thread of the prophetic hiſtory without any interruption, were it not for the deſcription of the palm-bearing company, both as to quantity and quality, and the declaration of the happy ſtate of thoſe come out of great tribulation, which I think cannot be made to ſuit with any imperfect ſtate of the church on earth, without greatly lowering the ſenſe of the expreſſions uſed; however, if any one prefers this expoſition to what is given, I am not much averſe unto it.

CHAP. VIII.

THIS chapter contains the opening of the ſeventh ſeal, and the things that followed on it, and particularly the ſounding of the firſt four trumpets. Upon the opening of the ſeventh ſeal there was ſilence in heaven for half an hour, ver. 1. then follows a viſion of ſeven angels, who ſtood before God, and had ſeven trumpets given to them, ver. 2. then of another angel, deſcribed by his poſition, ſtanding at the altar; by his having a golden cenſer, and by much incenſe being given him, the end of which was to offer up the prayers of all ſaints, which with it went up to God, and were acceptable to him; and by filling his cenſer with the fire of the altar, and caſting it to the earth; the effects of which were voices, thundrings, lightnings, and an earthquake, ver. 3, 4, 5. after which the ſeven angels prepare to ſound their trumpets, ver. 6. the firſt blows his, which brings hail and fire, mingled with blood, upon the earth, which burns up the third part of trees and all green graſs, ver. 7. the ſecond blows, upon which a burning mountain is caſt into the ſea, and a third part of it becomes blood, a third part of the creatures in it die, and a third part of the ſhips upon it are deſtroyed, ver. 8, 9. the third angel blows, upon which a ſtar, like a burning lamp, falls upon the third part of rivers and fountains, whoſe name is wormwood, and embitters them, ſo that many men die of them, ver. 10, 11. the fourth angel blows, and the third part of the ſun, moon, and ſtars is ſmitten, and becomes dark, ſo that there is no light for a third part of the day and night, ver. 12. and the chapter is concluded with the viſion of another angel flying thro' the midſt of heaven, proclaiming three times woe to the inhabitants of the earth, on account of what would be uttered by the three following angels, who were yet to blow their trumpets, ver. 13.

Ver. 1. And when he had opened the ſeventh ſeal, &c.] That is, when the Lamb had opened the ſeventh and laſt ſeal of the ſealed book: there was great ſilence in heaven about the ſpace of half an hour; not in the third heaven, the ſeat of the divine being, of angels and glorified ſaints, where are hallelujahs without intermiſſion; but in the church, which is oftentimes ſignified by heaven in this book, and where now the throne of God was placed, in that form as deſcribed in ch. iv. or rather in the Roman empire: nor is this ſilence the ſum of this ſeal, or the only thing in it; for it includes the preparation of the ſeven angels to take their trumpets, though none of them were ſounded during this period. This ſpace of time ſome think refers to the time which elapſed whilſt the angel who had incenſe given him to offer it with the prayers of ſaints, did ſo, and took fire off the altar with his cenſer, and caſt it on the earth; and while the ſeven angels had their trumpets given them, and they were preparing to ſound. Others are of opinion that this was only a pauſe, a breathing-time for John between the former viſions and ſeals, and the following; nothing being ſaid or done, or any thing exhibited to him during this interval; but he was at leiſure to reflect on what he had ſeen, and to prepare for what was to come. Others underſtand it of the amazement of the ſaints at the judgments of God, which were coming upon the chriſtian empire, and of their quiet and ſilent preparations for theſe troubles and combats, both within and without, they were to be exerciſed with; ſee Zech. ii. 13. Others have thought that this refers to the ſtate of the ſaints after the day of judgment, when there will be an entire ceſſation from perſecution and trouble, and when the ſouls under the altar will have done crying for vengeance; but this will be not for half an hour only, but to all eternity; nor will angels and ſaints be then ſilent. Rather this is to be underſtood of that peace and reſt which the church enjoyed upon Conſtantine's having defeated all his enemies, when he brought the church into a ſtate of profound tranquillity and eaſe; and this laſted but for a little while, which is here expreſſed by about, or almoſt half an hour, as the Syriac verſion renders it; for in a ſhort time the Arian hereſy broke out, which introduced great troubles in the church, and at laſt violent perſecutions. The alluſion is, as in the whole of the following viſion of the angel at the altar, to the offering of incenſe; at which time the people were removed from the temple, from between the porch and altar [l], to ſome more diſtant place; and the prieſt was alone while he offered incenſe, and then prayed a ſhort prayer that the people might not be affrighted leſt he ſhould be dead [m]; and who in the mean while were praying in a ſilent manner without; ſee Luke i. 9, 10. hence the Jews ſay [n], that the offering of incenſe atones for an ill tongue, for it is a thing that is introduced בחשאי, ſilently, and it atones for what is done ſilently, ſuch as whiſperings, backbitings, &c. and they call [o] ſilence the beſt of ſpices, even of thoſe of which the ſweet incenſe was made.

Ver. 2. And I ſaw the ſeven angels, &c.] Not the ſeven ſpirits of God, ch. i. 4. and v. 5. their names, as well as their office, differ; nor the miniſters of the word, though theſe are often called angels in this book, and blow the trumpet of the Goſpel, and lift up their voice like a trumpet; but the angelic ſpirits, and theſe either evil ones, ſince they are the executioners of wrath and vengeance, and bring judgments on the earth; and who are ſometimes ſaid to ſtand before God, 1 Kings xxii. 21, 22. Job i. 6. or rather good angels, who are ſometimes miniſters of divine wrath; ſee 2 Sam. xxiv. 16, 17. 2 Kings xix. 35. ſeven of them are mentioned, as being a proper number for the blowing of the ſeven trumpets, which would compleat all the woes that were to come upon the world, and in alluſion to the ſeven princes the eaſtern monarchs uſed to have continually about them, Eſth. i. 14. as it follows: which ſtood before God; and denotes their nearneſs to him, and familiarity with him, they always behold his face; and their ſervice and miniſtrations, and their readineſs to execute his will: the alluſion is to the two prieſts ſtanding at the table of fat, with two ſilver trumpets in their hands, with which they blew, and another ſtruck the cymbal, and the Levites ſung, which was always done at the time of the daily ſacrifice [p]: and to them were given ſeven trumpets; every one had one; and which were an emblem of thoſe wars, and deſolations, and calamities, which would come upon the empire, and upon the world, at the blowing of each of them; the trumpet being an alarm, preparing for, proclaiming, and introducing theſe things; Jer. iv. 19. Hoſ. v. 8. theſe are ſaid to be given them; either by him that ſat upon the throne, about which they were; or by the Lamb that opened the ſeal; and ſhows that they did nothing but what they had a commiſſion and order to do. Here is manifeſtly an alluſion to the prieſts and Levites blowing their trumpets at the cloſe of the daily ſacrifice, and at the offering of incenſe [q], as before obſerved.

Ver. 3. And another angel came, &c.] The Ethiopic verſion adds, from the eaſt, as in ch. vii. 2. pointing to the ſame angel, and who is intended; for not a created angel, as Gabriel, or any other, is meant; nor any mere man, at leaſt not pope Damaſus, who lived in Conſtantine's time, as Lyra thought; nor Conſtantine himſelf, which is the opinion of Brightman, who thinks that his, and the deſires of other good men to make peace, and compoſe the differences occaſioned by the Arian hereſy, are deſigned by the incenſe and prayers; and this being brought about at the council of Nice, when the Arian blaſphemy was condemned, and truth confirmed, is intended by the aſcent of the ſmoke of the incenſe with the prayers, out of the angel's hands; when there followed upon this, great contentions, heart-burnings, and perſecutions, ſignified by fire, voices, thundrings, &c. and others have been of opinion that the emperor Theodoſius is deſigned, and that reſpect is had to his prayer both in the church, and at the head of his army, before the battle with Eugenius, the ſaints in the mean while putting up united prayers to God for ſucceſs, and which was obtained; and this victory was attended with a miraculous tempeſt, and gave a deadly blow to the pagan religion. Yet neither of thoſe, but Chriſt himſelf, the angel of the covenant, and of God's preſence, is here intended, who appeared in an angelic form; ſo the high-prieſt in the day of atonement was called שליח [r], an angel, or meſſenger, to which the alluſion is: and ſtood at the altar; either of burnt-offerings, and may be rendered ſtood upon it; and ſo may repreſent his ſacrifice, which had been lately offered up for the ſins of his people, he being both altar, ſacrifice, and prieſt; or rather the altar of incenſe, ſince mention is made of a cenſer and of incenſe, and the ſmoke of it; and ſeeing this altar is a golden one, as that was, and is before the throne, as that was before the vail, by the ark of the teſtimony; Exod. xxx. 1, 3, 6. and ſo Chriſt is here introduced as the high-prieſt, advocate, and interceſſor for his people; tho' both altars may be reſpected in this verſe: the altar may deſign the altar of burnt-offering, from whence the coals were taken in the cenſer; and the golden altar, the altar of incenſe, where the coals being brought, the incenſe was put upon them, and offered; and here he ſtood, as every one concerned in the ſervice of the ſanctuary did [s]: having a golden cenſer; the Ethiopic verſion adds, of fire, for this was a veſſel in which were put burning coals of fire, taken from off the altar before the Lord, Lev. xvi. 12. and which may denote the ſufferings of Chriſt, the pains he endured in his body, the ſorrows of his ſoul, and the wrath of God, which was poured like fire upon him; the altar from which they were taken off, was typical of Chriſt in his divine nature, which is the altar that ſanctifies the gift, and gave virtue to his blood and ſacrifice; and all this being before the Lord, may ſhow that Chriſt's ſufferings were according to the will of God, were grateful to him, and always before him; for theſe burning coals in the cenſer were alſo carried within the vail, repreſenting heaven, where Chriſt entered by his own blood, and where he is as a Lamb that had been ſlain, the efficacy of whoſe death always continues; and this being a golden cenſer, ſhows the excellency and perpetuity of Chriſt's ſacrifice and interceſſion. In the daily ſervice the prieſt uſed a ſilver cenſer, but on the day of atonement a golden one [t]; tho' at the daily ſacrifice there was a veſſel uſed, called הכף, like to a large golden buſhel, in which was a ſmaller veſſel full of incenſe [u], and may be what is here deſigned: and there was given unto him much incenſe; the interceſſion of Chriſt is meant by the incenſe, which, like that, is ſweet and fragrant, very grateful and acceptable to God, and alſo pure and holy; for tho' it is made for tranſgreſſors, yet in a way of righteouſneſs, and conſiſtent with the holineſs and juſtice of God; nor is there any like it, nor ſhould there be any beſides it; the interceſſion of angels, and ſaints departed, ought to be rejected: and it is perpetual, or will be for ever; ſee Exod. xxx. 7, 8, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38. and whereas it is ſaid to be much, this is in alluſion either to the many ſpices uſed in the compoſition of the incenſe, ſee Exod. xxx. 34. the Jews ſay [w], that eleven ſorts of ſpices were ordered to Moſes, and the wiſe men have added three more, in all fourteen; or to the prieſt's handfuls of incenſe, which he took and brought within the vail on the day of atonement, Lev. xvi. 12. and which were added to, and were over and above the quantity uſed every day [x]; and even in the daily ſervice the pot of incenſe was not only filled, but גדוש, heaped up [y]; now this may denote the fullneſs of Chriſt's interceſſion, which is for all his elect, called and uncalled, greater or leſſer believers, and for all things for them, as their caſes be; for converſion, diſcoveries of pardon, preſervation, perſeverance, and glorification; and to ſupport this, he has a fullneſs of merit, which makes his interceſſion efficacious; for incenſe was put upon the burning coals in the cenſer, or upon the fire before the Lord, Lev. xvi. 13. ſignifying that Chriſt's interceſſion proceeds upon his ſufferings and death, his blood and ſacrifice, from whence all his pleas and arguments are taken in favour of his people, and which always prevail: and this is ſaid to be given him, as his whole work and office as mediator, and every branch of it is; he is appointed to this work, is allowed to do it, and is accepted in it, by him that ſits upon the throne: in the daily offering of the incenſe, one took the incenſe and gave it into the hand of his friend, or the prieſt that was next him; and if he wanted inſtruction how to offer it, he taught him, nor might any one offer incenſe until the preſident bid him [z]; to which there ſeems to be an alluſion here: now the end of this was, that he ſhould offer it with the prayers of all ſaints upon the golden altar which was before the throne; the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions add, of God; the prayers of the ſaints, rightly performed, are themſelves compared to incenſe, being very grateful and acceptable to God, Pſ. cxli. 2. and the Arabic verſion here renders it in connection with the preceding clauſe, and explanative of that, and there was given unto him much incenſe and much ſpice, which are the prayers of the ſaints, as in ch. v. 8. and at the time of incenſe the people prayed; ſee Luke i. 10. and theſe are ſpiritual ſacrifices, which Chriſt the high-prieſt preſents for the ſaints, perfumes with the incenſe of his mediation, and makes acceptable to God; being offered upon, and coming up from that altar which is before him, and which gives value to every thing that is put upon it: and they are the prayers of ſaints; who are ſet apart by God the Father, whoſe ſins are expiated by the blood of Chriſt, and who are ſanctified by the Spirit of God; who draw nigh to God with a true heart, and call upon him out of a pure heart, and in ſincerity and truth; the prayers of ſuch righteous ones, through faith in Chriſt, avail much with God; and the prayers of all ſaints are regarded by Chriſt, and preſented by him, whether they be rich or poor, high or low, greater or leſſer believers. The Jews often ſpeak of an angel, whoſe name is Sandalphon, who is appointed over the prayers of the righteous, and takes them and preſents them to God [a]: ſo Raphael in Tobit xii. 15. ſays he was one of the ſeven holy angels that carry up the prayers of the ſaints; and the heretick Elxai, who was originally a Jew, talked of the holy angels of prayer [b]: ſo the Jews ſay, that God by, or thro' his word, receives the prayers of Iſrael, and has mercy on them [c]. In the Greek text it is, that he ſhould give, &c. that is, the incenſe, agreeable to the Hebrew phraſe in Numb. xvi. 47. and elſewhere.

Ver. 4. And the ſmoke of the incenſe, &c.] For the incenſe being put, as it was uſed to be, upon burning coals of fire, cauſed a ſmoke to ariſe like a cloud, Lev. xvi. 13. Ezek. viii. 11. ſo that the whole houſe, or temple, was filled with it [d]: which came with the prayers of the ſaints, aſcended before God out of the angel's hand; alluding to the incenſe the prieſt took in his hand, and caſt upon the burning coals; and ſhows how that by the ſmoke of the incenſe, or the virtue of Chriſt's mediation, the imperfections of the prayers of the ſaints are covered; and how they are by it perfumed and made acceptable to God; and ſo are ſaid to aſcend up before him, and to be regarded by him, as the prayers of Cornelius were, Acts x. 4. now all this is expreſſive of the wonderful affection of Chriſt for his church and people, and care of them; that before the angels ſound their trumpets, and bring on wars and deſolations into the empire, Chriſt is repreſented as interceding for them, and preſenting their prayers both for deliverance for themſelves, and vengeance on their enemies.

Ver. 5. And the angel took the cenſer, &c.] The golden one before-mentioned, the uſe of which was to take and carry in it burning coals of fire: and filled it with fire of the altar; of burnt-offering, for upon that, and not upon the altar of incenſe, fire was: the alluſion is to the prieſt "that was worthy to uſe a cenſer [e]; who took a ſilver cenſer, and went to the top of the altar (of burnt-offering) and having removed the coals there, and there took them in his cenſer, and went down and emptied them into a golden one, and there was ſcattered from it about a kab of coals;" for the golden one held a kab leſs than the ſilver one [f]: and caſt it into the earth; the Roman empire: by fire ſome underſtand the Spirit of God, and his gifts and graces, which ſat upon the Apoſtles as cloven tongues of fire on the day of Pentecoſt; and which they ſuppoſe were now plentifully beſtowed on the miniſters of the word, to enlighten them, inſpire them with zeal, and abundantly fit them for the work of the miniſtry, in conſequence of Chriſt's mediation and interceſſion: and others think the Goſpel is intended, which is ſometimes compared to fire, Jer. xx. 9. and xxiii. 29. or elſe thoſe contentions and quarrels which, thro' the corruptions of men, ariſe on account of the Goſpel, Luke xii. 49. tho' rather by fire here are meant the judgments of God, and his wrath and fury poured forth like fire upon the Roman empire, now become chriſtian; and ſo was an emblem of thoſe calamities coming upon it at the ſounding of the trumpets; and ſhows that as Chriſt prays and intercedes for his own people, for their comfort and ſafety, ſo he'll bring down his judgments upon his and their enemies; ſee Ezek. x. 2. and the Targum on it: and there were voices, and thundrings, and lightnings, and an earthquake; which may be underſtood either of the nature, uſe, and effects of the Goſpel, ſpeaking to the hearts of men by the ſons of thunder, enlightning their minds, and ſhaking their conſciences; the like were at the giving of the law, Exod. xix. 16. or rather of thoſe terrors, diſtreſſes, and commotions in the world, becauſe of God's righteous judgments, and which particularly will be at the ſound of the ſeventh trumpet, and the pouring out of the ſeventh vial, ch. xi. 15. and xvi. 17, 18. the alluſion is to the ſounds that were heard at the time of the daily ſacrifice; for beſides the blowing of the trumpets by the prieſts, and the ſinging of the Levites, of which ſee the note on ver. 2. there was a muſical inſtrument called מגרפה, magrephah [g], which being ſounded, a man could not hear another ſpeak in Jeruſalem; yea, they ſay it was heard as far as Jericho.

Ver. 6. And the ſeven angels which had the ſeven trumpets, &c.] Given them, ver. 2. prepared themſelves to ſound; they ſtood up, took their trumpets in their hands, and put them to their mouths; this was giving notice of what was coming upon the earth, and a kind of warning to men, and a call upon them to repentance, and to prepare to meet God in the way of his judgments. The time when theſe trumpets began to blow was after the opening of the ſeventh ſeal, and ſo after the deſtruction of the empire as pagan, which was under the ſixth ſeal; and after that peace and reſt from perſecution in Conſtantine's time, ſignified by the half hour's ſilence in heaven; and after the prayers of the ſaints for vengeance becauſe of their blood ſhed in the time of Rome pagan, were offered up, heard, taken notice of, and accepted; and therefore cannot regard, nor have any concern with the ſtate of the church before Conſtantine's time, as ſome have thought the three firſt trumpets had; the firſt introducing the contradictions and blaſphemies of the Jews, and their perſecutions of the chriſtians, and the effuſion of their blood by them; the ſecond the ten perſecutions under the heathen emperors; and the third, the errors and hereſies which peſtered the churches of thoſe times: nor indeed do they concern the ſtate of the church at all; tho' it ſeems much more likely that the firſt four trumpets ſhould bring in, as others have thought, the ſeveral hereſies of Arius, Macedonius, Pelagius, and Eutycheus, which ſprung up before the riſe of Mahomet, who appears under the fifth trumpet. But all the ſix trumpets have to do with the empire as chriſtian; for as the ſix ſeals are ſo many ſteps towards the deſtruction of the empire as pagan, and the vials bring on the ruin of Rome papal; ſo the ſix trumpets are ſo many gradual advances to the ruin of the empire, now chriſtian: and it muſt be obſerved, that the emperor Theodoſius, at his death, left the empire divided between his two ſons, Arcadius and Honorius, the eaſtern part of it, which had Conſtantinople for its ſeat, to the former, and the weſtern part of it, which had Rome for its ſeat, to the latter; now the firſt four trumpets bring in a barbarous people out of the north, the Goths, Huns, and Vandals, into the weſtern part, who by various incurſions and wars, at laſt utterly deſtroy it; and the fifth and ſixth trumpets bring in the Saracens under Mahomet, and the Turks into the eaſtern part, who take poſſeſſion of that, and have kept it unto this day. A preparation being made, the angels begin to ſound their trumpets.

Ver. 7. The firſt angel ſounded, &c.] Or blew his trumpet: and there followed hail and fire, mingled with blood; ſomewhat like one of the plagues of Egypt, Exod. ix. 23, 24, 25. in which was hail mingled with fire, only no blood, but what was cauſed by its fall on man and beaſt. Some have thought the Arian hereſy is here intended, which may well enough agree with the time; and which may be compared to hail, for the miſchief it did to the vines, the churches; and becauſe of the violence with which it came, and the chillneſs of affection to Chriſt and his people, which it brought on profeſſors of religion; and the barrenneſs which followed upon it, it making men barren and unfruitful in the knowledge of Chriſt Jeſus; and to fire, becauſe of the wrath, contentions, animoſities, and diviſions it occaſioned among thoſe who were called chriſtians: and blood may be brought into the account, ſince the like perſecutions under Conſtantius and Valens were raiſed againſt the orthodox on account of it, as were againſt the chriſtians under the heathen emperors: and this ſtorm fell upon the earth; the whole Roman empire; for even all the world was once ſaid to be Arian, except one Athanaſius; and particularly upon the carnal and earthly part of the church, who were ſeeking places and preferments under the Arian emperors: and burnt up the third part of trees; the trees of righteouſneſs, the ſaints, particularly the doctors of the church, the tall cedars in Lebanon; who either ſeemed to be ſuch, and were infected with this hereſy, and deſtroyed by it, as many were; or were truly ſuch, and were greatly oppreſſed, afflicted, and perſecuted for not embracing it: and alſo all green graſs; the common people, private chriſtians, weak believers, who had the truth of grace in them, and ſuffered much for not giving into this hereſy; or who ſeemed to have it, but had it not, but withered away, being ſcorched up and deſtroyed with this pernicious notion: but rather this trumpet regards not the church, but the empire; and this ſtorm of hail, fire, and blood, deſigns the irruption of the Goths into it, from the year 395, in which Theodoſius died, to the year 408, under Radagaiſus their general; with two hundred thouſand of them, ſome ſay four hundred thouſand, he entered and over-run all Italy, but was ſtopped and defeated by Stilicho; alſo Alaricus king of the Goths penetrated into Italy, came to Ravenna, and pitched his camp not far from Polentia, to whom the emperor Honorius gave up France and Spain to make him eaſy, and that he might ceaſe from his ravages and depredations [h]; and theſe irruptions and devaſtations may be fitly expreſſed by hail, fire, and blood, juſt as the coming of the Aſſyrian monarch into the land of Iſrael is ſignified by a tempeſt of hail, and a deſtroying ſtorm, Iſ. xxviii. 2. and it is remarkable, as Mr. Daubuz obſerves, that Claudian the poet [i], who lived at the time of Alarick's war, compares it to hail: and they were caſt upon the earth; the Roman empire, the continent more eſpecially, as Germany, France, Spain, and Italy, which were particularly affected and diſtreſſed with theſe barbarous people: and the third part of trees were burnt up; by which ſeem to be meant people of the higher rank, the richer ſort of people, who ſuffered much in theſe calamities; ſee Iſ. ii. 13. Zech. xi. 2. yea, princes, nobles, and rulers, both civil and eccleſiaſtical, who ſuffered much at this time, as Jerom [k], who was then living, teſtifies; and ſo trees are interpreted of kings, rulers, and governors, by the Targum on Iſ. ii. 13. and Zech. xi. 1, 2. the trees of the field in Iſ. lv. 12. are interpreted of kingdoms [l]: the Alexandrian copy, the Complutenſian edition, the Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions, read before this clauſe, and the third part of the earth was burnt; that is of the Roman empire: and all green graſs was burnt up; the common people, who may be compared to ſpires of graſs for their multitude, being as it were innumerable; and to green graſs, for their delightful, comfortable, and flouriſhing condition before theſe calamities came upon them; and for their weakneſs and impotency to withſtand ſuch powerful enemies; ſee Job v. 25. Pſ. lxxii. 16. Eſ. xl. 6, 7. and xxxvii. 27. Numb. xxii. 4. and theſe commonly ſuffer moſt when a country is over-run and plundered by an enemy.

Ver. 8. And the ſecond angel ſounded, &c.] His trumpet: and as it were a great mountain burning with fire was caſt into the ſea; by which is meant not the devil, as ſome think; called a mountain from his height of pride, a great one from his might and power, and a burning one from his great wrath and malice againſt Chriſt, his Goſpel, and his people; and who may be ſaid to be caſt into the ſea of this world, and the men of it, whom he inſtigates againſt the ſaints, and who are like a troubled ſea, that cannot reſt: but rather ſome hereſy, and as ſome have thought, the Macedonian hereſy, which was levelled againſt the deity of the Holy Spirit, as was the Arian hereſy againſt the deity of the Son; the abettors of which looked big, and were ſupported by power, and ſhewed great zeal for religion, and pretended to great light and knowledge; and which hereſy much affected the ſea of pure doctrine, particularly the third part of doctrine, in which the third perſon, the Spirit of God, is more eſpecially concerned; and was of ſo pernicious a nature, as to kill many that profeſſed the Goſpel, and had a name to live, and deſtroy many particular churches, comparable to ſhips: but as before, it is beſt to underſtand this of another incurſion of the Goths into the Roman empire, and of the effects of it; and it ſeems to have reſpect to the taking and ſacking of Rome by Alaricus king of the Weſt Goths, in the year 410, or 412[m]. Rome is very fitly repreſented by a great mountain, as kingdoms and cities ſometimes are; ſee Zech. iv. 7. Iſ. xiii. 2. ſeeing it was built on ſeven mountains; and its being taken and burnt by Alaricus, is aptly expreſſed by a burning mountain, as the deſtruction of Babylon, which is another name for Rome, is by a burnt mountain in Jer. li. 25. the ſea into which this was caſt, may ſignify the great number of people and nations within its juriſdiction, which ſuffered, and were thrown into confuſion at this time; ſo diſtreſſes and calamities in nations are expreſſed by a like figure in Pſ. xlvi. 2. and the third part of the ſea became blood; that is, a third part of the juriſdiction of Rome, ſignified by the ſea, ſee Jer. li. 36. was afflicted with wars and blood-ſhed, by this ſame ſort of people; for whilſt theſe things were done in Italy, a like calamity fell on France and Spain; the Alans, Vandals, and Sueves, having depopulated France, paſſed over the Pyrænean mountains, and ſeized on Spain; the Vandals and Sueves on Gallæcia; the Alans on Portugal; and the Silingi, which was another ſort of Vandals, invaded Andaluſia[n]; the Goths under Ataulphus entered France, and the Burgundians ſeized that part of it next the Rhine[o]: ſee Exod. vii. 20, 21.

[l] Yalkut Simeoni, par. 2. fol. 50. 1.

Ver. 9. And the third part of the creatures which were in the ſea, &c.] The fiſhes; by whom men are meant, the inhabitants of the Roman empire; ſee Ezek. xxix. 4, 5. where by fiſh the Targum underſtands mighty princes and governors: and had life, died; were put to death by theſe ſavage and barbarous people, who killed all they met with, men, women, and children, young and old, rich and poor, high and low: and the third part of the ſhips were deſtroyed; by which may be deſigned either the cities and towns within ſuch a part of the Roman juriſdiction, which were burnt or plundered by them; or their goods and effects, which they pillaged, and carried off the wealth and riches of the people, even all their ſubſtance, as Auſtin[p] and Jerom[q], who lived in thoſe times, affirm.

Ver. 10. And the third angel ſounded, &c.] His trumpet: and there fell a great ſtar from heaven; not Mahomet, as ſome think, for this time is too ſoon for him, who roſe up under the fifth trumpet; nor Arius, for whom it is too late, who lived in the times of Conſtantine; and ſtill leſs Origen, who lived before his time; but rather Pelagius, who was a man of great eminence in the church, of much learning, and made great pretenſions to religion and holineſs, and like a ſtar and lamp, ſhone forth a while, with great luſtre and ſplendor, but fell into very great errors; denying original ſin, and aſſerting the purity of human nature, crying up the power of man's free will, and aſſerting that human nature, without the grace of God, was able to keep the whole law, even to perfection; and his name, according to his doctrine, was wormwood and gall, which imbittered the ſweet doctrines of the free grace of God, and affected the fountains and rivers, the ſacred ſcriptures, from whence theſe doctrines flow; ſo that inſtead of being pleaſant and wholeſome to men, thro' his falſe gloſſes and perverſe interpretations of them, they became bitter and poiſonous; and many ſouls that received and imbibed his ſenſe of them, died ſpiritually, and were loſt and periſhed, as all muſt inevitably, who depend on the ſtrength and works of nature, and deny and deſpiſe the grace of God: but it is beſt, as the other trumpets, ſo to underſtand this, of the invaſions of the above barbarous people, particularly the Vandals under Genſeric, who being turned out of Spain by the Goths, went into Africa, where peace was made, and part of Africa given them to dwell in; after which Genſeric thro' treachery ſeized upon Carthage, and greatly afflicted Sicily: Theodoſius made war againſt them to no purpoſe, and peace being made between Valentinian and Genſeric, Africa was divided between them; and ſome time after Rome was ſpoiled by Genſeric of all its riches[r]: Mr. Daubuz thinks Attila king of the Hunns, called the dread of the world, and the ſcourge of God, is meant by this ſtar; who was a rebel againſt the Romans, and made ſad ravages in the empire; at the beginning of which troubles a great comet appeared; and, according to Caſſiodorus[s], the Huns were auxiliaries to the Romans againſt the Goths; but Litorius the Roman general was taken; and after this the Huns rebelled, and depopulated Thrace and Illyricum; and Attila their king having ſlain his brother Bleda, and partner, became ſole monarch; and tho' the Romans under Aeius, by the help of the Goths, beat him in the fields of Catalaun, and obliged him to depart, yet afterwards, having got a reinforcement, he entered with great force into Aquileia, with whom pope Leo made peace: burning as it were a lamp; this ſtar reſembled that which is called Lampadias, which Pliny ſays[t] imitates, or bears a likeneſs to burning torches; and he ſpeaks of a ſpark which fell out of a ſtar, which had ſuch an appearance[u]: this is expreſſive of war, and great deſtruction in the empire: and it fell upon the third part of the rivers, and upon the fountains of water; that is, upon the large provinces and chief cities belonging to the Roman empire, and the governors of them, who ſuffered very bitterly and ſeverely in theſe times; compare with this Ezek. xxxii. 2, 6. The laſt clauſe, and upon the fountains of waters, is left out in the Alexandrian copy.

Ver. 11. And the name of the ſtar is called wormwood, &c.] Becauſe of the bitter afflictions, ſorrows, and diſtreſſes which it was the inſtrument of; juſt as Naomi called herſelf Mara, becauſe the Almighty had dealt bitterly with her, Ruth i. 20. and the third part of the waters became wormwood; that is, the inhabitants of the provinces and cities belonging to the Roman empire were afflicted with grievous and bitter afflictions and calamities; ſo great diſtreſſes are called wormwood, and waters of gall, given to drink, Jer. ix. 15. Lam. iii. 19. and many men men died of the waters, becauſe they were bitter; thro' the barbarities and cruelties of theſe ſavage people, who afflicted the empire: there ſeems to be an alluſion to Exod. xv. 23.

Ver. 12. And the fourth angel ſounded, &c.] His trumpet. Some think this refers to the Eutychian hereſy, which confounded the two natures of Chriſt, and of two made one mixed nature, neither human nor divine; and brought great darkneſs upon the doctrine of Chriſt's perſon, the ſun of righteouſneſs, and into the church, ſignified by the moon, and among the miniſters of the word, the ſtars. Others are of opinion that that darkneſs which preceded the riſe of the papacy, and introduced it, is here intended: and the third part of the ſun was ſmitten, and the third part of the moon, and the third part of the ſtars, ſo as the third part of them was darkened, and the day ſhone not for a third part of it, and the night likewiſe; when the doctrine concerning the perſon and offices of Chriſt, who is the ſun and light of the world, was obſcured by hereſies; and the diſcipline of the church, which, like the moon, has all its light, beauty, and order from Chriſt, was ſadly defaced by the introduction of Jewiſh and paganiſh rites and ceremonies; and the miniſters, the ſtars, were drawn by the tail of the dragon, and caſt to the earth, became corrupt in their principles, and carnal and ſenſual in their lives; ſo that it was a time of great darkneſs and gloomineſs, night and day: but rather this trumpet has reſpect to that darkneſs and ignorance which the above barbarous nations, the Goths, Huns, Vandals, and Heruli ſpread, and left throughout the empire; for from this time there was a viſible decline, as of evangelical light and knowledge, ſo of all kind of uſeful knowledge, and nothing but ignorance, ſtupidity, and barbarity took place every where; and which were very aſſiſting to the man of ſin, antichriſt, to fix and ſettle his dominion over the kingdoms which roſe up out of the empire at this time; and it alſo refers to the entire deſtruction of the weſtern Roman empire, which is expreſſed by much the ſame figures as the ruin of the Roman pagan empire, in ch. vi. 12, 13. and which the various irruptions of theſe ſavage people iſſued in; compare with this Ezek. xxxii. 7, 8. where the deſtruction of the Egyptian monarchy is ſignified in like terms: Jerom, who lived about the time of the firſt inundation of theſe nations, in very mournful language expreſſes the inhumanity and impiety of them, and the ruin they threatened the empire with; and ſays [w], Romanus orbis ruit, the Roman empire is falling. About the year 455, when Rome was taken by Genſeric the Vandal, the empire was divided into ten kingdoms; and in the year 476, Auguſtulus, the laſt of the Roman emperors, was obliged to quit his imperial dignity: the Heruli, a people of the ſame kind with the Goths, and originally Scythians, as they, under their king and leader Odoacer ſeized on Italy, took Rome, killed Oreſtes and his brother Paul, and depoſed Auguſtulus, the laſt of the Roman emperors, and baniſhed him into Campania; and ſo the weſtern empire ceaſed, Odoacer taking upon him the title of king of Italy, and tranſlated the ſeat of the empire from Rome to Ravenna [x]; and then might the ſun be truly ſaid to be ſmitten: but ſtill, tho' Odoacer the Herulian reigned in Italy, the Roman form of government was not altered, the conſulſhip and ſenate ſtill continued, as they did alſo under Theodoric the Goth, his ſucceſſor; but when Italy was recovered by Narſes, the emperor Juſtinian's general, theſe, with other magiſtrates, ceaſed, and Rome became a dukedom, and was ſubject to an exarch of Ravenna; and then the moon and ſtars were ſmitten alſo. The phraſe of ſmiting the ſun, moon, and ſtars, is Jewiſh; for the Jews expreſs the eclipſes of the luminaries in this way, and ſay [y], that when the luminaries לוקין, are ſmitten, it is an ill omen; when החמה לוקה, the ſun is ſmitten, it is an ill ſign to the nations of the world; and when לבנה לוקה, the moon is ſmitten, it is a bad omen to the enemies of Iſrael [z]: and ſo the phraſe the day ſhone not, is alſo Jewiſh; it is ſaid [a] of ſome Rabbins, that they ſat and ſtudied in the law, עד דנהיר יומא, until the day ſhone; and when the day ſhone, they roſe up and went on their way.

Ver. 13. And I beheld and heard an angel flying thro' the midſt of heaven, &c.] The Alexandrian copy, the Complutenſian edition, the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions, inſtead of an angel, read an eagle; and to fly agrees with either of them, and the ſenſe is the ſame let it be read either way; and this angel may deſign either Chriſt, or a created angel, or a miniſter of the Goſpel, as in ch. xiv. 6. did the next trumpet introduce popery, as ſome have ſuppoſed, Gregory biſhop of Rome might be thought, as he is by ſome, to be the angel here intended, ſince he gave notice and warning of antichriſt being at hand: ſaying with a loud voice; that all might hear, and as having ſomething of importance to ſay, and delivering it with great fervour and affection: wo, wo, wo; three times, anſwerable to the three trumpets yet to be blown; and which are therefore called the wo trumpets: and theſe woes are denounced to the inhabiters of the earth; the Roman empire, particularly the eaſtern part of it, which the fifth and ſixth trumpets relate unto; and even the whole world, with which the ſeventh trumpet is concerned: by reaſon of the other voices of the trumpet of the three angels which are yet to ſound; the deſign of this loud cry of the angel is to ſhow, that though the diſtreſſes and ruin which the barbarous nations had brought upon the weſtern empire, were very great; yet thoſe which would come upon the eaſtern empire by the Saracens and Turks, under the ſounding of the fifth and ſixth trumpets, would be much more grievous; and eſpecially the judgments which the ſeventh trumpet would bring upon the whole world, when all the nations of the earth will be judged. From the ſounding of the fourth trumpet, to the ſounding of the fifth, was a ſpace of a hundred and thirty-five years, that is, from the depoſition of Auguſtulus, A. D. 476. to the publick preaching of Mahomet, A. D. 612.

CHAP. IX.

THIS chapter gives an account of the blowing of the fifth and ſixth trumpets, and of the effects following upon them. The fifth angel blows his trumpet, and a ſtar falls; the key of the bottomleſs pit is given to him, which being opened by it, out of it comes ſmoke to the darkening of the ſun and air, and out of the ſmoke locuſts, who have power like ſcorpions, ver. 1, 2, 3. whoſe power is reſtrained from uſing it to the hurt of the graſs, or any green thing or tree, only of thoſe who had not the ſeal of God in their foreheads; but are permitted, tho' not to kill men, yet to torment them five months, which is worſe than death unto them, ver. 4, 5, 6. The ſhapes of theſe locuſts, which are ſaid to be like horſes, are deſcribed by their heads, faces, hair, teeth, breaſt-plates, wings, and tails, and are ſaid to have a king over them, whoſe name is mentioned, ver. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11. The blowing of this trumpet brings on one of the woes mentioned in the preceding chapter, and the two other follow, ver. 12. The ſixth angel blows his trumpet, and a voice is heard from the horns of the altar, directed to the ſaid angel, ordering him to looſe four angels bound in the great river Euphrates, where they were prepared, for a determinate time, to ſlay the third part of men, and they were looſed accordingly, ver. 13, 14, 15. The number of the army, under theſe angels, is given, ver. 16. and the horſes and horſemen are deſcribed; the riders by their breaſt-plates of fire, jacinth, and brimſtone; their horſes heads as heads of lions, fire, ſmoke, and brimſtone iſſuing out of their mouths, by which the third part of men are killed, ver. 17, 18. The reaſon of this ſlaughter is, becauſe they had power both in their mouth and tails, which latter were like ſerpents, and had heads, with which they did miſchief, ver. 19. and yet ſuch who were not killed by theſe plagues, but eſcaped, did not repent of their idolatry, murders, ſorceries, fornication, and theft, ver. 20, 21.

Ver. 1. And the fifth angel ſounded, &c.] His trumpet: and I ſaw a ſtar fall from heaven unto the earth; ſome take this ſtar to be Jeſus Chriſt, the bright and morning ſtar; and underſtand by falling, no other than his deſcending from heaven to earth, in which ſenſe the word is uſed in Gen. xiv. 10. and that becauſe he is not only ſaid to have the keys of hell and death, ch. i. 18. but particularly the key of the bottomleſs pit, ch. xx. 1. but then there is a wide difference in the uſe of the key by the ſtar here, and the angel there, or between the opening of the pit, and letting out ſmoke and locuſts, and the ſhutting it up, and ſatan in it; the one well ſuits with Chriſt, the other not: nor is ſatan here deſigned, as others think, who once was a bright ſtar, and ſhone among the morning ſtars, but by ſin fell from heaven, his firſt eſtate; and the fall of this Lucifer, ſon of the morning, was as lightning from heaven, Luke x. 18. But then this was a matter over and paſt, and what was well known to John; nor did he need a viſion to repreſent this unto him: nor is Arius intended, who lived before any of the trumpets were blown; nor the emperor Valens, who fell from the heavenly doctrine of Chriſt's divinity, into the Arian hereſy, which he encouraged and defended; whereby Chriſt, the ſun of righteouſneſs, was obſcured, and the air, the church, enlightened by Chriſt, was darkened; in whoſe time the locuſts, the Goths and Vandals, infected with Arianiſm, greatly diſtreſſed the eaſtern chriſtians; but his reign was long before the fifth angel ſounded his trumpet, which was after the year 600: wherefore by this ſtar is meant antichriſt; but whether the weſtern or eaſtern antichriſt, the pope of Rome, or Mahomet, is a queſtion: ſome interpreters go one way, and ſome another: Brightman thinks both are intended, ſeeing they both are antichriſt, and roſe to the heighth of their power, much about the ſame time; and the characters and circumſtances in this viſion very well agree with them both: what is objected to Mahomet is, that he never was a doctor or teacher in the church, or had any dignity in it, which a ſtar in this book moſt commonly ſignifies, and therefore could not be ſaid to fall from it; but this may be obſerved, that the Arabians, among whom he lived, had received the chriſtian religion before his time; that he himſelf was converſant with the ſcriptures, as appears by his wretched perverſion of them in his Alkoran; and certain it is, that his accomplices were ſuch as had profeſſed chriſtianity, as Sergius, a Neſtorian of Conſtantinople, and John of Antioch, an Arian, and he himſelf ſet up for a prophet: others think the pope of Rome is meant by the ſtar, ſeeing the biſhops of that city had ſhone out in great light and purity of doctrine and practice formerly, but now about this time moſt ſadly apoſtatized; they had been indeed gradually declining for ſome time, but now they may be ſaid openly to fall from heaven, when Phocas, who murdered his maſter, the emperor Mauritius, and took the imperial crown to himſelf, gave to pope Boniface the third, the title and power of univerſal biſhop, about the year 606, which he and his ſucceſſors exerciſed in a moſt haughty and tyrannical manner: and to him was given the key of the bottomleſs pit; which ſhews, that this could not be a ſtar in a literal ſenſe, but muſt deſign ſome man, or body of men, and agrees well with the popes of Rome: by the bottomleſs pit is meant hell, out of which the beaſt aroſe, and into which ſatan will be caſt, ch. xi. 7. and xvii. 8. and xx. 3. and by the key is deſigned the power of it, of opening and ſhutting it, of ſaving perſons from it, or of caſting them into it; and which the popes of Rome take to themſelves, even all power in heaven, earth and hell, ſignified by their triple crown; and which they arrogate to ſuch a degree, as to ſay, that if the pope ſhould ſend many thouſands into hell, no one ought to ſay, what doſt thou? This is a different key from what were given to Peter; he had the keys of the kingdom of heaven, his pretended ſucceſſors have the key of the bottomleſs pit; his were keys of knowledge, theirs of ignorance, and of the depths of ſatan, let out of this bottomleſs pit, of which the antichriſtian religion, both Popiſh and Mahometan, conſiſt; his were given by Chriſt, theirs by Phocas a murderer; or they had their power from the dragon, ch. xiii. 2, 4. from ſatan himſelf, according to whoſe working and influence they come forth, tho' by divine permiſſion.

Ver. 2. And he opened the bottomleſs pit, &c.] With the key that was given him; he made uſe of his univerſal power over all biſhops and churches, enacted laws, iſſued out decrees, made articles of faith, and impoſed them on mens conſciences, and obliged all to ſubmit to his helliſh principles and practices; and this, as it may be applied to Mahomet, met, the eaſtern antichriſt, may regard the publiſhing of his Alkoran, and obliging all his followers to receive it as the infallible word of God: and there aroſe a ſmoke out of the pit, as the ſmoke of a great furnace; the Complutenſian edition reads, of a burning furnace; and ſo the Syriac and Arabic verſions; which may deſign falſe doctrine, and ſuperſtitious worſhip, which ſprung from the decrees of popes and councils, and the Alkoran of Mahomet: and ſmoke being a dark, thin vapour, and very troubleſome to the eyes, and noſe, and of a periſhing nature, which ſoon vaniſhes away, theſe are fitly expreſſed by it; for they are the hidden things of darkneſs, and the authors and abetters of them are ſuch who darken counſel by words without knowledge; they are empty things, have no ſolidity and ſubſtance in them, are comparable to wood, hay, ſtubble, ſmoke, and wind; and are very troubleſome, and offenſive to all enlightened perſons, and who have the ſmell and ſavour of divine things; and will all periſh with the uſing, being the doctrines and commandments of men, when the true Goſpel is an everlaſting one. Smoke ſometimes deſigns great afflictions, puniſhments, and judgments upon men, Gen. xv. 17. Iſ. xiv. 31. and here may repreſent thoſe judgments, both ſpiritual and temporal, which the antichriſtian doctrine and worſhip brought upon the world, and which have been manifeſt in all ages ſince. And the ſun and the air were darkened by reaſon of the ſmoke of the pit; Chriſt, the ſun of righteouſneſs, was greatly obſcured by the Romiſh antichriſt, by his falſe doctrine and worſhip, in his offices, merits, and grace, he taking upon him to be head of the church, the infallible interpreter of ſcripture, and to give out pardons and indulgences; and particularly by the doctrines of merit, of works of ſupererogation, and of juſtification by works, &c. as he alſo was by Mahomet, who repreſented him only as a mere man, and exalted himſelf above him as a prophet; and by both were the air, the church, which receives its light from Chriſt, darkened; or the ſcriptures, which are the breath of God, are given by inſpiration of him, theſe were moſt grievouſly beclouded, and moſt wretchedly perverted, both by the decrees of popes, and the Alkoran of Mahomet. And it is remarkable what Abulpharagius [b], an Arabic writer, reports, that in the ſeventeenth year of Heraclius the emperor, which was the year 627, and the fifth of the Hegira, in which year Mahomet began to plunder and make war; for in this year was his plundering excurſion into Dumato'l Jundal, and the battle of Bani Lahyan, that half of the body of the ſun was darkened; and the darkneſs remained from Tiſrin the firſt, to the month Haziran, ſo that very little of its light appeared; which might portend that darkneſs he was introducing by his wretched religion. And frequently the ſun and air have been darkened at noonday by the locuſts, as Pliny [c] relates; and of which we have had a late account from Tranſylvania; ſee Exod. viii. 15.

Ver. 3. And there came out of the ſmoke locuſts upon the earth, &c.] Not literally, for theſe locuſts might not meddle with the graſs, nor any green thing, or tree, as locuſts do, only men, ver. 4. and had a king over them, ver. 11. which locuſts have not, Prov. xxx. 27. tho' the alluſion is to ſuch, which ſpawn and breed in pits, and may be properly ſaid to come out of them; hence in the Hebrew tongue they are called גבי, from גבא, a pit, or ditch: nor are devils intended, tho' they may be compared to locuſts for their original, hell, or the bottomleſs pit; and for their numbers, we read of a legion of them in one man; and for their hurtful and miſchievous nature: nor are the Goths and Vandals deſigned; theſe, tho' they harraſſed ſome parts of the eaſtern empire, yet chiefly the weſtern; beſides, they appeared under the former trumpets: but theſe are to be underſtood of the weſtern and eaſtern locuſts, eſpecially the latter. The weſtern locuſts are the clergy of the church of Rome, cardinals, biſhops, prieſts, monks and friars, of every order; theſe were not inſtituted by Chriſt, but roſe out of the bottomleſs pit, from the antichriſtian ſmoke of councils, decrees, and traditions; and are fitly compared to locuſts, for their number, which have been almoſt as the ſand of the ſea, innumerable, and have ſpread themſelves all over the nations of the earth, that have gone by the name of Chriſtendom; and for their devouring nature, living in plenty and idleneſs, upon the fat of the land, in the beſt commons, glutting themſelves with the ſpoils of others, devouring widows houſes, and impoveriſhing countries and kingdoms whereever they come. The eaſtern locuſts are the Saracens, and who are chiefly deſigned; and who were to harraſs and diſtreſs the eaſtern empire, and prepare for its ruin, which is brought on under the next trumpet, by the Turks. Theſe are fitly ſignified by locuſts, becauſe the locuſts generally come out of the eaſtern parts: it was an Eaſt wind which brought the plague of locuſts into Egypt, Exod. x. 13. and the children of the Eaſt, the Arabians, are compared to graſhoppers or locuſts, in Judg. vii. 12. and one of the names of a locuſt is, ארבה, Arbeh, not much unlike, in ſound, to an Arab. To which may be added, that it is a tradition of the Arabians, that there fell locuſts into the hands of Mahomet, on whoſe backs and wings were written theſe words; "we are the army of the moſt high God; we are "the ninety and nine eggs, and if the hundred "ſhould be made perfect, we ſhould conſume the "whole world, and whatever is in it." And it was a law eſtabliſhed by Mahomet, ye ſhall not kill the locuſts, for they are the army of the moſt high God; and the Mahometans fancy, that the locuſts were made of the ſame clay as Adam was: and beſides the tradition before mentioned, they ſay, that as Mahomet ſat at table, a locuſt fell, with theſe words on its back and wings; "I am God, neither is there any Lord of the locuſts beſides me, "who feed them; and when I pleaſe I ſend them "to be food to the people, and when I pleaſe I "ſend them to be a ſcourge unto them;" hence his Saracens may well go by this name. Now theſe Saracens ſprung up in the times of antichriſtian darkneſs, both Papal and Mahometan, and may be ſaid to come out of the ſmoke of the bottomleſs pit; and the religion of Mahomet, which they embraced, was no other; and like locuſts they were innumerable, they went in troops and bands, as locuſts do, Prov. xxx. 27. pillaging and ravaging all they could; and their ſudden and frequent incurſions, the deſolations and ravages which they made in the eaſtern empire, are very aptly expreſſed by the running to and fro of locuſts; ſee Iſ. xxxiii. 4. Joel ii. 9. And unto them was given power, as the ſcorpions of the earth have power; that is, to torment men, by ſtriking them with their ſtings in their tails, ver. 5, 10. Theſe are called ſcorpions of the earth, to diſtinguiſh them from ſea ſcorpions, which are a kind of fiſh: ſo Ariſtotle[d] and [e] Pliny ſpeak of terreſtrial ſcorpions, which are the moſt hurtful; theſe are of the ſerpentine kind, have an innocent and harmleſs look, but are ſoon angry; have ſtings in their tails, which they are always ſtriking with, that they may miſs no opportunity of doing miſchief, and with which they ſtrike in an an oblique way[f]; and which very fitly deſcribes the Saracens, the race of the Iſhmaelites, a generation of vipers, a ſubtle and treacherous ſort of people, very furious and wrathful, and who lived by continual robbing and plundering of others, at an unawares: and this may be applied to the weſtern locuſts, the monks and friars, who are the ſeed of the ſerpent; and who by good words, and fair ſpeeches, deceive the hearts of the ſimple, have a form of godlineſs, and ſpeak lyes in hypocriſy, and lie in wait to deceive; and being provoked, are full of wrath and anger, and ſtrike very hard with their anathemas and excommunications, and other ſorts of puniſhment, which they have power to inflict.

[c] Nat. Hiſt. l. 11. c. 29.

Ver. 4. And it was commanded them, &c.] The locuſts, by Chriſt, who has a ſovereign power over all men, and lays them under the reſtraints of his providence: that they ſhould not hurt the graſs of the earth; true chriſtians, private believers, it may be thoſe of the lower claſs; who for their numbers, and for their flouriſhing eſtate, under the dews of heavenly grace, and the diſtillations of the doctrine of grace, and the clear ſhining of the ſun of righteouſneſs upon them, and for their weakneſs may be compared to graſs; and yet as theſe being a company reſerved by Chriſt for himſelf, who will not break nor bruiſe them, ſo neither will he ſuffer others to hurt them, and reſents every offence done to theſe little ones: neither any green thing; who have the truth of grace in them, are ſpiritually alive, and in proſperous circumſtances, in a fruitful condition, being filled with the fruits of righteouſneſs from Chriſt, the green firr-tree, and whoſe leaves of profeſſion continue green; and are themſelves, as David ſays of himſelf, like a green olive-tree in the houſe of God, Pſ. lii. 8. Neither any tree; any trees of righteouſneſs, good and righteous men, who are often compared to trees planted by rivers of water, Pſ. i. 3. Jer. xvii. 7. it may be the miniſters of the Goſpel, men of great grace and gifts, the tall cedars in Lebanon may be intended; and ſo by theſe various expreſſions, chriſtians of every ſize, from the loweſt to the higheſt claſs, may be ſignified. Green things, and leaves of trees, are what the locuſts generally deſtroy, as appears from the plague of them in Egypt, Exod. x. 5, 12, 15. and as they did in Syria in the year 1586, as Thuanus reports[g]. Now as graſs, green things, and trees, are what locuſts moſt deſire to feed upon and hurt, ſo real believers, truly godly perſons, are thoſe which both the eaſtern and weſtern locuſts, the Mahometans and Papiſts, have been very deſirous of rooting out and deſtroying; but Chriſt takes care of theſe; theſe are as the apple of his eye, his jewels, his ſheep, his ſealed ones; none ſhall hurt them, they ſhall never periſh; he knows them that are his, and he'll preſerve them amidſt fire and ſmoke, amidſt all the corruptions and calamities in the world: but only thoſe men which have not the ſeal of God in their foreheads; ſee ch. vii. 2, 3. the antichriſtian party, thoſe of the Romiſh apoſtacy, the papiſts; and theſe were they that ſuffered moſt by the Saracens, who abhorred image-worſhip, and fell foul on the idolaters of this kind: and, on the other hand, the weſtern locuſts, the clergy of the church of Rome, had only influence over the reprobate part of mankind, and only wrought with all deceiveableneſs of unrighteouſneſs in them that periſh, who were given up to believe a lye, that they might be damned, but not upon any of the choſen ones, 2 Theſſ. ii. 11, 12, 13.

Ver. 5. And to them it was given that they ſhould not kill them, &c.] As the power of the locuſts was limited, with reſpect to the perſons they ſhould hurt, ſo with regard alſo to the miſchief they ſhould do; for even thoſe whom they were ſuffered to annoy, they might not kill, that is, utterly root out and deſtroy, ſo as that they were no more: and thus, tho' the Saracens killed great numbers in the eaſtern empire, by their frequent incurſions and ravages, and made large conqueſts, yet they could never deſtroy the empire itſelf, or bring it in ſubjection to them; nor did they ever take Conſtantinople, the metropolis and ſeat of the empire, tho' they often beſieged it. And as for the weſtern locuſts, the monks, friars, &c. tho' they kill the ſouls, yet not the bodies of men, that are under their power and influence: but that they ſhould be tormented five months; that is, not that the locuſts ſhould be tormented, but men by the locuſts; and ſo the eaſtern empire was grievouſly teized and tormented by the Saracens, and many parts of it were conquered, plundered, and pillaged by them, tho' it was not killed, and put an end to. In the year 628, Mahomet, with his Saracens, having obtained a place in Arabia Felex to dwell in, died in the year 631; from which time his ſucceſſors, the Saracens, by little and little, ſubdued Paleſtine, Syria, and Egypt; and in the year 640, took Perſis, putting king Hormiſda to flight; they laid ſiege to Conſtantinople ſeven years, but without ſucceſs; in the year 698, Carthage was taken by them; and in following times many countries on the continent, and many of the iſlands were grievouſly infeſted and diſtreſſed by them; tho' the empire itſelf did not fall into their hands; it was tormented by them, but not deſtroyed. And the weſtern locuſts have moſt dreadfully tormented men by their exorbitant dues demanded of them; and by obliging them to confeſſions, and to attend maſs; by enjoining them whippings, faſtings, pilgrimages, and pennances, and with the terrors of purgatory, and the like. The time that the locuſts ſhould torment men, which is five months, ſeems not to deſign any determinate time; but only that ſeeing five months is the time that locuſts live, and are in their ſtrength and power, even the five hotteſt months in the year, from April to September[h], this ſeems to denote, that as long as the locuſts live, the Saracens in the eaſt, and the monks and friars in the weſt, ſo long men ſhould be tormented by them; for it is certain that theſe have had power to torment men longer time than barely five months; yea, even tho' theſe ſhould be underſtood, according to the prophetic ſtile uſed in this book, of five months of years, or an hundred and fifty years; and though this ſhould be doubled, ſeeing they are repeated, ver. 10. and ſo make up in all three hundred years; for both the Saracens, and the Romiſh clergy, have diſtreſſed men, either of them, longer time than this: indeed, the flouriſhing condition of the Saracens was but about three hundred years, or two five months; but their empire or dominion laſted longer, even from the year 622, which was the year of the Hegira, or flight of Mahomet, to the year 1057 [i], when the Turkiſh empire ſucceeded it; tho' it is pretty remarkable, that from the year 612, in which Mahomet began to preach publickly, and ſo let out the ſmoke with the locuſts, to the year 762, in which the city Bagdad was built; when and where the Saracens ſettled, and made no more excurſions of any conſequence, were juſt an hundred and fifty years, or five months of years, as Mr. Daubuz obſerves; and I will not ſay that this is not intended by this prophecy. Noah's flood prevailed over the earth one hundred and fifty days, or five months, Gen. vii. 24. And their torment was as the torment of a ſcorpion when he ſtriketh a man; which gives great pain, is very diſtreſſing, and their ſtings are poiſonous and mortal: it ſignifies how troubleſome and afflictive thoſe locuſts were; to be among them was to live among ſcorpions, as in Ezek. ii. 6. As theſe locuſts are like ſcorpions, ſo ſcorpions have been ſeen ſometimes with wings like locuſts; ſuch an one Pauſanias [k] relates, was brought into Ionia by a Phrygian.

Ver. 6. And in thoſe days men ſhall ſeek death, &c.] Or deſire to die, as Job did: and ſhall not find it; or ſhall not die: and ſhall deſire to die, and death ſhall flee from them; death will be preferred to a miſerable life; it will be choſen rather than life, Jer. viii. 3. The ravages of the Saracens, their incurſions, and the invaſions by them, ſtruck ſuch terror into the inhabitants of divers parts of the empire, that they made death more eligible to them than life.

Ver. 7. And the ſhapes of the locuſts were like unto horſes, &c.] The heads of locuſts, eſpecially of ſome of them, are very much like the heads of horſes: and here they are compared to horſes prepared unto battle; as they are in Joel ii. 4. The horſe is a warlike creature, ſwift, ſtrong, and couragious, Job xxxix. 21—25. Locuſts ſometimes have appeared in the form of armies, and have marched in great order with their leaders before them, and have pitched their camps very regularly; ſee Joel ii. 7. of which we have lately had an account from Tranſylvania in our publick papers. This part of their deſcription may denote the wars of the Saracens, and the rapidity, force, and power with which they over-ran great part of the empire; and as it may be applied to the weſtern locuſts, the diſputes, contentions, and quarrels raiſed by the Romiſh clergy. And on their heads were, as it were, crowns like gold; and in this ſhape ſome locuſts have appeared, to which the alluſion ſeems to be in Nah. iii. 17. thy crowned men are as the locuſts. In the year 1542, 'tis ſaid [l], that locuſts came out of Turkiſh Sarmatia, into Auſtria, Sileſia, and other places, which had on their heads little crowns; ſee Ezek. xxiii. 42. And the Arabians, as Pliny obſerves, go mitrati [m], with mitres, turbants like crowns, on their heads. This may deſign the ſeveral victories and conqueſts which the Saracens obtained in Arabia, Perſia, Syria, Egypt, Africa, Spain, and many other places; and ſuppoſing this to have any reference to the weſtern locuſts, it may reſpect the triple crown of the head of them, the caps of the cardinals, the mitres of the biſhops, and the ſhaven pates of the prieſts, in form of crowns. And their faces were as the faces of men; which may be expreſſive of the affable carriage of Mahomet, and his followers, eſpecially to the chriſtians, and of his great pretenſions to holineſs and religion, and of the plauſible and inſinuating ways, and artful methods, uſed by him, to gain upon men; and being applied to the clergy of the church of Rome, may denote their ſhew of humanity, and their pretended great concern for the welfare of the ſouls of men, their flatteries, good words, and fair ſpeeches, with which they deceive the ſimple and unwary.

Ver. 8. And they had hair, as the hair of women, &c.] Some locuſts have ſmooth, others hairy heads [n]: this fitly points at the Arabians or Saracens, who, as Pliny ſays [o], uſed to wear long hair without cutting it, and attired as women, and have their names alſo from women: they were called Hagarenes, from Hagar, Abraham's handmaid, by whom he had Iſhmael, the father of theſe people; afterwards they took the name of Saracens, from Sarah, the wife of Abraham, whoſe poſterity they would be thought to be; tho' they may have the latter name, either from סרק, to rob and ſteal with the Arabians, or from the ſame word, as it ſignifies to comb, from the combing and plaiting of their hair. This may alſo point at the effeminacy of the weſtern locuſts, the monks and friars, who dreſs more like women than men; and many of them claim the virgin Mary for their patroneſs; and may in general deſign the votaries of the church of Rome, who are under the vow of a monaſtic life, as thoſe among the Jews, under a Nazarite's vow, wore long hair. And their teeth were as the teeth of lions; ſo in Joel i. 6. which may denote the ravages and devaſtations of the Saracens in the empire, robbing, pillaging, and deſtroying all they met with; and is applicable enough to the devouring jaws of the Romiſh clergy, their plundering the eſtates of men, their cruelties and barbarities exerciſed by their inquiſition, &c. Pliny ſays [p], that locuſts will knaw the doors of houſes.

Ver. 9. And they had breaſt-plates, as it were breaſt-plates of iron, &c.] Alluding to the hard ſkin of the locuſts, with which nature has fenced it [q]; ſee Joel ii. 8. and denotes the armour with which the Saracens were accoutred: and if to be underſtood of the weſtern locuſts, the hardneſs of their hearts, their ſeared conſciences, or their protection by the princes of the earth, the many privileges they are poſſeſſed of, the laws made in their favour, and for their ſecurity; their breaſt-plates were not breaſt-plates of righteouſneſs, faith, and love, nor in defence of truth, but againſt it. And ſome think the iron colour may denote the colour of their habit, their black garments: and the ſound of their wings was as the ſound of chariots of many horſes running to battle; ſee Joel ii. 5. The ſound of locuſts, when they fly or march in large companies, is very great. Pliny ſays [r], they make ſuch a noiſe with their wings, when they fly, that they have been thought to have been other winged creatures; hence a locuſt, in Hebrew, is ſometimes called, צלצל, the ſame name that is given to the high-ſounding cymbal. The ſound of them is ſaid to have been heard ſix miles [s]. Ariſtotle [t] aſcribes it to the rubbing of their legs or thighs one againſt another; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion here renders it, the ſound of their feet: this may be expreſſive of the ſwift and rapid incurſions of the Saracens, and of the dreadful alarms to the nations which their invaſions made; and may be applied to the noiſy declamations, anathema's, excommunications, and interdicts of the Romiſh clergy.

Ver. 10. And they had tails like unto ſcorpions, &c.] Locuſts are ſaid to have the tail of a ſerpent, and of the vipers of the earth [u]; ſee the notes on ver. 3, 5. And there were ſtings in their tails; either in the baſer ſort of them, the Saracens and Papiſts; or in their doctrines, the prophet being the tail, Iſ. ix. 15. with which both Mahomet, who ſet up himſelf for a prophet, and the Romiſh clergy, who ſet up their decrees and unwritten traditions above the word of God, have poiſoned and deſtroyed multitudes of ſouls: and their power was to hurt men five months; ſee the note on ver. 5.

Ver. 11. And they had a king over them, &c.] Which natural locuſts have not, Prov. xxx. 27. by whom is meant the falſe prophet Mahomet, who was at the head of the Saracens, and led them on to commit the outrages they did; and is believed in by the Turks to this day, as the great prophet of God, and by them preferred to all prophets, not only to Moſes, but to Jeſus Chriſt; he is the king of the eaſtern locuſts, as the pope of Rome is the king of the weſtern ones; for the Romiſh antichriſt reigns, or at leaſt has reigned, over the kings of the earth, ch. xvii. 17, 18. which is the angel of the bottomleſs pit; to whom the key of it was given, ver. 1. whoſe name in the Hebrew tongue is Abaddon, but in the Greek tongue hath his name Apollyon; both which ſignify a deſtroyer; and are very applicable both to Mahomet, who by his impoſture has been the cauſe of the deſtruction of multitudes of ſouls, as well as by his wars, and thoſe of the Saracens and Turks, of the lives of millions, and of the ruin of many kingdoms, countries, cities and towns. Abulpharagius [w], an Arabic writer, relates, that in the times of the Chalif Al-walid, there was one Hejajus, who had cauſed to be ſlain, of the chief and illuſtrious men, an hundred and twenty thouſand, beſides others of the common people, and that fell in war; moreover, that there died in his priſon fifty thouſand men, and thirty thouſand women: and the ſame writer reports [x], that the famous Abu Moſlem put to death ſix hundred thouſand men, who were known, beſides thoſe that were unknown, and whom he ſlew in wars and battles: both theſe inſtances are taken notice of by Mr. Daubuz, who juſtly obſerves, that ſurely nothing can come near this Abaddon, but the beaſt, the ſon of perdition, 2 Theſſ. ii. 3. And to him, the pope of Rome, may the name be truly applied, who has led thouſands into perdition, and will go into it himſelf; and both he, and the falſe prophet, with the devil, will be caſt into the lake which burns with fire and brimſtone, and will be tormented for ever and ever, 2 Theſſ. ii. 4. Rev. xvii. 8, 11. and xx. 10. Abaddon, with the Jews, is one of the habitations or apartments of hell [y], becauſe it deſtroys all; Apollyon is the ſame with Apollo, the God of the heathens, who has his name from deſtroying [z].

Ver. 12. One wo is paſt, &c.] One of the three wo-trumpets, the firſt of them; that is, in the viſion which John had of it, not the thing itſelf deſigned by it: and behold there come two woes more hereafter; under the blowing of the ſixth and ſeventh trumpets.

Ver. 13. And the ſixth angel ſounded, &c.] His trumpet: and I heard a voice from the four horns of the golden altar, which is before God; the alluſion is not to the altar of burnt-offering, which was covered with braſs, but to the altar of incenſe covered with gold; and hence here, and elſewhere, it is called the golden altar, and was a figure of the interceſſion of Chriſt; for on this altar incenſe was offered, which was typical of the prayers of the ſaints offered by Chriſt, thro' his mediation: the matter of this altar was ſhittim-wood, a wood that is incorruptible, and of long duration, denoting the perpetuity of Chriſt's interceſſion; and its being covered with gold, expreſſes the glory and excellency of it; its form was four-ſquare, as is the city of the new Jeruſalem, and ſhews that Chriſt's interceſſion avails for all his people in the four parts of the world: and on it were four horns, which ſome think repreſent the four evangeliſts, or the Goſpel ſent into the four parts of the world, and which is the power of God unto ſalvation; and for the contempt of which, in the eaſtern empire, the judgments ſignified under this trumpet came upon it; tho' rather theſe may point at the large extent and fullneſs of Chriſt's interceſſion, for all his people, in the four corners of the earth, as well as his power to protect and defend them, and to ſcatter and deſtroy his and their enemies. This altar is ſaid to be before God, in a viſionary way, as the altar of incenſe was before the vail, and the mercy-ſeat, and by the ark of the teſtimony, Exod. xxx. 1, 2, 3, 6. ſuggeſting, that Chriſt continually appears in the preſence of God for all the ſaints. Now from hence was a voice heard by John, and which ſeems to be the voice of Chriſt, the advocate and interceſſor. In the Greek text it is, one voice; not the voice of many angels round about the throne, nor of the ſouls under the altar, but of the one and only mediator between God and man, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; and this was a voice, not ſupplicating, but commanding, being addreſſed to one of his miniſtring ſpirits.

Ver. 14. Saying to the ſixth angel which had the trumpet, &c.] The ſixth trumpet which was given him, and he had prepared himſelf to ſound, and had ſounded: looſe the four angels which are bound in the great river Euphrates; not the four angels in ch. vii. 1. they ſtood upon the four corners of the earth; theſe were in, or at the river Euphrates; they held the four winds that they ſhould not blow, or reſtrained the ſavage nations that they ſhould not hurt; theſe are bound themſelves, that they might not do miſchief: nor are angels by nature at all intended; not evil angels, tho' they are bound in chains of darkneſs, and are reſerved to judgment, they are admitted indeed to rove about in the air and earth, but are under the reſtraints of the power and providence of God; nor good angels, who are at the divine beck, and go in and out, and are detained and ſent forth according to the pleaſure of God, and are ſometimes employed in killing great numbers of men; ſee 2 Sam. xxiv. 15, 16. 2 Kings xix. 35. but men are here meant, as appears from ver. 16, 17. and particularly the Turks, as moſt interpreters agree; who dwelt on the other ſide the river Euphrates, and were let looſe, or ſuffered to paſs over that river into the eaſtern empire, to ruin and deſtroy it, as they did: theſe are called angels, becauſe of their might and force, their power and ſtrength, with which they bore all before them; and for their great ſwiftneſs and rapidity in the victories and conqueſts which the Ottoman family obtained; tained; who, from very ſmall beginnings, raiſed themſelves, in a very little time, to a large monarchy, and founded the Turkiſh empire, which, from them, is to this day called the Ottoman empire. Ottoman the firſt ſubdued great part of Bithynia, and fixed the ſeat of his kingdom at Pruſa; or rather his ſon Urchanes, who conquered Myſia, Lycaonia, Phrygia, Caria, and the reſt, to the Helleſpont, and the Euxine ſea. Amurath his ſon took Callipolis, Hadrianople, and the circumjacent provinces. Bajazet added to the empire Theſſalia, Macedonia, Phocis, Attica, Myſia, and Bulgaria; and Mahomet the ſecond took Conſtantinople itſelf, and thereby put an end to the eaſtern empire; and all this was done in a very few years: it is ſaid of this laſt, that he conquered two empires, and twelve kingdoms, and above two hundred cities [a]. And theſe Ottoman Turks may be called angels, or meſſengers, becauſe they were the meſſengers and executioners of God's wrath upon the eaſtern empire: they are ſignified by four angels, either, as ſome think, becauſe of the four names of Saracens, Turks, Tartars, and Arabians, tho' all Mahometans, under which they went, before they were united under one emperor Ottoman; or rather becauſe of the four principalities, or governments, into which they were divided, while they were upon the banks of, or near to the river Euphrates; the ſeat of one being at Iconium, another at Bagdad, a third at Aleppo, and a fourth at Damaſcus; and chiefly becauſe when they paſſed the river Euphrates, they had four princes at the head of them, Soliman Shak, and his three ſons. Soliman himſelf, as he paſſed, not knowing the fords of the river, was drowned in it; at which his ſons being ſo affrighted, two of them, Sankur Zengi, and Cun Tugdi, returned to Perſia, but the third, Ortogrules, with his three ſons (which made four again) Condoz, Sarubani, and Othman, or Ottoman, continued, to whom Aladdin, Sultan of Iconium, gave them ſome land among the mountains of Armenia [b]; and from hence, by degrees, as before obſerved, a large empire was raiſed. Now theſe are ſaid to be bound in the great river Euphrates; which river is to be literally underſtood, and is the ſame with that which is ſo called in Gen. ii. 14. and xv. 18. and ran through Meſopotamia and Chaldea, and was the boundary of the Roman empire; ſo it was fixed by Hadrian [c]; and beyond which the Turks, before this time, did rarely go, and if they did, retired again: for till this time, as the hiſtorian ſays [d], the Turks had Aſia, εντος τȣ Ευφρατȣ, within Euphrates, and the Arabians Cœloſyria and Phœnicia. Now here theſe were bound; they were not ſuffered to paſs the river, or to make any inroads of any conſequence further into the Roman empire; they were reſtrained, by the decree of God, from proceeding any further till this time; which, as he fixes a decreed place for the ſea, that its waves ſhould come thus far, and no further, ſo he reſtrains princes from their enterprizes, and ſettles the bounds of empires, as long as he pleaſes; and they were kept back by the power of God, from pouring in upon the empire, and pouring forth their fury upon it, who cauſes the wrath of men to praiſe him, and reſtrains the remainder of it; and they were alſo prevented from coming any further, as yet, thro' the inteſtine diviſions among themſelves, and by the victories of the chriſtians in Paleſtine.

Ver. 15. And the four angels were looſed, &c.] The time being come, fixed by the decrees of God, for making uſe of the Turks for the deſtruction of the eaſtern empire, the reſtraints of divine providence were taken off from them, and they were ſuffered to paſs the river Euphrates; they were let looſe like ſo many furies, and in a little time over-ran and deſtroyed the whole empire, and ſettled their own, now called the Turkiſh or Ottoman empire; and which was done about the year 1301. Which were prepared for an hour, and a day, and a month, and a year, for to ſlay the third part of men; which may in general denote their readineſs, vigilance, and quick diſpatch: they lay for a good while hovering over the banks of the river Euphrates, as if they were waiting for an order, or a commiſſion to go over it: they were ready not only at a year's, a month's, a day's, but at an hour's warning, and all of them together; and as ſoon as ever they had the divine permiſſion, they loſt no time; they improved every opportunity, every year, every month, every day, every hour, to ſettle and enlarge their dominions to the ruin of others; and in a very ſhort time did they accompliſh what they deſired: tho' others think this refers to a certain time fixed by God, in which they ſhould be employed in killing men; and the ſenſe is, that theſe people were prepared in the purpoſes and decrees of God, or were appointed for ſuch a length of time here ſignified, by ſeveral dates, in which they ſhould deſtroy a large multitude of men, by way of puniſhment for their idolatries, murders, ſorceries, fornication, and thefts, ver. 20, 21. An hour, which is the twenty-fourth of a day or year, in the prophetic ſtile, is fifteen days, and a day is a year, and a month is thirty years, and a year is three hundred ſixty-five years and a quarter, or ninety-one days; in all, three hundred and ninety-ſix years, and a hundred and ſix days; which is the preciſe time between A. D. 1057, when the Turkiſh empire begun, the empire of the Saracens being entirely demoliſhed by Togrul Beg, or Tangrolipix, and A. D. 1453, in which year Conſtantinople was taken by the Turks, and an end put to the eaſtern Roman empire, ſignified by the third part of men; or elſe this ſpace of time may be reckoned from the date of Ottoman's reign, May 19, 1301, which, to Sept. 1, 1697, is juſt this term of time, when prince Eugene obtained a remarkable victory over the Turks, the effect of which was the peace at Carlowitz the next year, ſince which time the Turks have done but little in Europe: and by this it ſhould ſeem that their time of killing men here, is over, and that their own deſtruction is haſtening on. Mr. Daubuz rejects theſe computations, ſince a prophetic year conſiſts of 360 days or years, and not 365, as thoſe ſuppoſe; and thinks there is no myſtery in theſe dates, and only ſignify the angels unanimous execution of their commiſſion at once.

Ver. 16. And the number of the army of the horſemen, &c.] This ſhows, that the four angels before mentioned were men, and deſign generals of armies, or armies of men, even of horſemen; and manifeſtly point at the Turks, who were not only originally Perſians, and had their name, as ſome ſay [e], from Turca in Perſia, and פרש, from whence the Perſians have their name, ſignifies an horſeman; but the armies of the Turks chiefly conſiſted of horſe, and what for ſhow and for uſe, they had generally double the number of horſes and mules as of men [f]; and they are very good horſemen, and very dextrous at leaping on and off [g]; and the horſe's tail is ſtill carried before the general, and principal officers, as an enſign expreſſive of their military exploits, and ſhewing where their main ſtrength lies. And the number of this mighty army, it is ſaid, were two hundred thouſand thouſand; or two myriads of myriads; two hundred millions, or twenty thouſand brigades of ten thouſand each; that is, a very large and prodigious number, almoſt infinite and incredible, like the army of Gog and Magog, as the ſand of the ſea, ch. xx. 8. The Turks uſed to bring, and ſtill do bring vaſt armies into the field: in the year 1396, Bajazet, with three hundred thouſand men, fell upon ſixty thouſand chriſtians, killed twenty thouſand of them, and loſt ſixty thouſand of his own: againſt him afterward, in the year 1397, came Tamerlane the Tartar, with four hundred thouſand horſe, and ſix hundred thouſand foot, and having killed two hundred thouſand Turks, took Bajazet priſoner, and carried him about in a cage in golden chains. In the year 1438, Amurath entered into Pannonia, with three hundred thouſand horſemen: and in the year 1453, Mahomet took Conſtantinople with the like number [h]; yea, it it is ſaid, that the army at the ſiege of that city conſiſted of forty myriads, or four hundred thouſand men [i]. It is reported, that the great Turk contemptuouſly ſent to the emperor of the Romans a camel, or a dromedary, loaden with wheat, with this vow by a meſſage, that he ſhould bring againſt him as many fighting men as there were grains of wheat therein [k]. And it is related [l], that when Ladiſlaus, king of Hungary, went out againſt Amurath with four and twenty thouſand horſe, Dracula, governour of Walachia, adviſed him not to attack the emperor of the Turks with ſo ſmall an army, ſince he went out every day a hunting with more men than ſuch a number: and I heard the number of them; expreſſed by ſome angel, and therefore John was certain of it, otherwiſe he could not have told them.

Ver. 17. And thus I ſaw the horſes in the viſion, and them that ſat on them, &c.] In ſuch numbers, and with horſemen on them, and in ſuch order, and in appearance, as follows: having breaſt-plates of fire, and of jacinth and brimſtone; which may be underſtood either literally of their external breaſt-plates, which being of poliſhed iron, according to the cuſtom of theſe people, looked at a diſtance like ſparkling fire, and ſeemed to be of the colour of hyacinth, or of a ſky colour, and appeared as flaming ſulphur; tho' ſome think, that their breaſt-plates were of different colours, ſome looked like fire, others like jacinth, and others like brimſtone; or it may denote that they would be accoutred in ſcarlet, blue, and yellow, which are the colours the Turks have commonly wore; or this may be underſtood of their internal breaſt-plates, and the diſpoſition of their minds, having in their breaſts nothing but wrath, fury, deſolation, and deſtruction; a fire devoured before them, and behind them a flame burned: and the heads of the horſes were as the heads of lions; gaping and roaring for their prey, or all bloody with it, and looked fierce, and ſavage, and terrible: this deſigns not ſo much the ſtrength, boldneſs, and intrepidity of their horſes, which are warlike creatures, and very undaunted in battle, as of the men that ſat upon them, who were like David's heroes and warriors, 1 Chron. xii. 8. And out of their mouths iſſued fire, and ſmoke, and brimſtone; which may be referred either to the horſes, or to the horſemen, or both: ſome interpret this allegorically, and by fire underſtand either the tyranny of the Turks over their own people, or their fury againſt others, or their blaſphemy againſt God, and Chriſt, and his people, being like ſo many railing Rabſhakehs againſt the God of the chriſtians; and by ſmoke, the falſe doctrine of Mahomet, which came out of the ſame bottomleſs pit the doctrine of the Romiſh antichriſt; did and is fitly compared to ſmoke for its diſagreeableneſs, darkneſs, levity, and duration; ſee the note on ver. 2. and by brimſtone the immorality and ſad corruption of manners among the Turks, and what is allowed of, or winked at, as fornication, polygamy, ſodomy, &c. but rather this is to be taken more literally, and repreſents the firing of guns on horſeback in battle. Guns are a late invention, and the uſe of them was found out in the age this trumpet refers to; and were much made uſe of by the Turks in their wars, and particularly great guns or cannons; theſe were uſed by Amurath at the ſieges of Belgrade, and of Conſtantinople [m]; and by Mahomet the ſecond at the taking of Conſtantinople, where a gun or cannon was uſed of that bigneſs, as to be drawn by ſeventy yoke of oxen, and two thouſand men [n]. Gunpowder ſet on fire, is fitly ſignified by fire, ſmoke, and brimſtone, which is made of nitre, charcoal, and brimſtone; and the firing of guns on horſeback, is moſt aptly deſcribed by theſe coming out of the mouths of horſes and horſemen: nor could it well appear to John to be otherwiſe, who could never have ſeen a gun, and one fired off in his life; nor could he well repreſent to others what he ſaw in viſion, than in this manner.

Ver. 18. And by theſe three was the third part of men killed, &c.] The Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, the Complutenſian edition, the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read, by theſe three plagues: as the weſtern Roman empire is in the preceding chapter frequently expreſſed by the third part of ſeveral things, ſee ch. viii. 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12. ſo here the eaſtern Roman empire, by the third part of men; vaſt numbers of the inhabitants of which were deſtroyed by the Turks, through the uſe of guns, out of which iſſued fire, ſmoke, and brimſtone; and Conſtantinople, the metropolis of it, was taken in this way, as before obſerved, with the taking of which the empire ceaſed. By the fire, and by the ſmoke, and by the brimſtone, which iſſued out of their mouths; that is, by the firing of guns.

Ver. 19. For their power is in their mouth, &c.] In what proceeded out of their mouth, or ſeemed to do ſo; in their guns, and what come out of them: and in their tails; which may deſign their foot-ſoldiers, which were as the tail to their horſe, and who ſometimes did great ſervice; or their way of fighting when they fled, by caſting up arrows into the air, which would fall upon the heads and horſes of thoſe that purſued them; or their ambuſhments, by which they deſtroyed many; or their perfidious violation of treaties; or it may be their tails may intend the doctrine of Mahomet, the falſe prophet, who is the tail, Iſ. ix. 15. for their tails were like unto ſerpents; crooked, crafty, poiſonous, and pernicious: and had heads; every tail had a head to it; which may be underſtood of the officers of the foot-ſoldiers, or of the prieſts and teachers of the Mahometan religion: and with them they do hurt; with their guns, the power in their mouth, they did hurt to the bodies of men; and with their falſe doctrines, their tails, they did hurt to the ſouls of men; the Ethiopic verſion here adds, five months; which ſeems to be taken from ver. 10.

Ver. 20. And the reſt of men which were not killed by theſe plagues, &c.] By whom are meant the weſtern antichriſtian party; and ſuch of them as were not plagued, harraſſed, and deſtroyed by the Turks, as in Germany, at leaſt ſome parts of it, France, Spain, Italy, &c. yet repented not of the works of their hands; their idols, their images of ſaints departed, which their hands had made; the goodneſs of God in ſaving them from the depredations of the Turks, ſhould have led them to repentance for their idolatrous worſhip of images, but it did not: that they ſhould not worſhip devils; or dæmons, a ſort of deities with the heathens, that mediated between the ſuperior gods and men; and here deſign angels and ſaints departed, which the papiſts worſhip, and uſe as mediators of interceſſion for them; and this is no other than worſhipping of devils, in God's account, and is downright idolatry, and the doctrine of it is the doctrine of devils: and idols of gold, and ſilver, and braſs, and ſtone, and of wood; which are the ſeveral materials of which the popiſh images are made: and what aggravates the ſtupidity of the worſhippers of theſe images, and of the perſons repreſented by them, is, that theſe are ſuch which neither can ſee, nor hear, nor walk; can neither ſee their perſons, nor hear their prayers, nor ſtir one foot to their help and aſſiſtance; ſee Pſ. cxv. 4, 5, 6, 7.

Ver. 21. Neither repented they of their murders, &c.] Of the ſaints and martyrs of Jeſus, with whoſe blood the weſtern antichriſt is made drunk, and which will be found in her, and for which ſhe is anſwerable. Now, tho' the weſtern parts of the empire eſcaped the ſcourge of the Turks, yet this did not bring them to repent of their murderous practices, but they went on to take away the lives of godly men; witneſs the perſecutions of the Waldenſes and Albigenſes, the murders of John Huſs and Jerom of Prague, the burning of the martyrs here in queen Mary's days, and the maſſacres in Paris and in Ireland, and their butcheries elſewhere; and which they have continued unto this day, where the inquiſition obtains: nor of their ſorceries; Jezabel the whore of Rome has been famous for, by which ſhe has deceived all nations; many of the popes of Rome have been necromancers, given to the magic art, and have entered into covenant, and have had familiarity with the devil; and one part of the Romiſh ſervice lies in exorciſms, conjurations, and enchantments, and which they ſtill continue: nor of their fornication; all ſorts of uncleanneſs; not only ſimple fornication, but adultery, inceſt, ſodomy, and all unnatural luſts; brothel-houſes have been ſet up and licenſed by authority, which have yielded to the popes a yearly revenue of forty thouſand ducats; the Romiſh clergy, popes, cardinals, prieſts, monks, and friars, have been dreadfully guilty of all manner of uncleanneſs, and ſtill are; whence Rome is called Sodom, ch. xi. 8. nor of their thefts; who under pretence of granting indulgences and pardons, and praying ſouls out of purgatory, with other tricks, cheat men of their money, pillage and plunder their eſtates, and devour widows houſes; rob men of their ſubſtance, and make merchandize of their ſouls: now all theſe iniquities the papiſts in the eaſtern empire were guilty of, for which the Turks as a ſcourge were let in upon it, and deſtroyed it; and yet the weſtern papacy, who did not ſuffer in theſe calamities, took no warning by them, did not repent of their ſins, and reform their practices; but went on, and ſtill go on in the ſame wicked way, and by their hardneſs and impenitence treaſure up wrath againſt the day of wrath.

CHAP. X.

THIS chapter contains a viſion of an angel of a wonderful appearance, the voices of the ſeven thunders, and an order to John to take the book in the hand of the angel, eat it, and propheſy. The angel is deſcribed by his ſtrength, a mighty one; by his deſcent from heaven; by his attire, being clothed with a cloud; by a rainbow on his head; by his face being like the ſun; by his feet, which were as pillars of fire, the one foot ſet on the ſea, and the other on the earth; by having a little book open in his hand, and by the loud cry he made, like the roaring of a lion, ver. 1, 2, 3. upon which ſeven thunders uttered their voices, which John was going to write, but was forbid, ver. 4. next follows a ſolemn oath of the angel's; the geſture he uſed, lifting up his hand to heaven; the perſon by whom he ſwore, the living God; what he ſwore to, that time ſhould be no more, and that the myſtery of God would be finiſhed at the beginning of the ſeventh trumpet, ver. 5, 6, 7. then ſeveral orders are given to John, as to take the open book in the hand of the angel, which he did, to eat it, as he accordingly did; when he found it to be as it was told him it would be, namely, ſweet in his mouth, but bitter in his belly; and then to propheſy again before people, nations, tongues, and kings, ver. 8, 9, 10, 11.

Ver. 1. And I ſaw another mighty angel, &c.] Not any mere man, as Juſtin the emperor, as ſome have thought, who ſent letters abroad in favour of the orthodox doctrine, againſt the Arians, which they ſuppoſe is meant by the little book open in his right-hand; and ſtill leſs the pope of Rome, whether in the ſenſe of Papiſts or Proteſtants, which latter repreſent him as a tyrant, treading upon men both in the iſlands and in the continent, and holding forth the book of canons and decrees; rather, as Mr. Daubuz thinks, Luther, with the reſt of the reformers, is intended, and eſpecially ſince the prophecy of this chapter reſpects the reformation, which began before the end of the ſixth trumpet; and the epithets given to this angel may denote his ſtrength and courage, his divine authority, the protection of him, and the clear doctrine of peace and reconciliation he brought: however, a created angel is not intended; not the angel that made proclamation for the opening of the book, and unſealing it, ch. v. 2. between which, and having the book in his right-hand open, is a wide difference; nor any other, tho' the epithet mighty belongs to angels in common; and tho' this angel ſwears by the living God; and tho' it was an angel by whom Chriſt ſignified the things contained in this book to John; but the increated angel, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, ſeems rather deſigned, as appears both by comparing this with Dan. xii. 7. and x. 5, 6. and from the power he gave to the two witneſſes, ch. xi. 3. which can't agree with a created angel; and beſides, who ſo proper to hold the book open as he who unlooſed the ſeals, and opened it, and to whom the epithet mighty may be applied in the higheſt ſenſe, as God; and who as man may be ſaid to ſwear by the living God, and to whom the whole deſcription well agrees? he is ſometimes called an angel ſimply, Gen. xlviii. 16. Exod. xxiii. 20. Acts vii. 35, 38. ſometimes the angel of the Lord, and who appears to be Jehovah himſelf, the ſecond perſon, Gen. xvi. 7, 10. and xviii. 1, 2. compared with xix. 1. and xxii. 11, 12. and ſometimes the angel of God's preſence, Iſ. lxiii. 9. and the angel of the great council in the Septuagint on Iſ. ix. 6. and the angel, or meſſenger, of the covenant, Mal. iii. 1. and may be ſo called becauſe he is a meſſenger from God as man and mediator, being ſent by him to declare his will and redeem his people: and he is a mighty one; not only as God, being the mighty God, the Almighty, which appears by his creation of all things, and upholding them in their beings; but as mediator, having all power in heaven and in earth, and being far above all principality, power, and might; and as man, made ſtrong by God for himſelf, and for his people: he appears now as another angel, diſtinct from the ſeven angels who had trumpets given them to ſound, and ſix of which had already ſounded; and particularly from the angel of the ſixth trumpet, who had juſt ſounded; though ſome copies, and the Complutenſian edition, leave out the word αλλον, another; and very opportunely does he appear for the comfort of his church, when the trumpets that had been blown had brought ſuch deſolations upon the empire, weſtern and eaſtern, and when both the weſtern and eaſtern antichriſts had appeared, and before the ſeventh trumpet ſounds, and brings in the laſt and greateſt wo: and he is ſaid to come down from heaven; which does not deſign his incarnation, that was long before this time; nor his ſpiritual preſence with his people, which is common to them in all ages; nor his ſecond coming to judgment, which will be by a deſcent from heaven, and in the clouds of heaven, for that is yet future; but in a viſionary way, his appearance to and for his church and people in the dark times of antichriſt, when afflicted by the Turk on the one hand, and the pope on the other: clothed with a cloud[n]; which is expreſſive not of the human nature of Chriſt, with which his divinity was veiled in his ſtate of humiliation, ſo that few ſaw the glory of his divine perſon, and the greater part eſteemed him a mere man; but rather of the obſcurity of him, his perſon, offices, and grace, in thoſe times of antichriſtian darkneſs, and even of the dim light and knowledge which his true and faithful followers had of him in thoſe times; it was a dark and cloudy day with them, as well as the whole earth was covered with the groſs darkneſs of Popery and Mahometaniſm; tho' it ſeems beſt of all to interpret this phraſe of the majeſtic preſence of Chriſt in his appearances to his people, who went before the people of Iſrael in a cloud by day in the wilderneſs, deſcended in one on mount Sinai, dwelt in one both in the tabernacle and temple, was overſhadowed by one on the mount when transfigured, aſcended in one to heaven, and will return in one, or more: moreover, the cloud may denote the power and protection of God attending the reformation; ſee Pſ. lxviii. 34. Iſ. iv. 5. and a rainbow was upon his head; which was a token of the covenant; ſee ch. iv. 3. and the note there: this, with its bleſſings, is upon the head of Chriſt, the antitypical Joſeph, and who is the head of his church and people; and Chriſt appearing in this form at this time, when the world was overflowed with Popery and Mahometaniſm, ſhows that God was ſtill mindful of his covenant, even in thoſe worſt of times, and would not ſuffer his church to be overwhelmed, and ſunk in the general deluge of antichriſtianiſm, or the gates of hell to prevail againſt it; Chriſt at ſuch a time as this, very ſeaſonably appears with the rainbow of the covenant on his head, as a meſſenger of peace, and bringer of good tidings, to let his people know that ere long it would be halcyon days with them, and there would be times of refreſhing from the preſence of the Lord, who was ever mindful of his covenant with them; and that the Goſpel of peace and reconciliation would be preached unto them: and his face was as it were the ſun; or looked like the ſun, as it did at the time of his transfiguration on the mount, and as he is deſcribed in ch. i. 16. and may denote the clearneſs and purity of Chriſt; both as God, who is the brightneſs of his Father's glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon; and as man, who is holy, harmleſs, and undefiled; and is alſo expreſſive of that light of nature, grace, and glory, which he imparts unto the ſons of men; as well as of that beauty, lovelineſs, and amiableneſs in his perſon, which renders him as the ſun, delightful to behold; and of the majeſty of his perſon, and the manifeſtations of himſelf, to the great comfort, pleaſure, and refreſhment of his ſaints: and his feet as pillars of fire; which may refer to the ſtate of the church of Chriſt at this time, which was in the fire of afflictions, when many of its members were called to the ſtake, and burnt there for the ſake of the Goſpel, and yet were like pillars, firm and unſhaken; the church was like the buſh that Moſes ſaw, which was on fire, but not conſumed; Chriſt was with his people as they paſſed thro' it, that it could not kindle upon them ſo as to deſtroy them; and their faith, which was tried by it, was found to be much more precious than of gold that periſheth: or this may ſhow what Chriſt then was, both to his people and to his enemies; to his people his feet were as pillars of braſs and marble, to bear them up, and ſupport them under all their trials and afflictions; his goings forth towards them in a way both of providence and grace, were in ſuch a manner, as to ſtrengthen and confirm them in the faith of him againſt all the powers of hell and earth; and they were like fire, to conſume his and their enemies; with his feet he trod upon them, and ſubdued them under him, who were as ſtubble, briars and thorns, eaſily conſumed by him, when at the ſame time he was a wall of fire to his people, and the glory in the midſt of them.

Ver. 2. And he had in his hand a little book open, &c.] By which is meant not the Bible, the ſcriptures of the Old and New Teſtament; or the book of the Goſpel, the ſubſtance of which lies in a little room, and is no other than the preaching of Chriſt, and him crucified, as God's way of ſalvation; and which is now more open and manifeſt, and more clearly made known unto the ſons of men, under the Goſpel-diſpenſation, than it was before, and eſpecially ſince the time of the reformation, to which this book, and the prophecies of it, may have reſpect; but the ſame book is here deſigned, which in ch. v. 1. is repreſented as in the right-hand of him that ſat on the throne, as ſhut and ſealed; but the lion of the tribe of Judah, the Lamb in the midſt of the throne, having taken it out of his hand, unlooſed its ſeals, and opened it; and whereas we never read of his laying this book down, or of his delivering it to any other, he may be well ſuppoſed to be this mighty angel, who held it open in his hand: it may be ſaid to be a little book, becauſe now not only many of the ſcenes and viſions in it were exhibited, upon the opening of the ſeals; but becauſe at the time this viſion refers to, many of its prophecies were accompliſhed, ſo that the bulk of it was greatly reduced; and it may be repreſented as open, becauſe the ſeals of it were unlooſed, and the things in it revealed; and it is to be obſerved, that as the ſeveral ſeals of this book, and the opening of them, refer to the ſtate of the empire, both as pagan and as chriſtian, as has been ſeen; ſo the little book itſelf, clear of theſe ſeals, ſets forth the ſtate and condition of the church in the empire, under its different revolutions and appearances: and he ſet his right foot upon the ſea, and his left foot on the earth; which ſignifies that he was Lord and poſſeſſor of both, of the whole terraqueous globe, being the maker and ſupporter of it; and that his Goſpel ſhould be ſpread all over the world, both on the continent and in the iſlands of the ſea; and that his kingdom ſhould be from ſea to ſea, and from the rivers to the ends of the earth; that the abundance of the ſea ſhould be converted to him, or the maritime parts of the world ſhould be ſubject to the ſcepter of his grace and government; and that the earth, and the uttermoſt parts of it, ſhould be his poſſeſſion, tho' it was now almoſt wholly in the hands of the Turk and pope; and it may be obſerved, that he ſet his foot upon both earth and ſea, out of which the two beaſts ariſe, ch. xiii. 1, 11. which ſhall be deſtroyed by him.

Ver. 3. And cried with a loud voice, &c.] That all might hear, and to ſhew earneſtneſs and affection, and that it was a matter of great importance, as well as to denote the certainty of it; what he ſaid is not expreſſed, but ſeems to be the book-prophecy, or what regarded the ſtate of his church and kingdom, in the ſeveral periods of time to the blowing of the ſeventh trumpet, when the kingdoms of this world ſhall become his: and this voice of his was as when a lion roareth; loud and terrible; and indeed it was the voice of the lion of the tribe of Judah, which was heard far and near, throughout the whole world, by his people, and is terrible to his enemies: and when he had cried, ſeven thunders uttered their voices; which ſome underſtand of the miniſters of the Goſpel in the times of the reformation, who were Boanergeſſes, ſons of thunder, and think that they are the ſame with the angels in ch. xiv. 6, &c. or rather theſe may ſignify the denunciations of God's judgments, and of his wrath, both upon the eaſtern and weſtern antichriſt, the Turk and pope, ſignified by the ſeven vials, hereafter to be poured out, mentioned in ch. xvi.

Ver. 4. And when the ſeven thunders had uttered their voices, &c.] Or declared all they had to denounce upon the enemies of Chriſt and his church: I was about to write; John taking particular notice of what they ſaid, and believing it might be for the advantage, comfort, and ſupport, of the church of Chriſt under its ſuffering circumſtances, to be informed of what God had in reſerve among the treaſures of his wrath, for their adverſaries, was going to put it down in writing, that he might retain it, and the better communicate it, and in obedience to the order given him, ch. i. 19. and I heard a voice from heaven; from God the Father, for the Son of God in a viſionary way was come down from heaven, in the form before deſcribed; and this voice anſwers to the Bath Kol of the Jews, and is the ſame which ordered John to write, ch. xiv. 13. tho' it here forbad him: ſaying unto me, ſeal up thoſe things; treaſure them up in thy mind, keep them within thy breaſt, hide them from men, for the preſent, and ſay nothing of them: which the ſeven thunders have uttered, and write them not; that they may not be ſeen and read, at preſent, becauſe the ſame things were to be exhibited in another form, and at another time, under the ſeven vials; only it was thought proper that John ſhould have ſome intimations of them for his own advantage, and to prepare him for the following viſion, for the eating of the book, and for his propheſying before people, nations, tongues, and kings. Mr. Daubuz is of opinion, that by theſe ſeven thunders are meant ſeven kingdoms which have received the reformation, and eſtabliſhed it by law within their ſeveral dominions, whereby the doctrine and worſhip of the reformers are become the eſtabliſhed religion there; and the laws by which it is eſtabliſhed are the voices uttered by thoſe ſupreme authorities; and they are theſe, 1. The German princes, making one republick. 2. The Swiſs cantons. 3. Sweden. 4. Denmark, with Norway. 5. England and Ireland. 6. Scotland. 7. The United Provinces of the Netherlands: and whereas John, who repreſents the firſt reformers, and other faithful men, was for writing what theſe thunders uttered, this denotes the zeal and earneſt deſires of theſe good men to puſh the reformation further, and make a thorough work of it, as well as their expectation that now was the time in which the myſtery of God was to be fulfilled, in which they were miſtaken; wherefore John is bid to ſeal up theſe things, and not write them, which ſhows that the progreſs of the reformaton was to be ſtopped from doing fully what the firſt reformers were prompted to by the ſupreme powers which encouraged them, and that by the oppoſition of other temporal princes; it not being the will of God that the glorious ſtate of the church ſhould ariſe from theſe thunders, and be built on their laws and eſtabliſhments; and ſuggeſts, that this is not the time in which, nor theſe the ways and means, by which the myſtery of God will be finiſhed, which will not be until the ſeventh angel has ſounded his trumpet, ver. 7. whereas this period of time, to which the reformation belongs, is an event of the ſixth trumpet: and this expoſition bids very fair to be the right one.

Ver. 5. And the angel which I ſaw ſtand upon the ſea and upon the earth, &c.] His right foot being on the one, and his left foot upon the other, as deſcribed in ver. 2. lifted up his hand to heaven; the Oriental verſions read, his right-hand; and ſo ſome copies, and the Complutenſian edition: the man clothed in linnen, Dan. xii. 6, 7. who is the ſame with the angel here, held up both his hands; the lifting up of the hand was a geſture uſed in ſwearing; ſee Gen. xiv. 22. ſo the Jews ſay [o], the right-hand, or by the right hand, זו שבועה, this is an oath, according to Dan. xii. 7. or whether the right-hand or the left, is an oath, according to Iſ. lxii. 8.

Ver. 6. And ſware by him that liveth for ever and ever, &c.] That is, by the living God, who is the true God; and is ſo deſcribed to diſtinguiſh him from idol gods, who have no life nor breath in them; and to aſſert the excellency and perfection of his nature, who has life in himſelf originally, and independently, is the fountain of life to all creatures living, and who are ſupported in their life and being by him; and ſo he always was, is, and ever will be; this is the ſame as ſwearing by Anchialus [p]: who created heaven, and the things that therein are; the airy, ſtarry, and third heavens, and the inhabitants of them, the fowls of the air, the ſun, moon, and ſtars, and the angels of heaven, as well as the ſouls of departed ſaints, and the bodies of as many as are there: and the earth, and the things that therein are; men, beaſts, and creeping things, trees, herbs, minerals, &c. and the ſea, and the things which are therein; the ſeveral ſorts of fiſhes in it: this is alſo ſaid to diſtinguiſh the great God from all falſe gods, who made not the heavens and the earth, who alone is, and ought to be the object of an oath, or by whom an oath is to be made, and not any creature whatſoever; and ſince the angel that here ſwears is the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, this may be underſtood of him either as man, ſwearing by God the Father, in which reſpect the Father is greater than he; or as a divine perſon, and ſo ſwears by himſelf, Heb. vi. 13. for to himſelf do theſe characters belong of living for ever and ever, and of having made the heaven, earth, and ſea, and all in them: the thing he ſwears to is, that there ſhould be time no longer; which is not to be underſtood of the ceſſation of time, and the ſwallowing of it up in eternity, at the end of all things, when it will be no more meaſured out by the revolutions of the ſun and moon, which will then be no more; for this did not take place upon the angel's oath, or at the time this viſion refers to; for after this, there is to be time for the ſeventh angel to ſound his trumpet in, tho' perhaps that is excepted in the next verſe; and after the ſounding of that, there will be the ſpace of a thouſand years, in which Chriſt will reign with his people on earth; and after that there will be ſome ſpace of time for the Gog and Magog army to attack the beloved city; all which will be before the end of all things, or before eternity, properly ſpeaking, takes place; and beſides, ſuch an illuſtrious appearing of Chriſt as before deſcribed, and ſo ſolemn an oath as is here made, do not ſeem neceſſary to aſcertain a truth which no body doubts of; and every one knows that after this world, and all things in it are at an end, time will be no more. The true key to this paſſage is Dan. xii. 7. where the man clothed in linnen ſwears, that to the end of wonders ſhould be a time, times and a half, and here the angel ſwears that time ſhould be no longer; that is, that theſe time, and times and half a time, ſhould be no longer; that theſe dates would be up, and the events affixed to them be accompliſhed, when the ſeventh angel ſhould begin to ſound his trumpet: the ſame diviſions of time are made in Rev. xii. 14. and are the ſame exactly with the 1260 days, or years, and the forty-two months of years, ſo often mentioned in this book; for a time, is a prophetick year, that is, 360 years; and times are two prophetick years, or 720 years; and half a time is half a prophetic year, or 180 years, in all 1260 years: now add the ſeveral events to be accompliſhed in this period of time, and it will give the full ſenſe of this paſſage thus; the angel ſwears that the time of antichriſt's reign, his tyranny over the ſaints, his perſecution of them, which was to laſt forty-two months, Rev. xiii. 5. ſhould be no longer; nor of the holy city being trodden under foot by the Gentiles, the Papiſts, which bears the ſame date Rev. xi. 2. and is called the times of the Gentiles, Luke xxi. 24. nor of the witneſſes propheſying in ſackcloth, which has juſt the ſame meaſure of duration, Rev. xi. 3. nor of the church's retirement, and being hid in the wilderneſs, Rev. xii. 14. in ſhort, the time of the four monarchies, and of the laſt of them, the Roman, and of the laſt branch of that, the papal, ſhould be no more, than till the ſounding of the ſeventh trumpet, when the kingdoms of this world ſhall become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Chriſt, Rev. xi. 15. the words will bear to be rendered, as ſome have obſerved, that there ſhould be delay no longer; that is, of the coming and kingdom of Chriſt; tho' the bridegroom has tarried, he will come, and will not tarry beyond the time the angel ſwears to; every ſeal of the ſealed book is a delay of, and a ſtop upon the open appearance of Chriſt's kingdom; and the opening of every ſeal is an advance to it; and when the ſixth ſeal was opened, and paganiſm deſtroyed, and chriſtianity ſpread throughout the empire, the kingdom of Chriſt might have been expected to have appeared; but there was a ſeventh ſeal to be opened, which was a ſtop upon it, and which when opened brought ruin and deſtruction upon the chriſtian empire, both weſtern and eaſtern, under the ſix firſt trumpets; and till the ſeventh ſounds there will be a delay of Chriſt's kingdom, but when that ſounds, there will be no more a delay.

Ver. 7. But in the days of the voice of the ſeventh angel, when he ſhall begin to ſound, &c.] This is an exception to what the angel had ſaid and ſwore to, that time ſhould be no longer; but, or unleſs, or except the time of the voice of the ſeventh angel, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; when a new period and ſort of time ſhould begin, very different from the former, which then ſhould be no more; for now will be the time of Chriſt's kingdom on earth, which ſhall laſt a thouſand years; this time will not be like the former, a time of darkneſs and ignorance, as was in ſome periods, partly thro' the errors and hereſies which were propagated in early times, and thro' that barbarity and ignorance which the Goths, Huns, and Vandals ſpread over the empire, when they broke into it, and chiefly thro' the ſmoke of the bottomleſs pit, the falſe doctrine and worſhip of the Papiſts and Mahometans; but in the time of the ſeventh angel, all this groſs darkneſs will be removed, and it will be a time of unſpeakable and everlaſting light, ſo that there will be no need of the ſun and moon, of Goſpel-miniſtrations and ordinances: nor will it be a time of affliction and perſecution; time in that ſenſe will be no more, as it has been under the ten pagan emperors, and under the Arian emperors, and under the papal hierarchy; for in this period there will be no more death, ſorrow, crying, pain, and tears; tho' there will be time, it will be another ſort of time, quite different from the former, which will be no more when the ſeventh angel once begins; and as ſoon as he begins to ſound, this will put an end to antichriſtian time; and at the end of his ſounding will begin the time of Chriſt, or the thouſand years reign: and then the myſtery of God ſhould be finiſhed; that is, the angel not only ſwears that time ſhall be no longer, but that alſo then ſhall be finiſhed the myſtery of God; by which is meant, not the reſurrection of the dead, and the change of the living, which is called a myſtery, 1 Cor. xv. 51. for tho' when this angel ſounds, and has done ſounding, and Chriſt comes, the firſt reſurrection, or the reſurrection of the dead in Chriſt, will be finiſhed, yet not the whole reſurrection; for the reſt of the dead will not live again till the end of the thouſand years: but rather the Goſpel is deſigned, which is often called the myſtery, and the myſtery of the Goſpel, and contains many myſteries in it, which are ſtiled the myſteries of God; which reſpect him, his being, perſons, operations, and grace; and are revealed and made known by him; and the finiſhing of this may reſpect the preaching of the Goſpel to all nations, which will be before the end of the world, and whereby the earth will be filled with the knowledge of the Lord, and multitudes of ſouls converted; wherefore it may be beſt of all to underſtand this of the church of God, the general aſſembly and church of the firſt-born, even all the elect of God, whoſe number will now be finiſhed and compleated, in the converſion of the Jews, and in the bringing in the fullneſs of the Gentiles, both which are called myſteries, Rom. xi. 25, 26. Eph. iii. 4, 5, 6. and now as the antichriſtian church is called myſtery, Babylon, Rev. xvii. 5. and the myſtery of iniquity, 2 Theſſ. ii. 7. ſo the true chriſtian church, the new Jeruſalem, coming down from heaven, and prepared as a bride adorned for her huſband, may bear the name of the myſtery of God; and this may alſo take in the myſtery of all God's providences and promiſes, and prophecies, reſpecting the ſtate of his church and people on earth: as he hath declared to his ſervants and prophets; as to Iſaiah in ch. lx. 3, 4, 5, &c. and lxvi. 8. and to Daniel, in ch. ii. 44. and vii. 25. and xii. 6, 7. and to Zechariah, in ch. xiv. 9. and others; and which was a Goſpel declaration, as the word ſignifies; it was good news and glad tidings; glorious things were declared to them, and ſpoken by them, concerning the city and church of God, its happy ſtate on earth, and Chriſt's reign in it.

Ver. 8. And the voice which I heard from heaven, &c.] In ver. 4. ſpake to me again, and ſaid, go and take the little book which is open in the hand of the angel which ſtandeth upon the ſea and upon the earth; as John was to propheſy, ver. 11. it was neceſſary that he ſhould have a miſſion and a commiſſion from heaven; and that he ſhould have the open book of prophecy to propheſy out of; and that he ſhould receive this from the angel's hands, who had unlooſed its ſeals, and opened it: and juſt ſo to ordinary propheſying, or preaching, it is neceſſary that men ſhould have their commiſſion from heaven, ſhould be called of God, and ſent by him; and that they ſhould have the book of the ſcriptures before them, and open to them, and ſpeak according to theſe oracles, agreeable to the law and to the teſtimony, which are profitable for doctrine; and that they ſhould alſo receive the Goſpel, and the doctrines of it, with gifts, and a commiſſion to preach it, from the angel of the covenant, Jeſus Chriſt, who has all power both in heaven and in earth; ſee ver. 2.

Ver. 9. And I went to the angel, &c.] According to the order given him; he was not diſobedient to the heavenly viſion; and, indeed, whither ſhould any go for knowledge but to him who has the words of eternal life, and is the great prophet of the church? and to whom ſhould John go to qualify him for propheſying, but to him, who as man and mediator, had this revelation of future things given him? ch. i. 1. and ſaid unto him, give me the little book; he did not take it without his leave, but in a modeſt and humble manner aſks him to give it him, that he might deliver out the prophecies in it to others: ſo ordinary prophets and miniſters of the word ſhould go to Chriſt, to have their eyes opened, their underſtandings enlightned, that they may underſtand the ſcriptures, and explain them to others: and he ſaid unto me, take it and eat it up; which muſt be underſtood not literally, but myſtically; and the ſenſe is this, take the book, and diligently peruſe it, and with as much eagerneſs as an hungry man would eat a meal; ſo greedy are ſome perſons of reading, and as it were of devouring books; hence Cicero called [q] Cato, Helluo librorum, A glutton at books: and in ſuch manner John is bid to take and eat this book, and look into it, and read it over diligently, and conſider what was in it, and meditate upon it, and digeſt the things contained in it, and lay them up in his mind and memory; and for the preſent hide and conceal them, in like manner as he was bid to ſeal, and not write what the ſeven thunders uttered; and ſo, tho' this book is repreſented to him as open in the angel's hand, yet he muſt take it and eat it, and hide it in his belly, becauſe the things in it as yet were not to be accompliſhed: ſo for ordinary propheſying, or preaching, the miniſters of the word ſhould diligently read the ſcriptures, conſtantly meditate on them, digeſt the truths of the Goſpel in their own minds, and lay them up in the treaſury of their hearts, and bring them forth from thence in due ſeaſon: and it ſhall make thy belly bitter, but it ſhall be in thy mouth ſweet as honey; as Ezekiel's roll was to him when he eat it, Ezek. iii. 1, 2, 3. the Alexandrian copy, inſtead of thy belly, reads thy heart.

Ver. 10. And I took the little book out of the angel's hand, and ate it up, &c.] As he was bid to do: and it was in my mouth ſweet as honey; ſo is the Goſpel in the mouth of a faithful miniſter of it, who has a ſpiritual knowledge, and a ſavoury experience of it; and ſo it is in the mouth of an underſtanding hearer, who finds it, and eats it, to the joy and rejoicing of his heart; and ſo this little book of prophecy being looked into, read, and conſidered by John, the firſt taſte and knowledge he had of the things contained in it were exceeding grateful and delightful; the view it gave him of the glorious ſtate of the church and kingdom of Chriſt on earth, filled him with unſpeakable pleaſure: and as ſoon as I had eaten it, my belly was bitter; ſo the miniſtration of the Goſpel occaſions bitterneſs, grief, and ſorrow, to the preachers and profeſſors of it, thro' the perſecutions that attend it, the obſtinacy and hardneſs of mens hearts againſt it, and its being the ſavour of death unto death to many that hear it; and ſo the little book of prophecy, upon a peruſal of it, giving to John a view of the witneſſes propheſying in ſackcloth, and of their bodies being killed, and lying expoſed in the ſtreets of the great city, and of the church's flying into the wilderneſs, and continuing there for a time and times, and half a time, and of the barbarities and cruelties exerciſed on the ſaints by the whore of Rome, whom he ſaw made drunk with their blood, made his belly bitter, or filled him with ſorrow, grief, and pain.

Ver. 11. And he ſaid unto me, &c.] That is the angel, from whom John received the little book; the Alexandrian copy reads, they ſaid unto me; both the voice of God the Father from heaven, that bid him take the book, and the angel that bid him eat it: thou muſt propheſy again before many people, and nations, and tongues, and kings; which is to be underſtood not of John's preaching again to many people, and nations, after his return from his exile at Patmos, as he had done before his baniſhment thither; and much leſs of his propheſying along with Enoch and Elias, towards the end of the world, grounded upon two fabulous notions, the one that Enoch and Elias will appear in perſon before the coming of Chriſt, and the other, that John died not, but is ſtill alive ſome where, and will continue till Chriſt's ſecond coming; but rather of his delivering more prophecies out of the open little book; not before, as we render it, but either concerning many people, nations, tongues, and kings, as the Syriac verſion renders it; or againſt them, that is, thoſe people, multitudes, nations, and tongues, over which the whore of Babylon reigns, or has reigned, and the ten kings, and kings of the earth ſhe rules over, Rev. xvii. 12, 13, 15, 18. Moreover, this may not ſo much deſign John's propheſying in perſon, as the propheſying of the witneſſes, or miniſters of the word in the ſeveral periods of time, whom John perſonated and repreſented; and of whom mention is made in the next chapter, to which this ſeems to be a tranſition.

[q] Cicero de Finibus Bon. & Mal. l. 3. c. 1.

CHAP. XI.

THIS chapter contains the order to meaſure the temple of God; an account of the two witneſſes, their propheſying and power, their ſlaying, reſurrection, and aſcenſion to heaven, with what followed upon it; and the ſounding of the ſeventh trumpet, and the effects of that. A meaſuring rod is given to John, with an order to riſe and meaſure the temple, altar, and worſhippers, and to leave out the outer-court, which was to be given to the Gentiles, who tread the holy city under foot forty and two months, ver. 1, 2. the ſame date with the 1260 days the witneſſes propheſy in ſackcloth, ver. 3. who are compared to two olive-trees and to two candleſticks, and are ſaid to ſtand before God, ver. 4. and who are further deſcribed, by their power to deſtroy thoſe that hurt them, with fire that proceeds out of their mouths; to ſhut the heaven, that it rain not during their prophecy; to turn water into blood, and ſmite the earth with all manner of plagues at pleaſure, ver. 5, 6. but when the time of their prophecy and teſtimony is expired, their enemies will have the advantage of them; the antichriſtian beaſt of Rome, deſcribed by the place of his aſcent, the bottomleſs pit, will fight againſt them, overcome, and kill them; their dead bodies will be expoſed publickly within the Roman juriſdiction, and not ſuffered to be interred; and their enemies will make a publick and general rejoicing over them, ver. 7, 8, 9, 10. but after a ſhort ſpace of time, they will revive, and ſtand upon their feet, to the ſurprize of all ſpectators; and being invited by a voice from heaven, will aſcend thither, in the ſight of their enemies; upon which will be an earthquake, in which the tenth part of the city of Rome will fall, and ſeven thouſand men be ſlain; which will cauſe conſternation in the reſt, and put them upon giving glory to God, ver. 11, 12, 13. and this will put an end to the ſecond wo, and the third will quickly follow, ver. 14. which is the ſounding of the ſeventh trumpet; the effects of which are, voices heard in heaven, declaring that the kingdoms of the world are become Chriſt's, and that he ſhall reign for ever and ever, ver. 15. upon which the four and twenty elders that ſat on their ſeats before God, congratulate him, worſhip, and give thanks unto him, as the Lord God Almighty and eternal; partly becauſe of his viſible power and kingdom he now takes to himſelf; and partly becauſe the time of avenging his people that had ſuffered for him upon the nations, which makes them angry, was now come; as alſo becauſe now would be given rewards to all his prophets, ſaints, and thoſe that feared him, as well as antichriſt and his followers would be deſtroyed, ver. 16, 17, 18. and other effects of this trumpet are, the opening of the temple of God in heaven, a ſight of the ark of the teſtament, lightnings, voices, thundrings, an earthquake, and great hail, ver. 19.

Ver. 1. And there was given me a reed like unto a rod, &c.] A meaſuring reed, which with the Jews was ſix cubits long, Ezek. xl. 5. with the Greeks and Romans ten feet long; the Ethiopic verſion here calls it a golden reed, as in ch. xxi. 15. This was given unto John very likely by the ſame angel that gave him the little book, ſince he afterwards bids him ariſe and meaſure with it; and by it ſeems to be deſigned the holy ſcripture, or the word of God, which is ſometimes called a line, a rule, and rod, Pſ. xix. 4. and cx. 2. Gal. vi. 16. and which is the rule and meaſure of doctrine and faith; and by it all doctrine is to be tried and meaſured, and whatſoever is not agreeable to it, is not of God, nor to be received, but rejected; and it is the rule and meaſure of all diſcipline, worſhip, and practice; it lays down the plan of a Goſpel church, which ſhould be gathered out of the world, and ſeparated from it; it ſhows who are the proper materials of it, what officers are to be conſtituted in it, and what ordinances are to be adminiſtred, and what laws and rules ſhould be obſerved in receiving and rejecting of members, and according to which the whole community ſhould walk; in ſhort, it directs to all the forms, laws, and ordinances of God's houſe; and this is the uſe John, or thoſe whom he perſonates, were to make of it: and the angel ſtood; the ſame that ſtood with his right foot on the ſea, and his left foot on the earth, and gave to John the little book, ch. x. 1, 2, 9. tho' it may be not in the ſame place and ſituation, but rather at the gate of the temple, as in Ezek. xl. 3. This clauſe is not in the Vulgate Latin, Arabic and Ethiopic verſions, but is in the Syriac verſion and Complutenſian edition, and is rightly retained, or otherwiſe it would ſeem as if the reed ſpoke: ſaying, riſe and meaſure the temple of God, and the altar, and them that worſhip therein; the alluſion is to the temple of Jeruſalem, with its appurtenances; there were the moſt holy place, and the holy place, which was the inner court of the prieſts, into which they only entered, which was ſtrictly ſpeaking the temple, and is referred to here; and there was the altar of burnt-offering, which was in the court of the prieſts, and the altar of incenſe, which was before the vail that divided between the holy and holy of holies; and then there was the outer court for all the Iſraelites to worſhip in, referred to in the next verſe: and by the temple of God is here meant the church, of which the temple was a type; and ſo particular congregated churches are called temples, 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17. 2 Cor. vi. 16. Eph. ii. 21. Solomon, a man of peace, was the builder of the one, and Chriſt, the prince of peace, the builder of the other; Solomon's temple was built of hewn ſtones, made ready before they were brought thither, and a true church of Chriſt conſiſts of lively ſtones, hewed and fitted for this ſpiritual building by the Spirit of God; the temple at Jeruſalem was built on a high mountain, and on the north of the city, the church is built upon the rock Chriſt Jeſus, and the Goſpel church, or churches, in the times of the ſixth trumpet, which this viſion refers to, and to the cloſe of it, are in the northern parts of Europe; and as the temple was for religious uſe and ſervice, for the worſhip of God, and ſacrifices, ſo is the Goſpel church, and ſo are Goſpel churches, for the miniſtry of the word, and adminiſtration of ordinances, and for the offering up the ſacrifices of prayer and praiſe; and as in the moſt holy place were the ark of the covenant, and the mercy-ſeat, and as it was the place of the divine preſence, where God granted communion to his people, ſo in the church are held forth the myſteries of the covenant, Chriſt as the mercy-ſeat and the propitiatory, in whom the diſplays of grace are made, and through whom the ſaints have fellowſhip with God, and enjoy his preſence: the altar may deſign Chriſt himſelf, by whom the ſaints draw nigh to God, offer up their ſacrifices, and are accepted with him; or the whole of Goſpel worſhip and ordinances, as prayer, preaching, ſinging of praiſe, and the adminiſtration of baptiſm and the Lord's ſupper: and they that worſhip therein, or thereat, are the royal prieſthood, or ſuch who are made kings and prieſts unto God, for none went into the inner court, or ſerved at the altar, but prieſts; and who make uſe of Chriſt the altar, of his perſon, blood, righteouſneſs, and ſacrifice, in their approaches to God; and who are praying ſouls, wait at the altar of incenſe, and draw nigh to the throne of grace with a true heart, and worſhip God in ſpirit and in truth: now meaſuring of theſe, reſpects not the primitive church for the firſt three or four hundred years, and the formation of that according to the rule of God's word, and as a pattern to other churches; for tho' the apoſtolical church, or the church as it was in the Apoſtles time, and as deſcribed in their writings, was ſuch a church; yet the church, for ſuch a ſpace of time as above, was not; there were great departures both from doctrine and diſcipline, the myſtery of iniquity began to work, and way was made for the man of ſin; and it was far from being a pattern to be imitated; and beſides, this meaſuring refers to the times of the ſixth trumpet, and the cloſe of it: nor does it reſpect the ſealing of the 144000 between the ſixth ſeal and the opening of the ſeventh ſeal, which was for the protection and ſecurity of them, during the times of the ſix trumpets, which brought deſolation into the empire, and apoſtacy into the church; tho' meaſuring ſometimes may ſeem to denote protection, as in Zech. ii. 1, 2, 5. and tho' the outer court is, and will be a protection to ſpiritual worſhippers, ſo long as it is not in the hands of the Gentiles, yet this is not the ſenſe, at leaſt not the whole of it: nor does this refer to the hiding of the church in the wilderneſs, during the reign of antichriſt; which might ſeem to be ſignified by the internal worſhippers retiring to the altar, and to the holy and the moſt holy place, and being concealed there; and eſpecially ſince the opening of the temple in ver. 19. may ſeem to be oppoſed to this; but that takes in too large a compaſs of time, this being an affair relating only to the cloſe of the ſixth trumpet, and which was to be before the ſeventh trumpet ſounded: it ſeems rather to reſpect the times of the reformation by Luther, Calvin, and others, when the meaſuring reed of the word was taken in hand, and uſed; but then it was uſed chiefly for the reſtoration of pure doctrine, and with good ſucceſs, but not ſo much for the regulating, and orderly diſcipline of the churches, for the purity of Goſpel worſhip and ordinances; moſt, if not all the reformed churches, ſet out upon too broad a bottom, being national, provincial, or parochial; there was a temple, and an altar erected for God, and there were internal and ſpiritual worſhippers; but then they took in the outward court, which ſhould not have been meaſured in, and circumſcribed with them, but ſhould have been left out; but the time for this was not yet come, but now is: in ſhort, I take it that this meaſuring refers to what was done in the laſt age, particularly in our nation; and that it has reſpect to the ſeparation from the national church, when churches, more or leſs, were gathered and formed according to the Goſpel plan, and the primitive inſtitution; a work which never was ſet about, and ſo effectually done before, ſince the age of the Apoſtles: the baptized and congregational churches are the temple, altar, and worſhippers meaſured, who have both the true doctrine, worſhip, and diſcipline of God's houſe among them; a ſett of men in the laſt age were raiſed up, who drew a plan of churches, and of church-diſcipline, according to the antient model; gathered churches out of the world, and conſtituted them according to the order of the Goſpel; circumſcribed them, and incloſed them according to the rules of God's word, admitting none but ſuch into communion who were judged by the churches ſubjects of the grace of God; and rejected and excluded from among them ſuch as were wicked and ſcandalous; and ſo reduced the pure members of churches to a ſmall number, a little flock, a few names in Sardis: and I am of opinion that the meaſuring reed muſt be uſed again; we have got of late, thro' negligence, or a want of a ſpirit of diſcerning, too many of the outward court among us; who muſt be left out, in order to be given up to other hands, as follows.

Ver. 2. But the court which is without the temple, leave out, and meaſure it not, &c.] The alluſion is to the court of the Iſraelites, where was the great croud and company of worſhippers, even the national church of the Jews, called by Ezekiel the outer court, ch. xlii. 14. and xlvi. 21. and which was meaſured in Ezek. xlii. 20. but this muſt not be meaſured: this deſigns not the viſible church apoſtatized, as ſucceeding the pure, primitive, and apoſtolical church, or the apoſtate church of Rome, antichriſt and his followers, for theſe are meant by the Gentiles, to whom this outward court is given; this outward court, or the worſhippers in it, intend a diſtinct ſett of worſhippers from the internal worſhippers, the prieſts of God, in the temple, altar, and inner court, and from the Gentiles, the Papiſts; and are no other than carnal Proteſtants, the bulk of the reformed churches, who have only the name, but not the nature of living chriſtians, have a form of godlineſs, but deny its power, are Jews outwardly, but not inwardly, and worſhip only in an external manner, attend to outward forms and ceremonies, but know nothing of true doctrine, pure worſhip, or ſpiritual religion; and which are very numerous, as the worſhippers in the outward court were: now theſe, upon a new meaſuring and regulating of the churches, are ordered to be left, or caſt out, and not taken into the dimenſions of the Goſpel church; theſe were to be ſeparated from, and have been, and not to be admitted members of regular and orderly conſtituted churches, and which is here reckoned a ſort of caſting of them out; the reaſon of which follows: for it is given unto the Gentiles; by whom are meant the Papiſts, who are no other than paganized chriſtians, having introduced a great deal of Gentiliſm into the divine ſervice; as the worſhipping of the virgin Mary, angels, and ſaints departed, which is in imitation of the dæmon-worſhip of the heathens; as alſo the dedication of their churches to ſaints, their ſaints days, divers feſtivals, and many other rites and ceremonies, are plainly of pagan original; and therefore they may very well be called by this name: now it ſeems by theſe words that the bulk of the reformed churches, the croud of outward-court worſhippers, will be gained over to the Popiſh party, and fall off to the church of Rome, to which their doctrines and practices are plainly verging; the pope of Rome, as low a condition as he now is in, will be ſet in ſtatu quo, before his utter deſtruction; he will regain all his former dominions, and be in poſſeſſion of them, at the time of his ruin; the whore of Rome, the antichriſtian Babylon, will ſit as a queen, and promiſe herſelf a great deal of peace and pleaſure, the inward-court worſhippers and witneſſes being ſlain, and ſhe reſtored to all her former power and grandeur; when in one day, on a ſudden, her deſtruction will come upon her, when the term of the beaſt's reign will be expired, mentioned in the next clauſe: and the holy city ſhall they tread under foot forty and two months; by the holy city is meant all the kingdoms of Europe, or what has been called Chriſtendom, the weſtern empire as chriſtian, the main ſeat of the chriſtian religion, or all the churches ſtiled chriſtian, and ſo called in alluſion to Jeruſalem, which bears this name, Matt. iv. 5. and which was ſtill of a far larger extent than the outward court: the treading of this under foot, does not barely deſign poſſeſſing of it, or worſhipping in the ſame place, as the phraſe of treading in the courts does in Iſ. i. 12. but a tyrannical power over it, and a waſting, ſpoiling, and deſtroying it, in alluſion to Jeruſalem being trodden under foot, waſted and deſtroyed by the Gentiles, or the Romans, Luke xxi. 24. and the duration of this tyrannical and oppreſſive reign will be forty and two months; ſee Rev. xiii. 5. which being reduced to years, make juſt three years and a half: but then this date can't be underſtood ſtrictly and literally; for ſuch a term can never be ſufficient for the whore's reign, who was to rule over the kings of the earth, and all nations were to drink of the wine of her fornication: this is too ſhort a time for her to gain ſo much power, honour, and riches in, as the 13th, 17th, and 18th chapters of this book ſhew, as well as too ſhort for the afflictions and perſecutions of the ſaints by her; wherefore this muſt be underſtood prophetically of ſo many months of years; and a month with the Chaldeans conſiſting of thirty days, and a year of 360 days, which account Daniel uſed, and John after him, forty-two months, reckoning a day for a year, after the prophetic ſtile, make 1260 years; which is the exact time of the witneſſes propheſying in ſackcloth, of the church's being hid and nouriſhed in the wilderneſs, and of the beaſt's reign, and ſo of the holy city being trodden under foot. Now this date is not to be reckoned from the outer court being given to the Gentiles, but from the firſt of antichriſt's reign, when the pope of Rome was declared univerſal biſhop; and is only here mentioned, to ſhew, that the giving of the outward court to his Gentiles, will be towards the expiration of this date.

Ver. 3. And I will give power unto my two witneſſes, &c.] By whom are meant, not Enoch and Elias, as ſome of the ancient fathers thought, who, they ſuppoſed, would come before the appearance of Chriſt, and oppoſe antichriſt, and be ſlain by him, which ſenſe the Papiſts greedily catch at; nor are the ſcriptures, the two Teſtaments, Old and New, deſigned, tho' their name and number agree, and alſo their office, which is to teſtify of Chriſt; but then to be clothed in ſackcloth, to be killed, and riſe again, and aſcend to heaven, are things that can't ſo well be accommodated to them: but theſe witneſſes intend the miniſters of the Goſpel, and churches of Chriſt, who have bore teſtimony for Chriſt, and againſt antichriſt, ever ſince he appeared in the world; and particularly the churches and miniſters in Piedmont bid fair for this character; who were upon the ſpot when antichriſt aroſe, always bore their proteſt againſt him, and were ever independent of the church of Rome, and ſubſiſted in the midſt of the darkneſs of the apoſtacy; and ſuffered much, and very great perſecutions from the Papiſts; and have ſtood their ground, and continue to this day; and have been like olive-trees and candleſticks, imparting oil and light to others. Tho' they ought not to be conſidered excluſive of other miniſters and churches, who alſo have bore, and ſtill do bear a witneſs for Chriſt, and againſt the idolatries of the church of Rome: no two individual perſons can be meant, ſince theſe witneſſes were to propheſy 1260 days, that is, ſo many years, but a ſucceſſion of miniſters and churches; and theſe are called two, both on account of the fewneſs of them, and becauſe the teſtimony of two is ſufficient to confirm any matter; and it may be in alluſion to the various inſtances of two eminent perſons, being raiſed up at certain periods of time, as Moſes and Aaron, at the deliverance of the children of Iſrael out of Egypt; Caleb and Joſhua at their entrance into Canaan; Elijah and Eliſhah in the idolatrous times of Ahab; and Joſhua and Zerubbabel at the rebuilding and finiſhing of the ſecond temple. Now the angel, and who is Chriſt, here promiſes, that he will give ſomething to theſe witneſſes: ſome ſupply the words, I will give it; that is, the holy city, or the church, to them, to be taken care of, and defended; others, I will give them a mouth, and wiſdom, which their adverſaries ſhall not be able to reſiſt, according to the promiſe in Luke xxi. 15. We ſupply the words, I will give power; that is, authority to preach the Goſpel, and ſtrength to profeſs it, and to continue to bear a teſtimony to it, ſignified by propheſying; ſee 1 Cor. xiv. 1, 3. And they ſhall propheſy; that is, that they may propheſy; which is ſupported by the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions, the former rendering the words, I will give to my two witneſſes to propheſy, and the latter, I will give in command to my two witneſſes that they may propheſy; the ſenſe is, that Chriſt will give to them a miſſion and commiſſion, ſufficient authority, all needful gifts and grace, courage and preſence of mind to preach his Goſpel, to hold forth his word, and bear a teſtimony for him during the whole time of the apoſtacy, even a thouſand two hundred and threeſcore days; that is, ſo many years, which, as before obſerved, is the date of the beaſt's reign, of the holy city being trodden under foot of the Gentiles, and of the church's retirement into the wilderneſs: it is obſervable, that the date of the beaſt's reign and tyranny is expreſſed by months, and the date of the church's being in the wilderneſs, and the propheſying of the witneſſes is ſignified by days; and the reaſon which ſome give is not deſpicable, as that the beaſt, and his followers, are the children of darkneſs, and of the night, over which the moon preſides, from whence months are numbered; and the church, and the witneſſes, are children of the day, over which the ſun rules. The habit of theſe witneſſes, during their time of propheſying, follows, clothed in ſackcloth; expreſſive either of their outward ſtate and condition, being poor, mean, and abject, whilſt the followers of the beaſt are clad in ſilks, and live deliciouſly; or elſe of the inward frame of their minds, as mourning for the ſad eſtate of the church of Chriſt, groaning under the tyranny and perſecutions of antichriſt.

Ver. 4. Theſe are the two olive trees, &c.] Or repreſented by the two olive trees in Zech. iv. 3, 11, 12, 13, 14. which there deſign Joſhuah and Zerubbabel; and who in laying out themſelves, their gifts and wealth, in rebuilding and finiſhing the temple, were types of theſe witneſſes, the miniſters of the Goſpel, in the ſucceſſive ages of the apoſtacy; who may be compared to olive trees, becauſe of the oil of grace, and the truth of it in them; and becauſe of the gifts of the Spirit of God beſtowed on them, or their having that anointing which teacheth all things; and becauſe they freely impart their gifts, and the golden oil of the Goſpel unto others, and alſo bring the good tidings of peace and ſalvation by Chriſt, of which the olive leaf is a ſymbol; and becauſe they are like the olive tree, fat, flouriſhing, and fruitful in ſpiritual things; they are ſons of oil, and God's anointed ones: and the two candleſticks; which hold forth the light of the word, in the midſt of popiſh darkneſs: this ſhows that churches, as well as miniſters, are deſigned by the witneſſes, ſince the candleſticks are explained of the churches, ch. i. 20. tho' the ſimile well agrees with miniſters of the word, who are the lights of the world, or hold forth the light of the Goſpel, which is put into them by Chriſt: and theſe olive trees and candleſticks are repreſented as ſtanding before the God of the earth; miniſtring unto him, enjoying his preſence, and having his aſſiſtance, and being under his protection. The Alexandrian copy, the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions read, the Lord of the earth; and ſo the Complutenſian edition; ſee Zech. iv. 14. and vi. 5.

Ver. 5. And if any man will hurt them, &c.] Do any injury to their perſons, or properties, oppoſe their writings, blaſpheme their doctrines, and hinder their miniſtrations; whoever they be, whether they be any that live among them, or in other parts; whether they be ſecret or open enemies; or whether they be of the outward court, or be really Gentiles or Papiſts; and eſpecially if they do them any injuſtice, if they wrong, oppreſs, afflict, and diſtreſs them knowingly and willingly: fire proceedeth out of their mouth; by which may be meant the word of God, which they preach and hold forth, which is comparable to fire, Jer. xxiii. 29. both for light, it being a means of enlightening ſinners, who are darkneſs itſelf; and of directing ſaints in their walk and converſation; and of detecting the errors, immoralities, idolatry, and ſuperſtition of men, and particularly of the church of Rome; who can't bear the light of this word, and therefore forbid the reading of it to the laity, and keep it locked up from them in the Latin tongue: and alſo for the heat of it, it being the means of quickening, or of conveying a vital heat to dead ſinners; and of warming and comforting the ſaints, cauſing their hearts to burn within them, whilſt they hear or read it, or meditate upon it; and of ſcorching and tormenting reprobate ſinners, and filling them with wrath, pain, and anguiſh, eſpecially the followers of antichriſt; and this is greatly deſigned, for this has a particular reference to the pouring out of the fourth vial, Rev. xvi. 9. Likewiſe, the word of God may be compared to fire for its purity in itſelf, for every word of his is pure; and for its purifying nature, when faithfully preached, and powerfully applied, it penetrates deep, it ſearches, and diſcovers, and purges from the droſs of prophaneneſs, falſe doctrine, and will-worſhip; and for its conſuming nature, as follows, it pronouncing damnation to unbelievers and impenitent ſinners, and it being the ſavour of death unto death to ſuch: or elſe the prayers of theſe witneſſes are intended by the fire that proceeds out of their mouth, for vengeance on their enemies, who hinder their miniſtrations, blaſpheme the truth, and ſhed their blood; which do not ariſe from a paſſionate and revengeful ſpirit, but from a pure zeal for the glory of God, and the honour of his name, and truth; and which prayers are heard by God, who will avenge his elect, that cry unto him day and night: the alluſion is to the fire, which, at the requeſt of Moſes, came forth from the Lord, and deſtroyed two hundred and fifty perſons, that oppoſed him and Aaron; and to the fire which Elias called for from heaven, upon the captains, and the fifties, that came to take him, who were types of theſe witneſſes; ſee Numb. xvi. 3, 29, 35. 2 Kings i. 9, 10, 11, 12. And alſo this fire may denote the denunciations of God's wrath by them upon the antichriſtian party, theſe being as wood, and their words as fire, to conſume them; ſee Jer. v. 14. Rev. xiv. 9, 10, 11, 18. And devoureth their enemies; whether open or ſecret; juſt as the fire devoured Nadab and Abihu, the offerers of ſtrange fire, which the Lord commanded not; ſo the fire out of the mouth of God's faithful ſervants, devours ſuch who introduce divers and ſtrange doctrines, and the inventions of men into the church of God; the light of God's word convinces and confounds them, tho' it may not convert them; it flaſhes in their conſciences, and diſtreſſes them, ſo that they gnaw their tongues for pain; there being nothing but a fearful looking for of judgment, and fiery indignation, which ſhall devour and deſtroy them, tho' not corporally, yet ſpiritually and eternally; for even theſe ſhall afterwards make war againſt them, conquer them, and ſlay them, and ſhall ſee them aſcend to heaven, ver. 7, 12. And if any man will hurt them, he muſt in this manner be killed; this is repeated, partly to ſhew the certainty of this deſtruction; and partly to point out the manner of it, which will be not by the uſe of carnal weapons: theſe enemies of the witneſſes will not be killed by the ſword, or any other weapon, but by the word of God, and thro' the prayers of the ſaints, and by the denunciations of God's judgments on them. The Jews expreſs the doctrines and traditions of their Rabbins, delivered from one to another, by fire, proceeding out of their mouths; who ſay [r], "Rab ſat before Rabbi, and there went forth, "זיקוקין דנור מפומיה, ſparks of fire, from the "mouth of Rab, into the mouth of Rabbi, and from "the mouth of Rabbi, into the mouth of Rab;" which the Gloſs explains of their communicating their doctrines and traditions to one another.

Ver. 6. Theſe have power to ſhut heaven, &c.] For theſe have the keys of the kingdom of heaven given them, and whatever they bind or looſe on earth, is bound or looſed in heaven; or in other words; having the true key of knowledge in matters, both of doctrine and diſcipline, given them, whatever they declare, according to the word of God, to be doctrines fit to be received or rejected, and to be the ordinances of God, and matters of worſhip to be attended to, and what are not, ſhould be ſo: and in particular, that it rain not in the days of their prophecy; that is, on their enemies, the antichriſtian party; for otherwiſe it muſt rain on thoſe to whom they miniſter, their prophecy itſelf being rain in a ſpiritual ſenſe: ſo rain is explained of prophecy in the Targum on Iſ. v. 6. which paraphraſes the words thus; "I will command the "prophets that they do not propheſy upon them "prophecy:" for this is to be underſtood not literally, ſince the days of their prophecy, or preaching in ſackcloth, are 1260, that is, 1260 years, and which is the term and duration of antichriſt's reign: wherefore, if this was the caſe, there muſt be a famine and great diſtreſs, during this long ſpace of time; but as this is not matter of fact, ſo it would not comport with that plenty, luxury, and deliciouſneſs, in which the whore of Babylon is ſaid to live: but the words are to be taken in a ſpiritual ſenſe, and to be underſtood of the Goſpel, and doctrines of it, or the word of God, which is ſometimes compared to rain, Deut. xxxii. 2. Iſ. lv. 10, 11. God is the author and giver of rain, and he only; none of the vanities, or idols of the Gentiles, can give it; has the rain a father? it has, but not on earth, only God who is in heaven; and ſo the Goſpel is of God, and it is he only that can make men able miniſters of it; the rain comes down from above, from heaven, and of the ſame original and deſcent is the Goſpel, it is the voice ſpeaking from heaven; the rain falls, according to divine direction, in one place, and not another, on one city, and not another; and ſo the Goſpel is ſometimes in one place, and ſometimes in another; it is forbid here, and ordered there. Showers of rain moiſten and ſoften the earth, and make it ſuſceptive of ſeed; and the Goſpel is the means of ſoftening hard hearts, and of making them capable of receiving ſuitable impreſſions: rain refreſhes the earth, revives the plants and trees, and makes them fruitful; and ſo the Goſpel, attended with a divine bleſſing, refreſhes drooping ſaints, revives the work of God in them, and is the means of filling them with all the fruits of righteouſneſs. Now the with-holding of this rain denotes a famine, not of bread, or a thirſt for water, but of hearing the word of the Lord; and as it is a judgment on a nation, or on a city, not to be rained upon, ſo it is a ſpiritual judgment upon a people, when God commands his clouds, his miniſters, to rain no rain of the Goſpel on them; and it is one of the judgments upon the antichriſtian party, that they have not the Goſpel preached unto them, nor any dew of powerful and efficacious grace diſtilled on them, but are left to their blindneſs, darkneſs, and hardneſs of heart: and theſe witneſſes carrying the Goſpel along with them, where they propheſy and preach, is called a ſhutting up heaven, ſo that it rain not on the followers of antichriſt, from whom they ſeparate themſelves, or by whom they are caſt out; and this is aſcribed to them, and is owing to their removal or ejection; much in the ſame ſenſe as the night and darkneſs are to the ſun's remove; that is, theſe follow upon it. The alluſion is to the with-holding of rain in the times of Elijah, one of the types of theſe witneſſes, becauſe of the idolatries of Ahab and Jezabel, 1 Kings xvii. 1. and xviii. 1, 41, 45. In like manner is the rain of the Goſpel with-held during the reign of antichriſt, becauſe of the idolatry and ſuperſtition of the apoſtacy. And have power over waters to turn them to blood; by waters are meant people, multitudes, nations, and tongues, and particularly thoſe over whom antichriſt reigns, Rev. xvii. 15. and turning of them into blood, deſigns the confuſions and wars raiſed among them on account of the propheſying of theſe witneſſes, and the perſecutions and blood-ſhed which followed upon it; which eventually are the end and iſſue of preaching the Goſpel; ſee Matt. x. 34, 35. The alluſion is to one of the plagues of Egypt, and to Moſes and Aaron, who were types of theſe witneſſes turning the waters of Egypt into blood, Exod. vii. 20. and anſwers to the ſecond and third vials, Rev. xvi. 3, 4. And to ſmite the earth with all plagues as often as they will; alluding to the plagues of Egypt, one of the names of Rome, or the Roman juriſdiction, in a following verſe, and which is meant by the earth here; and referring to the reſt of the ſeven vials poured out by theſe witneſſes, ſignified by ſeven angels; and their having power ſo to do as often as they will, is to be underſtood of theſe plagues being inflicted on the inhabitants of the earth, or followers of antichriſt, in anſwer to their propheſies and prayers, which are made according to the will of God, and ſo always have their effect, being ſuch.

[r] T. Bab. Cholin, fol. 137. 2. Juchaſin, fol. 113. 2.

Ver. 7. And when they ſhall have finiſhed their teſtimony, &c.] For Chriſt, his truths and ordinances; when they are about to finiſh it, and almoſt concluded it, even towards the cloſe of the 1260 days or years, in which they muſt propheſy in ſackcloth: or elſe their teſtimony and their propheſying may be conſidered as two diſtinct things, and the one be finiſhed before the other; their open public teſtimony, as witneſſes, ſo as to be heard, attended to, and received, will be finiſhed before the laſt war of the beaſt againſt them, in which they'll be killed; but their propheſying will continue to the end of the beaſt's reign, theſe two being cotemporary, of equal date, beginning and ending together; for they'll propheſy, when they are dead; being dead they'll yet ſpeak, and their very death will be a propheſying or foretelling, that the ruin of antichriſt is at hand; and upon their reſurrection and aſcenſion, that will immediately come on. But when their teſtimony is finiſhed, by a free and open publication of the Goſpel, the beaſt that aſcended out of the bottomleſs pit; the ſame with that in ch. xiii. 11. with which compare ch. xvii. 8. and which is no other than the Romiſh antichriſt; called a beaſt for his filthineſs and cruelty; and ſaid to aſcend out of the bottomleſs pit, out of hell, becauſe his coming is after the working of ſatan: he is raiſed up, influenced and ſupported by him; he is a creature of his, and has his power, ſeat, and authority from him, the great dragon, the old ſerpent, called the devil and ſatan; his original and riſe are the ſame with thoſe of his doctrine and worſhip, the ſmoke of the bottomleſs pit; they all come out of it, and they'll return thither again. The Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, read, the fourth beaſt that aſcendeth, &c. as if it was the ſame with Daniel's fourth beaſt, Dan. vii. 7, 19. as it doubtleſs is. Now this filthy and ſavage beaſt ſhall make war againſt them; the witneſſes; a war he has been making againſt the ſaints ever ſince he was in power, by his decrees, his counſels, his anathemas, and by ſword, fire, and faggot, ch. xiii. 7. but this will be his laſt war, and it will be a dreadful one; it will be the laſt ſtruggle of the beaſt; and tho' it will be attended with the conqueſt and ſlaughter of the witneſſes, yet it will lead on to, and iſſue in his own ruin: this is the hour of temptation, in ch. iii. 10. and ſhall overcome them; not by arguments taken out of the word of God, by which their mouths will be ſtopped, ſo as to be confounded, and have nothing to ſay, or ſo as to yield to him, and give up the truths and ordinances of the Goſpel; but by outward force and tyranny, ſo as that they ſhall be obliged to give way, and he'll take poſſeſſion of the kingdoms and nations, in which they have propheſied: he will firſt attack the outward court, the bulk of formal profeſſors, and will prevail over them; and then the outworks being taken, he will more eaſily come at the inner court worſhippers within the temple. And kill them; not corporally, but civilly; for as their dead bodies lying three days and a half, that is, three years and a half, unburied, and their reſurrection from the dead, and aſcenſion to heaven, cannot be underſtood literally, ſo neither the killing of them; not but that in this war there may be a great ſlaughter, and much blood ſhed, in a literal ſenſe: but the killing ſpoken of ſeems to regard them, not as men, but as witneſſes; they'll not be ſuffered to bear an open teſtimony any longer; they'll be ſilenced; they will be baniſhed, or removed into corners; and they will not only be under the cenſures, excommunications, and anathemas of the Romiſh antichriſt, but they will loſe all credit and eſteem among thoſe, who once pretended to be their friends; who will be aſhamed of them, and will join in reproaching and rejecting them; ſo that their miniſtrations will be quite ſhut up, and at an end.

Ver. 8. And their dead bodies ſhall lie in the ſtreets of the great city, &c.] Not Jeruſalem, which was deſtroyed when John had this viſion, and which will not be rebuilt at the time it refers to; nor is it ever called the great city, tho' the city of the great king; however, not in this book, tho' the new Jeruſalem is ſo called, ch. xxi. 10. but that can never be deſigned here; but the city of Rome, or the Roman juriſdiction, the whole empire of the Romiſh antichriſt, which is often called the great city in this book; ſee ch. xvi. 19. and xvii. 18. and xviii. 10, 16, 18, 21. The city of Rome itſelf was very large, and the Roman empire ſtill larger, ſo as to be called the whole world; and the antichriſtian ſee of Rome has been of great extent. Now as the ſtreet of a city denotes a public open place in it, a place of concourſe and reſort, Prov. i. 20, 21. the dead bodies of thoſe witneſſes being ſaid to lie here, may deſign the publickneſs of their ſilence, diſgrace, and contempt; and that the ſilencing and degrading them, and depriving them of all privileges, will be known all over the antichriſtian empire; and that they will be expoſed to public ignominy and ſhame, their perſons, their characters, their teſtimony, their doctrines, their writings, their churches and families, and all that belong to them: or elſe this ſtreet may deſign ſome part of the Romiſh juriſdiction, and it may be Great-Britain may be particularly deſigned; for where ſhould the dead bodies of the witneſſes lie, but where they are ſlain? and where can they be ſlain, but where they are? and where are they, at leaſt where are there ſo many as in theſe iſlands? It may be objected, that Great-Britain is not a part of the ſee of Rome, does not belong to the juriſdiction of it; to this it may be replied, that in this laſt war of the beaſt, the outer court will be given to the Gentiles, the bulk of the reformed churches will fall off to popery, and their countries again fall into the hands of the pope, and among the reſt, Great-Britain. The fears of Dr. Goodwin ſeem to be too juſt, and well-grounded, that the prophecy in Dan. xi. 45. reſpects our iſland, which ſpeaks of antichriſt planting the tabernacles of his palace between the ſeas, in the glorious holy mountain, or the mountain of delight, of holineſs. Now where has God ſuch a mountain of delight, or a people that are the darling of his ſoul, as here? where in all the globe is there ſuch a ſpot where God has ſo many ſaints, ſo many holy ones, as in this iſland? it may have been truly called a glorious holy mountain, or a mountain of delight; and what place between the ſeas is there, to which theſe characters can agree, but Great-Britain? Here then antichriſt will plant the tabernacles of his palace; but it will be but a tabernacle, or tent; it will be but for a ſhort time, as it follows, yet he ſhall come to his end, and none ſhall help him. Now this great city, in the ſtreet of which the bodies of the witneſſes will lie expoſed, is that which ſpiritually is called Sodom and Egypt; that is, it is called ſo in a myſtic and allegoric ſenſe, in diſtinction from the literal ſenſe; ſee 1 Cor. x. 3, 4. it is called Sodom becauſe of the fullneſs of bread, plenty and abundance of all outward good things in it; as well as for the pride and idleneſs of the prieſts, monks, and friars which ſwarm in it; and alſo for the open prophaneneſs and contempt of true and ſerious religion in it; and particularly for the ſin of ſodomy, ſo frequently committed here, with impunity, yea with allowance, and even with commendation. This ſin was extolled with praiſes, as Brightman obſerves, by John a Caſa, archbiſhop of Beneventum; and was defended in a book, publiſhed for that purpoſe, by one Mutius; and which was allowed by the bulls and letters patent of pope Julius the third: and it is called Egypt, becauſe of its tyranny and oppreſſion; as the Egyptians kept the Iſraelites in bondage, and made them to ſerve with rigour, and embittered their lives, ſo the pope, and his Gentiles, or Egyptians, have in a moſt oppreſſive and rigorous manner tyrannized over the ſouls, bodies, and eſtates of men; and alſo becauſe of its great idolatry, Egypt being very remarkable for the number of its deities, and the meanneſs of them; by which the idols and idolatries of the church of Rome may be fitly expreſſed: where alſo our Lord was crucified; that is, in the great city, which is fitly compared to Sodom and Egypt; for Chriſt was crucified actually in Judea, which was then become a Roman province, and under Pontius Pilate, a Roman governour, and by his order, and ſuffered a Roman kind of death, crucifixion, and for a crime he was charged with, tho' a falſe one, againſt Cæſar the Roman emperor; and Chriſt has been crucified at Rome itſelf in his members, who have ſuffered perſecution and death, and even the death of the croſs there; and he has been crucified afreſh, both by the ſins and immoralities of thoſe who have bore the chriſtian name there, and by the frequent ſacrifices of him in the maſs. Moreover, by this periphraſis may be meant Jeruſalem; and the ſenſe be, that as the great city, or juriſdiction of Rome, may be ſpiritually or myſtically called Sodom and Egypt, ſo likewiſe the place where our Lord was crucified, that is, Jeruſalem; and that for this reaſon, becauſe that as Jeruſalem ſtoned and killed the prophets of the Lord, and upon the inhabitants of it were found all the righteous blood ſhed upon the earth, ſo in Rome, in myſtical Babylon, will be found the blood of prophets, and of ſaints, and of all that were ſlain upon earth, Matt. xxiii. 35, 37. Rev. xviii. 24. The Alexandrian copy, the Complutenſian edition, the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read, where alſo their Lord was crucified; and the Arabic verſion more expreſly, the Lord of theſe two, i. e. the two witneſſes.

Ver. 9. And they of the people, and kindreds, and tongues, and nations, &c.] Theſe are either the enemies of the witneſſes, who conſiſted of the people, kindred, tongues, and nations, out from among whom they were choſen, redeemed, and called; and before or againſt whom John, perſonating theſe witneſſes, propheſied; and over whom the Romiſh antichriſt ſits and rules, chap. v. 9. and x. 11. and xiii. 7. and xvii. 15. or elſe their friends, either real or pretended; ſince it is not ſaid the people, nor all the people, kindred, tongues, and nations, as it is when the antichriſtian party are ſpoken of; and ſeeing they that dwell upon the earth, in the following verſe, are mentioned as a diſtinct company from theſe; and theſe are ſaid to be ſome of, or out of the people, &c. and accordingly the following words will admit of different ſenſes: ſhall ſee their dead bodies three days and a half, and ſhall not ſuffer their dead bodies to be put in graves. Now, tho' this is not literally to be underſtood, yet it may have ſome reference to the uſages of the witneſſes enemies, who ſometimes have not allowed them a burial: ſo the bodies of John Huſs, and Jerom of Prague, were burnt, and their aſhes caſt into the Rhine; the body of Peter Ramus was caſt about the ſtreets, thrown into ponds and ditches, then dragged out, and beat with rods; and ſome have had their bones dug up again, after they have been buried many years, and then burnt, and their aſhes ſcattered abroad, as Wicleff and Bucer here in England: but as this is to be underſtood in a myſtical and alluſive ſenſe, the meaning is, as it may refer to enemies, that they ſhall ſee, and look upon with joy and pleaſure, and with ſcorn and contempt, and inſult over the witneſſes, being ſilenced and deprived of power and opportunity of propheſying, and as quite diſpirited, caſt down, and trodden under foot; and whereas not to have a burial granted, is always reckoned a piece of the greateſt barbarity and inhumanity, as well as of ignominy and reproach, and is expreſſive of a moſt unhappy and miſerable condition; ſee Pſ. lxxix. 2, 3. Jer. xxii. 19. Eccl. vi. 3. ſo it here ſignifies, that the enemies of the witneſſes having obtained power over them, will not only inſult them, but treat them in a very cruel and inhuman manner, and expoſe them to ſcorn and contempt; and it repreſents their caſe, as being very uncomfortable, and deplorable: or as it may reſpect friends, real or pretended, ſuch as had been, or were, the ſenſe is, that they ſhall ſee them in their unhappy condition, and look upon them with pity and compaſſion; and ſhall thoroughly conſider, and lay to heart, their caſe and circumſtances; and ſhall remember them, their doctrine and teſtimony, and their godly lives, and not ſuffer them to be buried in oblivion; and ſhall alſo call to mind this prediction concerning them, that they ſhould continue in this ſtate but three days and a half, and then revive; and therefore they ſhall entertain hopes of them, as perſons ſometimes do of their friends, when they are in doubt whether they are dead or no, and therefore keep them above ground for ſome time, and will not ſuffer them to be buried; for when put into the grave, there's no more hope, or when a perſon has been dead, as in the caſe of Lazarus, four days; ſo that this conduct may expreſs the kindneſs and hope of theſe friends: or it may be, the meaning is, that they will not look at them but very ſhyly, and at a diſtance, as being aſhamed of them, and having no heart to ſuccour, relieve, and encourage them; but act as did the prieſt and the levite towards the man that fell among thieves, and was left half dead, looked upon him, and turned from him, to the other ſide of the way; as alſo, that they will not entertain them, or give them any ſhelter and refuge among them, when in this their diſtreſs, they ſhall apply to them: the grave is a reſting-place; there the wicked ceaſe from troubling, and there the weary are at reſt, Job iii. 17. Such reſting-places the witneſſes in former times have found, as the Engliſh in queen Mary's days found at Frankford and Geneva, and other places, and ſince in Holland; and as now the French refugees here, who being killed in a civil ſenſe in their own country, are put into graves, or are allowed places of reſt and ſecurity here: but now theſe witneſſes will find none; thoſe who pretended to be their friends will look ſhy upon them, and not harbour them, yea, will not ſuffer any to do it; they will by ſome public act, thro' fear of the popiſh party, forbid the reception and entertainment of them. The time that this will laſt, will be three days and a half; after which, as in ver. 11. they'll live again, which cannot be underſtood literally of ſo many preciſe days; for it will not be poſſible, that in ſo ſhort a time, the news of the ſlaying of the witneſſes ſhould be ſpread among the inhabitants of the earth, and they be able to expreſs their general joy and rejoicing, and to ſend their gifts to one another upon this occaſion, as is ſignified in the following verſe; nor does this deſign ſo long a time, as the time and times, and half a time, elſewhere mentioned; or that it is a period of the ſame date and duration with the forty-two months, in which the holy city is trodden under foot, and the 1260 days, or years in which the witneſſes propheſy in ſackcloth; for during that time they will propheſy, and hold forth their teſtimony, tho' in ſackcloth; but now they will be killed, and during this ſpace will lie dead, and in entire ſilence: beſides, it will be when they ſhall have finiſhed their teſtimony, or towards the cloſe of the 1260 days or years, that this war and ſlaughter will be, and when theſe three days and a half will take place, which are to be underſtood of three years and a half, according to the prophetic ſtile, a day for a year; and ſeems intended for the comfort of the ſaints, that this moſt afflictive and diſtreſſed condition of the witneſſes ſhould laſt but for a little while. It is made a queſtion, whether this war with the witneſſes, and the ſlaughter of them, and their lying unburied, are over or no: ſome have thought that theſe things had their accompliſhment in the council of Conſtance, held about the year 1414, and which laſted three years and a half exactly, when thoſe two witneſſes, John Huſs, and Jerom of Prague, were killed, inſulted, and triumphed over by this council, which was made up of almoſt all nations. Brightman refers it to the Smalcaldic war in Germany in 1547, when the proteſtant army was beaten, and John Frederick, elector of Saxony, and Erneſt, the ſon of the Lantgrave, and after that the Lantgrave himſelf, were taken priſoners; which was a grievous blow to the proteſtant cauſe, and occaſioned great rejoicing in the popiſh party; but in the year 1550, juſt three years and a half after that defeat, the men of Magdeburgh roſe up with great ſpirit and courage, and revived the cauſe. About this time was the council of Trent, to which alſo the ſame writer accommodates theſe things, which conſiſted of men of all nations, and continued three years and a half; when the authority of the ſcriptures was deſtroyed, which he ſuppoſes are the witneſſes; when they were ſuppreſſed and ſilenced, and lay as a mere carkaſs, a dead letter, without any life in them: and it is eaſy to obſerve, that there have been ſeveral periods of time, in which there has been a ſeeming fulfillment of theſe things; the perſecution under queen Mary, and the burning of the martyrs in her time, continued about three years and a half; the maſſacre in France in 1572, threatened an utter extirpation of the proteſtant religion there, which yet revived in 1576, much about the ſame ſpace of time here mentioned; and there are ſeveral others that have been obſerved by writers; but what ſeems moſt remarkable of all, is the caſe of the proteſtants in the valleys of Piedmont, commonly called the Vaudois. The duke of Savoy, their ſovereign, by an edict, dated January 31, 168$\frac{5}{6}$, N. S. forbad the exerciſe of their religion on pain of death, ordered their churches to be demoliſhed, and their miniſters to be baniſhed; which was publiſhed in the valleys April the 11th, and was put in execution on the 22d of the ſame month, by Savoy and French troops, who killed great numbers of them, took others, and put them into priſons, whom they releaſed about the beginning of December 1686, and ſuffered them to depart into other countries, where they were kindly received, relieved, and preſerved, particularly by the kingdoms and ſtates of England, Holland, Brandenburgh, Geneva, and Switzerland, while the popiſh party were rejoicing at their ruin: and toward the latter end of the year 1689, about three years and a half after the publiſhing of the edict, theſe people were inſpired, on a ſudden, with a ſpirit of reſolution and courage; and, contrary to the advice of their friends, who thought their caſe deſperate, ſecretly paſſed the lake of Geneva, and entred Savoy with ſword in hand, and recovered their ancient poſſeſſions; and by the month of April, A. D. 1690, eſtabliſhed themſelves in it, notwithſtanding the troops of France and Savoy, to whom they were comparatively few, and whom they ſlew in great numbers, with little loſs to themſelves; when the duke perceiving they were encouraged and aſſiſted by foreign princes, and he having left the French intereſt, re-called the reſt of them, and re-eſtabliſhed them by an edict, ſigned June 4, 1690, juſt three years and a half after their total diſſipation, and gave leave to the French refugees to return with them. Now I take it, that theſe ſeveral things which have happened at certain times, in particular places, are ſo many hints and pledges of what hereafter will be univerſal to the witneſſes in all places where they are. It would be very deſireable if it could be aſcertained, and concluded upon a good foundation, that this affair of the killing of the witneſſes was over; but becauſe of the following things it cannot be; for the outward court is not yet given to the Gentiles, at leaſt not the whole of it, which muſt be, 'ere they can come at the witneſſes in the inner court to ſlay them: they have indeed attacked it, and have taken ſome part of it, as in Germany, Poland, &c. but as yet not in Great-Britain, Holland, &c. at leaſt not thoroughly, tho' it is plain they are getting ground. Moreover, the witneſſes have not finiſhed their teſtimony, they are ſtill propheſying in ſackcloth; whereas it will be when they have finiſhed it, and towards the cloſe of the 1260 days or years, that they will be killed: to which add, that the ruin of antichriſt will quickly follow their riſing and aſcenſion; ſo that if any of the above inſtances had been the fulfilling of theſe things relating to the witneſſes, antichriſt muſt have been deſtroyed before now. And it may be further obſerved, that the ſecond wo, which is the Turkiſh wo, will, upon the fulfillment of theſe things, paſs away; and the third wo, or the ſounding of the ſeventh trumpet, will immediately take place, which brings on the kingdom of Chriſt; whereas the Turkiſh government is ſtill in being, and in great power; and there is no appearance, as yet, of the kingdoms of this world becoming the kingdoms of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt. There may be an alluſion in this ſpace of time, to the time that Antiochus, called Epiphanes, held Jeruſalem in his hands, after he had conquered it, which was juſt three years and ſix months [s], during which time he ſpoiled the temple, and cauſed the daily ſacrifice to ceaſe: this term of time is much ſpoken of by the Jews; ſo long they ſay Nebuchadnezzar beſieged Jeruſalem, and likewiſe Veſpaſian, and alſo three years and a half Adrian beſieged Bither [t].

Ver. 10. And they that dwell upon the earth, &c.] Out of which the beaſt aroſe, and over which he reigns, even the inhabitants of the Roman empire, often in this book called the earth, the followers of antichriſt, men that mind nothing but earth, and earthly things: ſhall rejoice over them, and make merry, and ſhall ſend gifts one to another; as is uſual with perſons, and was with the Jews, to do in times of public rejoicing; ſee Eſther ix. 18, 19. Neh. viii. 10, 11. Becauſe theſe two prophets tormented them that dwelt on the earth; not becauſe they were tormented by them, but becauſe they were now freed from their tormenting miniſtry; they had tormented them by the preaching of the Goſpel, which is fooliſhneſs, and the ſavour of death to natural men, and gives them pain, and fills them with vexation and wrath; by their teſtimony which they had bore for Chriſt, and againſt antichriſt; by their ſharp reproof of them for their falſe doctrine, and will-worſhip, and their impure lives and converſations; by their own holy lives, which would ſometimes flaſh light into their conſciences, and make them uneaſy; and by their foretelling the calamities and ruin, temporal and eternal, that would come upon them; but now they are ſilenced, and they hear and ſee no more of theſe things at which they rejoice.

Ver. 11. And after three days and a half, &c.] When it was certain they were dead, and all hope of reviving was over; ſee John xi. 39. that is, three years and a half: the Spirit of life from God entred into them; this phraſe is expreſſive of a reſurrection. The Jews frequently call the general reſurrection, תחייה, a quickening, and have the very phraſe here uſed; for ſpeaking of the reſurrection, they ſay [u], רוחא דחיי, the ſpirit of life does not dwell but in the holy land. This reſurrection of the witneſſes is not to be underſtood of a corporal reſurrection; for there is no reaſon to believe that there will be a reſurrection of any particular ſaints, until the general reſurrection, which will be at the perſonal coming of Chriſt, and at the beginning of the thouſand years, and after the ſounding of the ſeventh trumpet; whereas this will be before that, and towards the cloſe of the ſixth trumpet: and beſides, the death of theſe witneſſes is not corporal, as has been obſerved: nor is a ſpiritual reſurrection from the death of ſin, to a life of grace, intended, which is owing to the ſpirit of life from Chriſt; for theſe witneſſes were ſuch who had been quickened, and raiſed in this ſenſe antecedent to their propheſying and killing; but a civil reſurrection of them, or a reſurrection of them as witneſſes, when their ſpirits will revive, and they'll take heart and courage again to appear for Chriſt: and this may be underſtood of the ſame individual perſons that were ſilenced, or of thoſe that ſucceeded ſuch that corporally died in the war of the beaſt, or during this interval; and ſo theſe witneſſes may be ſaid to riſe in them, they appearing in the ſame ſpirit they did; juſt as John the Baptiſt came in the ſpirit and power of Elias: and this will be owing to the ſpirit of life from God, entring into them; which is ſaid in alluſion to the living ſoul of man, which returns to God, and at the reſurrection, whether particular or general, comes from him, and re-enters the body; and which alſo is owing to the Spirit of God, by whom mortal bodies will be quickened; and in alluſion to the breathing on the dry bones in Ezekiel's viſion, Ezek. xxxvii. and the ſenſe is, that the Spirit of God will inſpire theſe witneſſes with freſh life and vigour, zeal and reſolution; ſo that tho' they have been ſo long ſilent, lifeleſs, and diſpirited, they ſhall now riſe in high ſpirits, and bravely exert themſelves in the cauſe of Chriſt; and this will not be by any worldly power and authority, or by any ſecular arm, that ſhall encourage them, but by the Spirit of God, who ſhall breathe upon them, and afreſh quicken them, and fill them with reſolution and courage: and they ſtood upon their feet; in great numbers, like the army in Ezekiel's viſion; and will re-aſſume their former ſtation, and be in a poſition, and a ſtate of readineſs to ſerve the Lord, and to defend his truths, and diſcharge their duty with boldneſs and courage, fearing the face of none: and great fear fell upon them which ſaw them; in this poſture; either on their enemies, who may fear that they ſhould be tormented with them again; that the things which they had foretold concerning their ruin, are now coming upon them; that they ſhall be turned out of their places of profit, and loſe all their worldly advantages, and carnal pleaſures now, and be miſerable to all eternity: or upon their friends, either their falſe-hearted ones, that would not ſuccour them when in diſtreſs, who may fear that God, whoſe finger they will ſee in this matter, will by them reſent their conduct towards them; or elſe their real friends, who may be filled with reverence and awe of the divine majeſty, as the church was upon the buſineſs of Ananias and Sapphira, Acts v. 11.

Ver. 12. And they heard a great voice from heaven, &c.] The Complutenſian edition reads, I heard, i. e. John; and ſo the Syriac and Arabic verſions; but the copies in general read they; not the enemies, but the witneſſes: and this ſeems not to come from any chriſtian civil magiſtrate in the church, but from Chriſt himſelf; not but that Chriſt may make uſe of ſuch, for the bringing of his people into a more glorious and comfortable ſtate in this world: ſaying unto them, come up hither; as the angel ſaid to John, ch. iv. 1. and Chriſt will ſay to his people, tho' on another account, Matt. xxv. 34. And they aſcended up to heaven in a cloud; which is to be underſtood not literally, for no man hath aſcended to heaven, nor will any, until the thouſand years are ended, when the ſaints will, in a body, aſcend thither; but myſtically, of a more glorious ſtate of the church; ſo to aſcend to heaven, ſignifies a more exalted ſtate in a prince, or a kingdom, Iſ. xiv. 13. and here intends a ſtate of comfortable communion of the ſaints one with another, of great purity and holineſs, of large enjoyments of bleſſings and privileges, and of great ſecurity from enemies, and of great glory, and honour, and power, that ſhall be beſtowed upon them; they now dwelling on high, and their place of defence being the munition of rocks. This will be the beginning of the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt; and this aſcenſion of the witneſſes will be in a cloud, in alluſion to our Lord's aſcenſion to heaven, and as expreſſive of that glory and majeſty which will be put upon theſe riſen witneſſes, and in which they ſhall enter into this happy ſtate of things; or it may be, that this may denote that the firſt appearance of theſe happy times, and of Chriſt's ſpiritual reign in his church, and their more comfortable enjoyment, will be at firſt but dim and obſcure, and yet ſuch as in compariſon of their former ſtate, will be viſible to, and be taken notice of, even by their very enemies: and their enemies beheld them; going up to heaven, or entring into a purer, and more glorious, and ſpiritual ſtate; for the mountain of the Lord's houſe will be eſtabliſhed upon the top of the mountains, and Jeruſalem ſhall be made the praiſe of the whole earth, an eternal excellency, and the joy of many generations; and this ſhall be ſeen and known of all, tho' to their grief and ſorrow.

Ver. 13. And the ſame hour was there a great earthquake, &c.] Or the ſame day, as the Complutenſian edition, and ſome copies, read; that is, at the time of the reſurrection and aſcenſion of the witneſſes, as there was at the reſurrection of Chriſt; and is to be underſtood of a very great commotion in the civil affairs of kingdoms and nations within the Roman juriſdiction, as there was when Rome pagan was near its ruin, ch. vi. 12. And the tenth part of the city fell. Mr. Daubuz interprets the earthquake of the irruption of the Ottomans upon the Grecian empire, and the tenth part of the city, of the Greek church, and the falling of it, of its loſs of liberty, and falling into ſlavery; but ſomething yet to come is here intended. By the city is meant the city of Rome, the great city, mentioned in ver. 8. and by the tenth part of it, may be deſigned either Rome itſelf, which as it now is, according to the obſervation of ſome, is but a tenth part of what it was once; ſo that the ſame thing is meant, as when it is ſaid, Babylon is fallen, is fallen: or it may deſign the tithes and profits which ariſe from the ſeveral kingdoms belonging to the juriſdiction and ſee of Rome, which now will fall off from thoſe who uſed to ſhare them, upon this new and ſpiritual ſtate of things; the Goſpel daily gaining ground, and enlightening the minds of men, and freeing them from the ſlavery they were held in: or elſe the tenfold government of the Roman empire, or the ten kings that gave their kingdoms to the whore of Rome, and are the ten horns of the beaſt, on which ſhe ſits, who will now hate her, and burn her fleſh with fire; or rather one of the ten kingdoms, into which the Roman weſtern empire was divided. Dr. Goodwin ſeems inclined to think, that Great-Britain is intended, which having been gained over to the popiſh party, will now fall off again: but I rather think the kingdom of France is meant, the laſt of the ten kingdoms, which roſe up out of the ruins of the Roman empire, which will be conquered, and which will be the means of its reformation from popery. And in the earthquake were ſlain of men ſeven thouſand; the meaning is, that in the commotions, maſſacres, tumults, and wars which will be throughout the empire, ſuch a number of men will be ſlain; which is either put for a greater number, a certain for an uncertain, as in Rom. xi. 4. and perhaps in reference to the account there; otherwiſe ſeven thouſand is but a ſmall number to be ſlain in battle; or as it is in the original text, the names of men ſeven thouſand. Now it is obſerved by ſome, that the ſmalleſt name of number belonging to men, is a centurion, or captain of an hundred men; and ſuppoſing that to be meant, then ſeven thouſand names of men will imply, that in an hour, or about a fortnight's time, may be ſlain throughout all Europe, in battles and maſſacres, about ſeven hundred thouſand men, which is a very large number: or names of men may ſignify men of name, of great renown, as in Numb. xvi. 2. and then if ſeven thouſand men of name, officers in armies, ſhould be ſlain, how great muſt be the number of the common ſoldiers? Some have thought, that eccleſiaſtical dignities, or men diſtinguiſhed by names and titles, ſuch as cardinals, archbiſhops, biſhops, prieſts, &c. and the whole rabble of the antichriſtian hierarchy, which will now fall, and be utterly demoliſhed, are intended: and the remnant were affrighted; who were not ſlain in this earthquake; theſe will be affected with the judgments of God upon others, and be made ſenſible of their danger, and of their deliverance, which will ſo work upon them, as to reform them from popery: and gave glory to the God of heaven; will acknowledge the juſtice of God, and the righteouſneſs of his judgments upon thoſe that were ſlain, and his goodneſs to them, who are ſpared; will confeſs their tranſgreſſions and ſins, they have been guilty of; and give the glory of their deliverance, not to their idols and images, but to the true God, whoſe religion they now embrace; for this reſpects the large converſions among the popiſh party, to the true religion, under the influence of the grace of God, thro' the preaching of the Goſpel, which will now be ſpread throughout the world.

Ver. 14. The ſecond wo is paſt, &c.] Not in John's time, only in a viſionary way; the meaning is, that the ſecond wo-trumpet, which is the ſixth, will now have done ſounding, when the four angels, bound in the river Euphrates, ſhall have been looſed, and they, with their horſemen, ſhall have done what they were deſigned to do; when the two witneſſes ſhall have been ſlain, and are raiſed again, and aſcended to heaven; and the things attending, or following thereon, as the earthquake, and ſlaughter, and the converſions of men, are accompliſhed. And behold the third wo cometh quickly; immediately, upon the paſſing of the other; namely, the ſounding of the ſeventh trumpet, as follows.

Ver. 15. And the ſeventh angel ſounded, &c.] The laſt of the ſeven angels, who had trumpets given them to ſound, ch. viii. 2, 6. The days of the voice of this angel, as in ch. x. 7. can't refer to the times of Conſtantine; for tho' there was then a ſtrange turn of affairs in favour of the kingdom of Chriſt, when there was a great ſpread of the Goſpel, and large converſions in many places, and many churches were raiſed and formed in ſeveral countries, and the whole empire became chriſtian; yet this, as we have ſeen, came to paſs under the ſixth ſeal, before any of the trumpets were ſounded, and much leſs this ſeventh and laſt; nor do they belong to the times of the reformation in Germany. Brightman fixes the ſounding of this trumpet to the year 1558, when the kings of Sweden and Denmark ſet up the Goſpel in their kingdoms, and reformed them from popery; and when queen Elizabeth came to the throne of England, and rooted out great part of the Romiſh ſuperſtition: but it is certain, that this angel has not yet ſounded his trumpet, and therefore can't refer to any thing paſt, but to what is to come; we are yet under the ſixth trumpet; the outward court is not yet given to the Gentiles; the witneſſes are not ſlain, and much leſs riſen and aſcended; the earthquake, the fall of the tenth part of the city, and the ſlaughter of ſeven thouſand names of men, with what will follow thereon, are things yet to come; the Turkiſh wo is not over, and antichriſt ſtill reigns, and the kingdoms of this world are far from appearing to be the kingdoms of Chriſt. Some think, and indeed the generality of interpreters, that this reſpects the voice of the archangel, and trump of God, the laſt trump, which will ſound at the reſurrection of the dead, and the day of judgment; but none of theſe appear in the account of things under this trumpet; but rather the whole has a view to the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt, when both the eaſtern and weſtern antichriſt will be deſtroyed; the Goſpel will be carried all over the world, and there will be large converſions both among Jews and Gentiles, and Chriſt will reign in a ſpiritual manner over all the earth. Hence it follows, and there were great voices in heaven; theſe are either the voices of the angels in heaven, who rejoice at every appearance, and breaking forth of Chriſt's kingdom and glory, as in ch. v. 11, 12. and vii. 11, 12. and indeed, if they rejoice at the converſion of one ſinner, at a ſingle addition to Chriſt's intereſt, then much more will they, when the kingdoms of this world become his; or rather theſe may be the voices of the multitude of the ſaints in the churches, the ſame company with thoſe in ch. xix. 1—7. who expreſs their joy at the judgment of the great whore, and at the marriage of the Lamb; and who, as here, are attended with the thankſgivings and hallelujahs of the four and twenty elders: and it may be, that theſe are alſo the voices of the four living creatures, the miniſters of the word, ſince the four and twenty elders generally follow them, ch. iv. 9, 10. and v. 14. they may be the witneſſes, who were ſilenced, but are now raiſed up, and are aſcended into heaven, and their mouths are opened, and their voices heard again: ſaying, the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Chriſt; by the kingdoms of this world are meant, worldly kingdoms, which are ſet up by worldly power, and are ſupported by worldly policy, and ſubſiſt upon worldly principles and maxims; the government of which proceeds upon worldy ends and views; in diſtinction from the kingdom of Chriſt, which is not of this world, and is not ſupported by any ſuch methods; and they are the kingdoms, into which the world is divided, which, and the glory of them, ſatan ſhowed to Chriſt, and inſolently offered to give him them, if he would worſhip him; but theſe were to come to Chriſt in another way, and at another time. The Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, the Complutenſian edition, the Vulgate Latin verſion, and all the Oriental verſions, read in the ſingular number, the kingdom of this world; the whole government of it, which is his by right of nature, and will be overturned, and overturned again and again, till he comes, whoſe right it is; and then all power, rule, and authority will be put down, and his kingdom, which will fill the face of the whole earth, will take place: all the antichriſtian ſtates and kingdoms are here intended, particularly the kingdoms, into which the Roman empire, ſometimes called the whole world, Luke ii. 1. is divided, which are ten; one of the ten, a tenth part of the city or juriſdiction of Rome will fall at the cloſe of the ſixth trumpet, and the other nine, or the other nine parts, will fall at the ſounding of the ſeventh; the ten kings that have given their kingdoms to the beaſt, will have an averſion to the whore, hate her, and burn her fleſh, will fall off from her, and into the hands of Chriſt; there will be a general and thorough reformation from popery in all the kingdoms of the Roman empire: but tho' theſe are greatly intended, yet not only they, but the Mahometan nations alſo, as the Turkiſh wo will now be over, and the great river Euphrates dried up, to make way for the kings of the eaſt, thoſe large kingdoms, and countries of China, Tartary, and Perſia; and theſe now under the power of the Turk, will embrace the chriſtian faith; and alſo all the pagan nations are to be taken into the account, and who will now enjoy the light of the Goſpel: and all, and every one of thoſe pagan, papal, and Mahometan kingdoms, will become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Chriſt; by our Lord may be deſigned God the Father, who is the Lord of the whole earth, the Lord God Almighty, and is acknowledged as ſuch by angels and men; and by his Chriſt, his Son Jeſus Chriſt, who is equal with him; and what belongs to the one, belongs to the other; and who, as mediator, is his anointed one; anointed to be prophet, prieſt, and king; anointed with the oil of gladneſs, the Holy Ghoſt; ſee Pſ. ii. 2. where the ſame diſtinction is. In the Targum on Iſ. iv. 2, mention is made of, משיחא דיי, the Meſſiah, or Chriſt of Jehovah: and in the ſame Targum on Iſ. liii. 10. it is ſaid, they ſhall look, במלכות משיחהין, upon the kingdom of their Meſſiah; tho' it may be rather that Chriſt is deſigned by both theſe phraſes, and the words be rendred, our Lord, even his Chriſt; ſince the phraſe, our Lord, as well as Chriſt, is generally underſtood of Jeſus Chriſt in the New Teſtament; and who is Lord of all, of angels, and of men, and the Chriſt of God. Now theſe kingdoms will become his, not merely by right, for ſo they are his already, by right of nature, and creation, and preſervation; but theſe have ſhaken off his goverment, and have refuſed to have him to reign over them, and have fallen into the hands of uſurpers, as ſatan, the god of this world, the Romiſh antichriſt, that reigns over the kings of the earth, and Mahomet the king of the locuſts; but now theſe will, in fact, come into his hands, and be under his government; they will acknowledge him as their Lord and ſovereign, and fear and worſhip him, as king of ſaints: and this will be brought about, not by force of arms, as Mahomet got his dominions; nor by policy and fraud, by impoſture and lying wonders, by which the pope of Rome has obtained his authority, over the nations; but partly by the pouring out of the vials of God's wrath upon the ſeat of the beaſt, and upon the river Euphrates, that is, both upon the pope, and Turk, which will weaken and deſtroy their power and authority, and make way for Chriſt to ſet up his kingdom; and partly, and chiefly, by the preaching of the Goſpel: now will an open door be ſet, which none can ſhut; many will run to and fro, and knowledge will be increaſed; the earth will be covered with it, as the ſea with waters; multitudes of ſouls every where will be converted; a nation will be born at once; churches will be ſet up in every place, which are Chriſt's kingdom, where he reigns, and where his ſubjects are, and his laws are put in execution; where his word will be now faithfully preached, his ordinances purely adminiſtred, and he in his perſon, office, and grace, will be alone exalted: the conſequence of which will be, and he ſhall reign for ever and ever; no uſurper will ever ſtart up more, or obtain; neither ſatan, nor the beaſt, nor the falſe prophet, ſhall ever regain their power and authority any more; neither paganiſm, nor judaiſm, nor antichriſtianiſm, either papal or Mahometan ſhall ever have place more; Chriſt will reign in this ſpiritual way, more or leſs, until he comes perſonally, and then he'll reign with his people on earth a thouſand years; and when they are ended, he'll reign with them in heaven to all eternity; for tho' at the end of theſe years, he ſhall deliver up the kingdom to the Father, yet he will not ceaſe to reign; indeed he'll nor reign in the ſame manner, but he'll reign with equal power and authority, and over, and with the ſame perſons. The Vulgate Latin verſion adds, Amen.

Ver. 16. And the four and twenty elders, &c.] The ſame with thoſe in ch. iv. 4. which ſat before God on their ſeats; as they are alſo there deſcribed; and which may be expreſſive of their enjoyment of the divine preſence; and alſo of their quiet and undiſturbed ſituation, being reſtored to their former places, which they now poſſeſs without moleſtation and interruption; for as theſe are the repreſentatives of Goſpel churches in all ages, they were with the church in the wilderneſs during the 1260 days, or years: hence we hear nothing of them from the time of the ſealing of the hundred and forty and four thouſand, and during the ſounding of the trumpets; but now they are reſtored to their former ſeats, and upon this wonderful change of things in the world, they fell upon their faces and worſhipped God; in a very humble and reverential poſture, and in a way of praiſe and thankſgiving.

Ver. 17. Saying, we give thee thanks, O Lord God Almighty, &c.] The perſon addreſſed is the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, whoſe the kingdoms are become, and who now reigns in great power and authority; he is Lord of all, and truly and properly God, and the Almighty, as his works of creation, preſervation, redemption, raiſing himſelf from the dead, &c. declare; and each of theſe titles exceedingly well ſuit him, when his viſible kingdom on earth will be ſo greatly enlarged: which art, and waſt, and art to come; the everlaſting I am, the unchangeable Jehovah: the phraſe is expreſſive of the eternity and immutability of Chriſt; ſee the note on ch. i. 8. and it may be obſerved, that whereas in this deſcription of him, it is ſaid, and art to come, this therefore does not belong to his perſonal, but to his ſpiritual reign; he will not be as yet come in perſon, to raiſe the dead, and judge the world, when theſe voices ſhall be in heaven, and theſe congratulations of the elders be made: the reaſon of their praiſe and thankſgiving follows, becauſe thou haſt taken to thee thy great power, and haſt reigned; power always belonged to him, as God; he always was the mighty God, and as ſuch, help for his people was laid upon him, he being mighty to ſave, and able to bear the government of them, laid on his ſhoulders; and as mediator, all power in heaven, and in earth, was given to him at his reſurrection; and he had a name given him above every name, when exalted at the right hand of God, and was made, or declared, Lord and Chriſt; and from that time he has, in ſome meaſure, exerted his power and reigned: he endued his Apoſtles with power from an high; and he went forth in the miniſtry of the Goſpel conquering, and to conquer; and has ever ſince reigned in the hearts of his people; but now he'll manifeſt and diſplay his great power; he will ſhow it more openly, and uſe it more extenſively; his kingdom ſhall be from ſea to ſea, and from the river to the ends of the earth; he ſhall be king over all the earth; his power has been ſeen in ages paſt, but now the greatneſs of his power will be made manifeſt; he has always had a kingdom on earth, but now the greatneſs of the kingdom, under the whole heaven, will be his.

Ver. 18. And the nations were angry, &c.] See Pſ. xcix. 1. which the Septuagint render, the Lord reigns, let the nations be angry. This refers not to the times of the dragon, or the pagan Roman emperors, who were wroth with the woman, the church, and made war with her ſeed; but Rome papal, and its Gentiles, are intended; theſe are the nations, that antichriſt reigns over: and it does not ſo much deſign their anger againſt Chriſt, and his people, expreſſed by their anathemas, excomunications, murders, and maſſacres, and bloody perſecutions, tions, which could not be cauſe of thankſgiving to the elders; but their anger and reſentment at his power and reign, at having the outward court taken from them, ſaid to be given them, ver. 2. and at their loſs of power, profit, pleaſure, and plenty, thro' the fall of Babylon, and the ſetting up of Chriſt's kingdom; and tho' theſe things will make the Gentiles, the followers of antichriſt, gnaſh their teeth, it will occaſion joy and thankſgiving among the ſaints: and thy wrath is come; the time is come to make Babylon, or the Romiſh antichriſt, to drink of the wine of the fierceneſs of divine wrath; as the time of the Lamb's wrath and vengeance upon Rome pagan, was come, at the opening of the ſixth ſeal; ſo the time of his wrath and vengeance on Rome papal will be come at the ſounding of the ſeventh trumpet: and the time of the dead, that they ſhould be judged; not the time of the wicked, who are dead in ſins, while they live, and who die in their ſins, not their time to be raiſed from the dead, in order to be judged, for they will not riſe till after the thouſand years are ended; nor the time of the dead in Chriſt, who will riſe upon Chriſt's perſonal coming, at the beginning of the thouſand years; but this trumpet reſpects not the perſonal coming of Chriſt to raiſe the dead, and judge the world, but his ſpiritual coming to reign in his churches, and judge their enemies: the time of thoſe that were dead for Chriſt, whoſe blood had been ſhed in his cauſe, the time for the vindication of them, and avenging their blood is now come; the ſouls of thoſe under the altar had been a long time crying to God to avenge their blood on them that dwell on the earth; and now the time will be come, when God will judge his people, vindicate their cauſe; and when he, to whom vengeance belongs, will repay it, by pouring out the vials of his wrath on the antichriſtian party, by giving them blood to drink, becauſe they are worthy; this judgment will iſſue in the fall and ruin, both of the weſtern and eaſtern antichriſt. And that thou ſhouldſt give reward unto thy ſervants; not a reward of debt, but of grace; not the recompence of reward, or the reward of the inheritance in heaven; but ſome marks of honour and reſpect; ſome meaſure of happineſs, peace, and joy, which Chriſt of his rich grace will give to his miniſters, and churches, and all that love him in this glorious period of time: and who are diſtinguiſhed in the following manner, the prophets, and to the ſaints, and them that fear thy name, ſmall and great; by the prophets are meant, not the prophets of the Old Teſtament, but the prophets of the New; and not thoſe extraordinary perſons, who are diſtinguiſhed on the one hand from Apoſtles and Evangeliſts, and on the other from paſtors and teachers, who had an extraordinary gift of interpreting the ſcriptures, and of foretelling things to come; but the miniſters of the word, the two prophets or witneſſes, who had propheſied in ſackcloth, but ſhall now be clothed with ſalvation: and by the ſaints are deſigned, ſuch as were ſet apart by God the Father from eternity, and whoſe ſins are expiated by the blood of Chriſt, and who are internally ſanctified by the Spirit of God, and externally ſeparated from the reſt of mankind, and incorparated into a Goſpel church-ſtate, and are in holy fellowſhip one with another: and they that fear the name of God, are ſuch as truly love and reverence him, and worſhip him in ſpirit and in truth, but are not members of any particular church; who yet will be taken notice of by the Lord, and a book of remembrance be written for them; ſo the proſelytes from among the Gentiles are diſtinguiſhed from the Iſraelites by the ſame character; ſee the note on Acts xiii. 16. or rather this is a general character of both miniſters and churches, ſince to fear the name of the Lord, is a phraſe that includes all religious worſhip, internal and external. And now all theſe, ſmall and great, whether greater or leſſer believers, whether men of larger, or meaner gifts and abilities, will all have the ſame reward, enjoy the ſame church privileges, partake of the ſame ordinances, in the purity of them, have the ſame communion with God, and fellowſhip with Chriſt, and one another, and ſhare in the ſame common peace, and liberty, and ſecurity from enemies: the laſt thing taken notice of by theſe elders, as matter of thankſgiving, is the deſtruction of antichriſt. And ſhouldſt deſtroy them which deſtroy the earth; or corrupt it; meaning antichriſt and his followers; who deſtroy the bodies, ſouls, and eſtates of men, and not only the inhabitants of the earth, but even the earth itſelf; for thro' that lazineſs and idleneſs which they ſpread where 'ere they come, a fruitful country is turned into barrenneſs; who corrupt the minds of men, with falſe doctrine, idolatry, and ſuperſtition, and the bodies of women and men with all uncleanneſs and filthineſs, with fornication, ſodomy, &c. ch. xix. 2. and are the cauſe of their own deſtruction, and the deſtruction of others; which, upon the blowing of the ſeventh trumpet, will come ſwiftly and irrecoverably. Now will Babylon ſink as a milſtone into the ſea, never to be ſeen more; both the weſtern and eaſtern antichriſts are intended; the former is called the ſon of perdition, becauſe of his deſtroying others, and going into perdition himſelf; and the latter is called Abaddon, and Apollyon, which both ſignify a deſtroyer, 2 Theſſ. ii. 4. Rev. ix. 11.

Ver. 19. And the temple of God was opened in heaven, &c.] The temple at Jeruſalem, to which the alluſion is, was the place of public worſhip; this, in times of idolatry, was ſhut up, and fell to decay; and when there was a reformation its doors were opened, and that repaired; and to this the reference ſeems to be; and the ſenſe is, that at this time the pure worſhip of God will be reſtored, and there will be a free and uninterrupted exerciſe of it; the temple will be open to all; here every one may come, and ſit, and worſhip, without fear; churches will now be formed according to the original plan, and primitive order and inſtitution of them; the laws of Chriſt concerning the admiſſion, regulation, and excluſion of members, will be carefully and punctually obſerved; the ordinances of Chriſt will be kept, as they were firſt delivered, and be purged from all the corruptions introduced by papiſts, or retained by proteſtants; the ordinance of the Lord's ſupper will be freed from the ſenſeleſs notions of tranſubſtantiation and conſubſtantiation, and from all vain and impertinent rites and ceremonies, that attend it; and the ordinance of baptiſm will be adminiſtred, both as to mode and ſubject, according to the word of God, as well as be cleared from the ſuperſtitious rites of the ſign of the croſs, chriſm, ſpittle, &c. in ſhort, all external worſhip will be pure, plain, and evangelical: hence it appears, that by this temple is not meant the church triumphant, and the happineſs of the ſaints in heaven, as becoming viſible, nor even the new Jeruſalem church-ſtate, or the perſonal reign of Chriſt on earth for a thouſand years; for in that ſtate there will be no temple at all, nor will the ſaints then need the ſun, or moon of Goſpel ordinances, ch. xxi. 22. 23. and there was ſeen in his temple the ark of his teſtament; the ark was a cheſt, in which the covenant or tables of the law were put; upon it was the mercy ſeat, and over that the cherubim of glory, ſhadowing it; between which were the ſeat of the divine majeſty: this ark ſtood in the holy of holies, and was ſeen only by the high prieſt once a year, and was covered with a covering vail, Numb. iv. 5. it was wanting in the ſecond temple [*]; to this the alluſion is here; ſee the note on Heb. ix. 4. Now in this ſpiritual Goſpel church-ſtate, thro' the pure miniſtry of the word, and the faithful adminiſtration of ordinances, the myſteries of the Goſpel, into which angels deſire to look, ſignified by the cherubim over the mercy-ſeat, will be clearly revealed, to all chriſtians, Jews and Gentiles; particularly to the former, from whom they have been hid; the vail that is over their hearts will then be done away, when they ſhall be turned to the Lord; and indeed, the vail which is over all people, will then be removed; and thoſe truths which have been ſo much obſcured by antichriſt, will be clearly ſeen; and eſpecially the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the antitype of the ark, in whom are hid the treaſures of wiſdom; by whom the law, and the two tables of it, are fulfilled; and in whom they are pure and perfect; and by whom the covenant of grace is ratified and confirmed; and in whom it is ſure; and thro' whom God is propitious to his people, and grants them communion with him; he will be viſibly held forth in the miniſtry of the word; and be ſeen in the glory of his perſon, and offices, and grace; who has been ſo long and greatly hid, and kept out of ſight, by Popiſh and Mahometan darkneſs: and there were lightnings, and voices, and thundrings, and an earthquake, and great hail; which may be underſtood of the vials of God's wrath, that will be poured out upon the pope and Turk; which tho' mentioned laſt, will be firſt, and make way for this ſpiritual ſtate; particularly the things here ſpoken of, may be compared with what will be at the pouring out of the ſeventh vial, ch. xvi. 18, 21. or this may deſign the powerful voices, and clear miniſtrations of the Goſpel, and the efficacy of them at this time; which, like thunders, will awaken the conſciences of men; and, like earthquakes, will make them ſhake and tremble, and cry out, what ſhall we do to be ſaved? and as lightnings illuminate their underſtandings, and give them a clear diſcerning of divine things; and as hail beat down all ſelf-righteouſneſs and ſelf-confidence, and all errors, hereſies, ſuperſtition, and will-worſhip. Tho' I ſuſpect, that theſe ſeveral things are expreſſive of the change and revolution, that will be made, after a time, in this happy and comfortable ſtate; and that the cold, which generally attends an hail ſtorm, repreſents that coldneſs and lukewarmneſs, into which the churches of Chriſt will again ſink, expreſſed in the Laodicean church-ſtate, in which condition Chriſt will find them when he perſonally appears; ſo that the ſeven ſeals, with the ſeven trumpets, bring us exactly to the ſame period of time, as the ſeven churches do.

CHAP. XII.

THIS chapter contains a viſion of two wonders or ſigns ſeen in heaven, a woman and a dragon, and an account of what followed thereon, war both in heaven and earth. The viſion of the woman is in ver. 1, 2. who is deſcribed by her being clothed with the ſun; by her having the moon under her feet; by a crown of twelve ſtars on her head; and by her pregnancy, travail, pains, and cry. The viſion of the dragon is in ver. 3, 4. who is deſcribed by his bigneſs, a great one; by his colour, red; by the number of his heads and horns, and the crowns on the former; by the force and ſtrength of his tail, drawing and caſting down to the earth the third part of the ſtars of heaven; and by his poſition, ſtanding before the woman, in order to devour her child when born. Next follows an account of the birth of her child, and what became of that, and her: the child is ſaid to be a man-child, is deſcribed as a monarch, and as advanced to great honour and dignity; but ſhe flies into the wilderneſs, where a place is prepared for her of God, and where ſhe is hid for the ſpace of 1260 days, ver. 5, 6. upon this enſues a war in heaven; the combatants on one ſide were Michael and his angels, and on the other the dragon and his; the iſſue of which was, that the latter were conquered, and caſt out into the earth, ver. 7, 8, 9. on account of which victory a triumphant ſong is ſung by the inhabitants of heaven, becauſe of ſalvation and ſtrength that were come to them; and becauſe of the kingdom and power of Chriſt, which now took place; and becauſe of the ejection of ſatan, the accuſer of their brethren; in which ſong, alſo notice is taken of the manner in which ſatan was overcome by thoſe he accuſed, by the blood of the Lamb, by the word of their teſtimony, and by their death: and it is concluded with an apoſtrophe to thoſe that dwell in heaven, calling on them to rejoice, and to the inhabitants of the earth denouncing wo to them, becauſe the devil was among them, whoſe wrath was great, his time being ſhort, ver. 10, 11, 12. Next follow the dragon's perſecution of the woman, and her flight into the wilderneſs, and the care took of her there, as before deſcribed, ver. 13, 14. then the method the ſerpent took to annoy her, the help ſhe received from the earth, and the wrath of the dragon upon that; which put him upon making war with the remnant of her ſeed, who kept the commandments of God, and had the teſtimony of Jeſus, ver. 15, 16, 17.

Ver. 1. And there appeared a great wonder in heaven, &c.] This viſion begins a new account of things, and repreſents the church in the Apoſtles times, and purer ages of chriſtianity, and under the heathen and Arian perſecutions; after which an account is given of the beaſt, mentioned in ch. xi. 7. of his riſe, power, and reign, and then of the victories of the ſaints over him; and of the vials of God's wrath upon him, and of his utter ruin and deſtruction; when comes on the marriage of the Lamb, and after that the firſt reſurrection, and the thouſand years reign; and the whole is cloſed with a moſt beautiful deſcription of the new Jeruſalem ſtate, which is the grand point and utmoſt period this prophetic book leads unto. This viſion was ſeen in heaven, whither John was called up to, ch. iv. 1. and where the various ſcenes in a viſionary way, were acted, both before, and after this; and which was an emblem of the ſtate of the church on earth: what was ſeen is called a wonder, or ſign, it being very amazing to behold, and very ſignificative of perſons and things; and a great one, becauſe it reſpects great affairs, and wonderful events relating to the ſtate of the church in future times, as well as preſent: and the firſt thing ſeen and obſerved was a woman; by whom is meant, not the virgin Mary, as highly favoured of God, and big with her firſt-born ſon Jeſus; tho' there may be an alluſion to her, and in ſome things there is a likeneſs, as is by ſome obſerved; as Mary brought forth Chriſt corporally, and God in the fulneſs of time ſent forth his Son, made of a woman, ſo this woman brings forth Chriſt ſpiritually, or the manly birth of his kingdom in the world, or one that ſhould be the inſtrument of enlarging his kingdom; and as Herod ſought to deſtroy Chriſt in his infancy, and as ſoon as born, ſo the dragon here ſtands watching to deſtroy the manly birth as ſoon as brought forth; and as Joſeph, with Mary, and her ſon, by a divine direction, fled into Egypt, where they continued during the reign of Herod, ſo to this woman are given two wings of an eagle, to flee into the wilderneſs, where ſhe abides, and is nouriſhed, during the reign of antichriſt; and as Herod, after the flight of Mary, killed all the infants of Bethlehem, of two years of age, and under, that he might deſtroy her ſon, ſo the dragon caſts out a flood of water after the woman, to carry her away, and makes war with the remnant of her ſeed; and as the ſon of Mary, after he had done his work, was taken up to heaven, and made Lord and Chriſt, ſo the man-child, this woman brings forth, is caught up to God, and his throne, to rule all nations with a rod of iron. But Mary, and the birth of Chriſt, can never be intended in this viſion, that affair being paſt and over, and would never be repreſented to John in this manner, who was well accquainted with it: nor is the church of God, among the Jews, of the former diſpenſation, deſigned; who were highly honoured of God, on whom he ſhone forth at the giving of the law to them; who had his word and ordinances, to be a light unto them, and had the prieſts and prophets of the Lord among them; and whoſe crown and glory it was to deſcend from the twelve patriarchs; and who were in great expectation of, and moſt earneſtly deſired, and longed for, and were, as it were, in pain for the coming of the Meſſiah; but to what purpoſe could ſuch a repreſentation of them be made to John now? much leſs is the church of the Jews, or the Jewiſh ſynagogue, as it was at the coming and birth of Chriſt, here deſigned, which was an evil, wicked, and adulterous generation, and ſo bad as not to be declared by the tongue, and pen of man, and therefore far from anſwering the deſcription here; but the pure apoſtolic church is meant, or the church of Chriſt, as it was in the times of the Apoſtles, and the firſt ages of chriſtianity: the deſcription anſwers to the firſt of the ſeven churches, the church at Epheſus, and to the opening of the firſt ſeal; and the church apoſtolical is here called a woman, becauſe the church was not now in its infancy, in nonage, as under the former diſpenſation, but grown up, mature, and at full age; and becauſe eſpouſed and married to Chriſt her huſband, to whom ſhe now brought forth many children, in a ſpiritual ſenſe, as ſhe hereafter will bring forth many more; and becauſe of her beauty in the eyes of her lord and huſband, which is greatly deſired, and highly commended by him; as alſo becauſe of her weakneſs in herſelf, her miniſters and members, not being able to do any thing without her huſband, Chriſt, thro' whom ſhe can do all things. And who is further deſcribed by her habit and attire, clothed with the ſun; which does not point at her future ſtate in glory; ſee Matt. xiii. 47. but to her then preſent ſtate on earth; and is expreſſive of that clear light of Goſpel doctrine, which ſhone out upon her, like the ſun in its meridian glory, and of the heat of love to God, Chriſt, and his people, and zeal for his truths, ordinances, worſhip, and diſcipline which appeared in her; and of that inward holineſs of heart which made her all glorious within; and of the outward purity of life and converſation, which greatly adorned her; but above all, of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, who is the ſun of righteouſneſs, and the Lord her righteouſneſs; which righteouſneſs, as it was doctrinally held forth by her in the cleareſt manner, was alſo as a garment on her, to cover, preſerve, and beautify her; and is comparable to the ſun for its glory and excellency, outſhining that of angels and men; and for its ſpotleſs purity, being without any blemiſh or deficiency; and for its perpetuity, being an everlaſting one, and even exceeding the ſun in duration. And the moon under her feet; the church is ſometimes compared to the moon herſelf, becauſe as the moon receives its light from the ſun, ſo ſhe receives her light from Chriſt; and as the moon often changes, and has its various phaſes and appearances, ſo the church ſometimes is in the exerciſe of grace, and ſometimes not; ſometimes under trials and perſecutions, and at other times in reſt and peace; one while retaining the doctrines and ordinances of the Goſpel in their power and purity, and anon almoſt over-run with errors and ſuperſtition; but this cannot be the ſenſe here. The common interpretation is, that it ſignifies the church's contempt of, and trampling upon all worldly things, which are changeable, periſhing, and paſſing away; and which very well ſuits with the primitive ſaints, who did not ſet their affections on things in earth, but on things in heaven, who ſold their worldly poſſeſſions, and laid them at the Apoſtles feet. Brightman thinks, that as the moon is a luminary, it may denote the light derived from the word of God, which was a lamp to her feet, and a lantern to her paths, by which her diſcipline and public worſhip were directed, and all the private actions of life were ſquared; which is no contemptible ſenſe of the words: but I rather think the ceremonial law is intended, which is very fitly repreſented by the moon; it conſiſted much in the obſervation of new moons, and its ſolemn feſtivals were governed and regulated by them; ſee 2 Chron. viii. 12, 13. Iſ. i. 13. Amos viii. 5. There was ſome light in it, and it gave light to the ſaints in the night of Jewiſh darkneſs; it pointed out Chriſt to them, and was their ſchool-maſter to teach and lead them to him; yet like the moon, it was the leſſer light, the light it gave was inferior to that which the Goſpel now gives; and as the moon has its ſpots, ſo had that its imperfections; had it been faultleſs, there had been no need of another, and a new diſpenſation, but that could make nothing perfect; and as the moon, it was variable and changeable; it was but for a time, and is now done away; it is not only waxen old, like the moon in the wain, but is entirely vaniſhed away: and yet, tho' it was aboliſhed by the death of Chriſt, it was kept up and maintained by many of the Jews, even of them that believed: perſons are naturally fond of ceremonies; and many had rather part with a doctrine of the Goſpel, than with an old cuſtom, or an uſeleſs ceremony; and this was, in a great meaſure, the caſe of the Jews; ſee Acts xxi. 20. ſo that it was one of the greateſt difficulties the chriſtian church had to grapple with, to get the ceremonial law under foot; for tho' it was under the feet of Chriſt, it was a long time 'ere it was under the feet of the church; and a wonder it was when it was accompliſhed. Mr. Daubuz has given a new interpretation of this clauſe; and by the moon he underſtands the Holy Ghoſt, the governour of the church, next to Chriſt, his ſucceſſor and vicar, and the miniſter of him, the ſun of righteouſneſs; who is ſaid to be under the feet of the church, to aſſiſt her in her labour, and in the bringing forth of her man-child; and to ſupport and ſuſtain her followers and members; and to be a luminary to them, to guide them in their ways. And upon her head a crown of twelve ſtars; by ſtars are meant the miniſters of the Goſpel, which Chriſt holds in his right hand, and the church here bears on her head, ch. i. 20. And theſe twelve have reſpect to the twelve Apoſtles of Chriſt; and the crown, which was compoſed of theſe ſtars, deſigns the doctrine which they preached; and this being on her head, ſhows that it was in the beginning of this church-ſtate that the pure apoſtolic doctrine was embraced, profeſſed, and held forth; for in the latter part of it there was a great decline, and falling off from it; in the times of the Apoſtle Paul, the myſtery of iniquity began to work; and in John's time many antichriſts were come into the world: and alſo this ſignifies, that the church openly owned the doctrine of the Apoſtles, and was not aſhamed of it before men, and publickly preached, and held it forth in her miniſters, to all the world; and that this was her crown and glory, ſo long as ſhe held it in its power, purity, and was both what ſhe gloried in, and was a glory, an ornament to her: and this was alſo an emblem of her victory over her enemies, and of her future happineſs, and pointed at the means of both; that it was by a faithful and ſteadfaſt adherence to the doctrine of the Apoſtles, that ſhe overcame ſatan, and all her ſpiritual enemies, and came to the poſſeſſion of the crown of life and glory.

[*] T. Bab. Yoma, fol. 21. 2. See 1 Eſdras i. 54. 2 Maccab. ii. 4, 5.

Ver. 2. And ſhe being big with child, &c.] Which may be expreſſive of the fruitfulneſs of the church in bearing and bringing forth many ſouls to Chriſt, and which were very numerous in this period of time, when it was ſaid of Zion that this and that man was born in her; and particularly of her pregnancy with the kingdom of Chriſt, to be brought forth, and ſet up in the Roman empire, under the influence of a Roman emperor: and this being her caſe, ſhe cried, travailing in birth, and pained to be delivered; which are metaphors taken from a woman in travail; and may either denote the earneſt cries and fervent prayers of the members of the church, and the laborious and painful miniſtrations of the preachers of the Goſpel for the converſion of ſouls, and eſpecially for the ſetting up of the kingdom of Chriſt in the empire of Rome; or elſe the ſore and grievous perſecutions which attended the Apoſtles of Chriſt, and ſucceeding miniſters of the word, throughout the times of the ten Roman emperors, and eſpecially under Diocleſian; when the church was big, and laboured in great pain, and the time was drawing on apace that a chriſtian emperor ſhould be brought forth, who ſhould be a means of ſpreading the Goſpel, and the kingdom of Chriſt, all over the empire; ſee Jer. xxx. 6, 7. Matt. xxiv. 8. ſo the Targumiſt frequently explains the pains of a woman in travail in the prophets by עקא, tribulation; ſee the Targum on Iſ. xiii. 8. xxvi. 18. and lxvi. 7.

Ver. 3. And there appeared another wonder in heaven, &c.] Or ſign; which repreſents the woman, or the church's adverſary, ſatan; not that he was in heaven, in the third heaven, the place of glory and happineſs, for out of that he had been caſt long ago; but in his great power and authority here on earth, particularly in the Roman empire, where the church was labouring to bring forth her man child: and behold a great red dragon; the devil, as it is explained in ver. 9. though not he in perſon, but the heathen Roman empire, or the heathen Roman emperors, acted, influenced, directed, and preſided over by him; ſo Pharaoh king of Egypt, and other cruel and perſecuting monarchs and ſtates are called dragons in ſcripture, Iſ. xxvii. 1. and li. 9. Ezek. xxix. 3. all which places the Targum interprets of מלכא, a king, and particularly of Pharaoh king of Egypt, who is like to a great and mighty dragon: and the Roman pagan empire, as under the influence of ſatan, the god of this world, is fitly compared to a dragon, for its policy and cunning in circumventing and enſnaring the profeſſors of chriſtianity; and for its cruelty and inhumanity in perſecuting of them; and for its poiſon of idolatry, will-worſhip, and ſuperſtition: and it may be called a great one, for its ſtrength and power, which lay in its immenſe treaſure and riches, in numbers of men, in powerful armies, in ſtrong cities, caſtles, &c. and for its large extent and juriſdiction; and a red one, becauſe of the blood of the ſaints ſhed in it, by which it became of this colour; ſuitable to the character and bloody practices of the old ſerpent the devil, by whom it was influenced, who was a murderer from the beginning; and agreeable to one of the names by which the Jews [x] frequently call the Roman empire, Edom, the name Eſau had from the red pottage he ſold his birth-right for, and who himſelf was born red, Gen. xxv. 29, 30. it ſeems there were red dragons; Homer [y] ſays of the dragon, that it is red upon its back: having ſeven heads, and ten horns, and ſeven crowns upon his heads; the ſeven heads of the Roman empire, either deſign the ſeven mountains, or hills, on which Rome, the metropolis of the empire, was built, as the ſeven heads of the beaſt on which the woman drunk with the blood of the ſaints ſat, are explained in ch. xvii. 9. or rather the ſeven forms of government which ſucceſſively ſhould obtain in the empire, as kings, conſuls, decemvirs, dictators, tribunes, emperors, and popes; hence theſe heads are ſaid to have ſeven crowns upon them, as expreſſive of the imperial power and dignity which were in them, and exerciſed by them: Mr. Daubuz thinks ſeven capital cities in the Roman empire are meant, as Rome, Carthage, Æge, Antiochia, Auguſtodunum, Alexandria, and Conſtantinople; and nothing is more common than to call chief cities the heads of the countries they belong unto, as Damaſcus the head of Syria, and Samaria the head of Ephraim, Iſ. vii. 8, 9. Pliny [z] calls Babylon the head of Chaldea; and Cornelius Nepos ſays [a] of Thebes, that it was the head of all Greece; and Syracuſe is by Florus [b] called the head of Sicily, as Rome is in Livy [c], and other writers, the head of the world: and by the ten horns are meant either the ten kingdoms which ſhould hereafter ariſe out of the Roman empire, and whoſe kings ſhould give their kingdoms to the beaſt; or the ten Roman emperors, the perſecutors of the chriſtians; or rather the ten provinces, or juriſdictions, which the empire was divided into whilſt pagan: Brightman out of Strabo has ſhewn, that in the times of Auguſtus Cæſar the Roman empire was diſtributed into two parts, the one was more immediately under the care of the emperor, and the other was governed by deputies; and each were divided into ten provinces; that which the emperor held conſiſted of Africa, France, Britain, Germany, Dacia with Myſia and Thracia, Cappadocia, Armenia, Syria, Paleſtine with Judea

Ver. 4. And his tail drew the third part of the ſtars of heaven, and did caſt them to the earth, &c.] So Solinus[e] ſpeaks of dragons that have power not only in their teeth, but in their tails, and do more hurt by ſtriking than by biting; and the great ſerpent which Attilius Regulus and his army fought with, not only deſtroyed many of his ſoldiers with its vaſt mouth, but daſhed many to pieces with its tail[f]; which ſerpent, Pliny[g] ſays, was a hundred and twenty foot long: this is ſaid in alluſion to Antiochus Epiphanes, in Dan. viii. 10. and deſigns either the ſubduing of the third part of the principalities, ſtates, and kingdoms of the known world, to the Roman empire, thro' its great power and ſtrength; which lay in its tail, in its train of armies, which attended it, whereby ſuch a number of nations were drawn into ſubjection to it, inſomuch that the empire was called all the world, Luke ii. 1. or elſe the influence the dragon ſhould have upon the miniſters of the word, who are compared to ſtars, ch. i. 20. by cauſing them to relinquiſh their miniſtry, and drop their heavenly employment, and fall from that high and honourable ſtate in which they were, into a carnal, earthly, and worldly religion; and that either thro' policy, cunning, and flattery, or thro' ſorcery, magic art, lying oracles and prophecy; ſee Iſ. ix. 15. or thro' the violence of perſecution, they had not power to withſtand; of which falling ſtars there are many inſtances, as the eccleſiaſtical hiſtories of thoſe times ſhow: and the dragon ſtood before the woman which was ready to be delivered, for to devour her child as ſoon as it was born; juſt as the dragon Pharaoh lay in the midſt of his rivers, in the river Nile, Ezek. xxix. 3. to ſlay the male children of Iſrael, as ſoon as born; and as the dragon Herod ſought to take away the life of Jeſus quickly after his birth; and as ſatan is like a roaring lion, ſeeking whom he may devour, ſo the pagan empire, or the pagan emperors, took every opportunity to ſtifle the kingdom of Chriſt in embryo, and to prevent the bringing forth of any illuſtrious perſon; and ſought to deſtroy him as ſoon as he appeared, who might be thought, or ſuſpected to be an inſtrument of encouraging and eſtabliſhing the kingdom of Chriſt in the empire: the inſtances Brightman produces are appoſite, and to the purpoſe; as of Maximinus deſtroying Alexander the ſon of Mammea, who he ſaw was inclined to the chriſtians; and of Decius taking off the two Philips, father and ſon, who were favourable to their cauſe; but eſpecially the watchfullneſs of the dragon to deſtroy the man-child was very manifeſt in the Roman emperors towards Conſtantine; Diocleſian and Galerius obſerving his virtuous diſpoſition in his youth, left nothing unattempted to cut him off privately; he was ſent againſt the Sarmatians, a cruel and ſavage people, in hopes he would have been deſtroyed by them; and was ſet to fight with a lion in the theatre, under a pretence of exerciſing and ſhewing his valour; and many other methods were uſed to take away his life, but none ſucceeded.

Ver. 5. And ſhe brought forth a man child, &c.] Not Chriſt literally and perſonally conſidered, or Chriſt in his human nature, as made of a woman, and born of a virgin, which was a fact that had been years ago; but Chriſt myſtically, or Chriſt in his members, who are called by his name, becauſe he is formed in them, and they are the ſeed of the woman, the church; and many of theſe were brought forth to Chriſt by the church in the primitive times, who were a manly birth, hale, ſtrong, and robuſt chriſtians; or rather this manly birth may deſign a more glorious appearing and breaking forth of the kingdom of Chriſt in the Roman empire; for tho' Chriſt came as a king, yet his kingdom was not with obſervation in the days of his fleſh; and tho' upon his aſcenſion to heaven, he was made and declared Lord and Chriſt, and had a kingdom and intereſt in the world, and even in the Roman empire, during the firſt three centuries, yet this was attended with the croſs and perſecution; but now towards the cloſe of that period, Conſtantine a chriſtian emperor was born, under whoſe influence and encouragement the Goſpel was ſpread, and the kingdom of Chriſt ſet up, and eſtabliſhed in the empire; and this ſeems to be the thing intended here, he being of a generous, heroic, and manly diſpoſition: who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron; this has a manifeſt reference to Pſ. ii. 9. which pſalm, and the paſſage referred to in it, evidently belong to Chriſt; and as this is repreſented as ſomething future, what ſhould be hereafter, and not what would immediately take place, it may regard the kingdom of Chriſt in the laſt times, of which the preſent breaking forth of it in Conſtantine's time, was an emblem and pledge; and may denote the univerſality of it, it reaching to all the kingdoms of the world, and the manner in which Chriſt will rule, eſpecially over his enemies, antichriſt and his followers, whom he'll deſtroy with the breath of his mouth, and break in pieces with his rod of iron, and order all that would not have him to reign over them, ſlain before him; and as this may be applied to Chriſt myſtical, the ſeed of the church, and members of Chriſt, as it is in Rev. ii. 26, 27. it may relate to their reign with Chriſt on earth, when they ſhall ſit on thrones, and judge the world, when the kingdom and dominion, and the greatneſs of the kingdom under the whole heaven ſhall be given to them; but ſince this is expreſly ſaid of the man-child in the text, it may be expreſſive even of the temporal government of Conſtantine, who was an heroic and victorious prince, and extended his dominions to the ſeveral parts of the world; as far as Britain to the weſt, and all Scythia to the north, Ethiopia to the ſouth, and the remote parts of India to the eaſt, even to the ultimate parts of the whole world, as Euſebius[h] affirms, making his kingdom to be three times larger than that of Alexander the Great: and more eſpecially it may deſcribe the kingdom of Chriſt in his times; which was ſpread throughout all the nations of the empire; when paganiſm was demoliſhed, both in the continent and in the iſles of the ſea, and the ſtrong holds of ſatan were pulled down, not by carnal, but ſpiritual weapons; when multitudes of ſouls were converted by the word, the rod of Chriſt's ſtrength, and when the ſaints were guided, directed, fed, and comforted by it; for the alluſion ſeems to be to the ſhepherd's rod, with which he leads and feeds his ſheep; the ſame word ſignifies both to rule and feed: and her child was caught up unto God, and to his throne; which is to be underſtood not of Chriſt's aſcent to heaven in human nature, when he was ſet down on the ſame throne with his Father; nor of Chriſt myſtical, or of the ſaints being caught up into the air, to meet the Lord, and be for ever with him, and ſit down with him on the ſame throne; but rather of ſome glorious advance of the church and kingdom of Chriſt on earth; for as to fall from heaven is expreſſive of debaſement and meanneſs, and of a low eſtate that a perſon is brought into, Iſ. xiv. 12. ſo an aſcending up to heaven, as the two witneſſes in the preceding chapter are ſaid to do, denotes exaltation, or a riſe to ſome more glorious ſtate and condition, which was the caſe of the church in Conſtantine's time: and this may alſo take in the acceſſion of Conſtantine himſelf to the imperial throne, which was the throne of God; for kings have their ſceptres, thrones and kingdoms from him, they are his vicegerents, and in ſome meaſure repreſent him, and are therefore called gods, and the children of the moſt high; yea, ſince Conſtantine, as advanced to the empire, was ſuch an inſtrument in Chriſt's hand for the ſetting up and eſtabliſhing his kingdom in it, Chriſt himſelf may be here repreſented as reigning over the Roman empire, as a preſage and prelude of his reigning over all the earth another day.

Ver. 6. And the woman fled into the wilderneſs, &c.] Not as ſoon as ſhe was delivered of her child, which is not reaſonable to ſuppoſe, and would have been improper, if not impracticable; nor indeed was this flight until after the war was over, mentioned in the next verſes; nor until the dragon and his angels were conquered, and caſt out; nor until a freſh perſecution was raiſed by the dragon againſt the woman, as appears from ver. 14. where this account ſtands in its proper place, and is here only introduced by way of prolepſis, or anticipation, and that with this view, to ſhow what care was taken of the woman, as well as of her ſon: and this does not deſign the flight of the chriſtians from Jeruſalem to Pella, a little before the deſtruction of the former; nor the expulſion of the Jews or chriſtians from Rome, either by Claudius or by Nero; but the diſappearance of the true church, and its obſcure ſtate and condition quickly after the above advance of it; for thro' the riches and honours which Conſtantine beſtowed upon the chriſtians, they became vain, proud, ambitious, and careleſs; falſe doctrine and ſuperſtition obtained; the antichriſtian apoſtacy came on apace, and prevailed and increaſed, and ſo obſcured the true church, that in proceſs of time it became inviſible, was in the cleft of the rock, and in the ſecret places of the ſtairs, or like perſons in a wood or wilderneſs, not to be ſeen, as well as deſolate and uncomfortable: where ſhe hath a place prepared of God; for God has had, and will have a church in the worſt of times; as he reſerved a number in Elijah's time, ſo he did in the times of the antichriſtian apoſtacy, who bowed not the knee to idolatry; this woman, the church, and her caſe, are the ſame with the 144000 ſealed ones in ch. vii. whom God diſtinguiſhed, hid, and preſerved; for the wilderneſs is a place of retirement and ſafety, Ezek. xxxiv. 25. as well as of obſcurity; and if any particular place is pointed at, I ſhould think the valleys of Piedmont, which lie between France and Italy, are intended, where God has preſerved, and continued a ſett of witneſſes to the truth, in a ſucceſſion, from the beginning of the apoſtacy to the preſent time, living in obſcurity, and in ſafety, ſo far as not to be utterly deſtroyed: that they ſhould feed her there a thouſand two hundred and threeſcore days; in alluſion to the children of Iſrael in the wilderneſs, where they were fed with manna forty years; ſo the overcomers, or true chriſtians in the Pergamos church-ſtate, have hidden manna given them to eat, the food of the wilderneſs, with which church-ſtate the church in the wilderneſs muſt be conſidered, as cotemporary, as alſo with the Thyatirian and Sardian church-ſtates; for tho' at the reformation, which the Sardian church-ſtate introduces, the church appeared again, and has been ever ſince coming up out of the wilderneſs, yet ſhe is ſtill in it; where ſhe is fed and nouriſhed with the Goſpel, and the ordinances of it, by the faithful miniſters of the word, the two witneſſes that propheſy in ſackcloth; the time of whoſe propheſying is exactly of the ſame date with the woman's being in the wilderneſs, and with the reign of antichriſt, namely forty-two months, or 1260 days, that is, ſo many years, ch. xi. 2, 3. and xiii. 5.

Ver. 7. And there was war in heaven, &c.] Not in the third heaven, the habitation of God, the ſeat of the angels and glorified ſaints, there is no diſcord, jars, and contentions there, nothing but peace, love, and joy; but in the church below, which is militant, and has in it as it were a company of two armies; or rather in the Roman empire, which was the heaven of ſatan, the God of this world, and of his angels: and this war refers not to the diſpute between Michael the archangel and the devil about the body of Moſes; nor to the fall of the angels when they rebelled againſt God, left their firſt eſtate, and were caſt down to hell; nor to that antient and ſtated enmity between the ſeed of the ſerpent and the ſeed of the woman, which has appeared in all ages of time, more or leſs, ſince the fall of Adam; nor to the combats which Chriſt perſonally had with ſatan and his powers, when here on earth, as in the wilderneſs, immediately after his baptiſm, and in the garden, a little before his death, and on the croſs, when he ſpoiled principalities and powers, and deſtroyed him that had the power of death, the devil; but rather to the conflict which Chriſt and his people had with the rulers of the darkneſs of this world, with the Roman powers, and with falſe teachers, during the three firſt centuries; though it ſeems beſt to underſtand it of the war commenced by Conſtantine againſt paganiſm, and which was finiſhed by Theodoſius, by whom heatheniſm received its death-wound, and was never reſtored ſince: the phraſe of war in heaven, is not unknown to the Jews; they ſay [i], when Pharaoh purſued after Iſrael, there was war above and below, and there was a very fierce war בשמים, in heaven: Michael and his angels fought againſt the dragon; by whom is meant not a created angel, with whom his name does not agree, it ſignifying who is as God; nor does it appear that there is any one created angel that preſides over the reſt, and has them at his command; tho' the Jews ſeem to imagine as if the angels were ranged under ſeveral heads and governors, of whom they make Michael to be one; for they ſay [k], "when "the holy bleſſed God deſcended on mount Sinai, "ſeveral companies of angels deſcended with him, "מיכאל וחבורתו, Michael and his company, and Ga"briel and his company:" ſo kings of armies, in Pſ. lxviii. 12. are by them interpreted of kings of angels; and it is aſked who are theſe? and the anſwer is, Michael and Gabriel [l]. Lord Napeir thinks that the Holy Ghoſt is deſigned, who is equally and truly God as the Father and the Son, and who in the hearts of the ſaints oppoſes ſatan and his temptations; but it ſeems beſt to interpret it of Jeſus Chriſt, who is equal with God, is his fellow, is one with the Father, and in whom the fullneſs of the Godhead dwells bodily; he is the archangel, the firſt of the chief princes, the head of all principality and power, who is on the ſide of the Lord's people, pleads their cauſe, defends their perſons, and ſaves them; ſee Jude 9. Dan. x. 13. and xii. 1. and by his angels may be meant either the good angels, literally underſtood, who are his creatures, his miniſters, and whom he employs under him, in protecting his people, and in deſtroying his enemies; or elſe the miniſters of the Goſpel, who are called angels in this book, and who, under Chriſt, fight the good fight of faith, contend earneſtly for it, being valiant for the truth upon earth; or rather the chriſtian emperors, particularly Conſtantine and Theodoſius, and the chriſtians with them, who oppoſed paganiſm in the empire, and at laſt ſubdued, and caſt it out: and the dragon fought, and his angels; there is ſuch an order among the evil angels, as to have one of their own at the head of them, they having caſt off their allegiance to God and Chriſt, who is ſtiled the prince of devils, and his name is Beelzebub; hence we read of the devil and his angels; ſee Matt. xii. 24. and xxv. 41. and theſe may be intended here, unleſs falſe teachers, who transform themſelves into angels of light, as their leader ſometimes does, ſhould be thought to be meant, who reſiſt the truth, and oppoſe themſelves to the miniſters of it; tho' rather ſatan as preſiding over, and influencing the Roman pagan empire, and the Roman emperors, who acted under him, are here deſigned; with whom Conſtantine and Theodoſius, under Chriſt, combated, ſuch as Maximinus, Maxentius, Licinius, Arbogaſtes, and Eugenius, and thoſe that were with them. The Arabic verſion renders it, the ſerpent with his ſoldiers.

Ver. 8. And prevailed not, &c.] That is, the dragon, or the devil, and his angels, prevailed not againſt Michael and his angels; but on the other hand, were conquered by them, as the above tyrants were by Conſtantine and Theodoſius: ſome copies read in the ſingular number, and he prevailed not, as the Alexandrian copy, the Complutenſian edition, the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions; and other copies in the plural number, they prevailed not; and as the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions: neither was their place found any more in heaven; in the Roman empire; or his place, as ſome copies and verſions: this was the time of the judgment of the world, or of the empire as pagan, ſatan the prince of the world, who had long governed in it, was now caſt out of all power and authority in it, and all the idol gods in whom he was worſhipped, with all the idolatrous prieſts; nor were there any more any heathen emperors, for after Conſtantine's time there was only Julian the apoſtate, and who reigned but a little while; and after Theodoſius, who cleared the empire of paganiſm, there never was any, and there is reaſon to believe there never will be.

Ver. 9. And the great dragon was caſt out, &c.] From heaven, or from power and authority in the Roman empire, namely the devil, where he had long preſided; it is obſervable that Conſtantine himſelf ſpeaks of the dragon being removed from the government of the commonwealth by the providence of God, and by the miniſtry, or means of him [m]; and he had his own effigies on a table placed before the porch of his palace, with the croſs over his head, and a dragon under his feet thruſt tho' with darts, and falling headlong [n]: the old ſerpent; who is ſo called becauſe of old, from the beginning, almoſt as ſoon as the world was, he appeared in the form of a ſerpent, or rather made uſe of it as an inſtrument and means, by which he ſeduced Eve, and ſo brought on the ruin of mankind: it is very uſual with the Jews to call the devil נחש הקדמיני, the old ſerpent [o]; wherefore John uſes this phraſe as a known one, to explain who was meant by the great dragon: called the devil and ſatan; the firſt of theſe names ſignifies an accuſer, and a forger of calumnies, and ſuch is the old ſerpent; he accuſes God to men, as if he was envious of their happineſs, as in the caſe of our firſt parents, and of men to God, of which there is an inſtance in the caſe of Job; and hence he is in the following verſe called the accuſer of the brethren; and the latter of them ſignifies an enemy, one that is filled with hatred and enmity to God and Chriſt, and to his church and people, whoſe adverſary he is ſaid to be, and at whoſe right-hand he ſtands to reſiſt, as he did Joſhua the high-prieſt: which deceiveth the whole world; which he did by deceiving our firſt parents, from whom all mankind ſpring, and in whoſe loins they were when they were deceived; ſo the Jews ſay [p] of the old ſerpent, that מטעה לכל העולם, he deceives the whole world; and ſo he deceived and corrupted the old world before the flood; and ſo he ſeduces every age and generation of men in the world; but here the Roman empire, ſometimes called all the world, as in Luke ii. 1. is meant, whom ſatan deceived by drawing it into idolatry and ſuperſtition: he was caſt out into the earth; he was caſt out of the Roman empire, from the rule of it, and worſhip in it, the heathen gods and heathen emperors being no more; when he poſſeſſed and inſtigated, and influenced the Huns, Goths, and Vandals, a meaner and baſer ſort of people, hereafter in this chapter called the earth, which is ſaid to help the woman, contrary to the intention of ſatan; the phraſe denotes the greatneſs of the fall of ſatan, his loſs of power, and the meanneſs and low eſtate of the perſons he afterwards had the power of, both the ſavage people beforementioned, and the antichriſtian party: and his angels were caſt out with him; the heathen emperors, magiſtrates, prieſts, and other votaries of his, which he made uſe of as inſtruments to do his will.

Ver. 10. And I heard a loud voice ſaying in heaven, &c.] Which was a ſong of praiſe on account of the victory obtained by Michael and his angels over the dragon and his, or for the overthrow and downfall of paganiſm in the Roman empire; for by heaven is meant the empire, now become chriſtian, or the chriſtian church-ſtate in it; and the loud voice heard in it by John, ſhows that there was a great number in it, who rejoiced on this occaſion, and that they were full of affection and fervency, and therefore expreſſed themſelves in ſuch manner, and in form following: now is come ſalvation and ſtrength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Chriſt; ſalvation was come when Chriſt obtained it by his ſufferings and death, and comes to particular perſons in effectual vocation, and it will only be fully come when it is perfectly enjoyed in heaven; but here it deſigns a deliverance from ſatan, as the god of this world, who was now dethroned, and caſt down from his power, authority, and influence in the empire; and from pagan idolatry and ſuperſtition, and from the ten days of tribulation, the cruel and bloody perſecutions under the heathen emperors; and denotes that ſafety and ſecurity, comfort, peace, and happineſs, the churches enjoyed under the government of a chriſtian emperor: and now was come ſtrength; not the ſtrength of Chriſt perſonal, diſplayed in the redemption of his people; but rather of Chriſt myſtical, of his church and intereſt, which had been very weak and low, and under oppreſſion and perſecution, but was now exalted, and in a flouriſhing condition, and was become ſtrong and mighty; or it may deſign the ſtrength and power of Chriſt, ſhown in deſtroying his enemies, in caſting the dragon out of heaven down to the earth, and in bringing to confuſion and deſtruction the heathen emperors, princes, and others, who fled to the rocks and mountains for fear of him, and becauſe of his great wrath: alſo now came the kingdom of our God; the Goſpel of the kingdom was preached every where, and Goſpel churches were ſet up in all parts of the empire, both which are ſometimes ſignified by the kingdom of God; here was now an illuſtrious appearance of the kingdom of God in the world, ſuch as had never been before; and which was a pledge and preſage of the greatneſs of the kingdom, or of that everlaſting kingdom which will be ſet up hereafter, when all other kingdoms will be at an end: to which is added the power of his Chriſt; or his authority as Lord and Chriſt, which took place at his reſurrection, aſcenſion, and ſeſſion at the right-hand of God; and which will more fully appear at the laſt day, when he ſhall come in glory, and exerciſe his authority in judging the quick and dead; of which there was ſome reſemblance at this time, in dethroning ſatan, deſtroying paganiſm, and putting an end to the power of the heathen emperors and empire; and which is expreſſed in ſuch language as the day of judgment is, ch. vi. 12—17. for to the opening of the ſixth ſeal does this paſſage belong: a further account is given of the matter of this ſong, and the reaſon of it: for the accuſer of our brethren is caſt down; hence it appears that this is not a ſong of the angels in heaven, ſince the ſaints are never called their brethren, nor the angels theirs, but their fellow-ſervants; rather it may be thought to be the ſong of the ſaints in heaven, acknowledging thoſe on earth to be their brethren, as they are, for there is but one family in heaven and in earth; and the ſaints on earth are called the brethren of the ſouls under the altar, ch. vi. 9, 11. but as this refers to the ſtate of the church in Conſtantine's time, it muſt be the ſong of the ſaints in that ſtate, who call the martyrs that had been ſlain under the former perſecutions, their brethren; for that they are the perſons meant, is clear from the following verſe, whom ſatan is an accuſer of, for he is deſigned here; the word rendered devil ſignifies an accuſer, and a falſe one, and is ſo tranſlated Tit. ii. 3. this is a name frequently given to ſatan by the Jews, and have adopted into their language the very Greek word [q] that is here uſed; and often ſay of him that he accuſes Iſrael, and particularly that he accuſes Iſrael above, that is in heaven; and that he ſtands and מקטרג תמיד [r], continually accuſes them, the very phraſe uſed in the next clauſe: when Iſrael came out of Egypt they ſay [s], the angel Samael (the devil) ſtood and accuſed them; the firſt day of the month Tiſri, according to them [t] is appointed a day for blowing of trumpets, to confound ſatan, who comes to accuſe at that time; ſo they ſay [u], that ſatan ſtood and accuſed Abraham, and others; and indeed he was an accuſer from the beginning, both of God to men, and of men to God; we have inſtances in Job, and Joſhua the high-prieſt, Job i. 8, 9, 10, 11. Zech. iii. 1. but here it refers to the accuſations brought againſt the chriſtians in the primitive times, during the ten perſecutions, which were very horrid ones indeed; as that they had their private ſuppers, at which they eat their own infants, and their nightly meetings, for the gratifying of their luſts, in which they committed adultery, inceſt, and all manner of uncleanneſs; if ever a fire happened in a city, they were charged with it; and whenever there were any famine, or peſtilence, or wars, or any public calamity, they were accuſed as the cauſe and occaſion of it; as appears from the apologies for them written by Juſtin, Tertullian, Cyprian, Minutius Felix, &c. ſo that ſatan at this time was remarkably the accuſer of the brethren; but now this father of lyes was caſt down, he was caſt out of heaven, and deprived of that power and authority he had in the empire, and loſt his influence over men, and could not ſpread his lyes, and get his falſe charges and accuſations credited and received as before; he was not indeed wholly deſtroyed, nor even ſhut up in the bottomleſs pit, but he was caſt down to the earth; he was in a low condition, his power was greatly diminiſhed, and he was conquered by Chriſt, and caſt down and bruiſed under the feet of the ſaints: which accuſed them before our God day and night; ſo the evil ſpirit in Ahab's time, and ſatan in Job's time, are ſaid to ſtand before the Lord; and this ſhows the malice, and alſo the inſolence of the devil, that he ſhould ſtand and accuſe the ſaints before God, who he knew was their God, and was on their ſide, and therefore his accuſations could be of no avail; and tho' Chriſt appears in the preſence of God for them, and is their advocate with the Father, yet he is conſtant and indefatigable in going about, and picking up charges againſt them, and carrying them to God.

Ver. 11. And they overcame him by the blood of the Lamb, &c.] The Lord Jeſus Chriſt, by whoſe blood they were redeemed and ranſomed out of the hands of ſatan, that was ſtronger than they; and by which they were juſtified from all ſin, and ſo all charges and condemnation were of no avail againſt them, whether of ſatan or the world; and by which they were cleanſed from all pollution, both internal and external; and by which even their converſation-garments were waſhed and made white; by this alſo they drew nigh to God with boldneſs, as to their own God, notwithſtanding the accuſations of ſatan; and this they could, and did make uſe of as a ſhield to defend them againſt all his charges; and this being ſprinkled upon them, as it gave them an inward conſcience-peace amidſt all, ſo it was their ſecurity from the deſtroying angel; and under this purple covering they went triumphantly to glory, having thro' it obtained an entire conqueſt over ſatan: as alſo and by the word of their teſtimony; either by Chriſt, the eſſential Word, they bore record of, who is ſharper than any two-edged ſword, and through whom they were made more than conquerors; or rather by the uſe they made of the ſcriptures of truth, the ſword of the ſpirit, the word of God, to which they bore a faithful teſtimony, and to which they adhered, and by ſo doing gained the victory over ſatan and his inſtruments, whether falſe teachers or perſecutors; and particularly by the Goſpel, which they embraced, profeſſed, and preached with conſtancy and courage, and by their laſt teſtimony they bore to it at their death, on the account of it, as it follows: and they loved not their lives unto the death; they did not value them; they made no account of them; they were not anxiouſly careful to preſerve them; they choſe to loſe them; they ran to the ſtake, and willingly and chearfully laid them down; they did not count them dear unto them, as ſaid the Apoſtle Paul, that they might finiſh their courſe with joy, and teſtify the Goſpel of the grace of God, or bear a teſtimony to it, Acts xx. 24. yea, as Chriſt has directed, Luke xiv. 26. they hated their lives in compariſon of him, and when in competition with him and his Goſpel; and by dying thus they conquered ſatan; had they loved their lives, and ſaved them by denying Chriſt and his truths, ſatan would have conquered them; but dying in the cauſe of Chriſt, and for it, they got the victory over him.

Ver. 12. Therefore rejoice ye heavens, and ye that dwell in them, &c.] So in the prophetic language, at times, and upon occaſions of rejoicing, the heavens are called upon to join, and bear a part therein, Pſ. xcvi. 10, 11. Iſ. xliv. 23. and by theſe may be meant here, the angels of heaven, who rejoice at every advance of Chriſt's kingdom and intereſt; they rejoiced at his incarnation, and ſo they do at the converſion of every ſingle ſinner; and much more may they be thought to do ſo at ſuch a time as this, when there were ſuch multitudes of converſions, and the churches and intereſt of Chriſt in ſo flouriſhing a condition, and ſatan's kingdom ſo much weakened; and to theſe may be joined the ſouls of the ſaints departed, who might be made acquainted with this wonderful change of things in the empire; and it may be alſo underſtood of the ſaints, the members of the ſeveral churches, even all heavenly-minded perſons, who were born from above, and were partakers of the heavenly calling, and whoſe converſations were in heaven; theſe are called upon to take their part in this ſong of praiſe and thankſgiving: wo to the inhabitants of the earth, and of the ſea; ſuch as are of the earth, earthy, ſenſual, and earthly-minded perſons; and who are like the troubled waters, and raging waves of the ſea, cannot reſt, but caſt up mire and dirt, and foam out their own ſhame; the barbarous nations of the Goths and Vandals, carnal profeſſors of religion, and the antichriſtian party, which quickly upon this ſprung up, may be intended, on whom this wo is denounced; the reaſon of which follows: for the devil is come down unto you; and a greater wo can't be upon men on earth, than to have the devil among them, who always brings miſchief with him, and breathes nothing but ruin and deſtruction to men; he having loſt his power in the Roman empire, poſſeſſed the above perſons, and took up his reſidence among them; he came down, but not willingly, he was forced to it, he was caſt down: having great wrath; becauſe he was conquered, and caſt out of heaven, and was deprived of the worſhip that had been long given him, as the god of the world, and of that authority and influence which he had over men: and this his great wrath was ſeen in ſtirring up the Arians to perſecute the chriſtians; and in the times of Julian, when he endeavoured to regain his loſt power; and in bringing in the Goths, Huns, and Vandals into the empire, to waſte and deſtroy it; and in moving the antichriſtian party, which ſoon prevailed, to make war againſt the ſaints: becauſe he knoweth he hath but a ſhort time; ere he ſhould be ſhut up in the bottomleſs pit, or be confined in the place of torment, and ere his full puniſhment ſhould be inflicted on him; which time of his to tempt, deceive, diſturb, and diſtreſs men, is to be no longer than during the forty-two months of antichriſt's reign, and the 1260 days, or years, of the witneſſes propheſying in ſackcloth, and of the church's being in the wilderneſs, and no longer than till the thouſand years reign of Chriſt with his ſaints begins, which in compariſon of his long reign in the Gentile world, is but a ſhort time; and though after the thouſand years are ended, he will be let looſe, yet it will be but for a ſeaſon, a very ſmall time, when he will be caſt into the lake of fire and brimſtone, and be tormented night and day for ever and ever.

Ver. 13. And when the dragon ſaw that he was caſt unto the earth, &c.] When the devil perceived he had not the power in the Roman empire he formerly had; and that his influence was only over the common and meaner ſort of people, or over the earthly part of the church, and the barbarous nations in the world: he perſecuted the woman which brought forth the man-child; he was enraged at the church, and purſued her with great wrath, who had brought forth a chriſtian emperor, by whom the kingdom of Chriſt was encouraged and ſupported in the empire; and becauſe he could not come at this child to deſtroy it, that being caught up to God and to his throne, he attacks the woman, the church, in a new way, by ſtirring up earthly-minded profeſſors of chriſtianity, the Arians, againſt her, and by bringing in an inundation of the barbarous nations into the empire, now become chriſtian; for this perſecution cannot be underſtood of the perſecution raiſed by the Jews, under the inſtigation of ſatan, againſt the chriſtian church, quickly after the aſcenſion of Chriſt to heaven, for then the dragon had his place and power in the Roman empire, whereas this perſecution was not till after the downfall of paganiſm in it; and for the ſame reaſon, it cannot deſign the perſecution againſt the chriſtians begun by Nero, and carried on under ſucceeding emperors, which were the ten days of tribulation under the Smyrnæan church-ſtate, and were now over; theſe were the pains and birth-throws of the woman, the church, antecedent to, and which brought on the birth of the man-child; and the perſons that endured them were thoſe that overcame ſatan by the blood of the Lamb, the word of their teſtimony, and their death, which were all previous to theſe times: nor does it reſpect ſo much the perſecution under Julian, which was carried on not by open force and violence, but by ſubtlety; he abſtained from corporal puniſhments and ſhedding of blood, obſerving that theſe methods in former times had given the chriſtians an opportunity of ſhewing their faith, patience, and fortitude, which had been the means of increaſing their number; wherefore he betook himſelf to more private and artful methods, as to content himſelf with taking away the revenues of the miniſters of the word, not ſuffering any chriſtians to be in military employments, denying their children the uſe of ſchools, encouraging the Jews, their ſworn enemies, and tolerating all ſorts of hereſies among themſelves, that ſo they might deſtroy one another; to which may be added, that his reign was but one year and ſeven or eight months, and therefore can ſcarcely be thought to be pointed at here; but inaſmuch as the Arian perſecution was the firſt after the fall of paganiſm, and the principal one before the riſe of antichriſt, this may moſt reaſonably be concluded to be meant here; and this began even in Conſtantine's time, for by means of an Arian preſbyter that belonged to his ſiſter Conſtantia, he was prevailed upon towards the cloſe of his days, to believe that Arius was not the man he was ſaid to be, and that he had had hard meaſure; inſomuch that he was recalled, and received into communion, and Athanaſius was driven from his church, and baniſhed to Triers in France: and the hiſtorian ſays [w], that Conſtantine exerciſed vim perſecutionis, the force of perſecution, or a violent one; biſhops were exiled, the clergy were ſeverely handled, and laymen taken notice of, who ſeparated themſelves from the communion of the Arians. Under Conſtantius, his ſon, the perſecution raged much, Athanaſius being gone from Alexandria, and one Gregory put in his room; and the people being uneaſy at it, ſome were baniſhed, others caſt into priſon, and others had their goods confiſcated; women were dragged by the hair of their heads to the tribunals, and uſed very ignominiouſly; three thouſand ſoldiers entred a church on an Eaſter-day, and killed many women and children; virgins were ſtripped naked, and the bodies of thoſe who died of their wounds were denied a burial, and caſt to the dogs; and the perſecution did not ſtop here, but went thro' Egypt, where the biſhops, ſome of them were beaten with rods, others were laid in bonds, and others were baniſhed: in Egypt and Lybia ninety biſhops were forced away, ſixteen were baniſhed, whoſe churches were delivered to the Arians. Lucius of Adrianople was bound in chains, caſt into priſon, and there periſhed; Paul of Conſtantinople was firſt expelled, after that murdered, and Macedonius, an Arian, put in his room; and ſuch who refuſed to commune with him ſuffered ſtripes, bonds, impriſonment, and other tortures, of which they died, and others were baniſhed, where they periſhed; women that refuſed had their breaſts cut off, or burnt, either with red-hot irons, or with eggs roaſted at the fire to a very great heat [x]; with other inſtances, too many to recite. Under Valens the emperor things were ſtill worſe, who became an Arian at the perſuaſion of his wife, and was baptized by Eudoxius, the Arian biſhop of Conſtantinople, who, at his baptiſm, obliged him to ſwear, that he would defend Arianiſm, and perſecute thoſe of a contrary opinion; and accordingly he moved an irreconcileable war againſt them; at one time he expelled Meleſius from Antioch, Euſebius from Samoſata, Pelagius from Laodicea, and Barſis from Edeſſa; and all the reſt that would not communicate with Euzoius, an Arian, he puniſhed, either with pecuniary fines, or with ſtripes; and he is ſaid to drown many in the river Orontes. This perſecution went thro' the churches of Thrace, Dacia, and Pannonia; but what is moſt ſhocking of all, is, that ſome choſen eccleſiaſtical men, to the number of fourſcore and one, were ſent to him from Conſtantinople to Nicomedia, with a ſupplication to redreſs ſome injuries and grievances; at which he being angry, ordered Modeſtus, the governour, to take them and put them to death; but the governour fearing to do it openly, leſt there ſhould be an inſurrection, ordered a ſhip to be got ready, pretending to carry them into exile, but directed the mariners to go in a fiſher's boat behind, and ſet fire to the ſhip, which they accordingly did when at ſea, where all the above worthy men periſhed at once [y]. It would be endleſs to rehearſe all the inſtances of cruelty under this perſecution; it need only be obſerved, that this was at the inſtigation of the devil, as all perſecution is; and that ſatan herein acted like himſelf, as the great dragon, as he was when Rome pagan was in power: theſe were chriſtian emperors in name, but they exerciſed all the cruelties of the heathen ones, if they did not exceed them; and a greater regard was ſhown to paganiſm than to the orthodox religion. Valens tolerated all religions but that, eſpecially heatheniſm; all his reign the fire burned upon the altars, images were honoured with libations and ſacrifices, the public feſtivals of the heathens were kept, and the rites of Bacchus were performed in the ſtreets [z]; and this perſecution was followed by the inundation of the barbarous nations, of which hereafter.

Ver. 14. And to the woman were given two wings of a great eagle, &c.] By which are meant, not the two teſtaments, by which ſhe was ſupported under afflictions, trials, and perſecutions, and againſt ſatan and all his efforts; nor the two graces of faith and hope, by which ſhe roſe, and dwelt on high, in the view of inviſible things, and with contempt of the world, its frowns, or flatteries; nor, as others think, prayer and good works, by the former of which ſhe flew to God for ſupplies of grace and protection, and by the latter was uſeful and profitable to men, and gave glory to God, and eſcaped the juſt cenſures of the world; nor are two powerful kingdoms, within the dominions of the dragon, intended, as others have thought, who take them to be France and Spain, to which Britain was an appendix; when they were in the poſſeſſion of Conſtantius Chlorus, the father of Conſtantine the great, where the chriſtians had refuge in the perſecution under Diocleſian; but this was before the war in heaven, and the downfal of paganiſm in the empire, and before the above perſecution; rather theſe two wings of the eagle deſign the eaſtern and weſtern diviſions of the Roman empire: it is not unuſual in ſcripture for a monarchy, or monarch, as the Aſſyrian king and kingdom, to be ſignified by an eagle, and the wings of eagles, Ezek. xvii. 3, 12. Dan. vii. 4. and it is well known that the eagle is the enſign of the Roman empire, to which the alluſion is in Matt. xxiv. 28. and at the death of Theodoſius, the empire was divided, as has been obſerved before, into two parts; the eaſtern empire was given to one of his ſons, and the weſtern to another; and this was between the Arian perſecution, and the irruption of the Goths and Vandals, when the church was fleeing, and gradually diſappearing; and theſe two empires both went under the chriſtian name, and ſupported the outward viſible church, tho' much corrupted, and ſtill more and more corrupting; by which means the pure members of the church, tho' few, and very obſcure, were preſerved. In a word, theſe wings may denote the ſwiftneſs in which the church proceeded to diſappear, having loſt her former ſimplicity, and glory, for which eagles wings are famous, Prov. xxiii. 5. and more eſpecially, that divine ſtrength and ſupport by which ſhe was bore up, and carried thro', and delivered out of ſore afflictions and perſecutions; ſee Iſ. xl. 31. The alluſion is, to God's deliverance of the people of Iſrael out of Egypt, when he bore them as on eagles wings, and carried them thro' the wilderneſs, Exod. xix. 4. Deut. xxxii. 10, 11, 12. ſo here it follows, that ſhe might fly into the wilderneſs; a place deſolate, and full of ſerpents and ſcorpions, uncomfortable, and deſtitute of proviſions, and yet a place of ſafety as well as of ſolitarineſs and retirement; and chiefly deſigns the obſcure and inviſible ſtate of the pure church in the times of the antichriſtian apoſtacy; ſee the note on ver. 6. Into her place; which was prepared of God for her, as in ver. 6. where ſhe is nouriſhed; by the miniſters of the word, the two witneſſes that propheſy in ſackcloth, who feed the church with knowledge and underſtanding; with the words of faith and good doctrine, with the Goſpel, and the truths of it, which are ſweet, comfortable, and nutritive; and with the ordinances of the Goſpel, the entertainment of wiſdom's houſe, the feaſt of fat things, and the breaſts of conſolation; and with Chriſt the hidden manna, the food of the wilderneſs: and that for a time, and times, and half a time; that is, all the times of antichriſt, the forty-two months of his reign; during which time the holy city is trodden under foot, and in a deſolate and afflicted condition outwardly, as may be learned by comparing together Dan. vii. 25. Rev. xiii. 5. and xi. 2. and until the end of wonders, or when time ſhall be no longer, or till the ſeventh angel has ſounded his trumpet, as appears from Dan. xii. 7. and Rev. x. 6, 7. This date is the ſame with 1260 days in ver. 6. for time ſignifies a prophetic year, or 360 years; and times two years, or 720 years; and half a time, half a year, or 180 years, in all 1260 years; and which are to be reckoned, not from the beginning of the church's flight in Conſtantine's time, or from the Arian perſecution, but from her entering into her wilderneſs ſtate, or entire diſappearance upon the prevalence of the antichriſtian apoſtacy; which might be when the biſhop of Rome took upon him the title of univerſal biſhop: and here, and during this time ſhe is hid from the face of the ſerpent; that is, from his wrath, ſo as that he cannot utterly deſtroy her, God having reſerved a ſealed number for himſelf; ſee ch. vi. 16. or from the ſight of the ſerpent, as the Arabic verſion renders it, ſo as that he could not diſcern, with all his quick ſight, where the church was.

Ver. 15. And the ſerpent caſt out of his mouth water as a flood, &c.] Which cannot deſign any perſecution before the fall of paganiſm, either of the Jews, or of the Romans; nor indeed the Arian perſecution, ſince the caſting out of this flood is diſtinguiſhed from the above perſecution, and was after the church began to flee upon that perſecution; tho' it is not unuſual for wicked perſecutors, and violent perſecutions, to be expreſſed by waters, and they are called proud waters, Pſ. cxxiv. 1, 2, 3, 4. and theſe may be ſaid to be caſt out of the mouth of the ſerpent, the devil, who was a perſecutor, and a murderer from the beginning, and by whom all perſecutors and perſecutions are inſtigated, moved, and carried on; but rather, as the words of a man's mouth are as deep waters, Prov. xviii. 4. and doctrines, good or bad, may be ſo called; that flood of errors and hereſies, which were poured in between the times of Conſtantine, and the riſe of antichriſt may be here intended; ſuch as the Arian hereſy, which denied the divinity of Chriſt; the Neſtorian hereſy, which divided his perſon; and the Eutychian hereſy, which confounded the two natures in him; and the Macedonian hereſy, which took away the deity of the Holy Ghoſt; and the Pelagian hereſy, which deſtroyed the grace of God, and ſet up the power of man's free-will: and this flood of errors and hereſies may be truly ſaid to be caſt out of the ſerpent's mouth; ſince the old ſerpent, the devil, is the father of all lyes, and errors; and the above hereſies are the doctrines of devils, and damnable ones; and were deſigned by ſatan to deſtroy the ſouls of men, and ruin the church: tho' ſince this flood followed upon the Arian perſecution, and was after the church began to flee, being ſupported and ſecured by the two diviſions of the empire, eaſtern and weſtern, the wings of the Roman eagle; it ſeems beſt by this flood to underſtand the irruption of the barbarous nations, which quickly followed that diviſion; the Goths, Hunns, Vandals, Heruli, Alans, and Lombards, who were poured in to the weſtern empire, and overran, and at laſt deſtroyed it; ſo that this flood is cotemporary with the firſt four trumpets; after which followed the ſwarms of locuſts, the Saracens, which infeſted, teized, and tormented the eaſtern empire; and after them the Turks, the four angels bound at the great river Euphrates, were let looſe, and like a mighty torrent overflowed, and utterly deſtroyed it; and all this was done at the inſtigation of ſatan, he being filled with wrath, becauſe the empire was become chriſtian, and his view was to deſtroy the church in it: for this flood was caſt after the woman, that he might cauſe her to be carried away of the flood; along with the empire, and be no more; but his deſigns were fruſtrated, and he diſappointed; ſo people, nations, and tongues are compared to waters in ch. xvii. 15. ſee Iſ. viii. 7. and xxviii. 2. which the Targum interprets of the armies of much people.

Ver. 16. And the earth helped the woman, &c.] By opening itſelf, and taking in what the ſerpent caſt out, ſo that it could not reach the woman, and annoy her, as follows: and the earth opened her mouth; as it did when it ſwallowed up Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, Numb. xvi. 30. to which hiſtory this may have ſome reſpect: and ſwallowed up the flood which the dragon caſt out of his mouth; if the flood refers to the Arian perſecution, then the earth helping the woman, the church, and ſwallowing up this flood, may reſpect the Goths, who broke into the Roman provinces, under their king Athanaricus, and fell upon the Arians, with great rage and cruelty, and infeſted the Roman provinces, which were nearer; they ſeized upon Thrace, which was the occaſion of tranquillity to the orthodox; for Valens being moved by theſe things, deſiſted from perſecuting them, and leaving Antioch, he went to Conſtantinople to form meaſures for the carrying on of the war againſt the Goths[*]; and thus the earth helped the woman. But if by the flood, the errors and hereſies of thoſe times are meant, then the councils may be intended by the earth; which, tho' they conſiſted of men that were earthly, and greatly apoſtatized in other things, yet oppoſed, refuted, and condemned theſe hereſies and errors, and ſo were the means of preſerving the church from them, as ſome think; tho' others are of opinion, that the barbarous nations are in this alſo deſigned, who embracing Arianiſm, and the corrupt religion, where they came, by which they were, in ſome meaſure, mollified and reconciled to the chriſtians, did not ſeek to root them out, and deſtroy them, as ſatan hoped they would; but ſince they themſelves, with the Mahometans, are meant by the flood, the earth muſt be interpreted of the corrupt and antichriſtian church, the idolaters which ſuſtained the force of this inundation, and for ſometime repelled it, and ſo ſecured the true church; and when the weſtern empire was over-run by it, as by the Goths, &c. idolaters, earthly-minded men, and carnal profeſſors, were the ſufferers, and bore the ſhock of it; and when the eaſtern empire was over-run by the Saracens, the tormenting locuſts, the green things, graſs and trees, were not hurt by them; none of the ſealed ones, only thoſe who were not ſealed, ch. ix. 4. and the Turkiſh inundation was a ſcourge upon the antichriſtian party; ſo that it was the earth, or earthly part of profeſſors, the idolaters, that bore the fury and force of this flood, and broke it off from the church. And ſo ſometimes wicked men are helpful to the ſaints, as the Philiſtines were ſerviceable to David, to ſkreen him from the fury of Saul; and Lyſias, the chief captain, and Felix and Feſtus, Roman governours, were inſtruments of preſerving the Apoſtle Paul from falling into the hands of the Jews, his enemies; and the chriſtians that were ſcattered by the perſecution at Jeruſalem, found refuge and ſafety among the Gentiles.

[*] Hiſt. Eccl. Magdeburg. cent. 4. c. 3. p. 80.

Ver. 17. And the dragon was wroth with the woman, &c.] The devil was very angry with the church, becauſe he could not deſtroy her by the Arian perſecution, he had raiſed; and becauſe he could not carry her away with the flood, either of errors and hereſies, or of the barbarous nations; and becauſe he could not, by any means, come at her, and indeed did not well know where ſhe was, a place being prepared for her of God in the wilderneſs, where ſhe was taken care of: wherefore he took another method, as follows, and went to make war with the remnant of her ſeed; which refers to the war, the beaſt, to whom he gave his power, ſeat, and authority, is ſaid to make with the ſaints; and which was entered into, and carried on by his inſtigation, of which there is an account in the following chapter: the perſons with whom he went to make war are deſcribed as her ſeed; the ſeed of the church, her ſpiritual offſpring, the ſons and daughters ſhe brought forth to Chriſt; between which ſeed, and ſatan and his ſeed, there always was an enmity: and theſe are the remnant of her ſeed, a few perſons ſcattered up and down, a remnant according to the election of grace; who were not in bodies, or in church-ſtates, regularly formed, as heretofore, but in private families, and ſome here, and ſome there; and who were called out to bear a teſtimony for Chriſt in corrupt times: and theſe are further deſcribed as ſuch, who keep the commandments of God; and not the traditions of men; nor are the commands of the moral law of God ſo much deſigned, tho' it is true, that theſe were kept by the ſeed of the church; but rather the ordinances of the Goſpel, the commands of God our ſaviour, ſuch as baptiſm and the Lord's ſupper; which were kept by theſe faithful ones, as they had been delivered, when they began now to be ſadly corrupted by the antichriſtian party: and have the teſtimony of Jeſus Chriſt; the Goſpel, which is a teſtimony concerning him; ſee the note on ch. i. 2. This they had in their hearts, a ſpiritual knowledge, and ſaving experience of it; and this they had in their hands, they made a profeſſion of it, they held it forth, and held it faſt; all which was the reaſon of ſatan's enmity againſt them, and war with them.

CHAP. XIII.

THIS chapter contains a deſcription of the Romiſh antichriſt, under the figure of two beaſts, the one repreſenting him in his civil power, the other in his eccleſiaſtical power. The firſt beaſt is deſcribed by its original, the ſea, and by the monſtrous ſhape of its ſeveral parts; its heads ſeven, in which were the name of blaſphemy; its horns ten, on which were crowns; its ſkin like a leopard, its feet as a bear, and its mouth as a lion; and by its ſtate and condition, having power, a throne, and great authority; and having one of its heads wounded, and healed; and by the great regard had unto him, being wondered at, and worſhipped by all the world, and declared to be more powerful than any, and none to be like him, ver. 1, 2, 3, 4. Next an account is given, of what he was ſuffered to have, a blaſpheming mouth, and power to continue forty-two months, ver. 5. and of what he ſaid or uttered, his blaſphemy againſt God, his name, tabernacle, and the inhabitants of heaven, ver. 6. and of what he did by permiſſion, made war with the ſaints, overcame them, and had power over all people, ver. 7. and of the worſhip given him by the reprobate part of the world, ver. 8. and the whole is concluded with an exhortation exciting attention to what had been ſaid, with a threatening to the beaſt, and a word of comfort to the ſaints, ver. 9, 10. And then follows the deſcription of the ſecond beaſt, by its original the earth; by its likeneſs to a lamb, and a dragon; to the former for its two horns, and to the latter for its ſpeech, ver. 11. and by the actions aſcribed to it, which are many; as exerciſing all the power of the firſt beaſt; cauſing all the inhabitants of the earth to worſhip that; doing miracles, of which one is mentioned, thereby deceiving the men of the world; ordering them to make an image to the wounded beaſt; giving life to it, ſo that it could ſpeak; putting to death all that refuſed to worſhip it; obliging men of all ranks and degrees to have a mark in their right hands or foreheads, and forbidding ſuch that had not, to buy or ſell, ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17. And the chapter is concluded with an Epiphonema, exciting men of underſtanding to ſearch out, and count the number of the beaſt's name, ſince it is poſſible to be done, being the number of a man, and eaſy to be done, conſiſting of three Greek letters, χξϛ, which are numerically 666, ver. 18.

Ver. 1. And I ſtood upon the ſand of the ſea, &c.] The Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions read, and he ſtood, &c. and ſo the Alexandrian copy; meaning the dragon, ſaid to be wroth with the woman, and to go forth to make war with her ſeed, in the latter part of the preceding chapter, where ſome verſions place this clauſe; and the Arabic verſion reads expreſly, and the ſerpent ſtood, &c. And this is thought by ſome to be the better reading, becauſe of the connexion with what goes before, and becauſe there is no mention of the name of John, nor of his being called or removed from heaven, where he was beholding ſights, and continuing the account of them, ch. iv. 1. and xii. 1. and xv. 1. as there is when he is ſhown ſights elſewhere; ſee ch. xvii. 3. and xxi. 10. And beſides, as the dragon was contriving a new way of perſecuting the ſaints, and about to raiſe up a beaſt out of the ſea, by which he might do it, to whom he would give his power, ſeat, and authority, he is repreſented as ſtanding in a proper place for this purpoſe; it was upon the ſand, which may ſignify a multitude of people employed by him, and alſo may denote the weakneſs and unſucceſsfulneſs of his efforts in the iſſue; yet the Greek copies in general agree in the common reading, and refer it to John, who ſtood on the ſhore of the iſle of Patmos, and in a fit place, in a viſionary way, to behold the following ſight: for that the next clauſe belongs to him is without doubt, and ſaw a beaſt riſe up out of the ſea; by which is meant, not the devil, becauſe it is in ver. 2. diſtinguiſhed from the dragon, who is the devil and ſatan, as alſo elſewhere, ch. xvi. 13. and xx. 10. nor the old Roman empire, tho' there are many things which ſeem to agree; the Roman monarchy is called a beaſt; it is one of the four beaſts in Daniel vii. 2, 4. which roſe up out of the ſea, from a multitude of people and nations, which were gathered to it, and compoſed it. Rome pagan had, as this beaſt has, ſeven heads, and ten horns, ch. xii. 3. and had power over all nations, and is therefore ſometimes called the whole world, and exerciſed great cruelty upon the chriſtians; but then this is ſignified by the red dragon itſelf, in the preceding chapter, and beſides, had riſen up before the times of John, whereas this is one of the things ſhown him, which ſhould be hereafter: this beaſt then was not, but was to come, ch. iv. 1. and xvii. 11. and was not to ariſe, nor did it ariſe 'till after the downfal of Rome pagan, and after the Arian perſecution, after the woman's flight into the wilderneſs, and after, and upon the inundation of the barbarous nations into the empire, as appears from the preceding chapter; nor will the time of this beaſt's duration agree with the old Roman empire, for this beaſt is to continue forty-two months, ver. 5. which is the whole time of the holy city being trodden under foot, and of the church's being in the wilderneſs, and of the witneſſes propheſying in ſackcloth; whereas the Roman monarchy, governed by emperors, did not laſt four hundred years. Moreover, as this beaſt is diſtinguiſhed from the dragon, ſo it is ſaid to have its power from him; whereas the Roman empire was of God, and obedience and ſubjection to it are always recommended to the ſaints in the ſcriptures, Rom. xiii. 1. Tit. iii. 1. 1 Pet. ii. 13. much leſs can the empire, as become truly chriſtian, be intended; nor are either the eaſtern or the Turkiſh empires deſigned, for neither of theſe had their ſeat at Rome, which the dragon gave to this beaſt, but at Conſtantinople: it remains then, that by it is meant the Roman empire, when divided into ten kingdoms, and united in the papacy; or it deſigns antichriſt in his ſecular power, with the ten kings, that receive power with him as ſuch one hour, and give their kingdom to him: now this beaſt is ſaid to riſe up out of the ſea; either out of the abyſs, the bottomleſs pit of hell, ſee ch. xi. 7. and xvii. 8. or out of the ſea of this world, and the wicked in it, who are like a troubled ſea that cannot reſt; or out of the floods of errors and hereſies, by which this man of ſin was conceived, and cheriſhed, and a way was paved for his open riſing and appearance in the world; or rather, ſince waters deſign, in this book, nations, people, and tongues, ſee ch. xvii. 15. and the four beaſts in Daniel are ſaid to riſe out of the ſea, ch. vii. 2. and a multitude of people are compared to the waves of the ſea, Ezek. xxvi. 3. ſee alſo Iſ. xvii. 12. and lvii. 20. where the Jewiſh writers ſay [b], the nations are compared to the ſea, as Iſrael to the ſand, the inundation of the barbarous nations, the Goths, Huns, and Vandals into the empire, ſeem to be intended, which made great commotions and changes in it: theſe ſet up ten kingdoms in it, upon which antichriſt aroſe, and placed himſelf at the head of them; theſe gave their kingdoms to the beaſt, and ſo may be ſaid to give riſe unto him, eſpecially as to his ſecular power. Having ſeven heads; which ſome underſtand of his perfect wiſdom and knowledge, the head being the ſeat of knowledge, and ſeven a number of perfection; and ſo may refer to thoſe boaſted treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge, which antichriſt pretends to have, as being the judge of controverſies, and the infallible interpreter of the ſcriptures; or elſe the ſevenfold form of government among the Romans is intended, as in ch. xii. 3. or rather as it's interpreted in ch. xvii. 9. the ſeven mountains on which Rome was built, and ſo deſign the city itſelf built on them, that being the metropolis of the empire; or the ſeven capital cities of the empire, as Mr. Daubuz thinks; the whole is meant, for it is the ſame Roman monarchy as before, only in a different form: and ten horns; the ten kingdoms, into which the empire was divided upon its being waſted and vanquiſhed by the Goths, and the ten kings of them, which reigned with the beaſt, and gave their kingdoms to him; ſo horns ſignify kingdoms in Zech. i. 18. And upon his horns ten crowns; which diſtinguiſhes Rome papal from Rome pagan; the crowns in Rome pagan were upon the heads, or upon the emperors, that reſided at Rome; and tho' it had ten horns, as here, and was divided into ſo many provinces, which were governed by deputies, proconſuls, &c. yet they were not kings, they had no crowns; but here the horns have crowns on them, becauſe the governours of theſe ten kingdoms are crowned kings: and upon his heads the name of blaſphemy; which refers not to Rome pagan, being called the eternal city, and Rome the goddeſs, and the like; but to Rome papal, or antichriſt, who elſewhere is ſaid to have the name Myſtery, written upon the forehead, and to have blaſphemy on his heads; and is called blaſphemy in the abſtract, as being a moſt blaſphemous creature againſt God, Chriſt, and his people, and ſo his name is ſuitable to his character, mouth, and language, ver. 5, 6. aſſuming that to himſelf, which only belongs to God and Chriſt, as power over the conſcience, to forgive ſin, &c. and even deity itſelf; ſee 2 Theſſ. ii. 4. Rev. xvii. 3. The Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, the Complutenſian edition, the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions read, names of blaſphemy.

Ver. 2. And the beaſt which I ſaw was like unto a leopard, &c.] To which the Grecian kingdom is compared in Dan. vii. 6. becauſe of that rapidity and ſwiftneſs with which Alexander over-ran the world, and ſet up this monarchy; and to which the Roman papal monarchy bears ſome reſemblance; for as the Grecian monarchy was divided into ſeveral parts, which the leopard's ſpots may alſo point out, ſo the Roman empire was divided into ten parts, and united under the pope, as the head of them; and may be, in this form, compared to a leopard for its ſwiftneſs, Hab. i. 8. becauſe this beaſt as ſoon as he aroſe, and got power, quickly, and in a very ſhort time, extended it over all emperors, kings, princes, biſhops, and over all kingdoms and churches; and for its ſpots, Jer. xiii. 23. which may be expreſſive both of the ſpots of ſin and immorality of every kind, and of errors and hereſies, ſuperſtition and idolatry, with which antichriſt and his followers abound; and for its inſidiouſneſs and cruelty, Jer. v. 6. Hoſ. xiii. 7. It lies in wait for its prey, and ſuddenly falls upon it, and devours it; and is a lively picture of the cunning ſleight of the antichriſtian party, who lie in wait to deceive, and of their blood-thirſtineſs and barbarity. It is reported [e] of the leopard, that it is of a ſweet ſmell, and by its odour it draws the fawns, does, &c. near it, and then makes a prey of them; ſo antichriſt, by outward riches and preferments, by the external pomp and ſplendor of his religion, by his lying wonders and miracles, and by his great pretenſions to holineſs, and the like, allures multitudes unto him, and deſtroys them. And his feet were as the feet of a bear; to which the Perſian monarchy is compared, Dan. vii. 6. And this, as ſome think, may denote the ſtrength and ſtability of the kingdom of antichriſt, it having already endured a great while, and will be thought to be very firm and ſtable when its ruin is near; or rather the wars and fightings of antichriſt againſt the ſaints, the fore-feet of the bear being what that creature fights with, and tears and deſtroys ſuch as oppoſe it, or fall a prey to it; and may alſo, as before, expreſs the voraciouſneſs and cruelty of antichriſt, with reſpect to the bodies and ſouls of men: and his mouth as the mouth of a lion; to which creature the Babylonian monarchy is compared, Dan. vii. 4. uttering out blaſphemies againſt God, threatning ruin and deſtruction to men, and injecting fear into them, as the roaring of a lion does, and ſeizing upon, and devouring their eſtates and poſſeſſions, as well as butchering their perſons. This beaſt has all the properties of the ſeveral beaſts in Daniel's prophecy, wherefore all the figures there made uſe of to deſcribe them are put together, to point unto us this monſter of iniquity. And the dragon gave him his power; for the coming of antichriſt is after the working of ſatan, 2 Theſſ. ii. 9, 10. he gave him his cunning and ſubtlety, as the old ſerpent, and taught him his arts and tricks to deceive mankind; and gave him a power to do ſigns and lying wonders, as well as communicated his malice and cruelty to perſecute and oppreſs the ſaints; or an army of eccleſiaſticks to fight under him, and for him: and his ſeat; at Rome, for there ſatan's ſeat was, ch. ii. 13. in the time of the pagan Roman empire, which was quitted by Diocleſian and Maximian, when they reſigned the government of it, the one being at Nicomedia, and the other at Milan; and when Conſtantine came to the throne, he removed to Byzantium, and rebuilt it, and called it after his name Conſtantinople, and had his reſidence there, as had all the eaſtern emperors afterwards; and as for the weſtern emperors, they chiefly reſided either at Milan or Ravenna, to which laſt place Odoacer, Theodoric, and other Gothic kings retired, when the government was in their hands; ſo that hereby this ſeat was empty, and way was made for antichriſt to take it, as he did. And great authority; over the Roman empire, and the kings and kingdoms in it; he gave him his authority as the god of this world; what Chriſt refuſed at the hands of ſatan, that his pretended vicar took, even the kingdoms of this world, and the glory of them; yea, aſſumed to himſelf all power in heaven, earth, and hell, ſignified by his triple crown, at the inſtigation of the devil; ſo that it appears that he is not the vicar of Chriſt, but the vicar of the devil; and not the ſucceſſor of Peter, but the ſucceſſor of ſatan; and that he holds his poſſeſſions, not by the donation of Conſtantine, but by the gift of the dragon.

[b] Yalkut Simeoni, par. 2. fol. 44. 4. & 55. 2. & 63. 3.

Ver. 3. And I ſaw one of his heads, &c.] Not the Capitoline mountain, or the Capitol, the temple of Jupiter, built on that hill, which was burnt by lightning in the times of Titus, and magnificently rebuilt by Domitian, which was a thing paſt, and of no ſuch moment, as to be taken notice of here; nor any one of the Roman emperors particularly, as Julius Cæſar, at whoſe death the empire received a wound, upon its firſt erection in him, but was healed by the ſettlement of Auguſtus in it; nor Nero, at whoſe death the family of the Cæſars ceaſed, when the empire was threatned with ruin in the following reigns, but was reſtored and re-eſtabliſhed in Veſpaſian, for theſe were before the times of John: but this is to be underſtood of the ſixth head, or form of government, which obtained in the empire; namely, that of emperors, and of the deſtruction of Rome itſelf, the head of the empire, and which was built on ſeven mountains, deſigned by the ſeven heads of this beaſt: and this head was as it were wounded to death; when the Roman empire was like a burning mountain caſt into the ſea; when Rome itſelf was taken, ſacked, and burnt, more than once, particularly by Totilas; when Auguſtulus, the laſt of the emperors, was obliged to abdicate the throne; when Odoacer called himſelf, not emperor of Rome, but king of Italy, and retired from Rome to Ravenna; and when Adolphus, another Gothic king, thought to have changed the name of Rome, and given it that of Gothia: this ſeemed to be a deadly wound to Rome, to the empire, and emperors. And this deadly wound was healed; by the ſetting up of ten kingdoms in it, the kings of which gave them to the beaſt, to antichriſt, the pope of Rome, and ſo the empire came to have an head again, a governour, tho' of another kind: ſome chooſe to underſtand this of the wound which antichriſt received at the reformation, by Luther, Calvin, and others, which has ſince been healing, popery recovering itſelf again in ſome countries, where it was driven out, and which, it is thought, will be entirely healed before his deſtruction: and all the world wondred after the beaſt; which expreſſes the large extent of antichriſt's dominion, which reached to all the Roman empire, Luke ii. 1. yea to all kindreds, tongues, and nations, ver. 7. ſo that the univerſality, the papiſts boaſt of, as a note of the true church, is manifeſtly a mark of the beaſt, or of antichriſt; and alſo the great eſteem he is had in by his followers, who admire his power and authority, his grandeur, pomp, and riches, his ſigns and lying wonders, his pretended infallibility and holineſs, his ſtock of merits and unwritten traditions, his ſkill to interpret ſcripture, and his power to forgive ſins, and the like: they went after him, obeyed him, embraced his doctrines, attended his religion and worſhip with wonder and amazement.

Ver. 4. And they worſhipped the dragon, &c.] The devil, in the idols, images, angels, and ſaints departed, to whom they give adoration, as did the Gentiles, whoſe ſucceſſors they are, and whoſe name they bear; ſee 1 Cor. x. 20. which gave power unto the beaſt, as in ver. 2. and they worſhipped the beaſt; not only in a civil way, being ſubject to him as their temporal lord, to whom they give homage, obedience, and tribute, but in a religious way; for antichriſt ſits in the temple to be worſhipped as God, ſhewing himſelf that he is God, and receives adorations from his creatures, the cardinals, and others; but wo to them that worſhip this beaſt; ſee ch. xiv. 9, 10, 11. Saying, who is like unto the beaſt?

[e] Ælian. de Animal. l. 5. c. 40.

beaſt? uſing ſuch expreſſions as are uſed of God himſelf, implying that there is none like him, Exod. xv. 11. Pſ. cxiii. 5. Iſ. xl. 18, 25. yea, they aſcribe deity to him, calling him our Lord God the pope, God, and a God on earth; ſee the note on 2 Theſſ. ii. 4. Who is able to make war with him? And indeed, ſuch was his power and ſtrength once, that he was an over-match for emperors and kings; and thoſe were badly off, that engaged in a war with him, when his power was ſuch, that he could depoſe one, and ſet up another, kick the crowns of kings, tread upon the necks of emperors, oblige them to hold his ſtirrup, whilſt he mounted his horſe, and keep them barefoot at his gate for days together, waiting for admittance; of all which there are inſtances.

Ver. 5. And there was given unto him a mouth, &c.] The beaſt is ſaid to have a mouth before, like the mouth of a lion, ver. 2. but now he was moved and ſtirred up by the dragon, the devil, to open it, not only in a cruel and voracious way, but in a haughty, lying, and blaſphemous manner: and this was given him, it was at the inſtigation of ſatan, and by divine permiſſion; his coming, ſpeaking, and acting were after the working of ſatan, but not without the will of God; who, as he gave up many to a judicial blindneſs, to believe his lyes and blaſphemies, gave up him to ſpeak them, as follows: ſpeaking great things, and blaſphemies; great ſwelling words of vanity; calling himſelf by high and lofty titles, as Chriſt's vicar, Peter's ſucceſſor, head of the church, univerſal biſhop, &c. promiſing great things to his followers, riches, honours, pleaſures, pardons, and heaven itſelf; and uttering things of a blaſphemous kind, or great blaſphemies, the particulars of which are mentioned in the next verſe; ſo the little horn, who is the ſame with the Romiſh antichriſt, is ſaid to have a mouth ſpeaking great things, very great things, and his look more ſtout than his fellows, Dan. vii. 8, 20. And power was given unto him to continue forty and two months; to continue in being, or to continue blaſpheming and ſpeaking great things: and indeed, as long as he continues, he'll continue blaſpheming; as ſoon as he aroſe he had a name of blaſphemy on his heads, and his mouth was immediately opened in blaſphemy, and ſo it continues, and will to the end of this date. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, and power was given him to do ſigns, whatſoever he would; miracles, lying ſigns and wonders; ſee ver. 13, 14. Some copies read, and ſo the Arabic verſion, and power was given him to make war; but he did not make war as ſoon as he aroſe, and ſo not all the time that is here allotted him; and the word war ſeems to be tranſcribed from ver. 7. The phraſe rather intends his being, and the continuance and duration of it; which is the ſame period of time in which the holy city is trodden under foot by this beaſt, and the ſame with the 1260 days or years, in which the witneſſes propheſy in ſackcloth, and the woman, the church, is in the wilderneſs, ch. xi. 2, 3. and xii. 6, 14. for forty-two months, reckoning thirty days to a month, as the eaſtern people did, make juſt 1260 days, for theſe things are all cotemporary; hence it appears, that 1260 prophetic days, that is, years, contain the whole period of antichriſt's reign and continuance; ſo that could we tell where they began, it might be exactly known when his reign will end; but for want of knowing the former, the beſt of calculators have failed in the latter: but ſeeing the time when he was made univerſal biſhop by Phocas, bids fair for the time of his open appearance, and the beginning of his reign, and of his blaſphemy, which was in the year 606, to which, if we add 1260, the expiration of his reign will fall in the year 1866; ſo that he may have upwards of an hundred and twenty years yet to continue; but of this we can't be certain; however, the conjecture is not improbable.

Ver. 6. And he opened his mouth in blaſphemy againſt God, &c.] By ſitting as God in the temple of God, ſhewing himſelf that he is God; by ſuffering himſelf to be called by the name of God, God on earth, Lord God the pope, and to be worſhipped as God; and by aſſuming infallibility, giving out that he cannot err, which only belongs to the God of truth; and by his idolatrous practices commanded by him, as the worſhipping of idols of gold, ſilver, wood, and ſtone, which is in ſcripture called blaſpheming God, Iſ. lxv. 7. Ezek. xx. 27. ſee Dan. xi. 36. To blaſpheme his name; his authority, by arrogating to himſelf all power in heaven, earth, and hell; by taking upon him to bind and looſe the conſciences of men, and to diſpenſe with the laws of God, and make them void by his own traditions; and to diſpoſe of the kingdoms of this world, by removing kings, and ſetting up kings at pleaſure, which is the prerogative of the king of kings; and by pretending to forgive ſin, which none but God can do; and by granting indulgences, pardons, &c. Moreover, by the name of God may be meant the ſcriptures, which are the means, by which God reveals and makes known himſelf; and theſe the man of ſin blaſphemes, by making them a noſe of wax, by impoſing on them what ſenſes he pleaſes; by aſſuming a right of being the ſole interpreter of them, and the judge of all controverſies; and by ſetting up his own unwritten traditions upon an equal foot with them, and above them; and by denying the common people the uſe of them, in their own language; and particularly the Goſpel, which is ſometimes called the name of the Lord, Acts ix. 15. may be intended, which is ſadly blaſphemed, and evil ſpoken of by antichriſt; as the doctrines of juſtification by Chriſt's righteouſneſs, of peace and pardon by his blood, and atonement by his ſacrifice, thro' the antichriſtian notions of merit, works of ſupererogation, pardons, pennance, purgatory, and the like: and his tabernacle; meaning either the human nature of Chriſt, which God pitched, and not man, the temple of his body, in which the Godhead dwells bodily, and where the eternal Word dwelt, or tabernacled among men; this is blaſphemed by pretending to tranſubſtantiate the bread and wine in the ſupper of the Lord, into the very body and blood of Chriſt, and to offer him up again in the ſacrifice of the maſs, every time that blaſphemous piece of ſervice is performed: or elſe the church of God, which is the temple of the living God, where he chuſes, deſires, and delights to dwell; this is blaſphemed by antichriſt, by ſitting in it as if he was God; aſſerting himſelf to be the head of the church, which ſolely belongs to Chriſt; taking upon him to coin new doctrines, and make new laws, and orders, and impoſe them on it, and to change and alter the ordinances and diſcipline of it, as he pleaſes; and by perſecuting and deſtroying all ſuch who will not ſubmit to his decrees and preſcripts: or elſe heaven itſelf, the habitation of God, and where his throne is, may be deſigned, which the pope blaſphemouſly affirms to have the keys of; and that he can open and ſhut it, let perſons into it, or exclude from it at pleaſure; and that he can diſpoſe of it, and ſell it for money, and make and canonize new ſaints in it, as often as he thinks fit. And them that dwell in heaven; either ſaints below, members of a Goſpel church, who are born from above, are partakers of the heavenly calling, and whoſe converſation is in heaven, who are by antichriſt ſtigmatized and perſecuted as ſchiſmaticks and hereticks; or rather angels and ſaints departed, who are in heaven, and dwell there, and who are worſhipped and prayed to as mediators and interceſſors; whoſe names are uſed in a very ridiculous and blaſphemous manner, to their great diſhonour and reproach, as well as to the injury of Chriſt, the only mediator between God and men.

Ver. 7. And it was given unto him to make war with the ſaints, &c.] The remnant of the woman's ſeed, ch. xii. 17. whom God has ſet apart for himſelf, Chriſt has cleanſed from ſin by his blood, and the Holy Spirit has ſanctified by his grace; and who under the influence of it live holy lives and converſations; againſt ſuch ſatan always bore an enmity: and it is an aggravation of the wickedneſs of the Romiſh antichriſt, that he makes war with ſuch, which he is ſtirred up to by ſatan, with a malicious intent, and is permitted by God for the trial of the faith and patience of his people: this war of antichriſt, with the ſaints, may be underſtood not merely ſpiritually, of his anathemas, excommunications, bulls, and the like, but literally, of his drawing the temporal ſword againſt them; ſee ver. 10. and bringing of armies againſt them, and fighting pitched battles; and it is thought there may be a ſpecial regard had to his war with the Waldenſes and Albigenſes, in which war, 'tis ſaid, that ten hundred thouſand men were ſlain; and may take in all his ways and methods of deſtroying the ſaints, by the bloody inquiſition, murders, maſſacres, and puniſhments of all ſorts; and alſo his laſt war with the two witneſſes, in which they will be ſlain, which is yet to come, ch. xi. 7. and to overcome them; not ſo as to ſubmit to him, and to forſake the doctrines and ordinances of Chriſt, but by killing them; and who by dying in the faith and cauſe of Chriſt, overcome ſatan, get the victory over the world, and antichriſt, and are more than conquerors thro' him that has loved them. And power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations; in the Roman empire, which wondred after him, and worſhipped him, and over whom he has reigned, and has exerciſed both a temporal and ſpiritual juriſdiction; ſee ch. xvii. 15, 18.

Ver. 8. And all that dwell upon the earth ſhall worſhip him, &c.] The inhabitants of the Roman empire, the idolatrous part of it, the men of the world, earthly-minded men; who are as they came into the world, and are of the earth, earthly, and ſeek only after earthly honours, pleaſures, and profits; theſe are the admirers and adorers of the beaſt: whoſe names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb ſlain from the foundation of the world; by which book is meant God's predeſtination of men to eternal life, or his decree of election; why this is called the book of life, ſee the note on ch. iii. 5. and their names being written therein from the foundation of the world, for ſuch a conſtruction the words will bear, denotes that election is eternal, and is not an act of time, nor dependent upon any thing done in time; and that it is of particular perſons, and not of bodies of men, of nations and churches, and ſtill leſs of propoſitions, or of perſons ſo and ſo qualified, or under ſuch conditions and circumſtances; and that it is perfectly well known to God, and is ſure and certain in its effects, and is unchangeable and irrevocable; for what is written in it, is written, and will always ſtand, not upon the foot of works, but of the ſovereign grace of God: and this is called the Lamb's book; that is, Chriſt, who is compared to a lamb for its harmleſſneſs, meekneſs, and patience, and was typified by the lambs in the legal ſacrifices; and this book is called his, becauſe he was preſent at the making of it, and was concerned in putting down the names in it, John xiii. 18. and he himſelf ſtands firſt in it as the elect of God, and the head of all the elect, who, as members, were choſen in him: the act of election was made in him, and ſtands ſure in him; and he is the author and giver of that life, which men are choſen unto both here and hereafter: and he may be ſaid to be ſlain from the foundation of the world; in the decree and purpoſe of God, by which he was ſet forth, or fore-appointed to be the propitiation for ſin, and was fore-ordained before the foundation of the world, to redeem his people by his blood; and in the promiſe of God immediately after the fall of man, that the ſeed of the woman ſhould have his heel bruiſed, and he himſelf ſhould bruiſe the ſerpent's head, which made it as ſure as if it was then done; and in the ſacrifices, which were immediately upon this offered up, and were types of the death and ſacrifice of Chriſt; and in the faith of the ſaints, which brings diſtant things near, and conſiders them as if preſent; and alſo in his members, in Abel, and others, in whom he ſuffered, as he ſtill does in his people: to which may be added, that ſuch is the efficacy of the bloodſhed and death of Chriſt, that it reached to all the ſaints from the beginning of the world, for the juſtification of their perſons, the atonement of their ſins, and cleanſing from them; for the remiſſion of ſins, that are paſt, and for the redemption of tranſgreſſions under the firſt teſtament; for Old Teſtament ſaints from the beginning are ſaved by the grace of the Lord Jeſus, as New Teſtament ones are. Something like this the Jews ſay [e] of the Meſſiah upon Gen. xlix. 11. "he waſhed, "מיומא דאתברי עלמא, from the day that the "world was created; who is he? this is the king "Meſſiah.——It is written Gen. i. 2. and the Spi"rit of God, &c. This is the Spirit of the king "Meſſiah; and from the day that the world was "created, he waſhed his garments in wine;" which the Jewiſh writers [f] underſtand of blood, which for its redneſs is like to wine; tho' they interpret it of the blood of the ſlain, with which the garments of the Meſſiah will be ſtained. Now ſuch whoſe names are not written in this book of the Lamb, who have no intereſt in electing grace, nor in redemption by Chriſt, the ſlain Lamb of God, nor any right unto eternal life, who are reprobate perſons, veſſels of wrath fitted for deſtruction, who are fore-ordained to condemnation, and are given up to believe a lye, that they might be damned, theſe are the followers and worſhippers of antichriſt.

Ver. 9. If any man have an ear let him hear.] And diligently attend to this myſtical deſcription of antichriſt, as being matter of ſome difficulty to underſtand, as well as of great moment and importance, and ſeriouſly conſider it, that he may know him, and his followers, and avoid them; ſee the note on ch. ii. 7.

Ver. 10. He that leadeth into captivity ſhall go into captivity, &c.] As the devil, by whom men are led captive at his will, and the Romiſh antichriſt, who leads multitudes of ſouls to hell; theſe ſhall be taken and caſt into the lake which burns with fire and brimſtone. The Jews [g] have a ſaying, that "captivity comes into the world for idolatry, uncleanneſs, and murder;" which three things are notorious in the Romiſh antichriſt: and in the ſame treatiſe they ſay [h], that the ſword, the next judgment mentioned, comes into the world for delay of juſtice, and the perverſion of it. He that killeth with the ſword, muſt be killed with the ſword; the deſign of the phraſe is to ſhow, that there will be a juſt retaliation made to the antichriſtian beaſt, for all his cruelty to the ſaints, and the murders of them; and that becauſe he has ſhed much blood of the ſaints, blood ſhall be given him to drink, and he ſhall be uſed in like manner he has uſed others; ſee Gen. ix. 6. Matt. xxvi. 52. Here is the patience and the faith of the ſaints; meaning either that hereby, thro' the cruelties and barbarities of the Romiſh antichriſt, the patience and faith of the ſaints are tried; and that they have great need of them, and of the exerciſe of them, under ſuch uſages; and that theſe being tried, and continue, will receive much commendation, honour, and praiſe: or elſe the ſenſe is, that it requires both faith and patience in the ſaints, to believe that antichriſt will be thus deſtroyed, and to wait quietly till the time comes. The Arabic verſion reads, here is the patience and prayers of the ſaints; who cry, how long will it be 'ere our blood is avenged, and have need of patience to reſt a while, till their prayers are anſwered.

[f] Targum Jon. & Jeruſ. & Aben Ezra in Gen. xlix. 11.

Ver. 11. And I beheld another beaſt, &c.] The ſame with the firſt, only in another form; the ſame for being and perſon, but under a different conſideration; the ſame antichriſt, but appearing in another light and view: the firſt beaſt is the pope of Rome, at the head of the ten kingdoms, of which the Roman empire conſiſted; this other beaſt is the ſame pope of Rome, with his clergy, cardinals, archbiſhops, biſhops, prieſts, &c. before he his deſcribed as a temporal monarch, now as a ſpiritual lord; there he is repreſented in his ſecular character, as having the ſeat, power, and authorit of the dragon, of Rome pagan, engaging the attention and wonder of the whole world, and ſtriking terror into them, and as making war with the ſaints, and ruling over all nations and tongues; here in his eccleſiaſtic character, pretending great humility and holineſs, ſhewing ſigns and lying wonders, obliging to idolatry, and exerciſing tyranny and cruelty on all that will not profeſs his religion: that this is the ſame beaſt with the firſt in ſubſtance, tho' not in ſhew, appears from his exerciſing the ſame power, cauſing all to worſhip the firſt beaſt, or himſelf as a temporal lord, by which he is ſupported in his ſpiritual dignity; and by mention being made only of one beaſt, at the cloſe of this account, and of his mark, name, and number being but one; nor is there any other but one hereafter ſpoken of in this book, either as ruling, or as conquered, and as taken, and as going into perdition, and as caſt into the lake: this beaſt is deſcribed by his original, coming up out of the earth; either from under it, out of the bottomleſs pit, from hell; or out of a low condition, a poor crawling earth-worm; the extracts of many of the popes, cardinals, and religious orders, have been very mean: or this may repreſent the ſecret and private manner, and ſlow degrees by which this monſter of iniquity roſe, as things gradually riſe up out of the earth unobſerved; this man of ſin was ſpringing up in the Apoſtles time, and by degrees roſe up to the power and authority he is here ſaid to have: or rather, as this beaſt, in his other form, roſe up out of the ſea, out of the commotions raiſed in the empire by the babarous nations, by whom he was lifted up to his imperial dignity; ſo he is deſcribed in this form, and is repreſented as riſing up out of the earth, out of the earthly part of the church, or out of the apoſtaſy which the viſible church was ſunk into, thro' the outward riches and honours beſtowed on it by the chriſtian emperors, which made way for the riſing of this beaſt; and this ſhows the nature of his kingdom, which is worldly and earthly, and ſo truly antichriſtian, being diametrically oppoſite to the kingdom of Chriſt, which is not of this world: and he had two horns like a lamb; or like to the lamb; the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Lamb of God; tho' he has ſeven horns denoting fullneſs of power, this but two; he ſtands on mount Zion, with the 144000, having his Father's name on their foreheads, this upon the earth, with his followers, having his own mark and name upon them. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, and he had two horns, and he ſeemed as a lamb; he affected a lamb-like diſpoſition, pretended to great humility and meekneſs, calling himſelf ſervus ſervorum, the ſervant of ſervants, to cover his pride, ambition, and tyranny; and would be thought to be a lamb without ſpot and blemiſh, aſcribing to himſelf infallibility, and ſuffering himſelf to be called his holineſs, when he is the man of ſin, and myſtery of iniquity: by his two horns ſome underſtand his twofold power, ſecular and eccleſiaſtic; but as theſe are ſeparately repreſented by two beaſts, rather theſe two horns intend the two parts of the empire, eaſtern and weſtern, into which it was divided, when this beaſt aroſe, and by which the papacy was raiſed to its power, and ſupported in it; and the two ſupreme pontiffs, the biſhop of Rome, and the biſhop of Conſtantinople; or elſe the beaſt's power of binding and looſing, of diſpenſing with the laws of God, and of impoſing his own laws on the conſciences of men. And he ſpake as a dragon; like the devil himſelf, affirming as he did, Luke iv. 6. that the power of diſpoſing of the kingdoms of this world, and the glory of them, was delivered to him, and he could give it to whom he would: he ſpake arrogantly, as if he was above all that is called God, and as if he was God himſelf; and he ſpake like a dragon cruelly, like the great red dragon, like the devil, who was a murderer from the beginning, breathing out ſlaughter and threatnings againſt the ſaints, as Rome pagan; and he ſpake lyes in hypocriſy, blaſphemies, idolatries, and doctrines of devils.

Ver. 12. And he exerciſeth all the power of the firſt beaſt before him, &c.] Sitting in the ſame ſeat, having the ſame power and authority from the dragon, making war with the ſaints by preaching, and writing againſt them, by anathemas, excommunications and bulls, and ſo overcame and ſilenced them, or delivered them over to the ſecular arm to be put to death, ruling over the conſciences of men in a tyrannical way, in all nations, kindreds, and tongues, in the empire; and all this before, in the preſence, and under the influence of the ſecular power of the papacy, ſignified by the firſt beaſt, and with his good liking, and for his credit and ſupport: and cauſeth the earth, and them that dwell therein; the Roman empire, and the inhabitants of it, eſpecially the carnal and earthly part of them: to worſhip the firſt firſt beaſt; to be ſubject to the temporal power of the papacy, or to ſubmit to the pope as a temporal lord, to give homage and tribute to him, and the like, in order to ſupport his worldly power and grandeur; and this was cauſed, or brought about by his emiſſaries, his ſpiritual vaſſals, his legates, cardinals, prieſts, &c. by their exhortations, perſuaſions, and commands, delivered both in writing and preaching: whoſe deadly wound was healed; which deadly wound was given the Roman empire under its ſixth head, the emperors, when they ceaſed, and was healed by the pope, the ſeventh head, being ſet as a temporal monarch over the ten kingdoms in it.

Ver. 13. And he doth great wonders, &c.] Or miracles; not real, but pretended ones, lying wonders, which the popiſh legends are full of the accounts of, as done by the prieſts, or by this or the other ſaint: ſo that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the ſight of men; in imitation of Elijah; and this ſingle inſtance is put inſtead of all others, it being uſual with the Jews to expreſs all wonderful and miraculous operations by this miracle of Elijah's: and this may be underſtood myſtically, of the pretenſions of the papacy to confer the Holy Ghoſt, and his gifts upon men, by breathing on them, which on the day of Pentecoſt were repreſented by cloven tongues, as of fire, coming down from heaven; or of their anathemas, curſes, and excommunications, at which time burning torches and candles are caſt up, and fall down, as emblems of divine wrath, which is called curſing men with bell, book, and candle; or elſe of the fire of perſecution: from heaven; the ſecular powers of the empire: upon the earth; the common people: or this may be underſtood litterally; ſo they tell us, that pope Zachary, once on a journey to Ravenna, had in the day-time a cloud to protect him from the heat, and in the night-time, armies of fire appeared in the clouds to go before him; and as pope Innocent was at maſs, a golden crown was ſeen, and on it a dove, and under it a ſmoaking cenſer, and hard by them two burning fire-brands: and it is reported of pope Hildebrand, that whenever he pleaſed, he could ſhake his ſleeves, and ſparks of fire would come out; and by theſe miracles deluded the eyes of the ſimple with a ſhow of holineſs; which, witho ther inſtances, are taken notice of by Napeir, Brightman, and other writers: and ſo here this is ſaid to be done in the ſight of men; to their apprehenſion, ſeemingly, in their view; they being cheated and deluded with an appearance and ſhow of things which were not real.

Ver. 14. And deceiveth them that dwell on the earth, &c.] The Complutenſian edition, and two of Stephens's copies, read mine, inſtead of them; creatures of God, and profeſſors of Chriſt, carnal and unregenerate men; not the elect of God, and true believers in Chriſt, theſe cannot be deceived by the ſigns and wonders of falſe Chriſts and falſe prophets; antichriſt's deceiveableneſs of unrighteouſneſs, only operates in them that periſh: by the means of thoſe miracles which he had power to do in the ſight of the beaſt; the ſecular power of the papacy encouraging, confirming, and giving a ſanction to thoſe lying miracles, and obliging all to believe them, and come into the things, doctrines, or practices, they are deſigned to promote: ſaying to them that dwell on the earth; the apoſtate church, or the carnal inhabitants of the empire: ordering and commanding them that they ſhould make an image to the beaſt which had the wound by a ſword, and did live; meaning the Roman empire, which had received a deadly wound in its ſixth head, the emperors, by the ſword of the Goths, Huns, &c. but now revived in its ſeventh head, the pope of Rome, to whom the ten kings gave their kingdoms: the image made to this beaſt ſome underſtand of the tranſlation of the empire to Charles the Great, and his ſucceſſors the emperors, by the pope of Rome, he ordaining ſo many electors to chuſe a king of the Romans, and elect an emperor when one was wanting; and this was an image to the firſt beaſt, a ſhadow, an appearance of the Roman empire, and but a ſhadow; for the power of inaugurating and crowning theſe emperors, and of ſetting up and depoſing them when the pope pleaſed, he reſerved to himſelf: but rather this deſigns the image-worſhip, or the worſhipping of idols of gold and ſilver, of wood and ſtone, which he cauſed the inhabitants of the earth to make, and give adoration to; or elſe the whole papal religion, and the papacy itſelf, for the beaſt, and the image of the beaſt, are all along in this book afterwards mentioned together as being the ſame, ch. xiv. 9. and xv. 2. and xvi. 2. and xix. 20. and xx. 4. which is an image of the Gentile religion, in their high-prieſt, prieſts, temples, idols, offerings, garments, worſhipping of angels, and ſaints departed, with a numerous train of rites and ceremonies, borrowed from the old pagan religion; hence the Papiſts are called Gentiles, ch. xi. 2. the Roman empire repreſented by theſe two beaſts, and this image, had now one head, the pope, as before an emperor, and a religion in it much reſembling its antient one; but before that was ſet up, this image was in being.

Ver. 15. And he had power to give life unto the image of the beaſt, &c.] Or breath; he breathed into it, and animated it; he gave this new religion a ſanction, he confirmed and eſtabliſhed it, and obliged all in his dominions to embrace and acknowledge it; and this he did by his decrees and canons, and thoſe that refuſed, were delivered over to the ſecular power, which he alſo exerciſed under another conſideration: that the image of the beaſt ſhould both ſpeak; ſo that it was not like Nebuchadnezzar's golden image, that he ſet up, which required another to ſpeak for it, and demand adoration to it; and ſhould ſeem to be preferable to the dumb idols of the Gentiles, which have mouths, but ſpeak not; and may be underſtood either of the images of the virgin Mary, and other ſaints, which 'tis pretended, and the people are made to believe, that they do at times actually ſpeak, and really weep and laugh, as it may ſerve their different purpoſes; or this image may be ſaid to ſpeak by the decrees, canons, anathemas, curſes, threatnings, perſuaſions, doctrines, and blaſphemies of the pope and his clergy; ſo that this image is like both the firſt and ſecond beaſt; it has a mouth ſpeaking blaſphemies, as the firſt, and it ſpeaks like a dragon, as the ſecond: and cauſe that as many as would not worſhip the image of the beaſt ſhould be killed; which, according to the generality of copies, refers to the image itſelf, that that has a power from the beaſt as to ſpeak, ſo to put to death thoſe that refuſe to worſhip it; but the Complutenſian edition reads ϗ ποιει, and cauſes; that is the beaſt cauſes, or orders all thoſe that will not worſhip the image, to be killed; that is, that as many as will not embrace and profeſs the popiſh religion, ſhall be put to death; and theſe are the known orders and decrees of the papacy, which have been executed by the inquiſition, and other hands, in innumerable inſtances; the blood of all the ſaints and prophets are found in Rome papal, and will be avenged; theſe are the martyrs of Jeſus, with whoſe blood the whore on the ſcarlet-coloured beaſt has been made drunk; and this ſenſe is confirmed by the Eaſtern verſions.

Ver. 16. And he cauſeth all, both ſmall and great, rich and poor, free and bond, &c.] Men of all ranks and degrees, ſtates and conditions, within his juriſdiction; this refers to the beaſt, and not to the image: to receive a mark in their right-hand, or in their foreheads; or that they might give themſelves marks, as the Complutenſian edition reads; which is an alluſion either to the cuſtom among the Romans of imprinting marks upon their ſervants and ſoldiers, by which they might be known to whom they belonged; ſervants had them in their foreheads[i], and ſoldiers in their hands[k]; or to the uſages of the Jews in binding their phylacteries upon their arms and foreheads, to put them in mind of the law of God, and their obedience to it; or to the practices of the heathens, in putting the mark of the god they worſhipped upon their bodies; ſee 3 Maccab. ii. 21. ſo Maimonides[l] ſays, it was a cuſtom with the Gentiles to mark themſelves with their idols, ſhewing that they were their bought ſervants, and were marked for their ſervice; the ſenſe is, that ſome received the mark in one place, and ſome in another: thoſe who were obliged to receive the mark in the right-hand, ſeem to be the clergy, ſuch who entered into holy orders; who lifted up their right-hand and ſwore and vowed allegiance to the pope, and teſtified they were ready to defend and ſupport his religion and intereſt; and who in their ordination are ſaid to have an indelible character impreſſed on them: and thoſe who received the mark in their foreheads, are the common people in general, who one and all have the ſame impreſs upon them; which may intend either the ſign of the croſs in baptiſm, or rather their open confeſſion of the popiſh religion, which they as publickly avow and declare as if it had been written on their foreheads.

Ver. 17. And that no man might buy or ſell, &c.] Either in an eccleſiaſtical ſenſe, as to be in any church-office, or perform any ſuch ſervice, to ſay maſs, hear confeſſion, give abſolution, ſell pardons and indulgences, &c. or in a civil ſenſe, as to trade, and exerciſe merchandize; and this was forbidden by ſeveral popiſh councils and ſynods; the Lateran council under pope Alexander, decreed againſt the Waldenſes and Albigenſes, that no one ſhould preſume to retain or encourage them in their houſes or countries, or trade with them; and the ſynod of Tours in France forbid any reception of hereticks, or protection, and that any communion ſhould be had with them in buying and ſelling, as Mr. Mede has obſerved; and it was ordered by a bull of pope Martin the Fifth, that no contract ſhould be made with ſuch, and that they ſhould not follow any buſineſs and merchandize: ſave he that had the mark; took the oath to be true to the pope, or made a publick profeſſion of the popiſh religion: or the name of the beaſt; papiſts, ſo called from the pope; thus the antichriſtians are called from antichriſt, as the chriſtians from Chriſt: or the number of his name; which is either the ſame with the number of the beaſt, in the following verſe, or is ſomething diſtinct from it; and thoſe who have it may be ſuch perſons who neither have the indelible character of the Romiſh clergy, nor are open profeſſors of the popiſh religion, but are in heart inclined to it, and privately and ſecretly promote it, by their doctrines and practices; and ſo are numbered, reckoned, eſteemed, and accounted of by the papiſts, and receive favours from them; or rather ſuch who openly furniſh the drink-offering in the maſs, mixed with wine and water, למני, for that number, Iſ. lxv. 11.

Ver. 18. Here is wiſdom, &c.] Not only in the above deſcription of the two beaſts, but in what follows as to the number of the beaſt, theſe two now coaleſcing in one, and have one and the ſame number; and to wrap it up, and conceal it in ſuch an obſcure manner, ſhows great wiſdom in God, as it requires much in men, and ſerves greatly to exerciſe all his intellectual powers to find it out: let him that hath underſtanding count the number of the beaſt; whoever has ſkill in numbers, let him make uſe of it, that he may know the name and nature of the antichriſtian beaſt, and the numerical letters of his name, or the number of him, and of the time when he aroſe, and when he will expire: for it is the number of a man; either a number that may be reckoned by man, or which is in common uſe among men; ſee ch. xxi. 17. or that which is contained in the name of a man: and his number is ſix hundred threeſcore and ſix; which ſome think refers to the time of the riſe of antichriſt, in the year 666; but that ſeems rather to be in the year 606, when the biſhop of Rome obtained the name of univerſal biſhop; others have been of opinion that it refers to the expiration of the beaſt, which they thought would have been in the year 1666, the number of the thouſand being dropped, as it is in our common way of ſpeaking; as when we ſay the Spaniſh invaſion was in 88, meaning 1588, and the civil wars began in 41, that is, 1641. but time has ſhewn that this was a miſtaken ſenſe; the more prevailing opinion is that of Mr. Potter, who has wrote a peculiar and learned treatiſe upon this paſſage, who makes the counting of this number to be no other than the extracting of its root, which is the number 25, which when multiplied into itſelf, and the fraction in working it 41 is added, makes up the ſquare number 666; and now 25 being added to A. D. 33, makes 58, which was the time of the beaſt's conception, to which if 666 is added, it brings us to the year 724, when he arrived to his age of manhood, and when the war about the worſhipping of images broke out: but others think that the numeral letters in ſome man's name which amount to this date, and which agrees with antichriſt, are intended; and here various conjectures are made; ſome have obſerved, that in genealogical arithmetic the number of Adonikam's poſterity is 666, Ezra ii. 13. whoſe name ſignifies a lord riſing up, or riſen; and ſuits very well with antichriſt, who is riſen up, and aſſumes a lordly domination over the kings of the earth; and it is further obſerved, that the Hebrew word רומיית, which ſignifies Roman, and having the word beaſt or kingdom joined to it, deſigns the Roman beaſt, or kingdom, conſiſts of numeral letters, which make up this ſum; and ſo the Hebrew word סתור, Sethur, which is the name of a man, Num. xiii. 13. and ſignifies myſtery, in its numeral letters comes juſt to this number, and one of the names of the whore of Babylon is myſtery, Rev. xvii. 5. but the name Lateinos bids as fair as any, which is mentioned by ſo antient a writer as Irenæus, who was a hearer of Polycarp, a diſciple of John, the writer of this book; now the numeral value of the letters of this word makes up exactly 666 thus; λ. 30. α. 1. τ. 300. ε. 5. ι. 10. ν. 50. ο. 70. ς. 200. in all 666; and it is well known that the church of Rome is called the Latin church, and the pope of Rome the head of the Latin church, and his ſeat is in the Latin empire, and the ſervice of the beaſt is in the Latin tongue, and the Bible is kept in that language, from the reading of the common people: it has been obſerved that the numeral letters in Ludovicus, or Lewis, which is a common name of the French kings, and is the name of the preſent French king, make up this ſame number; and may denote the deſtruction of antichriſt, which will quickly follow the downfall of the kingdom of France, under a king of this name; and the rather, ſince this was the laſt of the ten kingdoms that was ſet up, and in which the primitive beaſt ſubſiſts, and the only one that has not yet been conquered, or in which a revolution has not been; and ſince this is the tenth part of the city which ſhall fall a little before the third wo comes on: and that it may fall under Ludovicus, or Lewis, the preſent French king, may be hoped for, and is deſireable.

CHAP. XIV.

THIS chapter contains three viſions; one of the Lamb on mount Zion, another of the three angels preaching againſt Babylon, and the third of the harveſt and vintage. The viſion of the Lamb is in ver. 1. which is no other than Chriſt, deſcribed by his ſimilitude, as a lamb; by the place where he was, mount Zion; by his poſition there, ſtanding, and by the company that were with him, whoſe number were 144000, and their character, his Father's name written on their foreheads; at the ſame time a voice was heard from heaven, comparable to the ſound of many waters, of thunders, and of harps, and a ſong ſung which none could learn but the above number with the Lamb, ver. 2, 3. who are deſcribed by their purity, chaſtity, and ſtrict adherence to Chriſt; by their redemption thro' him; by their being the firſt-fruits of God and of the Lamb, and by their integrity and unblemiſhed character, ver. 4, 5. next follows the account of the three angels; the firſt comes with the everlaſting Goſpel, to preach it to all men, loudly calling upon all to fear and worſhip God, and give glory to him, ſince he is the creator of all, and the hour of his judgment is come, ver. 6, 7. the ſecond proclaims the fall of Babylon, with the reaſon of it, ver. 8. and the third denounces the wrath of God upon the worſhippers of the beaſt in the moſt public manner, and that for ever, ver. 9, 10, 11. and this viſion is cloſed with ſome expreſſions, ſhewing that till this was done, the patience the ſaints would be tried, and the true worſhippers of the Lamb be diſcovered, and comforting them with an aſſurance of that reſt that remains after death for the faithful followers of Chriſt, ver. 12, 13. after this is the viſion of the harveſt and vintage of the earth. The reaper is deſcribed by his form, like the Son of man; by his ſeat, a white cloud; by a golden crown on his head, and by a ſharp ſickle in his hand, ver. 14. who is called upon by an angel out of the temple to make uſe of his ſickle, and reap, becauſe the time of reaping was come, the harveſt being ripe, ver. 15. upon which he thruſts in his ſickle, and reaps the earth, ver. 16. after this, another angel appears out of the temple, with a ſharp ſickle, to whom another angel from the altar, that had power over fire, calls to make uſe of his ſickle, and gather the cluſters of the vine, ſince the grapes were fully ripe, ver. 17, 18. upon which he thruſts in his ſickle, and gathers them, and caſts them into the wine-preſs of divine wrath, which being trodden, blood comes out of it to the horſes bridles for the ſpace of a thouſand and ſix hundred furlongs, ver. 19, 20.

Ver. 1. And I looked, and lo a Lamb, &c.] The Alexandrian copy, and ſome others, read the Lamb; the ſame that had been ſeen before in the midſt of the throne, ch. v. 6. and all the Oriental verſions have the ſame article alſo; the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the Son of God, for mention is made of his Father in a following clauſe; the king of Zion, where he is ſeen ſtanding, and the redeemer of his people, who are at large deſcribed; it is the ſame lamb who is ſo often ſpoken of in this book before: in the two preceding chapters an account is given of the ſtate of the church, as oppreſſed under Rome pagan, and Rome papal, and here of its more glorious and victorious condition, with Chriſt at the head of it; in the laſt chapter antichriſt is deſcribed, with his followers and worſhippers, and as exerciſing tyranny and cruelty upon the ſaints, and here Chriſt and his followers are repreſented in viſion, and ſome hints given of the fall of Babylon, and of the wrath of God upon the worſhippers of the beaſt, and of the happineſs of thoſe who belong to the Lamb: and of him it is here ſaid, that he ſtood on the mount Zion; by which is meant not heaven, but the church on earth; why that is called mount Zion, ſee the note on Heb. xii. 22. here Chriſt the Lamb ſtood, as preſiding over it, being king of Zion, or the church; where he ſtood and fed, or ruled, in the name of the Lord, and in the majeſty of his God; and where he appeared in the defence of his church and people, oppreſſed by antichriſt; for he is Michael that ſtandeth for the children of his people, and who ſtands with courage, and in the greatneſs of his ſtrength, and is invincible; nor does he ſtand here alone: and with him an hundred forty and four thouſand; the ſame with thoſe in ch. vii. 3, 4. tho' all the world wondered after the beaſt, and all that dwelt upon the earth worſhipped him, yet there was a number preſerved that did not bow the knee to him; a remnant according to the election of grace, who were called out of the world, and brought to Zion, and were on the ſide of the Lamb, and abode by him, and cleaved unto him: having his Father's name written in their foreheads; not baptiſm, adminiſtred in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt, as ſome think; nor eternal election, as others, tho' as their names were written in the Lamb's book of life, ſo this was manifeſt to themſelves and others, as if his name and his Father's had been written in their foreheads; but rather adoption, the new name of a child of God, they having the ſpirit of adoption, whereby they cried Abba, Father, and being openly and manifeſtatively the children of God, by faith in Chriſt Jeſus; unleſs it ſhould be thought there is an alluſion to the inſcription in the mitre on the forehead of the high-prieſt, holineſs to the Lord, and ſo be expreſſive of that viſible holineſs which will be on the ſaints in the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt, which this viſion reſpects; ſee Zech. xiv. 20. or to the frontlets between the eyes of the people of Iſrael, to put them in mind of the law, and their obedience to it, Deut. vi. 8. and ſo may here denote the engagements of thoſe ſaints in the ſervice of God; tho' perhaps no more is intended than their open and hearty profeſſion of their faith, and that they were not aſhamed of appearing in the cauſe of God and truth, nor of Chriſt and his words, his Goſpel and ordinances: the Alexandrian copy, the Complutenſian edition, the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions read, having his name (the Lamb's) and his Father's name written in their foreheads; and the Ethiopic verſion adds, and of his Holy Spirit. Mr. Daubuz thinks this viſion refers to the times of Conſtantine, and to the chriſtians then, and particularly the council of Nice, and as cotemporary with that in ch. viii.

Ver. 2. And I heard a voice from heaven, &c.] The ſame with the voices heard in heaven upon the ſounding of the ſeventh trumpet, ch. xi. 15. as the voice of many waters; very loud, and uttered by a great multitude of people, ſignified by waters in this book, ch. xvii. 15. the ſame with thoſe that praiſe the Lord for the deſtruction of antichriſt, and for the marriage of the Lamb, ch. xix. 1—7. and as the voice of a great thunder; to which the Goſpel may be compared for its open, loud publication, being heard far and near, as thunder is: and I heard the voice of harpers, harping with their harps; that is, ſinging the praiſes of God, for the fall of Babylon, the happy ſtate and condition of the church, and the bleſſings of grace; the harp being a muſical inſtrument, uſed under the Old Teſtament in ſinging praiſe: Brightman thinks that theſe different ſounds repreſent the courſe of Goſpel doctrine, and the church's voice throughout the reign of antichriſt; that when the church firſt went into the wilderneſs, her voice was like the murmuring of waters, confuſed and indiſtinct; when ſhe began to revive under the Waldenſes and Albigenſes, Wickliff, Huſs, &c. her voice was like thunder, loud and terrible; and at the reformation, it was as the voice of harpers, when confeſſions of faith were publiſhed with ſweet harmony and conſent. Others have thought that the different properties and efficacy of the Goſpel are deſigned; as its rapidity and irreſiſtible force, by the many waters; its ſtriking and ſhaking the conſciences of men by the thunder, Chriſt's miniſters being ſometimes Boanergeſſes, ſons of thunder; and its harmonious muſick, pleaſant ſound, peace, joy, and comfort it brings by the voice of harpers. The Alexandrian copy, the Complutenſian edition, the Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions read, the voice which I heard was as harpers, &c.

Ver. 3. And they ſung as it were a new ſong, &c.] The ſong of redeeming grace; the ſame with that in ch. v. 9. ſee the note there: this is to be underſtood of the 144000, who ſung it before the throne, and before the four beaſts and the elders; that is, publickly in the church, the miniſters and members being preſent; of theſe ſee the notes on ch. iv. 4, 6. and no man could learn that ſong, but the hundred and forty and four thouſand, which were redeemed from the earth; out of every kindred, tongue, people, and nation; from among the men of the earth, and out of the apoſtate church, called the earth, in oppoſition to the pure church, which ſo often goes by the name of heaven in this book; and theſe in conſequence of being redeemed by the blood of Chriſt, were called by grace out of the world; and ſuch only can ſing the ſong of redemption with application to themſelves; and ſay he has redeemed us, and loved us, and waſhed us from our ſins in his blood; to none but theſe is it given to know ſpiritually and experimentally the myſteries of electing and redeeming grace; the natural and carnal man neither knows nor receives the things of the Spirit of God; nor can he learn them by hearing, reading, ſtudy and converſation, unleſs it be only in a notional and ſpeculative way. The Jews ſpeak of a new ſong, which the angels have never uſed[m]; "it is ſaid, Pſ. xcviii. 1. ſing unto the Lord a new ſong; a new ſong, for there is an old ſong; but this ſong is what the angels never praiſed him with, and therefore it is new;" and indeed the ſong of redeeming love is peculiar to men.

Ver. 4. Theſe are they which were not defiled with women, &c.] With the whore of Rome, and her harlots, ſhe is the mother of; whilſt the kings and inhabitants of the earth were drunk with the wine of their fornication, or committed idolatry with them, which is ſpiritual fornication, and is here meant by being defiled with them, theſe were free from ſuch pollutions, or idolatrous practices: for they are virgins; for their beauty and comelineſs in Chriſt, chaſtity, ſincerity of their love, incorruptneſs in doctrine and worſhip, and for the uprightneſs of converſation; ſee the note on Matt. xxv. 1. theſe are they which follow the Lamb whitherſoever he goeth; as the ſheep follow the ſhepherd of the flock, and which is a character of Chriſt's ſheep, John x. 4, 5, 27. Theſe follow Chriſt in the exerciſe of the graces of humility, patience, and love; and in the performance of the ſeveral duties of religion, and ſubjection to ordinances, and in the path of ſufferings; and in every way in which Chriſt the Lamb has gone before them, or in his word and providence leads and directs them to, whether it be grateful to the fleſh or not; particularly they follow where he is preached, and his word and ordinances are faithfully adminiſtred; and they follow him to heaven, where he is: it was part of the oath taken by the Roman ſoldiers τοις ϛρατηγοις ακολυθειν οποι ποτ᾽ αν αγωσι, to follow the generals wherever they ſhould lead[n], to which it is thought there is an alluſion here; ſee 2 Sam. xv. 21. theſe were redeemed from among men; by Jeſus, as the Syriac and Arabic verſions add, and ſo the Complutenſian edition; by the blood of Chriſt, for all men are not redeemed by it; and in conſequence of this they were called, and delivered from this preſent evil world, and the men of it, and from a vain, wicked, and idolatrous converſation with it: being the firſt fruits unto God, and to the Lamb; in alluſion to the firſt fruits under the law, which repreſented, and ſanctified the lump, and ſhewed that harveſt was coming; ſo theſe perſons are called the firſt-fruits to God and to the Lamb, being called by grace, and conſecrated to their worſhip and ſervice, with reference to the harveſt of ſouls, or that large number of them, which will be gathered in during the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt, which theſe perſons will be at the beginning of; and as thoſe who are firſt called and converted in a country or nation are ſaid to be the firſt-fruits of it, Rom. xvi. 5. 1 Cor. xvi. 15. ſo theſe being the firſt in the period of time to which reſpect is had, bear this name; and as the converted Jews received the firſt fruits of the Spirit, on the day of Pentecoſt, and at other times, ſo theſe will receive the firſt fruits of the far greater pouring forth of the Spirit in the latter day, which will begin, and uſher in the kingdom of Chriſt; ſee Rom. viii. 23.

Ver. 5. And in their mouth was found no guile, &c.] Or a lye, as the Complutenſian edition, the Alexandrian copy, the Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions read; by which may be meant idolatry, for idols and idolatrous practices are often called lyes, and lying vanities; ſee Jer. xvi. 19. Amos ii. 4. Jon. ii. 8. Rom. i. 25. and the ſenſe is, that the ſuperſtition and idolatry of the church of Rome were not among them: or it may deſign falſe doctrine, and the meaning be, that they did not ſpeak lyes in hypocriſy, as the followers of antichriſt do; nor were they given up to believe a lye, as they are: the generality of copies read, no guile; which is expreſſive of the ſincerity of their words; there was no deceit nor hypocriſy in them; they did not ſpeak with flattering lips to men, nor did they draw nigh to God with their mouths, when their hearts were far from him; they were Iſraelites indeeed, like Nathaniel, in whom was no guile; tho' not in ſo ſtrict a ſenſe, in which this phraſe is uſed of Chriſt, 1 Pet. ii. 22. for they are without fault before the throne of God; not as conſidered in themſelves, as if they were entirely free from ſin, and never committed any; tho' it might be true of them, that in general they were of unblemiſhed lives and converſations, that is, not guilty of any notorious and ſcandalous crimes; but rather the ſenſe is, that they were without ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing, as being waſhed in the blood of Chriſt, and ſo cleanſed from all ſin, and as being juſtified by his righteouſneſs from all iniquity; and ſo were before the throne of God, and in the ſight of divine juſtice, unblameable and irreproveable; ſee Jude 24. Col. i. 22. the phraſe before the throne of God, is left out in the Alexandrian copy, and in the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, and in the Complutenſian edition.

[m] Zohar in Num. fol. 70. 4.

[n] Vid. Lydii Differt. de Jurament. c. 2. p. 258.

Ver. 6. And I ſaw another angel, &c.] This is to be underſtood not of one of the miniſtring ſpirits ſo called; for tho' wings are ſometimes aſcribed to angels, and Gabriel is ſaid to fly ſwiftly; and tho' they deſire to look into the myſteries of the everlaſting Goſpel, yet the preaching of that is not committed to any of them; but a miniſter of the Goſpel is intended, who is the angel of the church, for in this book paſtors of churches are ſo called, ch. i. 20. and not a ſingle miniſter of the Goſpel is meant, but a ſett of Goſpel miniſters; and ſome think that thoſe are deſigned who appeared in the eighth and ninth centuries, both in the eaſtern and weſtern empire, againſt the worſhipping of images; ſince this angel calls upon the inhabitants of the earth to fear God, give glory to him, and worſhip him, and not images; but there was little of the everlaſting Goſpel preached in thoſe times. Others are of opinion that thoſe who preceded, and led on to the reformation, are pointed at by this angel, ſuch as Wickliff in England, Franciſcus Petrarcha in Italy, John Huſs and Jerom of Prague in Bohemia, with others; but theſe alſo had not the everlaſting Goſpel in its clearneſs and purity, nor did they preach it to all the inhabitants of the earth; rather I think a ſett of Goſpel preachers are intended, who will appear at the beginning of the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt, and will be a means of uſhering it in; and theſe are the watchmen of Zion, who will give the Lord no reſt till he has made Jeruſalem the praiſe of the whole earth; and who will then ſee eye to eye in Goſpel myſteries, and will publiſh good tidings of peace and ſalvation, and proclaim Zion's king reigning, Iſ. lxii. 6, 7. and lii. 7, 8. this angel is called another, being diſtinct from the voice heard in ver. 2. tho' he is the firſt with reſpect to the following angels, as appears from ver. 9. the place where John ſaw this angel, and the poſition he was in, follow: fly in the midſt of heaven; the church, the great congregation, the ſeveral congregations of the ſaints; in the midſt of which theſe miniſters will preach righteouſneſs, ſalvation, loving-kindneſs, and truth, as Chriſt has done before them; and from hence the word of the Lord will go forth to all parts of the world: they will preach the Goſpel openly and publickly, with great freedom, boldneſs, and intrepidity, in the view of all men, not fearing the faces of any; and the Goſpel miniſtred by them will have a ſwift, ſudden, and univerſal ſpread; they themſelves will run to and fro, and the Goſpel will run and be glorified, and the earth will be filled with the knowledge of the Lord, and multitudes will flock to Chriſt, who in that day will be alone exalted; for theſe miniſters will come forth publickly: having the everlaſting Goſpel; the Goſpel in its fullneſs and purity; the Goſpel of the grace of God, of free juſtification by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, of peace and pardon by his blood, and of compleat ſalvation by him; called everlaſting, becauſe the ſubſtance of it was ſettled from all eternity, in the council and covenant of peace; it was ordained before the world was, and was hid in God from the beginning; and the revelation of it was of old; it was made to our firſt parents immediately after the fall, and was ſpoken of by all God's holy prophets which have been ſince the world began; it was preached before unto Abraham, and in the times of Iſaiah, and by other prophets, and ſo is no new, upſtart doctrine: beſides, the matter of it is everlaſting; it treats of everlaſting things; of the eternal election of perſons to ſalvation; of God's everlaſting love to them; of an everlaſting covenant he made with Chriſt on their account; of bleſſings, promiſes, and grace given to them in him, before the world began; and of his being ſet up ſo early as a mediator, and of his going forth in a way of grace from everlaſting; as well as it reveals an everlaſting righteouſneſs, and brings life and immortality, or eternal life to light, or ſhews the way to everlaſting life and happineſs; to which may be added, that it will abide for ever, it will always remain, and that inexpugnable, maugre all the oppoſition of hell and earth; it will continue till all the elect of God are gathered in, notwithſtanding the violence of perſecutors, or the craft of ſeducers; nor will it be antiquated and made void by another Goſpel ſucceeding it, for there will be no other: now this the miniſters of thoſe times will have; not in their heads only, by knowledge, but in their hearts, by experience, and will have it in their mouths, and ſpeak it out freely and openly, and will have a commiſſion from Chriſt to preach it, and gifts qualifying them for it: to preach to them that dwell on the earth; that are in the apoſtate church, carnal, unregenerate, and earthly perſons. The Complutenſian edition reads, that ſit on the earth; as perſons abject, mean, and diſtreſſed, to whom the Goſpel is acceptable: and to every nation and kindred, and tongue, and people; whether Jews, Turks, or pagans; for the Goſpel, as before obſerved, will now have an univerſal ſpread all the world over.

Ver. 7. Saying with a loud voice, &c.] Theſe miniſters ſhall lift up their voice like a trumpet, and cry aloud, and deliver out the Goſpel fully and faithfully, with great authority and power, and with much vehemence, zeal, and fervency: fear God; or the Lord, as ſome copies, the Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions read; not the antichriſtian beaſt and his followers, as men formerly had done; but God the Lord, and him not with a ſervile fear, or a fear of puniſhment, of wrath, hell, and damnation; nor with a diſtruſt of his grace, love, power, and providence, much leſs with an hypocritical fear; but with a godly fear, which has the goodneſs of God for its object, and ſprings from a ſenſe of the love of God, and is a reverential affection for him, and is attended with faith and ſpiritual joy, and includes all worſhip of him, both internal and external; hence the Syriac verſion renders it, ſerve God: and this ſhows that the duties of religion are to be inculcated by Goſpel miniſters; and that they will be urged by them when the everlaſting Goſpel is preached in its greateſt purity: and give glory to him; and not to graven images, which he will not allow of; and glory is to be given to him, on account of the perfections of his nature, and the works of his hands; and is given when men aſcribe greatneſs to him, praiſe his works of creation, and acquieſce in thoſe of providence, acknowledging the power, goodneſs, and wiſdom of God in all; and when they give thanks for all his mercies, temporal and ſpiritual, and eſpecially for Jeſus Chriſt; and when they exerciſe faith on him as their God in Chriſt, and aſcribe their ſalvation to him and to the Lamb, and not to the works of their hands; and when they attend his worſhip, and the duties of religion, and ſo glorify him with their bodies and ſpirits, which are his: for the hour of his judgment is come; not of the great and laſt judgment, but of the government of the Lord Chriſt, committed to him by God the Father; in which ſenſe the word is uſed in John v. 22. for now will the time be come, when the kingdoms of this world will be his; and he will take to himſelf his great power, and reign, in a ſpiritual manner, in the world; and now alſo will be his time of judging the dead, or of avenging his people, whoſe blood has been ſhed for him, and of his judging the great whore, or of inflicting his judgments upon antichriſt and his followers; all which will be under the ſounding of the ſeventh trumpet, to which this viſion is cotemporary; ſee ch. xi. 15, 17, 18. and xvii. 1. and xix. 2. and worſhip him that made heaven and earth, and the ſea, and the fountains of waters; God the creator of all things, and not the beaſts, nor idols, the works of mens hands.

Ver. 8. And there followed another angel, &c.] A ſecond, as the Alexandrian copy, the Complutenſian edition, and the Syriac verſion add; and the Arabic verſion reads, and the ſecond angel followed; another ſett of Goſpel miniſters, who will immediately follow upon the former, proclaiming the fall of Babylon, which will be brought about thro' the preaching of the everlaſting Goſpel. Some think the Waldenſes and Albigenſes are here deſigned, who gave a great blow to Babylon, and laid a foundation for her ruin. Others have thought that Luther, and the reformers of his times are intended, who gave a deadly blow to Babylon, and ſhe has been falling ever ſince: but to me it appears, that a ſett of miniſters in the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt are meant, who will not only ſignify the fall of Babylon to be certain, and near at hand, but will live to ſee and declare her actual fall, as follows: ſaying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city; which is to be underſtood not of the world in general, which will not now be come to an end, for all nations of the world are diſtinguiſhed from this Babylon in the next clauſe, and is only repreſented as a city, tho' a great one; nor of Babylon in Chaldea, which was fallen many hundreds of years before this viſion; nor is there any likelihood of its being reſtored, nor any reaſon to believe that it will evermore be the ſeat of empire over all the nations and kings of the earth, as the Babylon mentioned in this book is, ch. xvii. 5, 18. tho' undoubtedly the alluſion is to that Babylon, and the very words are uſed which expreſs the fall of it, and are taken from it; ſee Iſ. xxi. 9. but this is to be underſtood of Rome, which all along in this book is called the great city; ſee ch. xi. 8. and xvi. 19. and xvii. 18. and not of Rome pagan, for that is fallen already; and the account of the fall of that is given before, at the opening of the ſixth ſeal, and the caſting the dragon out of heaven, upon the war there, between Michael and him, tho' Mr. Daubuz is of opinion that this is here meant; but of Rome papal, called Babylon the great, ch. xvii. 5. and xviii. 2. and ſo the Alexandrian copy, the Vulgate Latin, Syriac and Arabic verſions, read here; and the Romiſh antichriſt is ſo called, becauſe that city was famous for its pride and haughtineſs, for its tyranny and cruelty, and for its idolatry; and indeed its name, which ſignifies confuſion, well agrees with the papacy, which is a confuſed mixture of Judaiſm, paganiſm, and chriſtianity: ſo Rome is called Babel in ſome antient writings of the Jews [o], where ſome copies read Babel, others read Rome; and Tertullian, who wrote long before the appearance of the Romiſh antichriſt, ſays [p], with our John, Babylon is a figure of the Roman city: and of this it is ſaid, that it is fallen, is fallen; which words are repeated for the certain confirmation of it, as matter of fact; for the fall of antichriſt will certainly be in the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt, in the Philadelphian church-ſtate; ſee the note on ch. iii. 9. now will Babylon come in remembrance before God, and he will pour out the vials of his wrath upon her, and will give men an averſion to her; and thro' the preaching of the Goſpel ſhe will fall, juſt as the walls of Jericho fell at the ſounding of the rams horns: the reaſon of which fall will be, becauſe ſhe made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication; by her fornication is meant the idolatry of the church of Rome; ſo the idolatry of Iſrael and Judah is often expreſſed in the Old Teſtament by fornication and whoredoms; ſee Jer. iii. 6. Ezek. xxiii. 2, 3. and the wine of it deſigns the alluring methods uſed to draw into it; ſuch as the riches and honours, and pleaſures of this world, promiſed to men, and the great appearances of holineſs and religion, the deceiveableneſs of unrighteouſneſs, the miracles, ſigns, and lying wonders done by them, by which men are made ſottiſh and ſtupid, and induced to believe a lye; juſt as wine intoxicates, and inclines, and excites to luſt: and by the wrath of it, is meant either the heat of luſt unto it, or the wrath of God againſt them, which is ſtirred up by it; and now the aggravation of her ſin is, that ſhe not only drinks of this wine herſelf, or commits idolatry, being inſtigated to it by the allurements of it, tho' ſhe hereby incurs the diſpleaſure and wrath of God, but ſhe draws all nations into the ſame idolatrous practices.

Ver. 9. And the third angel followed them, &c.] The two preceding ones, and that very quickly; by whom is meant not Luther, and his aſſociates in the reformation, as ſome think; nor his ſucceſſors, or the miniſters of the Goſpel in general from his time till Chriſt's ſecond coming, as others have thought; but a ſett of Goſpel miniſters in the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt: the firſt ſett of them publiſh the everlaſting Goſpel, which leads on to the ruin of antichriſt; the ſecond ſett proclaim the downfall of Rome, and this third ſett denounce the wrath of God upon all that have profeſſed the popiſh religion: ſaying with a loud voice; as the firſt angel did, with like authority and vehemence, in order to ſtrike terror, and expreſs indignation: if any man worſhip the beaſt and his image; give in to the idolatries of the church of Rome, and embrace, maintain, and defend the popiſh religion, which bears a reſemblance to the worſhip of the heathens, and is the very image of Rome pagan; ſee ch. xiii. 4, 12, 15. and receive his mark in his forehead, or in his hand; openly profeſs popery, and ſwear allegiance to the man of ſin, and do all they can to ſupport his intereſt; ſee ch. xiii. 16, 17.

[p] Adv. Judæos, c. 9. & Adv. Marcion. l. 3. c. 13.

Ver. 10. The ſame ſhall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, &c.]. Which is a juſt puniſhment for their ſin; that as ſuch have drank of the wine of the wrath of Rome's fornication, ver. 8. ſo they ſhall now drink of the wine of God's wrath; it is uſual in ſcripture to expreſs the puniſhment God inflicts upon wicked men by his wrath, and by the wine-cup of his fury; and their ſuffering ſuch puniſhment, by their drinking of it; ſee Jer. xxv. 15. Job xxi. 20. ſo יין דרוגזא, the wine of wrath, is a phraſe uſed by the Jews[q]: which is poured out without mixture, into the cup of his indignation; ſometimes called a cup of fury and of trembling, Iſ. li. 17, 22. and is ſometimes ſaid to be full of mixture, Pſ. lxxv. 8. of various ingredients of wrath and fury; and the words may be rendered here, which is mixed without mixture; and tho' it ſeems to carry in it a contradiction, yet is true in different ſenſes; it may be ſaid to be mixed as wine with various ſorts, which is the ſtronger, and ſooner inebriates and intoxicates; or in alluſion to the cup the Jews gave to malefactors, to ſtupify them, when going to execution, which had various things put in it for that purpoſe; ſee the note on Mark xv. 23. and ſo deſigns the ſeveral ingredients in the cup of divine indignation, or the ſeveral ways in which God expreſſes his wrath; and yet it is without mixture; it is judgment without mercy, pure wrath, without the leaſt allay; not ſo much as a drop of cold water granted, or the leaſt favour ſhown, or any mitigation of fury for a moment: and he ſhall be tormented with fire and brimſtone; in alluſion to the deſtruction of Sodom and Gomorrha, which are now a burning and ſulphurous lake, called Aſphaltites, and is an example, pattern, and ſimilitude of the vengeance of eternal fire, Jude 7. and hence the beaſt and falſe prophets are ſaid to be caſt into ſuch a lake, ch. xix. 20. and here their followers will be puniſhed; which is expreſſive of the horrible torments of hell, and the dreadful puniſhment of the antichriſtian party there; ſee Pſ. xi. 6. and what will aggravate their miſery is, that it will be in the preſence of the holy angels, and in the preſence of the Lamb; the latter will be their judge, and will adjudge them to everlaſting burnings, and pronounce the ſentence on them; and the former will be the executioners of it; they will gather them out, and ſever them from the righteous, and caſt them into the furnace of fire, and will be ſpectators of their puniſhment, and rejoice at it; and the ſight of their power and glory will increaſe the torment of the ſufferers.

Ver. 11. And the ſmoke of their torment aſcendeth up for ever and ever, &c.] That is, the ſmoke of that fire which torments them will for ever ariſe; or in other words, there will be no end of their torment; hence their miſery is called everlaſting fire, everlaſting puniſhment, and everlaſting deſtruction, Mat. xxv. 41, 46. 2 Theſſ. i. 9. and ſmoke being very troubleſome and diſtreſſing, is mentioned to ſet forth the very uncomfortable ſtate of the wicked; and ſo it is uſed by Jewiſh writers: hence we read of תנן גהנם, the ſmoke of hell[r], with which the eyes of the wicked will be filled in the world to come: and they have no reſt, day nor night; the fire of divine wrath which tortures them is never quenched, and the worm of conſcience which gnaws them, never dies: this is directly contrary to a notion of the Jews, that the wicked in hell have reſt ſometimes; they talk of angels blowing away the ſmoke from them, ſo that they have reſt an hour and a half; and which they ſay they have three times a day, and whenever Iſrael ſays Amen, let his great name be bleſſed[s]; and particularly that hell-fire never burns on the ſabbath-day, nor does the ſmoke of it aſcend then, and that the wicked have always reſt on that day[t]; tho' ſometimes they contradict themſelves, and ſay they never have any reſt[u], which is the truth: who worſhip the beaſt and his image, and whoſoever receiveth the mark of his name; that is, whoever are the followers of antichriſt, or the profeſſors of the Popiſh religion; ſo far is ſalvation from being in the church of Rome, and only there, that there is none in it; and whoever live and die in the profeſſion of popery, ſhall ſurely be damned as this paſſage is true.

Ver. 12. Here is the patience of the ſaints, &c.] That which has required their patience, and about which has been exerciſed, what they have been patiently waiting for, namely the deſtruction of antichriſt; and now it will be come, and patience will have its perfect work; ſee ch. xiii. 10. here are they that keep the commandments of God; and not the inventions of men, and the traditions of antichriſt, but the ordinances of the Goſpel, as they were at firſt delivered, without any adulteration and corruption; and who kept them becauſe they were enjoined by God, and from a principle of love to him, and with a view to his glory: theſe are diſtinguiſhed from the worſhippers of the beaſt, and were preſerved throughout the apoſtacy; theſe are the witneſſes, who will now be riſen, and the remnant of the woman's ſeed, with whom the dragon made war by the beaſt; and theſe are the hundred and forty and four thouſand who are before deſcribed; theſe will be in a very glorious and comfortable church-ſtate; the word will be purely preached, and the ordinances truly adminiſtred, and the doctrines of the Goſpel will be heartily embraced and profeſſed: it follows, and the faith of Jeſus; meaning either the grace of faith, of which Jeſus is the object, author, and finiſher; and which theſe ſaints will have from him, and exerciſe upon him in a very ſtrong and comfortable manner; and which, and the profeſſion of it, they will hold faſt to the end; or elſe the doctrine of faith, concerning the perſon, office, and grace of Jeſus Chriſt, the faith once delivered to the ſaints, which they will have contended for, ſtood faſt in, and now will hold in a pure conſcience: theſe ſeem to be the words of John, declaring the faith, patience, and obedience of the ſaints of thoſe times.

Ver. 13. And I heard a voice from heaven, &c.] Like that which was heard at Chriſt's baptiſm and transfiguration, certifying the truth of what follows, ſo that that may be depended upon as an undoubted verity: ſaying unto me, write; which is a further confirmation of the following ſayings being true and faithful; ſee ch. i. 9. and xix. 9. and xxi. 5. bleſſed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth; merely to die is not an happineſs, for death is common to all, good and bad; it is a diſunion of ſoul and body, and cannot be in itſelf deſireable; it is the fruit of ſin, and has ſomething in it awful and terrible; and though it is the privilege of believers, as it is unſtung by Chriſt, yet not as ſimply and abſolutely conſidered; but to die in the Lord is a bleſſedneſs: ſome render the words, which die for the Lord; ſo the Arabic verſion, which die for the faith of the Lord; and the Ethiopic verſion, which die for God; and ſo reſtrain them to the martyrs of Jeſus: to ſuffer death for the ſake of Chriſt and his Goſpel, is a gift and an honour, and what glorifies Chriſt; and there is a glory conſequent upon it, which ſuch ſhall enjoy; but then in the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt, to which this paſſage refers, and after the deſtruction of antichriſt, there will be no more ſuffering for Chriſt, no more martyrdoms; wherefore this cannot be the ſenſe of the words: nor do they mean dying in the lively exerciſe of faith and hope in the Lord; for tho' it is a happineſs ſo to die, both to perſons themſelves, and to their friends and relations, yet theſe are not the only perſons that are bleſſed; there are ſome who all their life-time are ſubject to bondage, and go off in the dark, and yet are happy; but to die in the Lord, is to die intereſted in him, in union to him; which union is not diſſolved by death, and which preſerves from all condemnation, at death or at judgment, and ſecures the ſoul's immediate entrance into happineſs, and the reſurrection of the body at the laſt day, and therefore ſuch muſt be bleſſed: the phraſe from henceforth, is differently placed; the Ethiopic verſion connects it with the word write, rendering it, write now; and the Vulgate Latin verſion reads it with the next clauſe, hereafter, yea, ſaith the Spirit; and ſo the Latin interpreter of the Syriac verſion, tho' that itſelf ſeems rather to place it as ours does, and which is righteſt; and is to be underſtood not of the time of John's writing, thenceforward to the reſurrection; for thoſe that died before his time were as happy as thoſe who died after; nor of the time of death, tho' it is a truth, that from the time of the ſaints death, and from the very moment of their ſeparation, they are bleſſed, and are in a ſtate of happineſs until the reſurrection; but of that period of time which the declarations made by the three preceding angels refer to, from thenceforward, and after the deſtruction of antichriſt, and during the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt: and the ſenſe is, that happy will thoſe perſons be, that die in Chriſt within that time, and before the Laodicean church-ſtate takes place; when coldneſs, lukewarmneſs, and carnal ſecurity will ſeize upon men, and Chriſt will come upon them at an unawares; and thoſe ſharp and ſevere times will commence, ſignified by the harveſt and vintage of the earth in the following verſes, and which ſeem to be no other than the end of the world, and the deſtruction of it; wherefore happy will they be that are got to heaven before that time comes; ſee Eccl. iv. 1, 2. Iſ. lvii. 1, 2. yea, ſaith the Spirit; the third witneſs in heaven, who ſets his ſeal to the truth of what the voice declares, and ſhows wherein this bleſſedneſs will conſiſt: that they may reſt from their labours; both of body and ſoul; from all toil of body, and laborious work, from all diſeaſes and diſtempers of body, and all outward ſorrows and calamities men labour under, and are fatigued with in this life; and from all inward troubles, from a body of ſin, from the temptations of ſatan, and from all doubts and fears, from their preſent warfare-ſtate, and all conflicts with their ſpiritual enemies: and their works do follow them; they don't go before them, to prepare heaven and happineſs for them; nor do they take them along with them, and uſe them as pleas for their admiſſion into the heavenly glory; but they will follow them, and will be found to praiſe, and honour, and glory, and will be taken notice of by Chriſt, and graciouſly rewarded by him, at his appearing and kingdom. This is directly oppoſite to the notions of the Jews, who ſay, that when a man departs this life, his works go before him, and ſay unto him, thou haſt done ſo and ſo, in ſuch a place, and on ſuch a day [w]; and that whoever does a good work in this world, it ſhall go before him in the world to come [x]; and ſo they [y] repreſent good works as ſaying to a man when he is about to die, "go in peace; before thou getteſt thither אנו מקדימים אותך, we will go before thee, as it is ſaid, Iſ. lviii. 8. thy righteouſneſs ſhall go before thee." Sometimes they ſay [z] they go along with him at the time of a man's departure: neither gold, nor ſilver, nor precious ſtones and pearls accompany him, but the law and good works, as it is ſaid, Prov. vi. 22. when thou goeſt it ſhall lead thee, &c.

Ver. 14. And I looked, and behold a white cloud, &c.] In this verſe is a deſcription of the perſon principally concerned in the harveſt of the earth, hereafter mentioned; by whom is deſigned not ſome great potentate or prince, an encourager of the reformation among his ſubjects; nor an angel in an human ſhape; nor Martin Luther, as others; but the Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf, who is deſcribed by his form, and by his ſeat, and by what he had on his head, and in his hand: and upon the cloud one ſat like unto the Son of man; ſo Chriſt is ſaid to be, ch. i. 13. and in Dan. vii. 13. where there is a like viſion of him as here, and which refers to the ſame time; it is a name by which the Meſſiah is often called, and is expreſſive of the truth of his human nature, who was found in faſhion as a man, and was really one; for his being like to the Son of man, deſigns reality and truth, and not mere appearance; ſee Mat. xiv. 5. John i. 14. and beſides, as this was in viſion, it is very properly expreſſed, for Chriſt appeared to John in viſion like to that human nature in which he is at the right hand of God: and here he is ſeen ſitting upon the white cloud; which ſhows that he was come to judgment in the clouds of heaven, and was ſet on one of them, as on a throne; and a white cloud repreſents the purity, uprightneſs, and juſtneſs of his proceedings in judgment; for which reaſon he is ſaid to be on a white throne, ch. xx. 11. having on his head a golden crown; as an enſign of royal majeſty, ſhewing that his kingdom was now come, the time for him to reign perſonally with his ſaints on earth a thouſand years; and that it was a very glorious one; and that he ſhould now reign before his antients glorioully; and that it was pure, ſolid, and durable; ſee Pſ. xxi. 4. and in his hand a ſharp ſickle; to reap the earth with, as hereafter, and is expreſſive of his power as king of ſaints and judge of the world, to gather all nations before him; for the ſickle is uſed to gather with, as well as to cut down.

Ver. 15. And another angel came out of the temple, &c.] Not the Holy Spirit, who being God omniſcient, knows the day and hour of judgment, which is a ſecret to men and angels, as Napier thinks; ſince tho' he dwells in the church as his temple, yet is never called an angel; nor does this angel repreſent the ſouls under the altar, who come out from thence, and importunately deſire vengeance on the inhabitants of the earth, the worſhippers of the beaſt, who had ſhed their blood; but rather the mighty angels who ſhall deſcend from heaven with Chriſt, and who ſhall be employed by him as reapers, to gather in his elect from the four winds, as well as to bind up the tares in bundles, and burn them; unleſs a ſett of Goſpel miniſters, as before, ſhould be intended, who either by divine revelation, or by the ſigns of the time being come, and obſerved by them, will know that the harveſt, or end of the world is come; ſince this angel is ſaid to come out of the temple, the church, which had been meaſured, and was now opened in heaven, and from whence angels are ſaid to come, ch. xi. 1, 19. and xv. 5, 6. crying with a loud voice to him that ſat on the cloud; as the firſt and third angels did, ver. 7, 9. denoting great vehemence and importunity: thruſt in thy ſickle, and reap; which being ſpoken by an inferior angel, whether this deſigns the miniſtring ſpirits, or preachers of the word, muſt be underſtood not as commanding, nor even directing what ſhould be done, but as beſeeching and intreating; ſee Pſ. cxxxii. 8. Dr. Lightfoot thinks, and not without reaſon, that there is here ſome alluſion to the putting in of the ſickle, and reaping the firſt corn in Judea, at the feaſt of the paſſover, by the order of the Sanhedrim which ſat in the temple; nor did any reap till they had the word given them, reap, by the meſſengers of the court, called שלוחי בית דין, the angels, or meſſengers of the Sanhedrim; to whom the reaper ſaid, ſhall I reap? and they ſay to him, קצור [a], reap: the reaſons follow: for the time is come for thee to reap; the time of the end of the world, and of the judgment of it, which is fixed by God; and of Chriſt's coming to judge both quick and dead, and of the firſt reſurrection, or the reſurrection of the ſaints: for the harveſt of the earth is ripe; the meaſure of the ſins of wicked men will now be filled up, and the afflictions of the ſaints will be accompliſhed in them, and the number of God's elect will be compleated in effectual vocation; they will be all called, and ſo things will be ripe for the ſecond coming of Chriſt. There ſeems to be ſome reference to Joel iii. 13. put ye in the ſickle, for the harveſt is ripe: the Jewiſh doctors aſk, [b] to whom is this ſaid? R. Phineas, in the name of R. Hilkiah ſays, למלאכים, to the angels; ſo the mighty ones in ver. 11. are by Kimchi interpreted of the angels.

Ver. 16. And he that ſat on the cloud thruſt in his ſickle on the earth, &c.] He put forth, and made uſe of that power which he had in his hand, in anſwer to the intreaty of the angel, the time being fully come which was fixed for this great event: and the earth was reaped; and the harveſt of it was got in; reaping and harveſt ſometimes are uſed in an ill ſenſe, and deſign the wrath of God, and his judgments inflicted upon men; ſee Iſ. xvii. 5. Jer. li. 33. Joel iii. 13. Hence ſome think, that both this and the vintage following, intend the judgments of God upon antichriſt, and that they are cotemporary with the pouring out of the fifth and ſixth vials upon the beaſt and his followers; and the rather, ſince the deſtruction of Babylon literally taken, is expreſſed in ſuch language, Jer. li. 33. though theſe ſeem to have reſpect to times after the fall of the Romiſh Babylon, before declared in ver. 8. and moſt interpreters refer the harveſt to the laſt judgment at the end of the world; and which ſenſe is greatly countenanced, and to be illuſtrated by the parable of the tares and wheat, in Mat. xiii. 30, 39, 41, 42. ſometimes theſe phraſes are uſed in a good ſenſe, and intend the gathering in of ſouls by the preaching of the Goſpel; as there are the appointed weeks of the harveſt, ſo there is a time fixed for the calling and converſion of God's elect; and when this time is come, and eſpecially to any number of them in any particular place, it is an harveſt, as in Galilee and Samaria in the times of Chriſt, Mat. ix. 39. John iv. 35. the reapers are the miniſters of the Goſpel; ſuch were the Apoſtles of Chriſt, John iv. 36, 37, 38. and the ſickle is the Goſpel, by which not only men are cut to the heart, and cut down, and removed from their old bottom, and principles and practices, but are gathered to Chriſt, and into his churches; and when large numbers are brought in, it is an harveſt-time, as in the times of Chriſt and his Apoſtles; ſee Iſ. ix. 1, 2, 3. Acts ii. 41. 2 Cor. ii. 14. hence ſome interpreters think that the harveſt here has reſpect to the reformation, which followed upon the preaching of Luther, Calvin, and others, when a large harveſt of ſouls were gathered in, in Germany, France, England, and elſewhere; but rather it may be thought to refer to the converſion of the Jews, and the bringing in the fullneſs of the Gentiles in the latter day, in the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt, to which the preceding viſions belong, as we have ſeen; the earth will be reaped indeed, and a great harveſt it will be, when a nation ſhall be born at once, and the vaſt multitudes of the Gentiles ſhall be brought in, as in Iſ. lxvi. 8. and xlix. 20. and lx. 3—11. and the rather this may be judged to be the meaning of it, ſince the paſſage from whence theſe phraſes are borrowed, reſpects the bringing again the captivity of Judah and Jeruſalem, Joel iii. 1, 13. tho' it ſeems beſt to underſtand it of the Lord's wheat harveſt at the end of the world, when the wheat of the earth ſhall be reaped, and gathered into Chriſt's barn, or garner, or into his and his Father's kingdom; this reaping of the earth is the removing of the ſaints out of it, not by death, but by the reſurrection of them from the dead; for when Chriſt ſhall come in the clouds of heaven, and ſit on the white cloud, or throne, the dead in him will riſe firſt, and the living ſaints will be changed, and both will be caught up together, to meet the Lord in the air; ſo that the earth will be reaped, and be clear of them, and there will be none left in it but the wicked of the world; and what will become of them is declared in the following verſes, under the repreſentation of a vintage.

Ver. 17. And another angel came out of the temple which is in heaven, &c.] It is a ſtrange conceit of Mr. Brightman's, that this angel is Thomas lord Cromwell, in the days of king Henry the eighth, a ſincere favourer of pure religion; and that the following angel is Thomas Cranmer, archbiſhop of Canterbury, a martyr, that had power over fire; and that the vintage, here ſpoken of, refers to the deſtroying of religious houſes, and diſpoſing of abbylands to other uſes; which was done under the king's authority, by the former of theſe, at the inſtigation of the latter, when thoſe who were ſet over that buſineſs, made ſuch havock of the goods of the papiſts, that their houſes ſeemed to ſwim in their ſpoils, as in a river of preſſed grapes. Dr. Goodwin much better interprets it of God's vengeance upon the carnal proteſtants and profeſſors of religion; ſince it is an angel out of the temple that will execute it, and another from the altar, zealous of God's worſhip, that will provoke to it; and ſince the wine-preſs will be trodden without the city, the church; and which began in the wars in Germany, in the laſt age, and will have its full accompliſhment when the whole outward court is given to the Gentiles; but how theſe, who are but a few, when compared with the wicked of the world, ſhould be called the vine of the earth, I ſee not. Mr. Daubuz thinks this viſion of the vintage has had, at leaſt in part, its fulfillment in the late wars in the times of queen Anne, the popiſh countries being then made the ſeat of war, in which they ſuffered much; rather they come neareſt to the truth of the matter, who take this to be the battle of the great God Almighty, under the ſixth vial, ch. xvi. 14, 16. fought by the word of God, the king of kings, and lord of lords, who will tread the winepreſs of the fierceneſs and wrath of Almighty God, ch. xix. 15. when the beaſt and falſe prophet will both be deſtroyed: but inaſmuch as Babylon is before declared to be fallen, ver. 8. and ſince the gathering in of the Lord's wheat at the firſt reſurrection, is deſigned by the harveſt; it is beſt to underſtand this vintage of the perdition of ungodly men by fire, at the conflagration of the world, which will be at the beginning of the thouſand years reign, and of the gathering of them in at the ſecond reſurrection, at the end of it, for the deſtruction of them in hell, ſoul and body. And by this angel is meant, not the ſaints of the moſt high; for tho' they may be ſaid to come out of the temple, the church, and ſhall judge the world, yet they will not be employed in gathering together the wicked, and caſting them into the lake of fire, or wine-preſs of God's wrath; rather the miniſtring ſpirits are intended, who are the reapers at the end of the world, and who will gather the wicked, and bind them like tares in bundles, and caſt them into the furnace of fire; tho' it is beſt to interpret this of Chriſt himſelf, who is often called an angel in ſcripture, as the angel of God's preſence, and the angel of the covenant; and frequently in this book, as in ch. vii. 2. and viii. 3. and x. 1. becauſe, as mediator, he is God's meſſenger; and he may be ſaid to do that, which he does by others, as inſtruments, as to gather the vine of the earth, and caſt it into the wine-preſs; and he may be ſaid to come out of the temple which is in heaven: whether this be underſtood of heaven itſelf, which the temple, and eſpecially the moſt holy place in it, was a figure of; here Chriſt is, and from hence he is expected to come, and will come at the laſt day, as judge of all the earth; or of the church of God, for here Chriſt dwells, and grants his gracious and ſpiritual preſence until his ſecond and perſonal coming, with all his ſaints: and now he will have them all with him, both quick and dead, and will be perſonally in his temple, the church, in the great congregation of the righteous, and out from among them will he diſplay his power in the deſtruction of the wicked; and the rather he may be thought to be intended, ſince none but a divine perſon ever trod the wine-preſs of God's wrath; ſee Iſ. lxiii. 3, 1, 2, 3. Rev. xix. 13, 15, 16. to which may be added what follows, he alſo having a ſharp ſickle; the ſame who is deſcribed as like to the ſon of man, on a white cloud, with a golden crown on his head, and ſuch a ſickle in his hand, ver. 14. which is expreſſive of the ſame judiciary power and authority.

Ver. 18. And another angel came out from the altar, &c.] Where are the ſouls of the martyrs of Jeſus, ch. vi. 9. and whom this angel is thought by ſome to repreſent, in his addreſs to him that had the ſharp ſickle, crying for vengeance on the wicked of the earth, who had ſhed their blood: the alluſion ſeems to be to the altar of burnt-offerings, where the ſacrifices were ſlain, and on which they were burnt with fire; and which was an emblem of the ſtrict juſtice of God, ſhewing, that thoſe perſons, for whom theſe ſacrifices were offered, deſerved to be treated in like manner; and here the angel coming from thence ſignifies, that he came on the behalf of the juſtice of God, entreating that he, to whom vengeance belonged, would execute it upon all the ungodly, who were ripe for judgment: and hence it is further ſaid of him, which had power over fire; whether the angels, as they have preſided over particular kingdoms and ſtates, Dan. x. 20, 21. preſide over the elements, ſince this angel had power over fire, and another angel is called the angel of the waters, ch. xvi. 5. may be conſidered. According to the Jews [c] there are מלאכי אש, angels of fire, and מלאכי מים, and angels of the waters; particularly it is ſaid [d], that Gabriel is, שר של אש, the prince of fire, or that has power over fire, and Jurkemo is, שר הברד, prince of hail, or has power over it: however, fire is to be taken here, not for the Spirit, and his gifts, which not a created angel, but Chriſt only, has a power over, to baptize with; nor the Goſpel, nor martyrdom, but rather the wrath of God, which in ſcripture is often compared to fire, of which this angel was an executioner: and indeed here it may be referred, both literally to the burning of the world, and the wicked in it, in which the angels may be concerned, who will deſcend with Chriſt in flames of fire, taking vengeance on the wicked; and figuratively to hell-fire, and the deſtruction of the wicked in it, who will be caſt into it by the angels of God. And cried with a loud cry to him that had the ſharp ſickle, as in ver. 15. expreſſing like vehemence and importunity, ſaying, thruſt in thy ſharp ſickle; not commanding or directing, but intreating as before: and gather the cluſters of the vine of the earth; not the vine of God's planting, the vineyard of the Lord of hoſts, the church of Chriſt; but the vine of the earth, of wicked and earthly men, whoſe vine is of the vine of Sodom, &c. Deut. xxxii. 32, 33. and which is ſpread over the whole earth; a wild vine, whoſe grapes are gall, cluſters bitter, and their wine the poiſon of dragons; and to ſuch a vine the wicked are compared, for their emptineſs and unfruitfulneſs, their uſeleſſneſs and unprofitableneſs, and for their being fit fewel for everlaſting burnings; ſee Ezek. xv. 2, 3, 4, 5. And the cluſters of it may denote the great multitude of the wicked now to be cut down, gathered in, and deſtroyed, for the reaſon given, for her grapes are fully ripe; their wickedneſs very great, their iniquity full, the meaſure of their ſins filled up, and they fitted for deſtruction, and ripe for ruine; ſee Joel iii. 13. Some underſtand this of the degenerate church of Rome, and the deſtruction of it; ſee Rev. xix. 15.

Ver. 19. And the angel thruſt in his ſickle into the earth, &c.] Before upon the earth, when the harveſt was gathered in, the wheat being on the earth, but not belonging to it; but here into the earth, the vine being the vine of the earth, rooted in it, and natural to it: and gathered the vine of the earth; the Arabic verſion reads, of the whole earth; in like manner as the tares in the parable are ſaid to be gathered, and bound in bundles, and caſt into the fire, which, as here, intends the deſtruction of the wicked, at the end of the world: this vine may be ſaid to be cut down at the burning of the world, and to be gathered at the ſecond reſurrection, as the wheat-harveſt of the ſaints will be at the firſt reſurrection: and caſt it into the great wine-preſs of the wrath of God; the ſame with the lake which burns with fire and brimſtone, ſo often mentioned in this book: the torments of the wicked will lie in the wrath of God being poured forth upon them, and into them, which will be that fire that can't be quenched, and that worm that never dies; and this is ſignified by the ſqueezing of grapes in a wine-preſs, as God's judgments in this world ſometimes are, Iſ. lxiii. 3, 6. and which will be very heavy and intolerable, ſince this wine-preſs will be trod by the Lord God Almighty: and it is ſaid to be a great one, as it muſt needs be, to hold the vine of the whole earth, or all the wicked of the world, who will be like the ſand of the ſea, innumerable; and this will be big enough for them all, and they will all be caſt into it at once. Tophet is deep and large, Iſ. xxx. 33.

Ver. 20. And the wine-preſs was trodden without the city, &c.] The beloved city, the new Jeruſalem, into which none of the wicked will enter, and without which are dogs, &c. Rev. xx. 9. and xxi. 27. and xxii. 15. The alluſion may be, as Dr. Lightfoot thinks, to the olive-preſſes, which were without the city of Jeruſalem, from whence Gethſemane had its name, whither our Lord went, and where his ſorrows began the night he was betrayed: hell is ſometimes expreſſed by outer darkneſs, and ſaid to be far off from heaven, and between the one and the other a great gulf is fixed, the diſtance is conſiderable; hence men are ſaid to go forth to behold the miſeries of the wicked; ſee Matt. xxii. 13. Luke xvi. 23, 26. Iſ. lxvi. 24. and blood came out of the wine-preſs; alluding to the juice ſqueezed out of grapes, called the blood of grapes, Gen. xlix. 11. Even unto the horſes bridles, for the ſpace of a thouſand and ſix hundred furlongs; which is only an hyperbolical expreſſion, ſetting forth the largeneſs and univerſality of the deſtruction of the wicked, and the impoſſibility of their eſcaping it. In like manner the Jews expreſs a great ſlaughter of men; ſo of the ſlaughter at Bither, by Adrian, they ſay [e], they went on ſlaying, עד ששקע הסוס בדם עד חוטמו, until a horſe plunged in blood up to his noſtrils, and the blood ran four miles into the ſea; which is not to be underſtood literally, but as expreſſing a prodigious effuſion of blood: and as to the ſpace of a thouſand and ſix hundred furlongs, perhaps there may be an alluſion to the meaſure of the land of Iſrael, and the common notion of it among the Jews, who make it to be the ſquare of four hundred parſæ [f]: hence they often ſpeak of the land of Iſrael ſhaking and moving four hundred parſæ, upon ſome extraordinary occaſions [g]; and a parſa contained four miles [h], ſo that four hundred parſæ made a thouſand and ſix hundred miles; and if miles and furlongs are the ſame, in which ſenſe only the land of Iſrael could be ſo large, here is the exact ſpace; for Jerom [i], who was an inhabitant of it, ſays, it was ſcarce 160 miles in length, to which agrees R. Menachem [k]; and it may be obſerved, that the Arabic verſion renders the words, by the ſpace of a thouſand and ſix hundred miles. The Ethiopic verſion, very wrongly, reads, ſixteen furlongs.

CHAP. XV.

THIS chapter is a preparation to the pouring out of the ſeven vials, and contains a viſion of the ſeven angels in heaven that ſhould do this work, of a chorus of harpers on this occaſion, and of the ſame ſeven angels coming out of the temple, and receiving the vials, in order to execute their commiſſion. The viſion of the ſeven angels, having the ſeven laſt plagues, ſo called becauſe filled up with the wrath of God, is ſaid to be a ſign, great and marvellous, ver. 1. a ſea of glaſs, mingled with fire, is ſeen, with perſons ſtanding on it, deſcribed by the victory they had got over the beaſt, his image, mark, and number of his name; by having the harps of God in their hands, and by the ſong they ſung, called the ſong of Moſes, and of the Lamb; in which they aſcribe to Chriſt deity, dominion over the ſaints, omnipotence, juſtice, truth, and holineſs; give him glory, celebrate his works, commend his ways, and ſuggeſt that he ought to be the object of the fear and worſhip of all, ver. 2, 3, 4. Next the temple in heaven is ſeen opened, out of which come the ſeven angels, deſcribed by the place they came from, the temple; by what they had, the ſeven plagues; by their habit, clothed in pure white linnen; and by their golden girdles about their breaſts, ver. 5, 6. to whom one of the four living creatures, made mention of in ch. iv. delivers to them ſeven golden vials full of divine wrath, upon which the temple is filled with ſmoke from the Lord; ſo that it was not poſſible for any one to enter into it, until theſe ſeven plagues were ended, ver. 7, 8.

Ver. 1. And I ſaw another ſign in heaven, great and marvellous, &c.] This chapter is a preparation to the pouring out of the ſeven vials, as ch. i. is to the ſending of the ſeven Epiſtles, and ch. iv. to the ſeven ſeals and ſeven trumpets: the viſion is called a ſign, becauſe what was ſeen was ſignificative of future events; a ſign of the coming of Chriſt, of his kingdom, and of the deſtruction of antichriſt; and it is ſaid to be a ſign in heaven, where John was called up, and where he had his viſions; and it was another, a different one from that in ch. xii. 1. which repreſented the downfal of paganiſm, but this the downfal of popery; and it is a very great one, it is expreſſive of great things, as the fall of Babylon the great, or the judgment of the great whore, and the great glory of the church and kingdom of Chriſt; and it is marvellous, for the two grand events it reſpects are very wonderful; as that antichriſt, who was once in ſuch great power, ſhould be deſtroyed, and that by ſuch weak means, in the eſteem of men, as the preaching of the Goſpel, which is no leſs marvellous than the fall of Jericho by the ſound of rams horns; and that the church, which was in ſo low an eſtate in the wilderneſs, for the ſpace of 1260 days or years, ſhould become ſo glorious. The viſion follows, ſeven angels, having the ſeven laſt plagues; theſe are not the ſame angels that blew the ſeven trumpets, for they are not cotemporary with them, but are more likely the ſame with thoſe in the preceding chapter; tho' they ſeem rather to be different from them: if theſe were angels literally underſtood, their having plagues is no objection to their being good angels, ſince ſuch are often the executioners of God's wrath; and that theſe were good ones, appears from one of them talking with John, and ſhewing him the judgment of antichriſt, and another the bride, the Lamb's wife, and her glory, ch. xvii. 1. and xxi. 9. tho' they ſeem rather to be the miniſters of the Goſpel, ſince they are ſaid to come out of the temple, ver. 6. and ſince the deſtruction of antichriſt will be by the breath of Chriſt's mouth, or by the preaching of the Goſpel; unleſs it ſhould be thought that members of churches are deſigned, ſince theſe angels receive their vials from one of the four living creatures, ver. 7. or preachers of the word; and may denote ſome very principal men, as kings, who will now be come to Zion, and be members of Goſpel churches, and will be the nurſing fathers and protectors of them; and theſe will hate the whore, and burn her fleſh with fire; but of theſe angels, ſee more on ver. 6. They are ſaid to have the ſeven laſt plagues; that is, in their vials; for theſe ſeven plagues are the ſame with the ſeven vials of the wrath of God, to be poured out upon antichriſt; and are no other than ſo many ſteps, ways and means, by which God will bring on, and finiſh his deſtruction: theſe are called the laſt plagues, becauſe they will be in the laſt days: there have been plagues before, as at the deſtruction of the old world, and of Sodom and Gomorrha, and the plagues of Egypt, and the downfal of ſeveral monarchies and kingdoms, and of paganiſm in the Roman empire; but theſe will fall upon antichriſt, and will be the laſt upon him, for they will iſſue in his utter ruin; they will be the laſt plagues upon the earth, there will be no other after them, but the conflagration of the world, and the general deſtruction of the wicked in hell. Theſe plagues are the ſame with the third wo, and are an explanation of it, and belong to the ſounding of the ſeventh trumpet, which brings in the kingdoms of this world to become the kingdoms of Chriſt, and the time of God's wrath upon the nations, or Gentiles, the papiſts, and of judging the dead, and deſtroying them that deſtroyed the earth, ch. xi. 15, 18. for theſe plagues don't follow upon the harveſt and vintage, nor has this viſion any reſpect to them, nor to be connected with the preceding chapter, but with ch. 11th, and gives an enlarged view, both of the glory of Chriſt's kingdom, and of the ruin of antichriſt, by theſe plagues, called the laſt: for in them is filled up the wrath of God; upon the beaſt, and his followers.

Ver. 2. And I ſaw, as it were, a ſea of glaſs mingled with fire, &c.] Not baptiſm, but rather the blood of Chriſt, which may be compared to a ſea, for its abundant virtue and efficacy in cleanſing from all ſin; and to a ſea of glaſs, ſince in it are clearly ſeen free juſtification, full pardon, peace and reconciliation; and may be ſaid to be mingled with fire, being attended in the application of it with the Spirit of God, whoſe gifts and graces are ſometimes ſignified by fire: and ſo according to others, this ſea may repreſent the pure church of God, as waſhed in the blood of the Lamb; compared to a ſea for the multitude of which it conſiſts, and to a ſea of glaſs, becauſe of the tranſparency and clearneſs of its principles and practices, and may be ſaid to be mingled with the fire of love and zeal: moſt interpreters underſtand it of the world, which is like a ſea for the multitude of its inhabitants; and ſometimes to a troubled one, becauſe of the reſtleſsneſs and diſquietude of the wicked in it; but here it is like a ſea of glaſs, for the quiet, and peace, and reſt it ſhall be in at this time; tho' it is commonly ſaid to be like ſuch a ſea, partly becauſe all things are manifeſt, and open to an omniſcient God; and partly becauſe of its outward ſplendor, and the brittleneſs, frailty, and tranſitorineſs of it; and to be mixed with fire, either becauſe of the light of the Goſpel, and the operation of the Spirit in the hearts of ſome, that are in it, or becauſe of the afflictions and perſecutions of the ſaints in it; tho' it ſeems beſt of all to underſtand it of the Goſpel, as in ch. iv. 6. ſee the note there; and which may be ſaid to be mingled with fire, either becauſe of the powerful and clear demonſtration of the Spirit that attends it to the minds of many, or that heat of perſecution which is raiſed by it; ſee Luke xii. 49. or rather it denotes the purity of the Goſpel in thoſe times, its general ſpread, and the great zeal and fervour of the profeſſors of it, ſince perſecution will now be at an end. And them that had gotten the victory over the beaſt; over antichriſt, ſignified by the beaſt, that roſe up out of the ſea, and out of the earth, ch. xiii. 1, 11. and which are the ſame, and were but one, tho' in different forms, as from hence appears: the beaſt firſt overcame the ſaints, by ſlaying of them; and they overcome him by the blood of the Lamb, and by the word of their teſtimony, by preaching and profeſſing the Goſpel, by their cloſe and conſtant adherence to it, and by dying for it: and over his image; cauſed by him to be made to the firſt beaſt; and is no other than the popiſh religion, which bears a reſemblance to paganiſm; and which the ſaints may be ſaid to get the victory over, by ſtanding out againſt it, oppoſing and refuting it, not giving into it, but bearing their teſtimony againſt it: and over his mark; refuſing to receive it either in their forehead, or in their right hand; that is, either to ſwear allegiance to him, or profeſs his religion. This clauſe is wanting in the Alexandrian copy, Vulgate Latin, Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions: and over the number of his name; that is, they would not own his ſupremacy and authority, nor embrace his doctrines, nor obey his orders, nor be reckoned his followers in any form or ſhape; ſee ch. xiii. 15, 16, 17, 18. Theſe conquerors John ſaw ſtand on the ſea of glaſs; which if applied to the blood of Chriſt, ſhows, that theſe confeſſors were purified by it, and were more than conquerors thro' it; that they were come out of great tribulation, and had waſhed their garments, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb; and were juſt come up from the waſhing, and ſtood upon, or rather, by or near the ſea, as the Arabic verſion renders it, in alluſion to the prieſts at the molten ſea, in the temple: but if the world is meant by the ſea, their ſtanding upon it deſigns their victory and triumph over it by faith, their having it under their feet, and their contempt of it; but rather, ſince the Goſpel is intended, it may denote their ſolid ſtanding upon the doctrines of it, the foundation of the Apoſtles and prophets, and their ſtedfaſt continuance in them, and faithful abiding by them, whereby they got the victory over antichriſt: having the harps of God; their hearts in an excellent frame, tuned and diſpoſed by God, to ſing his praiſe, and ſet forth his glory; having them filled with ſpiritual joy and gladneſs, and with great thankfulneſs, on account of their victory, the happy ſtate of Chriſt's church, and the deſtruction of its enemies: the alluſion is to the people of Iſrael, Moſes and the men, and Miriam and the women with timbrels and dances ſtanding on the ſea-ſhore, when the Egyptians were deſtroyed, ſinging the praiſes of God; as is ſtill more manifeſt from the following verſe.

Ver. 3. And they ſing the ſong of Moſes the ſervant of God, &c.] Not that in Deut. xxxii. 1. but that in Exod. xv. 1. and the ſenſe is, either that they obſerved the law of Moſes, which he as a ſervant in the Lord's houſe faithfully delivered, and kept it diſtinct from the Goſpel, and did not blend them together, as in the times before; or rather, that they ſung a ſong like that of Moſes, and on a like occaſion. Pharaoh was the very picture of the pope of Rome; his oppreſſion and cruel uſage of the Iſraelites repreſent the tyranny and cruelty of the Romiſh antichriſt; and the deliverance of Iſrael out of Egypt, and the deſtruction of the Egyptians at the red ſea, which occaſioned the ſong of Moſes, were an emblem of God's bringing his people out of antichriſtian bondage, and of the ruin of antichriſt, upon which this ſong is ſung; and Rome, in this book, is called Egypt, ch. xi. 8. The Jews have a notion, that the very ſong of Moſes itſelf will be ſung in the world to come, in the days of the Meſſiah; for they ſay, there are in it the times of the Meſſiah, and of Gog and Magog, and of the reſurrection of the dead, and the world to come [l]. And this ſong was ſung by the Levites in the daily ſervice[m]. And the ſong of the Lamb; the Lamb of God, who was ſlain for the ſins of men; the ſame ſong of which mention is made, ch. v. 9. and xiv. 3. the ſong of redeeming love, a ſong of praiſe for the bleſſings of grace which come thro' him, and of deliverance by him: ſaying, great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; Chriſt is in this ſong addreſſed as a divine perſon, as Lord of all, God over all, bleſſed for ever, the Almighty God, as his works declare him to be; his works of creation, providence, and redemption, which are all great and marvellous, particularly the accompliſhment of the glorious things ſpoken of his church, and the deſtruction of his enemies, which are here deſigned: juſt and true are thy ways thou king of ſaints; made ſo by his Father, and acknowledged by all his people, and eſpecially at this time when his kingdom will more viſibly and glorioufly appear: the Alexandrian copy, one of Stephens's, the Complutenſian edition, and Arabic verſion, read, king of nations, as in Jer. x. 7. from whence this, and the beginning of the next verſe, ſeem to be taken; the Vulgate Latin, and Syriac verſions, read, king of ages, an everlaſting king, as in Jer. x. 10. but the generality of copies read as we have it: and the ways of this king are juſt and true; his purpoſes, decrees, and counſels of old are faithfulneſs and truth; all his proceedings towards his own people, his ſubjects, are mercy and truth; his precepts and ordinances, his worſhip and ſervice, are juſt and true, in oppoſition to every falſe way; and all his judgments upon his enemies, which are intended, are juſt, being what their ſins deſerved, and are true, being agreeable to his word and threatnings.

Ver. 4. Who ſhall not fear thee, O Lord, &c.] At this time the people of the Jews ſhall ſeek after Chriſt, and fear him and his goodneſs; the forces of the Gentiles ſhall be brought into Zion, whoſe heart ſhall then fear, and be enlarged; the fear of the Lord will be in all places, and in all men, both Jews and Gentiles, Hoſ. iii. 5. Iſ. lx. 5. and glorify thy name? by aſcribing all divine perfections to him, giving him divine worſhip and adoration, and attributing the whole of ſalvation to him, and the glory of all that is done for his church, and againſt its enemies: for thou only art holy; not only perfectly holy, as man, but infinitely and eſſentially holy, as God, and the fountain of holineſs to his people, as mediator: this character ſeems to be given in oppoſition to antichriſt, who arrogantly aſſumes the title of holineſs to himſelf, when it only belongs to Chriſt. For all nations ſhall come and worſhip before thee; the Goſpel ſhall now be preached to all nations, and the earth ſhall be filled with the knowledge of it; the kingdoms of this world will become Chriſt's, and his kingdom ſhall be to the ends of the earth, and all people ſhall obey him: the words ſeem to be taken, with ſome other phraſes before uſed, out of Pſ. lxxxvi. 8, 9, 10. for thy judgments are made manifeſt; or thy juſtifications, or righteouſneſſes; the perfect righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and the doctrine of juſtification by it, will now be moſt clearly revealed, and generally received, in oppoſition to the popiſh doctrine of merits, works of ſupererogation, &c. or the judgments of the king of ſaints upon antichriſt, who will now avenge their blood, which he has ſhed; ſee ch. xvii. 1. and xix. 2. and the juſtice and righteouſneſs of his proceedings againſt the man of ſin will be notorious and manifeſt to all, and be acknowledged, as in ch. xvi. 5, 6. and xix. 1, 2.

Ver. 5. And after that I looked, &c.] That is, after John had ſeen the above viſion, he looked again, and ſaw what follows: and behold, the temple of the tabernacle of the teſtimony in heaven was opened; this does not refer to heaven itſelf, the antitype of the holy of holies, which is opened by the blood of Chriſt, by which he himſelf has entred, and his people have boldneſs to enter now by faith, and where their ſouls always enter upon their departure from their bodies; for of this temple can't be ſaid what is in ver. 8. nor to the Jeruſalem ſtate, or the moſt glorious ſtate of the church on earth, during the thouſand years reign; for in that there will be no temple, ch. xxi. 22. much leſs to any material temple on earth; the temple at Jeruſalem was deſtroyed before this viſion was, and is never to be rebuilt; nor will there be any third temple, as the Jews vainly expect: but to the church of God in the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt, under the blowing of the ſeventh trumpet; and deſigns the ſame thing as in ch. xi. 19. and this is to be underſtood as what will be, not before, but after the ſeven angels have poured out their vials; for till they have fulfilled the ſeven plagues, there is no entring into the temple for ſmoke, ver. 8. and beſides, it was after theſe things; after John had ſeen the ſeven angels, with the ſeven laſt plagues, ver. 1. that he beheld the temple opened. The church is called the temple, in alluſion to Solomon's temple, becauſe of its builder, materials, ſituation, magnificence, ſtrength, holineſs, and uſe; ſee the note on 2 Cor. vi. 16. and the tabernacle, in alluſion to the tabernacle of Moſes, which was before the temple, becauſe God dwells in it, as he did in that; and becauſe like that it is moveable, and but for a while; and points at this church-ſtate, which will not always be ſo, but change and ſink into the Laodicean ſtate: and it is called the tabernacle of the teſtimony, as that was; the teſtimony was the law, or the two tables of ſtone, ſo called, becauſe they teſtified what was the good, and perfect, and acceptable will of God; and theſe being put into the ark, were a teſtimony of the covenant between God and the people of Iſrael, and were a witneſs againſt them, when they tranſgreſſed them, Deut. xxxi. 26, 27. and over theſe were the mercy-ſeat, and cherubim, as a teſtimony of the divine preſence; and the law being put into the ark, hence the ark was called the ark of the teſtimony, and that being placed in the tabernacle, that was called the tabernacle of the teſtimony, or of witneſs, Numb. i. 50. Acts vii. 44. and all theſe were types of, and came to ſignify Chriſt, and the covenant of grace, the Goſpel, and the myſteries of it; ſo that by the opening of the temple, &c. is meant a free exerciſe of the true religion, a ſetting up of Goſpel churches according to the original plan, a keeping of the ordinances, as they were firſt delivered, and a more clear diſcovery of Goſpel truths: it is the ſame with the open door in the Philadelphian church-ſtate, ch. iii. 8. as well as that at this time there will be a full manifeſtation of the judgments of God upon antichriſt: the Alexandrian copy leaves out the word behold.

Ver. 6. And the ſeven angels came out of the temple, &c.] By which it appears, that they are ſuch who are of, or belong to the church of Chriſt; and are either miniſters, or members of churches, who will be the executioners of God's wrath, upon the beaſt, and his followers; ſome copies, and the Complutenſian edition, read, out of heaven: having the ſeven plagues; that is, they were appointed to inflict them, and were preparing and furniſhing for it, and quickly had orders to do it: clothed in pure and white linnen; in which habit angels have been uſed to appear, as at our Lord's reſurrection and aſcenſion, and is by ſome thought to be expreſſive of the purity and holineſs of angels; but rather ſaints are meant, who appear in the habit of prieſts, being all made kings and prieſts; and denotes their being clothed with the pure and ſpotleſs robe of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, which is fine linnen, clean and white, and the righteouſneſs of the ſaints, ch. xix. 8. and alſo their ſpiritual joy in their preſent ſituation, and in the view of the deſtruction of antichriſt, their ſackcloth being put off, in which they, the witneſſes, before appeared. So the linnen garment of the high-prieſt was, as Philo the Jew ſays[n], made of fine linnen, καθαρωτατος, moſt pure. The Alexandrian copy, and ſome copies of the Vulgate Latin verſion, and ſome exemplars mentioned by Andreas Cæſarienſis, an ancient commentator on this book, read, clothed with a ſtone, pure and white; as if they were arrayed in garments of ſtone, which is not likely; unleſs reference is had to the ſtone Aſbeſtos, of an iron colour, found, as Pliny ſays[o], in the mountains of Arcadia, of which linnen was made, called Aſbeſtinum, and of that garments; which were ſo far from being conſumed by fire, that they became clean and brighter by it; or to the Caryſtian ſtone, which the inhabitants of Caryſtus uſed to comb, ſpin, and weave, and make carpets of[p]. And having their breaſts girded with golden girdles; ſuch an one as Chriſt himſelf was girded with, ch. i. 13. and this ſome underſtand of the love, which the breaſts of angels are filled with towards the ſaints, and their readineſs to perform all good offices to them, and to execute the judgments of God upon their enemies, whenever they have orders: but ſince theſe angels come out of the temple, and members of Goſpel churches ſeem deſigned, rather this is to be underſtood either of the grace of faith, which is much more precious than of gold that periſheth, which receives the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, puts it on, and girds it about the believer; or of love, the love of God and Chriſt, which encompaſs the ſaints about, and conſtrain them, and engage them in fervent love to them, and one another; or of the girdle of truth, Eph. vi. 14. which is near and cloſe to them, and which keeps them cloſe to Chriſt; nor can they depart totally and finally from him, or that; or in general, this may denote their ſtrength and readineſs for what ſervice they ſhall be called to; ſee Luke xii. 35, 36. 1 Pet. i. 13.

Ver. 7. And one of the four beaſts, &c.] Or living creatures: now we hear of them, as of the four and twenty elders, under the blowing of the ſeventh trumpet, ch. xi. 16. with which this viſion is cotemporary; theſe living creatures are the miniſters of the Goſpel; ſee the note on ch. iv. 6. and this was one of the firſt of them, who was like a lion, for fortitude and courage, and whoſe voice was as the noiſe of thunder, ch. iv. 7. and vi. 1. and ſo fitly repreſents thoſe miniſters who ſhall give out the vials of God's wrath: not any particular perſon is deſigned, who ſhall be at this time; and much leſs Luke the Evangeliſt, as lord Napeir thinks; nor Peter, who propheſied of the laſt time, 2 Pet. iii. 10, 11. as Grotius; but a ſett of Goſpel miniſters, comparable to one of the living creatures John had before ſeen; of whom it is ſaid, that they gave unto the ſeven angels, ſeven golden vials full of the wrath of God, who liveth for ever and ever: theſe ſeven vials are for the ſeven laſt plagues to be put into, and out of which they are to be taken, or poured, and inflicted; ſee ch. xxi. 9. hence it appears, that the ſeven plagues, and the wrath of God, are the ſame thing, and both deſign God's judgments upon antichriſt; and theſe being expreſſed by vials, which are meaſures, and large ones, ſhew the large abundance, and plenteous effuſion of God's wrath, and the ſecret, ſudden, and irreſiſtible power of it; and yet that it will be poured out in meaſure, according to righteous judgment, and therefore it is put into vials; and theſe golden ones, expreſſive of the purity, holineſs, and juſtice of the divine proceedings: and it will be very terrible; it will be, not the wrath of men, but of God, and a cup of the fierceneſs of his wrath; it will be the wrath of the living God, of him that lives for ever, and as he is, ſuch will his wrath be; it will continue for ever, for this wrath will iſſue in the everlaſting deſtruction of antichriſt; ſo the wrath of God is ſignified by a wine-cup of fury, Jer. xxv. 15. and that deſtruction, and thoſe plagues which God deſigned to bring upon Pharaoh, are by Jonathan ben Uzziel, in his Targum on Gen. xl. 12. called, פיילא דרוגזא, a vial of wrath, which he ſhould drink of: and in the pouring out of theſe ſeven vials, there is in ſome of them a manifeſt alluſion to the plagues of Egypt. So the cup of trembling in Iſ. li. 17. is by the Targumiſts called, פילי, a vial, and alſo the cup of fury, ver. 22. and that theſe vials were not ſmall narrow-mouthed veſſels, but large broad-mouthed ones, and more properly baſons or bowls, is manifeſt from the uſe of the word with Jewiſh writers. The diſhes on which the loaves of the ſhew-bread were ſet, each of which loaves was ten hands breadth long, and five broad[q], are by the Targums of Jonathan and Jeruſalem on Exod. xxv. 29. Numb. iv. 7. called, פילות, vials; and ſo the chargers offered at the dedication of the tabernacle, Numb. vii. 13, 84, 85. are, by the ſame, rendered vials, which weighed 130 ſhekels; and ſo the ſilver bowl they offered, is, by Joſephus[r], called a vial: the bowls in Amos vi. 6. are, by the Targum there, ſaid to be ſilver vials. The lordly diſh brought by Jael to Siſera, Judg. v. 25. the Targum calls the vial of the mighty ones; and the earthen veſſels uſed at the trial of the ſuſpected wife, and at the cleanſing of the leper, are both by Jewiſh writers ſaid to be vials[s]. Now theſe vials were given to the ſeven angels by one of the living creatures, the miniſters of the word; from whence it ſeems that theſe angels deſign members of churches, as diſtinct from miniſters; and may intend civil magiſtrates, and very principal ones, as kings of the earth, who in this ſtate of things, and times, will belong to the churches, and will be the inſtruments of deſtroying antichriſt; and theſe vials may be ſaid to be given to them by the miniſters, ſince they will execute this vengeance in conſequence of their prayers, and the churches, called vials full of odours, ch. v. 8. and becauſe theſe great men will be ſtirred up by the miniſters of the Goſpel, and by their miniſtrations, to do this work; ſee ch. xviii. 4, 5, 6.

Ver. 8. And the temple was filled with ſmoke, &c.] Not with the ſmoke of falſe doctrine and ſuperſtition, that comes out of the bottomleſs pit, this from God, ch. ix. 1. and beſides, Goſpel churches will grow purer and purer, while the ſeven angels are pouring out the vials: but rather this may be underſtood of judicial blindneſs and hardneſs of heart, upon the antichriſtian party, which will come upon them from God in righteous judgment; ſo that they will not be reformed by the plagues, and vials of wrath, nor repent of their ſins; but blaſpheme God, who has power over the plagues, and ſo ſhall not be able to enter into the temple: or elſe this may deſign God's powerful and gracious preſence in his church, in alluſion to the cloud which filled the tabernacle, ſo that Moſes could not enter; and which filled the temple, ſo that the prieſts could not miniſter, Exod. xl. 34, 35. 1 Kings viii. 10, 11. ſince this is ſaid to be from the glory of God, and from his power; whoſe preſence is the glory in the midſt of his church, and a covert, a protection and defence to the ſaints, ſo that none can come in to the temple to hurt them; ſee Iſ. iv. 5, 6. or rather this intends the ſmoke of the anger of God, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it, and which is intolerable; and it may have reſpect not only to the wrath of God, which is inſupportable, but to that great affliction which will befal the ſaints in thoſe times, thro' the laſt ſtruggle of the beaſt; called the earthquake, and the hour of temptation, and a time of trouble, as never the like was, and which will be ſhortned for the elect ſake: and no man was able to enter into the temple till the ſeven plagues of the ſeven angels were fulfilled. None of the antichriſtian party will attempt to enter in, becauſe of their blindneſs and obduracy; nor can they get in to do any miſchief, becauſe the glorious and powerful preſence of God is a defence againſt them: and this may alſo have ſome reſpect to the darkneſs of God's judgments, which will not be clearly manifeſt, until theſe ſeven plagues are accompliſhed; till that time God's judgments on antichriſt will remain a great deep, and be unſearchable; there will be no entring into the temple, ſo as fully to underſtand them, which is meant by going into the ſanctuary of God, Pſ. lxxiii. 17. and this makes the interpretation of the pouring out of theſe vials, in the next chapter, very difficult.

CHAP. XVI.

THIS chapter gives an account of the pouring out of the ſeven vials by the angels; their orders for it are in ver. 1. The firſt angel pours out his vial on the earth, the effect of which is a noiſome and grievous ſore upon the followers of antichriſt, and the worſhippers of his image, ver. 2. The ſecond pours out his upon the ſea, the events of it are, the ſea became blood, and every living creature in it died, ver. 3. The third pours out his upon the rivers and fountains of water, which thereby became blood; upon which the angel of the waters applauds the juſtice of God, declaring the righteouſneſs of his judgments, and giving a reaſon for it; and which is confirmed by another angel from the altar, ver. 4, 5, 6, 7. The fourth angel pours out his vial on the ſun, the effects of which are ſcorching men with heat, their blaſphemy againſt God, and impenitence, ver. 8, 9. The fifth pours out his on the ſeat of the beaſt, the conſequences of which are darkneſs in his kingdom, men gnawing their tongues becauſe of their pains, their blaſphemy of the name of God becauſe of them, and their impenitence, ver. 10, 11. The ſixth angel pours out his on the river Euphrates, and what followed upon it are, the drying up of that river to make way for the kings of the eaſt; three unclean ſpirits are ſeen, deſcribed by their original, coming out of the mouths of the dragon, beaſt, and falſe prophet; by their form like frogs; by their internal nature, ſpirits of devils; by their works doing miracles; by the errand they are ſent, and go upon, to gather the kings of the earth to the battle of God Almighty, which they ſucceed in; but before this is done, a declaration is made of the ſuddenneſs of Chriſt's coming, exciting the ſaints to watchfulneſs, and to keep their garments, that they might not be naked, and expoſed to ſhame, ver. 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. Then the ſeventh angel pours out his vial into the air, the conſequences of which are, a voice from heaven declaring it is done; other voices, thundrings, lightnings, and an earthquake; a rupture of the great city into three parts; the fall of other cities; the remembrance of Babylon before God; the flight of every iſland and mountain, and a great hail ſtorm, which cauſes men to blaſpheme God, ver. 17, 18, 19, 20, 21.

Ver. 1. And I heard a great voice out of the temple, &c.] The church, which in the preceding chapter is ſaid to be opened; this was either the voice of God, whoſe temple the church is, and where he dwells, and who has power over theſe plagues, ver. 9. and who, when he is about to bring judgments on the earth, is ſaid to roar out of Zion, Joel iii. 16. or of Chriſt, who is always in the midſt of his church and people, and whoſe voice is as the voice of many waters; ſee ver. 15. or it may be of one of the four living creatures, the miniſters of the word, in and by whom Chriſt often ſpeaks; and the rather, ſince one of theſe gave the ſeven angels the golden vials of the wrath of God, they are now bid to pour out. Saying to the ſeven angels, go your ways and pour out the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth; for tho' theſe angels had the ſeven laſt plagues to inflict, and the ſeven vials of God's wrath to pour out, and were in a readineſs to do it, yet they did not move without an order, which is here given them; and they are bid to go their ways, from the temple, the church, where they were, and of which they were members, to the ſeveral parts of the antichriſtian empire; and there pour out all the wrath and vengeance of God upon his enemies, and theirs, and leave nothing behind, but give them the dregs of every cup of his fury: the earth here is to be taken in a larger ſenſe than in the following verſe, and includes the land and ſea, the fountains and rivers, and even the ambient air, and alſo the ſun in the firmament, as the pouring out of theſe vials upon them ſhew; and deſigns the whole apoſtate church, conſiſting of earthly men, all the inhabitants of the earth, that worſhip the beaſt.

The Alexandrian copy, the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions, and the Complutenſian edition, read, the ſeven vials of the wrath of God; theſe ſeven vials are not cotemporary, much leſs the ſame with the ſeven trumpets; there is indeed a likeneſs between them in ſome things, eſpecially in the firſt four; for as the firſt four trumpets affect the earth, the ſea, the fountains, and rivers of water, and the ſun, ſo the firſt four vials are poured out on the ſame, and that in the ſame order; firſt on the earth, and then on the ſea, &c. and which will give ſome light, and be a direction to obſerve the ſeveral parts of the antichriſtian empire, which will ſuffer by theſe vials, and the order in which their ruin will proceed; and as the trumpets were ſo many gradual ſteps to the ruin of the Roman empire, eaſtern and weſtern, when become chriſtian, ſo theſe vials are ſo many gradual ſteps to, and which iſſue in the ruin of both the eaſtern and weſtern antichriſt; tho' they don't reſpect the ſame things, nor the ſame times: the trumpets reſpect the Roman empire as chriſtian, under the government of emperors, after the downfal of paganiſm in it; and the vials reſpect the antichriſtian powers in their ſeveral branches, under the pope and Turk. Antichriſt did not appear until the fifth trumpet ſounded, whereas the firſt vial is poured out upon his followers and worſhippers, ver. 2. from whence it is a clear point, that the firſt trumpet, and the firſt vial, cannot be cotemporary; and the ſame judgment may be made of the reſt: and it may be further obſerved, that theſe vials are only poured out on the enemies of God and of Chriſt, and of his church and people; for no wrath can be poured out upon the ſaints, not the leaſt drop of it can fall upon them; this would not be conſiſtent with God's everlaſting love to them, with the ſatisfaction of Chriſt made for them, nor with the bleſſings of juſtification, pardon, adoption, &c. beſtowed on them; not but that they may meet with trouble in the time of theſe vials, thro' the wars that will be in the world, and thro' the ſtruggles of the beaſt of Rome, eſpecially its laſt, which will be the hour of temptation, and that time of trouble than which never was the like; yet all will work for, and iſſue in their good, and they will rejoice in God's righteous judgments; the blow will be upon antichriſt, the vengeance of God will fall upon thoſe that have the mark of the beaſt, and the worſhippers of his image, upon the ſeat of the beaſt, even upon Babylon, and the whole Romiſh juriſdiction, as appears from ver. 2, 10, 19, 20. and alſo upon the Turkiſh empire, and all the nations engaged in the intereſt of both Pope and Turk, ver. 12, 13, 14, 16. and it is eaſy to obſerve, that there is in many of theſe vials an alluſion to the plagues of Egypt; in the firſt, ver. 2. to the plague of boils, Exod. ix. 8, 11. in the ſecond and third, ver. 3, 4. to that of turning the waters of Egypt into blood, Exod. vii. 19—21. in the fourth, ver. 10. to the darkneſs that was over all the land of Egypt, Exod. x. 21, 23. and in the fifth there is a manifeſt reference to the frogs that diſtreſſed the Egyptians, Exod. viii. 5, 6. and in the ſeventh, to the plague of hail, Exod. ix. 23—26. and they have much the ſame effect, even the hardening of thoſe on whom they fall, being far from being brought to repentance by them, ver. 9, 11. and this confirms the application of the vials to the deſtruction of Rome, which is ſpiritually called Egypt, Rev. xi. 8. and may aſſure that they will iſſue in the ruin of antichriſt, and in the ſalvation of God's people, as the plagues of Egypt did in the deſtruction of Pharaoh, and in the deliverance of the children of Iſrael; and may alſo lead us to conclude, that there will be a like quick execution of the one, as of the other; for as the plagues of Egypt came very quick one after another, ſo it ſeems as if the pouring out of theſe vials would be in like manner; the angels receive them together, and have their orders at the ſame time; and they go forth immediately, one after another, if not together, to the reſpective parts where they are to pour them forth, and which they do directly; ſee ch. xviii. 8. Moreover, theſe vials will affect antichriſt both with reſpect to his civil and eccleſiaſtic capacity, or both in temporals and ſpirituals, and both antichriſts, eaſtern and weſtern: whether they are begun to be poured out or no, is a queſtion. I am ready to think they are not, becauſe they ſeem to me to refer to the ſeventh trumpet, which as yet has not ſounded, and are the ſame with the wrath of God, and the time of the judging the dead, or avenging the blood of the ſaints, which will be come when that ſounds, ch. xi. 18. Beſides, the outer court is not entirely given to the Gentiles, nor the witneſſes ſlain, which muſt be before this time of wrath upon antichriſt; not but that there has been ſome manifeſt marks of the divine diſpleaſure upon the whore of Rome, and ſhe has been ſinking ever ſince the reformation, at which time, ſome begin theſe vials, or before; and ſhe is reduced to a low eſtate; yet I think not to ſuch a degree as theſe vials expreſs.

Ver. 2. And the firſt went, &c.] The Arabic and Ethiopic verſions read, the firſt angel, and who undoubtedly is meant, who readily and chearfully obeyed the orders given him, as did the reſt; by this angel cannot be meant pope Adrian, as Lyra, a popiſh interpreter, imagines; for a pope would never hurt the worſhippers of the beaſt, as this angel does; rather ſome chriſtian proteſtant prince, or magiſtrate is deſigned, and Brightman applies it to queen Elizabeth; tho' a ſett of kings and princes, yet to come, ſeem to be intended: and poured out his vial upon the earth; not upon the whole earth, and the inhabitants of it; not upon the temple or church of God, and the worſhippers in it, which are meaſured, hid, and protected; nor upon the Roman pagan empire, which was deſtroyed under the ſixth ſeal, and which never had any worſhippers of the beaſt, and his image, in it, for then he was not riſen; nor upon the whole apoſtate church, only a part of it: ſome think the meaner and vulgar ſort of papiſts are meant, who were reformed by the Waldenſes, Wickliff, Huſs, and others before Luther; but rather the antichriſtian powers on the continent are deſigned, and particularly Germany; for as the firſt trumpet affected the earth, ch. viii. 7. and brought the Goths into Germany, and other inland countries on the continent; ſo this firſt vial affects the earth, and brings diſtreſs upon the popiſh party in the ſame place: and this reſpects not the reformation by Luther, as ſome have thought, nor the wars of the Turks here in the laſt age; tho' were it not for ſome things unfulfilled, which are to precede theſe vials, one would be tempted to think, that this vial was now pouring out upon the empire; but I rather think this refers to a time of diſtreſs yet to come, on thoſe parts, and which will iſſue in a reformation from popery again; for it ſhould be obſerved, and it may be obſerved once for all, that though theſe vials are ſo many plagues upon antichriſt, they are each of them ſo many ſteps to the advancement of Chriſt's kingdom and glory: and there fell a noiſome and grievous ſore upon the men which had the mark of the beaſt, and upon them which worſhipped his image; that is, who were profeſſors of the popiſh religion, and adherents of the pope of Rome in thoſe parts; ſee ch. xiii. 15, 16, 17. who will only feel the effects of this vial, and that by a noiſome and grievous ſore falling on them, in alluſion to the plague of boils in Egypt, Exod. ix. 8—11. by which may be meant, either literally ſomething external, but not the plague in Diocleſian's time, for then the beaſt was not riſen; and there were none that could have his mark or worſhip his image: ſome have thought the French diſeaſe is intended, which firſt appeared in the world in 1490, among the papiſts, as a juſt judgment upon them, for the horrible and unnatural luſts and uncleanneſs of the Romiſh clergy; and others underſtand it of a very great heat, which will be before the burning of the world, and will raiſe bliſters and boils upon men: or rather this may deſign ſomething internal, either the remorſe of their conſciences, reflections on their paſt practices, and black deſpair and horror of mind; and their madneſs, wrath, and fury, their malice and envy at the ſucceſs of the preachers of the Goſpel, and of proteſtant ſtates and princes againſt them; ſee Deut. xxviii. 27, 28, 34, 35. Moreover, their ſecret and wicked practices, both in political and eccleſiaſtical affairs, will be diſcovered, and they will appear with boils and botches upon them all over, which will render them odious to the people, and be the means of a general reformation. Mr. Daubuz thinks the curſe of wickedneſs in the ninth and tenth centuries, after the invocation of ſaints and angels, and the worſhip of images were ſettled, is meant.

Ver. 3. And the ſecond angel poured out his vial upon the ſea, &c.] Not literally; and ſo does not deſign the ſtagnation of it, which 'tis thought will be before the general conflagration; ſee Amos vii. 4. nor is it to be underſtood of the ſea of this world, and the men of it, who are like a troubled ſea; but rather of popiſh doctrines and councils, which are a ſea of errors, and will now be confuted, and put an end to. Brightman applies it to the council of Trent, and makes this angel to be Chemnitius, a German divine, who wrote a confutation of it; but as the ſea is a collection of many waters, and many waters in this book ſignify the people and nations under the Romiſh yoke, ſea here may deſign the whole juriſdiction of Rome, or myſtical Babylon; ſee Jer. li. 36. and particularly its maritime powers, Spain and Portugal: and as the ſecond trumpet affected the ſea, ch. viii. 8. and brought the Vandals into Spain and Portugal, ſo this ſecond vial affects the ſea, and brings great wars, ſlaughter, and bloodſhed into theſe parts, when they alſo will be reformed from popery: and it became, as the blood of a dead man; thick, clotted together, and putrid, and ſo never to be returned to their former ſtate: and every living ſoul died in the ſea; thoſe that are not reformed will either die by the ſword, or fly into other parts; for there will be no comfortable living for the popiſh party in thoſe countries where now they live in power, eaſe, and affluence. This, and the following vial, are referred by Mr. Daubuz, the one to the firſt cruſades, or holy wars, for the regaining of the holy land, and the other to the latter of them.

Ver. 4. And the third angel poured his vial upon the rivers and fountains of waters, &c.] Which alſo is not to be literally underſtood of a ſtagnation of them, before the burning of the world; nor of the deſtruction of popiſh fleets and navies, ſuch as the Spaniſh Armado in 1588, and others ſince; but rather of popiſh writings, of the moſt learned and ſubtle men among them, who like rivers and fountains, which ſupply and fill the ſea, ſupport and keep up the Romiſh juriſdiction and hierarchy; and of the confutation of them by proteſtant writers; and of the utter deſtruction of their principal orders, and chief men among them, as cardinals, archbiſhops, biſhops, prieſts, jeſuits, &c. tho' it ſeems chiefly to deſign the places near to Rome, ſuch as Italy and Savoy; for as the third trumpet affects the rivers and fountains, ch. viii. 10. and brings in the Huns into Italy, and iſſued in the deſtruction of the empire; ſo the third vial affects the ſame, and brings terrible wars, and great effuſion of blood, where ſo much of the blood of the ſaints have been ſhed: hence it follows, and they became blood; theſe countries will be covered with blood, and a reformation will enſue upon it; the alluſion is to Exod. vii. 19, 20, 21.

Ver. 5. And I heard the angel of the waters ſay, &c.] So we read in Jewiſh writings [t] of an angel that was, שרא דימא, the prince of the ſea, and of angels that were over the waters, and others over fire [u]; though here is deſigned not one of the, מלאכי מים, angels of the water, that preſided over the waters, as another over fire; ſee ch. xiv. 18. and the note there, but the third angel that poured out his vial upon the waters; when he had ſo done, he ſaid as follows. Dr. Lightfoot thinks, and that not without reaſon, that ſince theſe angels appeared in the garb of prieſts, ch. xv. 6. and ſince there was a prieſt appointed to take care of the wells, and fountains, and ditches about Jeruſalem, that the people might have water at the feaſts [w], there is an alluſion to him; and certain it is that there was ſuch an officer; there was one Nechoniah who was over the fountains and ditches [x]; and in the ſame office was Nicodemon ben Gorion [y], thought to be the Nicodemus mentioned in the New Teſtament. Thou art righteous, O Lord, which art, and waſt, and ſhalt be; which may be underſtood either of God the Father, who had power over theſe plagues, ver. 9. and ſent them; or of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is Lord of all, and is righteous in all his ways and works, in all his judgments on antichriſt, and is the eternal I AM, which is, and was, and ſhall be; ſee ch. i. 8. The Alexandrian copy, and moſt others, and the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions, read holy inſtead of ſhalt be; for the purity and holineſs of Chriſt will be ſeen in the judgments which he will exerciſe, as follows: becauſe thou haſt judged thus; or theſe things; or them, as the Ethiopic verſion reads; that is, has brought theſe judgments upon the men ſignified by rivers and fountains, and made great havock and ſlaughter of them, expreſſed by their becoming blood; the juſtice of which appears from the following reaſon.

Ver. 6. For they have ſhed the blood of ſaints and prophets, &c.] Which ſhows that rivers and fountains can't be literally underſtood, but men are deſigned, wicked and bloody men; and it is notorious to all, how much of the blood of the ſaints, of the preachers of the Goſpel, of the prophets and witneſſes, have been ſhed in Italy, Savoy, and other places near Rome, as well as in Rome itſelf; ſee ch. xvii. 6. and xviii. 24. And thou haſt given them blood to drink; ſent the ſword among them, making great ſlaughter and devaſtation; ſee Iſ. xlix. 26. for they are worthy; or deſerving, to have their blood ſhed, by the law of retaliation.

Ver. 7. And I heard another out of the altar ſay, &c.] That is, another angel that came out of the altar; ſee ch. xiv. 18. and who repreſents the ſouls under the altar, whoſe blood had been ſhed by the above perſons; compare with this ch. vi. 9. tho' there, ſuch whoſe blood had been ſhed by Rome pagan are deſcribed; the Ethiopic verſion calls this angel as before, the angel of the fountains of water; and the Alexandrian copy, and Syriac and Arabic verſions read, I heard the altar ſaying; as follows, even ſo Lord God Almighty, true and righteous are thy judgments; the ſame as in ch. xv. 3. and xix. 2. This angel joins the other, and approves and confirms what he ſays; applauding the judgments of Chriſt upon the worſhippers of the beaſt, from the verity of them, being what were threatned, and from the juſtice of them, being what they deſerved.

Ver. 8. And the fourth angel poured out his vial upon the ſun, &c.] Not literally; and ſo deſigns not a violent heat, which ſhall go before, and be a preparation for the burning of the world; nor any ſore famine ariſing from it, which would be common to all, good and bad; but myſtically: ſome underſtand this of Chriſt, the ſun of righteouſneſs, not of any wrath that ſhall be poured forth on him again, being now juſtified in the Spirit; but either of that clear ſhining of Chriſt in the miniſtry of the word, in thoſe times, this vial refers to; when Zion's light will be come, and the light of the ſun will be ſeven fold, and Chriſt alone will be exalted; which clear miniſtration of Chriſt, tho' it will not ſavingly enlighten, yet will convict and confound the antichriſtian party; they will be ſcorched with the beams of heat and light, which will dart from hence; theſe will torture them, and fill them with envy, rage, and malice, becauſe they will not be able to obſcure this light, or ſtop the progreſs of it; they themſelves will be ſo enlightned by it, as to ſee and know the truth of Chriſt's perſon, and offices, and grace, and yet will ſin againſt it, and ſo be guilty of blaſphemy againſt the Spirit of God, a ſin which will greatly prevail among them; and they will, like the clay, be the more hardned by this light and heat, and will not repent of their ſins, and errors, nor confeſs them, nor own the light and conviction they have received: or elſe of the wrath of Chriſt, which he will be moved by this angel to ſtir up againſt the antichriſtian party, and which they will be ſenſible of, and be fearfully looking for. Others, and which comes much to the ſame ſenſe, underſtand this of the ſcriptures, the fountain of ſpiritual light, and of the clear interpretation of them in thoſe times; when the watchmen ſhall ſee eye to eye, and when the day ſhall declare and make manifeſt every man's work, and the fire reveal and try it; and the ſame effects upon the antichriſtian party ſhall follow as before: but I rather think this refers to ſome part of the antichriſtian ſtate, as in the other vials, or to ſomething belonging to it; ſome have thought that the houſe of Auſtria, the chief family in the empire, or the king of Spain, or the emperor, who were both formerly of that houſe, or Germany itſelf, is meant; but the empire, as we have ſeen, ſeems to be deſigned by the earth in the firſt vial; wherefore, rather as the ſmiting of the third part of the ſun, moon, and ſtars, under the fourth trumpet, ſignifies the utter extirpation of the Roman emperor, and all other Roman magiſtrates, who were the ſun, moon, and ſtars in that empire; ſo this vial upon the ſun refers to the pope, and his creatures, the cardinals, &c. who is the ſun in the antichriſtian kingdom; and this angel may deſign the kings of the earth, who will be ſtirred up againſt him, by whom he and his dependents will ſuffer ſorely, if not deſtroyed. And power was given unto him to ſcorch men with fire; which may either reſpect the burning of Rome, and the adjacent parts; or rather the filling of the antichriſtian party with rage and malice, at the deſtruction of the pope, and his creatures; for theſe men are the ſame with thoſe in ver. 2.

Ver. 9. And men were ſcorched with great heat, &c.] Burned with rage againſt the followers of Chriſt; were filled with envy at the ſucceſs of his Goſpel, and with fury and madneſs at the ruinous condition of the antichriſtian ſtate, being deprived of its head, and chief officers: and blaſphemed the name of God, which hath power over theſe plagues; plagues or judgments are from God, when and where-ever they come; they are ſent and inflicted by him, and he can leſſen or increaſe them, continue or remove them as he pleaſes; and theſe, unleſs ſanctified, will not reform men, but harden them, and ſet them a blaſpheming the author of them. And this blaſphemy may either reſpect the nature and perfections of God, charging him with inequality in his ways, and with injuſtice and unfaithfulneſs; or the Goſpel, and the truths of it, which declare his glory, and his greatneſs; and which will now have a general ſpread, to the great mortification and confuſion of the followers of antichriſt: and they repented not to give him glory; that is, they did not repent of their wicked deeds, their idolatries, murders, ſorceries, fornications, and thefts, as in ch. ix. 20, 21. ſo as to own and confeſs them, which is the meaning of giving glory to God in repentance; ſee Joſh. vii. 19. This ſhows that repentance is not in man's power, but in the gift of God's grace; for tho' he may give ſpace, yet if he does not give grace to repent, no man will repent; nor will any means of themſelves produce it; as not the moſt powerful and awakening miniſtry, as the miniſtry of John the Baptiſt, and of Chriſt, and of the Goſpel preachers that will be in thoſe times, this vial refers to, nor the greateſt mercies and favours, ſo not the ſevereſt judgments; ſee Amos vi. 6—11. The event of this vial, or the plague of it, is applied, by Mr. Daubuz, to the wars between the emperors and the popes, and between the Guelphs and Gibelines.

Ver. 10. And the fifth angel poured out his vial upon the ſeat of the beaſt, &c.] The beaſt is the ſame with that in ch. xiii. 1, 11. and which again ſhows that to be one and the ſame: the ſeat or throne of the beaſt is Rome, which, when the empire was pagan, was the ſeat of ſatan, or the dragon, ch. ii. 13. and when the beaſt or antichriſt was riſen, the dragon gave this ſeat, as well as his authority, to him, ch. xiii. 2. and is that city which is ſo often called, in this book, the great city, and is manifeſtly pointed out by its ſeven mountains, on which the city of Rome ſtood, ch. xvii. 9. and the pouring out of this vial upon it denotes the deſtruction of it, when it will be burnt down, and become deſolate, an habitation of devils, of every foul ſpirit, and hateful bird, ch. xviii. 2, 9. and this correſponds with the fifth trumpet; for as that brings in the riſe of antichriſt, both eaſtern and weſtern, who roſe much about the ſame time, ſo this vial affects him particularly, the weſtern antichriſt, his ſeat and kingdom. Mr. Daubuz refers this plague to the expulſion of the weſtern and eaſtern emperors from their capital cities, Rome and Conſtantinople, and to the miſchiefs cauſed by the antipopes in the weſt, and to the quarrels and ſchiſm in the Greek churches in the fourteenth century. And his kingdom was full of darkneſs; not only of the darkneſs of falſe doctrine and ſuperſtition, for ſo it was always, being filled with the ſmoke of the bottomleſs pit; nor only of judicial blindneſs and darkneſs, which the ſubjects of the antichriſtian ſtate are given up unto; but rather of a diſcovery of all this, with all their hidden works of darkneſs, which will now be brought to light; tho' it ſeems chiefly to deſign the great affliction and diſtreſs the antichriſtian ſtate will be in at this time, which darkneſs ſometimes ſignifies; ſee Iſ. ix. 1, 2. Jer. xiii. 16. Amos v. 18. it having loſt its ſun, the pope, under the preceding vial, and its ſeat, the city of Rome under this: the ſenſe is, that it will be greatly obſcured in its glory and magnificence, in its traffick and riches, ch. xviii. 11—19. its power and authority will be greatly diminiſhed, and it will be had in contempt by the princes of the earth; tho' it will not as yet be utterly deſtroyed, for its utter deſtruction is reſerved for the ſeventh and laſt vial. The alluſion is to the plague of darkneſs in Egypt, Exod. x. 21, 22, 23. And they gnawed their tongues for pain; theſe are the men of the antichriſtian party, the ſubjects of the antichriſtian kingdom, now become full of darkneſs, the worſhippers of the beaſt, and his image; theſe will gnaw their tongues, which expreſſes their inward anguiſh and diſtreſs, their anger, wrath, and fury, their being filled with revenge, and yet in an incapacity to execute it, and will even be afraid to expreſs it; and therefore will bite their tongues in madneſs; and this for pain, for the pain of their mind, at the ſad and low eſtate of the antichriſtian kingdom.

Ver. 11. And blaſphemed the God of heaven, &c.] Who made it, and dwells in it, and from whence wrath is revealed, and comes upon the ſeat of the beaſt, upon the kingdom of antichriſt, and the ſubjects of that kingdom; they'll curſe him who is of right their king, and their God, and look upwards to heaven, where he is, Iſ. viii. 21, 22. and this, becauſe of their pains and their ſores; ſee ver. 2. the inward frettings and diſtreſſes of their minds, the gallings and gnawings of their conſciences, the horror and terror of their ſouls, and their fearful looking for of judgment, which the preſent face of things upon antichriſt will bring upon them; juſt as the Egyptians, in the time of their darkneſs, were diſtreſſed with internal guilt, and black horror of mind, and with evil ſpirits, which were ſent among them, and haunted them during that ſeaſon; ſee Pſ. lxxviii. 49. and repented not of their deeds; their antichriſtian works of darkneſs; ſee ch. ix. 20, 21.

Ver. 12. And the ſixth angel poured his vial on the great river Euphrates, &c.] Which is not to be underſtood literally of the river Euphrates, which ran through Meſopotamia and Chaldea, and by the walls of Babylon; and of the drying of it up to make way for the Jews in the eaſtern parts of the world, to paſs into their own land, and poſſeſs it; when a like miracle will be wrought for them as was when they came out of Egypt, by dividing the red ſea for them; and as when they entred into Canaan's land, by laying the waters of Jordan on heaps, ſo that they paſſed over as on dry land; in favour of which ſenſe the paſſage in Iſ. xi. 15, 16. is thought to be, which the Targum interprets of God's ſmiting the river Euphrates; tho' the river Nile in Egypt ſeems rather to be meant: but it does not appear that there is any number of Jews beyond the river Euphrates; the far greater number of them is in the weſtern and northern parts of the world; ſo that there will be no need for the drying up of this river for their paſſage into their own land; nor if there were any in thoſe parts, can any reaſon be given why they ſhould be called the kings of the eaſt, who, where-ever they are, are a poor contemptible people, and have never had any enſigns of royalty among them for many hundreds of years; nor can that river be thought much to hinder, were all other impediments out of the way, nor the drying of it up much facilitate their paſſage to Judea, and much leſs affect their converſion: beſides, this vial, as the reſt, is a plague on antichriſt in ſome branch or other, or on ſome part or other of the antichriſtian ſtate; which if not deſigned here, is no where in the account of this vial, and therefore this muſt be underſtood myſtically; there is no doubt an alluſion to the draining of this river at the taking of Babylon by Cyrus, according as was predicted in prophecy, Iſ. xliv. 27, 28. Jer. l. 38. and li. 31, 32, 36, 37. who making ſluices and drains, turned the river another way, and marched thro' it with his army, and ſurprized and took the city at once, whilſt Belſhazzar and his nobles were indulging themſelves in rioting and drunkenneſs, as Daniel relates, ch. v. 1, 2—30. Now ſome, becauſe that Babylon was ſituated upon the river Euphrates, and Rome, or the Romiſh antichriſt is myſtical Babylon, think that is here deſigned, and is the object of this vial; and that the drying up of this river deſigns the withdrawing of nations and kingdoms, ſignified by waters, ch. xvii. 15. from its juriſdiction and power, which will bring on its ruin; and alſo the ſtoppage of dues and tithes, annates, Peter's pence, and of all its traffick in indulgences, pardons, &c. whereby it will be greatly impoveriſhed, and brought to nothing: but it ſhould be obſerved, that the fifth vial affects Rome, the ſeat of the beaſt; and as for the beaſt himſelf, he will not be deſtroyed till the battle of Armageddon; and myſtical Babylon, or the antichriſtian ſtate, in the whole compaſs of it, will not be deſtroyed until the pouring out of the ſeventh vial; wherefore rather the eaſtern antichriſt, the Turks, are meant, in whoſe dominions this river is; for as the Aſſyrian monarch is ſignified by the waters of this river, when he was in his glory, and had his ſeat at Babylon, by which this river ran, Iſ. viii. 7, 8. ſo may the Turks, who inhabit by this river, be intended by it; and the rather, as this ſenſe exactly correſponds with the ſixth trumpet; for as the ſounding of that trumpet looſes the four angels bound in the great river Euphrates, which founded the Turkiſh empire, as we have ſeen; ſo the pouring out of this ſixth vial affects the ſame empire, and brings it to ruin. Mr. Daubuz is of opinion, that this plague refers to the depopulation and deſtruction of the Grecian empire, and the bringing of the Turks into Europe, who have greatly diſtreſſed and tormented the corrupted chriſtians or papiſts. And the water thereof was dried up; the Ottoman empire will be extinct, juſt as the deſtruction of the Babyloniſh monarchy is expreſſed by the drying up of its ſea, Jer. li. 36. ſo the deſtruction of the Turkiſh empire is ſignified by the drying up of the water of this river, which is in the heart of it: and this is the paſſing away of the ſecond wo, ch. xi. 14. that the way of the kings of the eaſt might be prepared; which ſome underſtand of chriſtians in general, who are made kings and prieſts unto God, and of chriſtian kings in particular, whoſe way will be prepared by the declining ſtate of antichriſt, to expreſs their hatred to the whore of Rome, and burn her fleſh with fire; but the Romiſh antichriſt is not here intended: others think, as before obſerved, that the Jews are deſigned; that the Jews will be converted in the laſt days, ſeems manifeſt from Hoſ. iii. 5. Rom. xi. 25, 26. and other places; and that they will return to their own land is ſuggeſted in abundance of prophecies, particularly in Ezek. xxxvii. 21. and Amos ix. 14, 15. and it muſt be allowed that the eaſtern, as well as the weſtern antichriſt, is a ſtumbling to them; and eſpecially the advantage which the Turks have gained over the powers that go under the chriſtian name, and their poſſeſſion of their land is an hindrance to their return to it; ſo that the deſtruction of the Turkiſh empire will undoubtedly make way for their converſion, and reſtoration to their own land; but then this will be equally advantageous to the Jews in the weſt as to thoſe in the eaſt, if there be any numbers of them there, which does not appear, and therefore there ſeems no reaſon why they ſhould be pointed at, and be called the kings of the eaſt: rather therefore to me it ſeems, that thro' the fall of the Ottoman empire, way will be made for the kings and princes of the eaſt, literally underſtood, to have and embrace the Goſpel of Chriſt; for the Turks being deſtroyed, the Mahometan religion will decline, the Goſpel will be carried into the eaſtern parts of the world, into thoſe vaſt kingdoms and countries which lie in thoſe parts, when they will become the kingdoms of our Lord, and the kings and princes of them will come to the brightneſs of Zion's riſing; ſo that the ruin of this monarchy will pave the way for the ſpread of Chriſt's kingdom from ſea to ſea, and from the river, the river Euphrates, to the ends of the earth; and this alſo will prepare the way, and lead on for all the ſaints, who are kings, and ſhall reign with Chriſt a thouſand years, who is ſaid to come from the eaſt, ch. vii. 2. or from the riſing of the ſun, as theſe are ſaid to do, as the words may be rendred, to poſſeſs the kingdom under the whole heaven: Philo the Jew [z] has ſome expreſſions illuſtrating the literal ſenſe of this, where he ſpeaks of a Roman army on the banks of Euphrates, which kept the paſſage of the eaſtern kings.

Ver. 13. And I ſaw three unclean ſpirits like frogs, &c.] Rome, the ſeat of antichriſt, being deſtroyed, and the kingdom of the beaſt darkened, and brought into great contempt, Mahometaniſm greatly declining, the Goſpel ſucceeding every where, the Jews being converted, and re-ſettled in their own land, the devil beſtirs himſelf more than ordinary; and diſpatches his, and the emiſſaries of antichriſt, to the kings of the whole earth, that can any ways be engaged on their ſide, and againſt the ſaints; and theſe are no other than the creatures of antichriſt, ſuch as cardinals, prieſts, and particularly jeſuits, as their original from the dragon, the beaſt, and the falſe prophet ſhow. Mr. Daubuz thinks theſe three are the monks, the religious knights, and ſecular clergy: and theſe are called ſpirits; not becauſe they are what are called familiar ſpirits, or devils themſelves, for they are the ſpirits of devils, as in the next verſe; but either becauſe they pretend to be ſpiritual men, eccleſiaſticks, men in ſpiritual offices, and indeed are ſpiritual wickedneſſes in high places; or becauſe of their agility, ſwiftneſs, and expeditiouſneſs in going to and fro, ſatan like, to do miſchief: and they are ſaid to be unclean; as the evil ſpirits and devils are, being ſo by nature, and delighting in uncleanneſs, and giving themſelves up to work it with greedineſs: and they are like frogs; the alluſion is to the plague of frogs in Egypt, Exod. viii. 5, 6. and theſe antichriſtian emiſſaries are fitly compared to them, for their impurity, and pleaſure they take in it, as frogs do in dirt and filth; and for their being talkative, impudent, and troubleſome, like the noiſy, croaking frogs; ſo rhetoricians are by Cicero [a] compared to frogs; and as the frogs of Egypt got into the king's bed-chamber, Exod. viii. 3. Pſ. cv. 30. ſo theſe get into the private retirements of princes, into their cabinet-councils, and ſtir them up to war and blood-ſhed: and as for the number, three, this is only uſed to expreſs a ſufficient number of them, or to make the account ſquare with the dragon, beaſt, and falſe prophet, from whom they proceed; and beſides, this is omitted in the king's manuſcript. Now John ſaw theſe, in a viſionary way, come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beaſt, and out of the mouth of the falſe prophet; by the dragon is meant the devil, ch. xii. 9. not as acting in Rome pagan, which has been long ago deſtroyed, rather as in the pagan parts of the world, and as in the Turkiſh empire, now ruined; who ſeeing his cauſe declining every where, beſtirs himſelf to ſupport and revive it, tho' this iſſues in the binding of him for a thouſand years, ch. xx. 2. By the beaſt is meant the firſt beaſt, in ch. xiii. 1. and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it; the antichriſtian civil ſtate, now ſadly ſhattered and weakened, by the pouring out of the fifth vial: and by the falſe prophet is meant, not Mahomet, or the ſupporters of his religion, but the ſecond beaſt in ch. xiii. 11, 12, 14, 15. or the antichriſtian eccleſiaſtic ſtate, as appears from the deſcription of this prophet in ch. xix. 20. compared with that: ſo then theſe ſpirits manifeſtly appear to be the emiſſaries of antichriſt, under a diabolical influence; his creatures, that are made, and ſent forth by him, have their commiſſions and orders from him, to act for him in every ſhape, to ſupport his intereſt, civil and religious, by lyes, murders, and falſe doctrine; a further account is given of them in the next verſe.

Ver. 14. For they are the ſpirits of devils, &c.] They are of their father the devil; they are acted and influenced by him; he works effectually in them, and leads them captive at his will; they do his luſts, and are murderers and liars, and falſe teachers, like him: working miracles; lying ones, to deceive men; this clearly points out who are meant, namely the followers of antichriſt, who as they ſpread the doctrines of devils, endeavour to confirm them by ſigns and lying wonders: which go forth unto the kings of the earth; thoſe who have committed fornication with the Romiſh antichriſt, ſuch of them as will remain: and of the whole world; as many pagan princes as they can come at, and engage by any ways and means in their intereſt; they will go forth to them like the lying ſpirit to Ahab's prophets, 1 Kings xxii. 22. to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty; that is, they will perſuade them to gather together, to fight againſt the ſaints, the Gentile chriſtians in the ſeveral parts of the world, and the Jewiſh chriſtians, now ſettled in their own land; and this will be the battle of the Lord, who is God Almighty, and it will be fighting againſt him; and therefore the attempt muſt be vain and fruitleſs, and iſſue in the ruin of thoſe who are gathered to it, who will be deceived and drawn into it by theſe diabolical ſpirits: and this is called the battle of that great day of God; not of the day of judgment, for it will be before that time; but of that day of vengeance upon all the remains of his and his church's enemies, both pagan, papal, and Mahometan, Mahometan, who will for this purpoſe be gathered together; which, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it, God has appointed.

Ver. 15. Behold I come as a thief, &c.] Theſe are the words of Chriſt, inſerted in a parentheſis in this account, before it is concluded, to acquaint his people with his near and ſudden approach, and to give them a word of caution and exhortation in theſe times of difficulty; for he is the Lord God Almighty, who ſent forth theſe angels to pour out their vials, and whoſe judgments are applauded as righteous, ver. 1, 5, 7, 14. and who ſo often in ch. xxii. 7, 12, 20. ſays I come quickly; and which is to be underſtood not of his ſpiritual coming, which will be already at this time, but of his perſonal coming: and which will be as a thief; as it is often expreſſed, 1 Theſſ. v. 2. 2 Pet. iii. 10. Rev. iii. 3. not in the bad ſenſe, to ſteal and kill, and to deſtroy, tho' Chriſt's coming will iſſue in the everlaſting deſtruction of the wicked; but the phraſe is deſigned to expreſs the ſuddenneſs of his coming, and the ſurprize of it: bleſſed is he that watcheth; againſt ſin, the luſts of the fleſh, and the cares of this life, leſt they bring a ſleepineſs upon him, and ſo the day of the Lord come upon him at an unawares; and againſt ſatan and his temptations, who goes about ſeeking whom he may devour; and againſt his emiſſaries and falſe teachers, who lie in wait to deceive; and bleſſed is he alſo who is wiſhing and waiting for the coming of Chriſt, and ſo being ready, will enter with him into the marriage-chamber, and partake of the ſupper of the Lamb: and keepeth his garments; either his converſation-garments, unſpotted from the world, and whenever defiled waſhes them, and makes them white in the blood of the Lamb; and keeps them from being ſtripped of them, by thoſe who would lead them into ſinful ways; or that keeps and holds faſt the robe of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, and garments of his ſalvation, which are the righteouſneſs of the ſaints, that fine linnen clean and white, that white raiment which only can cover their nakedneſs, that the ſhame thereof does not appear, ch. xix. 8. and iii. 18. leſt he walk naked; ערום מן המצות [b], naked of the commandments, or good works, according to the Jewiſh phraſe; having loſt, or dropped his converſation-garments: and they ſee his ſhame; or leſt being naked, he be expoſed to ſhame and confuſion, yea, to everlaſting ruin and deſtruction; ſee Mat. xxii. 12, 13. the alluſion is to the burning of the garments of thoſe prieſts who were found aſleep when upon their watch in the temple: the account that is given is this [c]; "the man of the mountain "of the houſe (the governor of the temple) goes "round all the wards (every night) with burning "torches before him; and in every ward where the "perſon does not ſtand upon his feet, the man of "the mountain of the houſe ſays to him, peace be "to thee; if he finds he is aſleep, he ſtrikes him with "his ſtaff, and he has power to burn his cloaths; and "they ſay (in Jeruſalem) what voice is that in the court? "(it is anſwered) the voice of a Levite beaten, and "his cloaths burnt, becauſe he ſlept in the time of "his watch; R. Eliezer ben Jacob ſays, once they "found my mother's brother aſleep, and they burnt "his clothes:" now imagine with what ſhame the poor Levite ſo ſerved muſt appear the next morning among his brethren, with his cloaths burnt, and he naked; and with greater ſhame and confuſion muſt he appear at the laſt day, that is deſtitute of the righteouſneſs of Chriſt.

Ver. 16. And he gathered them together, &c.] Or rather they gathered them together, as the Syriac verſion renders it; for tho' the verb is ſingular, a noun plural goes before it, as in ver. 14. and the ſame ſpirits that are there ſaid to go forth, to gather the kings together, theſe will gather them together; will perſuade the papal, pagan, and Mahometan powers, the remains of them in the ſeveral parts of the world, to join together, and make one effort for the reviving of their declining, and almoſt ruined intereſts: for which purpoſe they will be brought together, into a place called in the Hebrew tongue Armageddon; which may be the ſame with Har-megiddo, the mountain of Megiddo; for the Hebrew word הר, is read Ar by the Greeks; ſo the city Argarize is interpreted the mountain of the moſt high [d]: and this refers either to the ſlaying of Joſiah in the valley of Megiddo, which occaſioned ſuch mourning, that it became proverbial for any great ſorrow; ſee 2 Chron. xxxv. 22, 25. Zech. xii. 11. where it is called the valley of Megiddon; or rather to the ſlaughter of Siſera's army at the waters of Megiddo, by Barak, Judg. v. 19. ſuggeſting that the ſame would be the fate of theſe united powers. Some derive the word from גרהון and חרמא, which ſignify the deſtruction of their troops, or armies; and ſo deſigns not any place, that has been or is, but which will be ſo called from the iſſue of this battle; and ſince it is an Hebrew name that will be given it, it may lead us to conclude it will be ſome-where in Judea, and very likely no other than the valley of Jehoſhaphat, where all nations will be gathered; and which is called the valley of deciſion, where will be the day of the Lord, and multitudes will be ſlain, Joel iii. 2, 13, 14. tho' the name will ſuit any place where there will be a defeat of theſe enemies; but this vial only brings them together; the utter deſtruction of them is reſerved for the next.

Ver. 17. And the ſeventh angel poured out his vial into the air, &c.] Or upon the air, as the Alexandrian copy, Syriac and Arabic verſions read; by which is meant the kingdom of ſatan, he being the prince of the power of the air, Eph. ii. 2. not that he has power over the air, to raiſe or lay winds and ſtorms in it at pleaſure; but he is ſo called becauſe he is the prince of that poſſe of devils, the principalities and powers of darkneſs, that have their dwelling in the air; hence the air, encompaſſing the whole earth, ſtands for the kingdom of ſatan all the world over: and this vial differs from all the reſt; that whereas the reſt only affect ſome part or branch of the antichriſtian ſtate, this will affect all the remains of the pagan, papal, and Mahometan powers, gathered and united together at Armageddon; and the pouring out of this vial is the execution of divine wrath and vengeance upon them all at once; and the effects of this vial will not only reach to the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, and their armies, or the united forces of the remains of pagans, Papiſts, and Mahometans, who will be ſlain, and their fleſh given to the fowls of the air; and not only to the beaſt and falſe prophet, who will be taken in this battle, and caſt alive into the lake of fire, which is expreſſive both of their temporal and eternal puniſhment, ch. xix. 17—21. but to the binding of ſatan upon the ſecond coming of Chriſt, of which notice is before given, ver. 15. and even to the deſtruction of Gog and Magog at the end of the thouſand years reign; yea, to the caſting of the devil into everlaſting fire, ſince this vial is the laſt plague, in which the wrath of God is filled up, and ſo brings to the end of all things, ch. xx. 1—10. accompliſhment of this vial will be the deciſive battle at Armageddon, when the remains of all Chriſt's and his church's enemies will have a total defeat; and this will be the third and laſt wo, which will utterly deſtroy thoſe that have deſtroyed the earth, pagans, papiſts, and Mahometans, even all the open enemies of Chriſt, ſo that nothing will lie in the way of his kingdom; now will the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt, which has been gradually advancing by the pouring out of each vial, be in its full glory: but tho' antichriſt will be no more, and ſatan will have no more in form an open kingdom upon earth; yet towards the cloſe of this reign, great lukewarmneſs and coldneſs will ſeize profeſſors of religion, and immorality and prophaneneſs will abound again; which will bring on the times of the coming of the Son of man; who upon his perſonal deſcent from the third heaven into the air, will drive ſatan and his poſſe of devils from their territories, and quickly will the general conflagration begin, when the heavens ſhall paſs away with a great noiſe, and the elements ſhall melt with fervent heat; and which is no inconſiderable part of the pouring out of this vial into the air. And there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne; this voice is ſaid to come out of the temple of heaven, that is, out of the temple which is in heaven, which will now be opened, as under the ſounding of the ſeventh trumpet, with which this vial correſponds, and indeed is cotemporary; and which deſigns the church, enjoying the pure worſhip of God, the word and ordinances, and the free exerciſe of religion; and this ſhows that when this voice will be uttered, as yet the Jeruſalem church-ſtate will not be begun, ſince there will be no temple in that; ſee ch. xi. 19. and xiv. 17. and xv. 5. and xxi. 22. the words of heaven, are left out in the Alexandrian copy, and in the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions, which read, out of the temple from the throne; the ſeat of government in the church, deſcribed in ch. iv. 2, 3, 4, 5, 6. the voice came with power, authority, and majeſty; not from any of the four and twenty elders, or four living creatures, or angels about the throne; but either from God the Father that ſits upon it; or from Chriſt the Lamb in the midſt of it, and rather from the latter, ſince a like phraſe was uſed by him on the croſs, John xix. 30. and the ſame is expreſſed by him who is the Alpha and Omega, Rev. xxi. 6. and this voice is called a great one, being the voice of a great perſon, the King of Kings, and coming with great power, and was ſpoken aloud: ſaying it is done; what the angel ſwore ſhould be in the days of the ſeventh angel; namely, that time, antichriſtian time, ſhould be no more, and the myſtery of God in his purpoſes and providences ſhould be finiſhed, and all the glorious things ſpoken of his church and people be accompliſhed; ſee the notes on ch. x. 6, 7. the word γεγονε may be rendered it has been, or it was, and the ſenſe is, but now is not; and the meaning may be, Babylon was, but is not, it is now fallen; the beaſt and falſe prophet were, but now are not; the Turk, or Mahomet, was, but is no more; all the antichriſtian powers are deſtroyed; Chriſt's body, the church, will be compleated, the Jews will be converted, and the fullneſs of the Gentiles brought in, all the elect called, and the new Jeruſalem prepared as a bride for her huſband; and when the utmoſt effects of this vial will take place, the end of all things will be; by the ſame fiat that made the heavens and the earth, they will diſappear, and new heavens and earth ſucceed in their room.

Ver. 18. And there were voices, and thunders, and lightnings, &c.] As at the giving of the law, Exod. xix. 16. and at the ſounding of the ſeventh trumpet, ſee the note on ch. xi. 20. and may intend either the pure miniſtry of the Goſpel in the ſpiritual reign, the voices of Chriſt's miniſters, and the effects of them, who will be Boanergeſſes, ſons of thunder, and will be the means of enlightning the minds of many, as well as of ſhaking the conſciences of men, ſignified by the earthquake following; or rather the tremendous and awful judgments of God upon the remains of the antichriſtian party, as the very great commotions and changes that will be made in the world are expreſſed in the next clauſe: and there was a great earthquake, ſuch as was not ſince men were upon the earth, ſo mighty an earthquake, and ſo great; for as the changes made in the Jewiſh ſtate, civil and eccleſiaſtical, are ſignified by the ſhaking of the heavens and the earth, and as the fall of paganiſm is expreſſed by an earthquake, and the fall of the tenth part of the city is the effect of another; ſo the deſtruction of all the antichriſtian powers, and the mutations made in the earth thereby, are deſigned by this; ſee Heb. xii. 26, 27. Rev. vi. 12. and xi. 13. Joel iii. 16. Mr. Daubuz applies the whole of this vial to the reformation, when ſuch a revolution was made in a ſhort time, as has not been known ſince the world was, or men became worſhippers of the beaſt; at which time chriſtendom was divided into three parts, the eaſtern or Greek church, the weſtern or Latin church, and the reformed churches.

Ver. 19. And the great city was divided into three parts, &c.] By which is meant not Chriſtendom, diſtinguiſhed into proteſtants, papiſts, and neutrals, which has been long the caſe; nor the city of Jeruſalem, as inhabited by chriſtians, Jews, and Turks; nor the city of Rome itſelf, the ſeat of the beaſt, which will have ſuffered under the fifth vial; but the whole Romiſh juriſdiction, which is the great city, that reigns over the kings of the earth, as it will now be; tho' ſome think the Turkiſh empire is meant, which they ſuppoſe was only afflicted under the preceding vial, but will now be divided into three parts, and afterwards into ſix, Ezek. xxxix. 1, 2. and ſo come to ruin; and others are of opinion that it is included in this great city at leaſt; and doubtleſs the remains of it are to be taken into this account, and probably are conſidered in the following clauſe; wherefore it is better to underſtand this of the Romiſh juriſdiction, ſo often called the great city in this book, ch. xi. 8. and xiv. 8. and xvii. 18. and its diviſion into three parts is either in reference to the three heads of it, the dragon, beaſt, and falſe prophet, or to the three unclean ſpirits that come out of them, which will lead on to this ruin; tho' the alluſion ſeems rather to be to the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, Ezek. v. 2, 12. and denotes the utter ruin of the Romiſh antichriſt, in all its branches and remains; a tenth part of this city will fall towards the cloſe of the ſixth trumpet, ch. xi. 13. and now all the other nine parts will fall, a threefold diviſion will be made of the city, each diviſion containing three parts: the Jews[e] have a propheſy, that upon an appearance of a ſtar at Rome, which they ſuppoſe will be when the Meſſiah comes, the three upper walls of that city will fall, and the great temple, or church (St. Peter's) will fall, and the governor of that city (the pope) will die: and the cities of the nations fell; of the pagans and Mahometans; or as there will be an utter extirpation of the papacy, ſo of paganiſm and Mahometaniſm, in the ſeveral nations where they have obtained, and where there will be now any remains of them; and great Babylon came in remembrance before fore God; not Conſtantinople, as Brightman thinks, becauſe that Rome, the ſeat of the beaſt, is affected under the fifth vial, and the great city under this; but ſince no other is called Babylon in this book but the Romiſh antichriſtian ſtate, it muſt be meant here; ſee ch. xiv. 8. and xvii. 5. and xviii. 2, 10, 21. for many hundreds of years Babylon ſeemed to be forgotten by God, no notice being taken of her ſins and iniquities in a judicial way; but now God will remember her ſins, ch. xviii. 5. and inflict deſerved puniſhment upon her: to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceneſs of his wrath; as a juſt retaliation for the wine of her fornication, with which ſhe has intoxicated the kings and inhabitants of the earth; the wrath of God is ſometimes ſignified in the Old Teſtament by a cup, a wine-cup, a wine-cup of fury, ſee Pſ. lxxv. 8. Jer. xxv. 15. and here the exceeding greatneſs of his wrath is expreſſed by the phraſes uſed, and intends the pouring out of all his vengeance, to the utter ruin of the Romiſh antichriſt.

Ver. 20. And every iſland fled away, &c.] This may be underſtood either of the diſſolution of the world, the preſent heavens and earth, when there will be no more ſea, ch. xxi. 1. and ſo conſequently no iſlands: and the mountains were not found; for the earth and the heaven will be fled away at the appearance of Chriſt the judge, and there will be no place found for them, ch. xx. 11. and new heavens, and a new earth, without ſea or mountains, will ſucceed: or rather this may ſignify the utter extirpation of all the antichriſtian powers in every ſhape, whether on iſlands or on the continent; for this day of the Lord will be upon every high mountain and hill, to bring them low, and the Lord alone ſhall be exalted, Iſ. ii. 14, 15, 17. and may particularly reſpect the diſſolution of monaſteries, and the plundering them of their riches and revenues.

Ver. 21. And there fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, &c.] Which muſt be underſtood not as after the fall of the cities, and the flight of the iſlands and mountains, but at the ſame time; and it looks as if ſuch men that ſhall eſcape at the battle of Armageddon, that hail-ſtones from heaven will fall upon them and deſtroy them; juſt as the kings of the Amorites and their men were killed by hail-ſtones, caſt down by the Lord from heaven, as they fled before Joſhua, when more were killed by the ſtones than were ſlain by the ſword, Joſh. x. 11. the alluſion ſeems to be to the plague of hail in Exod. ix. 23—26. every ſtone about the weight of a talent; which is threeſcore pound weight, a prodigious weight indeed for a ſingle hail-ſtone! ſuch hail-ſtones were never known to fall; the largeſt I have read of is what Caſpar Weſſerus aſſured Mr. Broughton[f] of, at Zurich, which being brought from a field afar off, to the conſul, and ſo muſt melt in carriage, yet weighed a pound. It may be ſaid of this hail-ſtorm, as of the earthquake in a preceding verſe, that it will be ſuch as never was ſince men were upon earth; and denotes the ſore, heavy, and even intolerable judgments of God upon the antichriſtian party: God's judgments are ſometimes ſignified by hail-ſtorms, Iſ. xxx. 26—30. and particularly the judgments upon Gog and Magog, Ezek. xxxviii. 22. which may reſpect the ſame as here: the Jews[g] now expect a great hail in the times of Gog and Magog: and men blaſphemed God becauſe of the plague of the hail; the plague of hail brought down the hard heart of Pharaoh, and humbled him, ſo that he acknowledged his wickedneſs, and the ſin of his people, and owned the juſtice of God; but this more terrible ſtorm will have no effect upon theſe men, to convince and reform them, but on the contrary, they will break out into blaſphemy againſt God, who cauſed it to fall on them; it will have the ſame effect as the fourth and fifth vials: for the plague thereof was exceeding great; it muſt beat down all before it, and be intolerable: whether this hail-ſtorm may not alſo have ſome regard to coldneſs and lukewarmneſs, as Napeir ſuggeſts, and ſo may point at the cloſe of the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt, or the Laodicean ſtate, which will bring on the ſecond coming of Chriſt; and ſo this effect of the ſeventh vial will end where the ſeven churches and ſeven trumpets do, may be conſidered; ſee the note on ch. xi. 20.

CHAP. XVII.

THIS chapter contains a viſion of a beaſt, and a woman on it, and the interpretation of it; one of the ſeven angels that had the ſeven vials propoſes to John to ſhow him the whore of Babylon, the Jezabel before ſpoken of, who ſits on many waters, with whom the kings and inhabitants of the earth have committed fornication, being intoxicated by her, ver. 1, 2. in order to which he carries him into the wilderneſs, and there he ſees a woman, who is deſcribed by the beaſt ſhe ſat on, of a ſcarlet colour, full of blaſphemous names, with ſeven heads and ten horns; by her array, in purple and ſcarlet, decked with gold, pearls, and precious ſtones; by a cup ſhe had in her hand, full of abominable filth; by a name written on her forehead, given at large, and by the condition ſhe was in, drunk with the blood of the ſaints; which ſight filled John with great wonder and admiration, ver. 3, 4, 5, 6. wherefore, to remove his aſtoniſhment, the angel propoſes to explain to him the myſtery of the woman, and the beaſt ſhe ſat on, ver. 7. and firſt the myſtery of the beaſt is explained, by its ſeveral ſtates, paſt, preſent, and to come; by its original and end, aſcending out of the bottomleſs pit, and going into perdition; by the veneration it would be had in by the reprobate part of the world, ver. 8. its ſeven heads are interpreted of the ſeven mountains on which the city of Rome, deſigned by the woman, ſtood, and of ſeven kings, or forms of government, five of which had ceaſed, and one was in being in John's time, another was to come, which ſhould not continue long, and the beaſt would be an eighth, ver. 9, 10, 11. its ten horns are explained of ten kings, deſcribed by their kingdom they had not as yet received, and which they ſhould have one hour with the beaſt; by their agreement in mind and conduct; and by their war with the Lamb, the King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, and thoſe that are with him, the called, choſen, and faithful, and the iſſue of it, ver. 12, 13, 14. the waters on which the whore ſat are interpreted of a multitude of people, nations and tongues, ver. 15. the hatred and deſtruction of her by the ten kings, and the manner of it are declared, ver. 16. which is owing to the will of God, who put it into their hearts to agree to give their kingdom to the beaſt till the prophecies and promiſes were fulfilled reſpecting this matter, and now to deſtroy the whore that ſat upon it, ver. 17. which woman is explained of the great city of Rome, that reigns over the kings of the earth, ver. 18.

[g] Shemot Rabba, §. 12. fol. 99. 1.

Ver. 1. And there came one of the ſeven angels that had the ſeven vials, &c.] It may be the firſt of them, ſince one of the four beaſts deſigns the firſt of them in ch. vi. 1, 3. tho' Brightman thinks the fifth angel is meant, becauſe he poured out his vial on the ſeat of the beaſt, who is by this angel deſcribed; but rather this is the ſeventh and laſt angel, concerned in the utter deſtruction of antichriſt; and therefore propoſes to John to ſhow him the judgment of the great whore: and talked with me, ſaying unto me, come hither; he converſed with him in a friendly manner, ſee Zech. i. 9. and deſires him to come nearer to him, and go along with him, adding, I will ſhew unto thee the judgment of the great whore; that noted and famous one, known before to John by the names of Jezabel and Babylon, who taught, and cauſed many to commit fornication, ch. ii. 20. and xiv. 8. and is no other than Rome papal; for that a city or ſtate is meant, is clear from ver. 18. and it is uſual for idolatrous or apoſtate cities to be called whores or harlots, ſee Iſ. i. 21. Ezek. xxiii. 2, 3, 4. Nahum iii. 4. and ſhe is called a great one, becauſe of the largeneſs of the papal ſee; and becauſe of the multitude of perſons, the kings of the earth, and the inhabitants of it, with whom the Romiſh antichriſt has committed ſpiritual fornication, or idolatry: her judgment ſignifies either her ſin and wickedneſs; in which ſenſe the word is uſed in Rom. v. 16. and which is expoſed, ver. 5, 6. namely, her idolatry and cruelty; or elſe her condemnation, and the execution of it, ſuggeſted in ver. 8. 16. and more largely deſcribed in the following chapter: that ſitteth upon many waters; which in ver. 15. are interpreted of people, multitudes, nations, and tongues, ſubject to the juriſdiction of Rome; and ſo ſeveral antichriſtian ſtates are in the preceding chapter ſignified by the ſea, and by rivers and fountains of water; and this is ſaid in reference to Babylon, an emblem of the Romiſh harlot, which was ſituated upon the river Euphrates, and is therefore ſaid to dwell upon many waters, Jer. li. 13. her ſitting here may be in alluſion to the poſture of harlots plying of men; or may denote her eaſe, reſt, and grandeur, ſitting as a queen; and is chiefly expreſſive of her power and dominion over the kings and nations of the earth, ver. 18.

Ver. 2. With whom the kings of the earth have committed fornication, &c.] Theſe are the ten kings, who being of the ſame mind, and of one religion, the popiſh religion, gave their power, ſtrength, and kingdom to the beaſt, ver. 12, 17. and have been enticed by the whore of Rome to commit ſpiritual fornication with her; that is idolatry, to worſhip, as that church enjoins, idols of gold, ſilver, braſs, and wood, the images of the virgin Mary, and other ſaints; hence this whore appears to be no mean ſtrumpet, but one of great note, and in much vogue, being ſought after, and made uſe of by the great men of the earth: and the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk with the wine of her fornication; that is, the inhabitants of the Roman empire, or earthly-minded men, mere carnal perſons, have been drawn into idolatrous practices by the allurements of the church of Rome; ſuch as riches, honours, pleaſures, lying miracles, and great pretenſions to devotion and religion; whereby they have been intoxicated as men with wine, and have been filled with a blind zeal for that church, and the falſe doctrines and worſhip of it, and with madneſs and fury againſt the true profeſſors of religion.

Ver. 3. So he carried me away in the ſpirit, &c.] Not in body, as if he was removed from the Iſle of Patmos to ſome other place; but in a viſionary way, juſt as Ezekiel was carried between earth and heaven in the viſions of God, to Jeruſalem, Ezek. viii. 3. It was repreſented to the mind of John, to his ſpirit, or ſoul, as if he had been taken up by the angel and carried thro' the air: into the wilderneſs; by which may be meant either the wilderneſs of the people, the world, the church hereafter deſcribed, being a worldly one, and conſiſting of worldly men; or Gentiliſm, the Gentile world is often in the prophecies of the Old Teſtament called a wilderneſs; the Romiſh church having much of heathen worſhip, and heathen cuſtoms and practices in it, hence its votaries are called Gentiles, ch. xi. 2. or this circumſtance may be mentioned, and the thing ſo repreſented to John, becauſe that a wilderneſs is a ſolitary place, and fit for retirement and meditation; and where he might, without any interruption, take a full view of the following ſight, and make proper obſervations upon it; and it is worthy of notice, that this is the place where the true church fled, and became out of ſight, in the room of which this apoſtate church appears: or, as others have thought, John is had into the wilderneſs, where the true church was hid and nouriſhed, and the falſe one is there ſhown him, that ſeeing both together, he might compare them, and obſerve the difference between them; to all which may be added, that a wilderneſs is a fit place for ſuch a beaſt as hereafter deſcribed, to be ſeen in: and I ſaw a woman ſit upon a ſcarlet-coloured beaſt; the beaſt is the ſame with that in ch. xiii. 1. as the deſcription ſhows, and is no other than the Roman empire as papal; the ſcarlet colour is expreſſive of its imperial dignity, its power and authority, it received from the dragon; and alſo of this beaſt's cruelty and tyranny, and of its ſhedding the blood of the ſaints: the woman ſitting upon it, is the great city of Rome, as is manifeſt from ver. 18. or the Romiſh antichriſt, the apoſtate church of Rome, repreſented by a woman, as the true church is, ch. xii. 1. but in a very different form, and is the ſame with the ſecond beaſt in ch. xiii. 11. and the falſe prophet; and as the two beaſts reſpect the ſame, under different conſiderations, namely the papacy in its civil and eccleſiaſtic capacity, ſo this ſtrange phænomenon, a woman ſitting on ſuch a beaſt, means one and the ſame thing, as the horſe and his rider in the ſeals, tho' in different views; the woman deſigns the Romiſh church, with the pope at the head of it, and the beaſt the Roman papal empire as civil, by which the former is ſupported and upheld, bore up on high, and exalted in the manner it has been: moreover, as purple and ſcarlet are the colours of garments wore by the pope and cardinals, hence the woman in the next verſe is ſaid to be arrayed in purple and ſcarlet colour; ſo even the very beaſts on which they rode were covered with ſcarlet. Platina [h] ſays that pope Paul the Second "ordered by a public decree, on pain of puniſhment, that no man ſhould wear a ſcarlet cap but cardinals; to whom alſo, in the firſt year of his popedom, he gave cloth of the ſame colour, to put upon their horſes and mules when they rode; and beſides, would have put into the decree, that the cardinals hats ſhould be of ſcarlet ſilk:" upon which Du Moulin [i] makes this remark; "pope Paul the Second was the firſt that gave ſcarlet to the cardinals, as well for themſelves as for their mules, to the end that this propheſy, which agreeth in general with the ſee of Rome, might likewiſe appertain particularly to [i] Defence of the Catholic Faith, &c. c. 3. p. 38.

"every one of the pillars of the ſaid ſee, which is "to be ſet upon a ſcarlet-coloured beaſt." It follows, full of names of blaſphemy; that is, the beaſt, or Roman papal empire, was full of them, in ch. xiii. 1, 5. a name of blaſphemy is ſaid to be upon his head, and he to have a mouth ſpeaking blaſphemy; but here his whole body is repreſented as full of them, and may refer to the blaſphemous doctrines of worſhipping of images, of pardons and indulgences, of tranſubſtantiation, &c. and to the multitude of images, of the virgin Mary, and other ſaints in the antichriſtian ſtate, in every part of it; and to thoſe blaſpheming perſons the cardinals, prieſts, and jeſuits, which abound in it; as well as to thoſe blaſphemous names and titles which are given to the pope, the head of it, or aſſumed by him; ſuch as God on earth, the vicar of Chriſt, the head, and huſband, and foundation of the church, with many others: having ſeven heads, and ten horns; the ſeven heads are the ſeven mountains, on which the city of Rome, the metropolis of the empire, is ſeated; and the ſeven kings, or ſeven forms of government, under which it has been, as appears from ver. 9, 10. ſee the notes on ch. xii. 3. and xiii. 1. and the ten horns ſignify the ten kings over the ten kingdoms, into which the empire was divided, when over-run by the Goths and Vandals; and which ten kings gave their kingdoms to the beaſt, the Romiſh antichriſt; they gave their ſtrength and power to him, being of his religion, and have been his horns, his defenders and ſupporters ever ſince, as may be gathered from ver. 12, 13, 17.

Ver. 4. And the woman was arrayed in purple and ſcarlet colour, &c.] Which may be expreſſive of her grandeur, authority, and power, ſitting as a queen, and ſovereign in the empire, ruling over kingdoms and nations in it; and alſo of her bloody diſpoſition to the ſaints, with whoſe blood ſhe is afterwards ſaid to be drunk: and decked with gold, and precious ſtones, and pearls; which may denote her hypocriſy, ſhe being gilded with theſe things, as the word ſignifies, when ſhe was inwardly rotten, corrupt, and filthy; and may point out the things, by which perſons have been enticed into the communion of the church of Rome, and to comply with her idolatrous worſhip and practices; and may alſo reſpect the prodigious riches, which have, by various methods, been brought into the pope's coffers; theſe, with other things, are reckoned among the merchandize of Babylon, ch. xviii. 12. and particularly this may have reference to the adorning of their temples, or churches, and the decking of their images, with thoſe things; which gaudy pompous ſhows ſtrike the minds of carnal men, amuſe them, and engage their attention. So Philo [k] the Jew deſcribes an whore as arrayed in purple, and adorned with gold and precious ſtones; ſee Prov. vii. 10. Having a golden cup in her hand full of abominations and filthineſs of her fornication; in alluſion to Babylon, Jer. li. 7. and alſo to harlots, who give philters or love-potions to men, to excite luſt, and draw their affections to them; and this being a golden cup, may deſign the external luſtre and ſplendor of the worſhip of the church of Rome, by which many have been drawn into a compliance with it, which is attended with many abominable, filthy, and idolatrous practices: and perhaps ſome regard may be had to the golden chalice, in which, 'tis pretended, is the very blood of Chriſt, which the prieſts take as ſuch, and worſhip and adore, and is no other than an abominable and filthy piece of idolatry; and ſuch are the perſons that partake of it; like the Phariſees of old, they make clean the outſide of the cup and platter; gliſter, and make a great ſhow of devotion, but within are full of extortion and exceſs.

Ver. 5. And upon her forehead was a name written, &c.] As the high-prieſt had on his mitre upon his forehead written, holineſs to the Lord, Exod. xxviii. 36. only a different inſcription from that; the alluſion is thought to be to harlots, who not only uſed to put their names over their doors, but ſome of them upon their foreheads, that all might know who they were; of which Mr. Daubuz has given proofs out of Seneca, Martial, Juvenal, and Petronius; and ſuch might be ſaid to have an whore's forehead indeed: and this is expreſſive of the openneſs and impudence of the church of Rome, in her idolatrous worſhip; ſhe openly declares it, and pleads for it, and invites and enſnares perſons to join with her in it: the name follows, myſtery, Babylon the great, the mother of harlots, and abominations of the earth; her name is myſtery; not the myſtery of godlineſs, that ſhe diſlikes and oppoſes, but the myſtery of iniquity; which is the name antichriſt went by in the Apoſtle Paul's time, when he was but in embryo, 2 Theſſ. ii. 7. Some reference may be had to the myſtery of the maſs, in which the papiſts pretend are the very body and blood of Chriſt; to their ſeven ſacraments, for where-ever almoſt they find the word myſtery, they make a ſacrament of that to which it is applied; and to their unwritten traditions, and the ſenſe of the ſcriptures, which are locked up in the pope's breaſt: and it is very remarkable what has been obſerved by ſome, that the word myſtery was formerly upon the frontlet of the pope's mitre, and was removed by pope Julius the third, when it was obſerved that the proteſtants made uſe of this paſſage of ſcripture, and applied it to the Romiſh antichriſt. Joſeph Scaliger [l] affirms, that he ſaw mitres at Rome with this inſcription on them. Tho' others think that this is not any part of the name, but only ſignifies that this woman was, in a myſterious or myſtical ſenſe, called Babylon, &c. juſt as the great city is ſpiritually called Sodom and Egypt, ch. xi. 8. but to me it ſeems to be a part of the name, as well as what follows, Babylon the great; that is, the great city, ch. xiv. 8. by which name the church of Rome may well be called, becauſe of the ſignification of it, confuſion, Gen. xi. 9. its doctrine and worſhip being a confuſed mixture of paganiſm, judaiſm, and chriſtianity; and becauſe of the pride and haughtineſs of it, its tyranny and cruelty, and its ſorceries and idolatry; ſee Iſ. xiv. 12, 13, 14. and xlvii. 6, 7, 12, 13. Jer. l. 38. And the mother of harlots; of all antichriſtian ſtates and kingdoms; and is different from the heavenly Jeruſalem, the Goſpel church, which is the mother of true believers, Gal. iv. 26. or the mother of fornications, as ſome copies read, and the Vulgate Latin and Eaſtern verſions render it; that is, the author and encourager of them, as the church of Rome has been; of corporal fornication, by commanding celibacy, and forbidding marriage to prieſts, and ſetting up of brothel-houſes; and of ſpiritual fornication or idolatry, every where required and encouraged by it: and of the abominations of the earth; of abominable doctrines and practices; all manner of wickedneſs, that is to be found in the earth, as murder, adultery, ſodomy, perjury, &c. theſe, with every thing that is vile and wicked, are practiſed and connived at by her.

Ver. 6. And I ſaw the woman drunken with the blood of the ſaints, &c.] To ſee a woman drunk is a ſhameful ſight; but to ſee one drunk, not with wine, but with blood, is monſtrous, cruel, and ſhocking; the ſword, when it devours, and is ſatiate, is ſaid to be drunk with blood, Jer. xlvi. 10. but for a woman to be ſo is unexampled; and not with her own blood, as ſhe will be, Iſ. xlix. 26. Rev. xvi. 6. but with the blood of others; and not with the blood of wicked men, but with the blood of ſaints; ſuch as God the Father has ſet apart from everlaſting, and choſen to be holy; whom Chriſt has ſanctified by his blood, or whoſe ſins he has expiated, and to whom he is made ſanctification; and who have principles of grace and holineſs wrought in them by the Spirit of God, and live holy lives and converſations: and of the martyrs of Jeſus; the ſaints, whoſe blood is ſhed by antichriſt, are martyrs alſo; but they ſeem to deſign the common people, and theſe the miniſters of the Goſpel, who are the martyrs of Jeſus, both in life and death; they are his martyrs or witneſſes, by their doctrine and miniſtry, bearing teſtimony to him as Jeſus, a ſaviour; teſtifying that he is the only ſaviour, that there is ſalvation in no other, in oppoſition to the antichriſtian doctrines of merit, penance, purgatory, &c. for which they have been cruelly put to death, and in great numbers, and ſo have ſealed their doctrine by their blood. Now the woman being drunk with their blood, denotes the blood-thirſtineſs of the church of Rome, her greedy and inſatiable deſire after the blood of the ſaints, and her delight in it, being exceeding mad againſt them; and the multitude of it, ſhed by her, as the ſlaughters of the Waldenſes and Albigenſes, the butcheries of the duke d'Alva in the low countries, the maſſacres in France, Ireland, and other places, the burning of the martyrs in queen Mary's days here, with numerous other inſtances ſhow. And when I ſaw her, I wondered with great admiration; not at the ſight of the beaſt, which he had ſeen before, but at the ſight of the woman, as upon the beaſt; he wondered that one of her ſex, generally timorous and fearful, ſhould ride on ſuch a monſtrous creature; he was amazed at her dreſs, and grand appearance, whereas the church in his time conſiſted of poor perſons, meanly arrayed; it was aſtoniſhing to him, that one bearing the name of a chriſtian church ſhould riſe to ſuch grandeur; and he wondered at the name upon her forehead, what the whole of that inſcription ſhould mean; but above all, at her drunkenneſs with the blood of the ſaints; at her inhumanity and cruelty, being as ſavage as the beaſt ſhe rode on; and alſo at God's forbearance of her, that he, who is a pure and holy being, a lover of his ſaints, an avenger of his elect, ſhould ſuffer ſuch a brutiſh, barbarous, and blood-thirſty creature to live upon earth; ſee Hab. i. 13.

Ver. 7. And the angel ſaid unto me, &c.] The ſame as in ver. 1. wherefore didſt thou marvel? which is not ſaid by way of reproof, as queſtions of this kind ſometimes are, Acts iii. 12. for John did not wonder at her with a ſinful admiration, ſo as to have her in great veneration, and to do homage and worſhip to her, as the inhabitants of the world wondered after the beaſt, ch. xiii. 3. and xvii. 8. but his admiration was an amazement, or ſtupefaction of mind, joined with indignation at her; and this is ſaid by the angel to lead on to what he had to declare unto him. I will tell thee the myſtery of the woman; that is, what is myſteriouſly or myſtically deſigned by her; for till it was made known to John by the angel, it was a myſtery to him; and when it was revealed, the interpretation is given in ſuch an obſcure manner, that it is only underſtood by the mind that has ſpiritual wiſdom; and ſtill remains a myſtery to carnal men, juſt as the Goſpel itſelf does. The hidden meaning of this woman, or the myſtery of her, is told by the angel in ver. 18. And of the beaſt that carried her, which hath the ſeven heads, and ten horns; the myſtical ſenſe of the beaſt, its heads and horns, and which is alſo delivered in a myſterious manner, is given in ver. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12.

Ver. 8. The beaſt which thou ſaweſt was, and is not, &c.] It is added at the end of the verſe where the ſame deſcription is given, and yet is; this beaſt is to be underſtood not of the devil, who was the God of this world, is not, being caſt out by Chriſt, and yet is in being; for he, the dragon, is diſtinguiſhed from this beaſt, and indeed from him, the beaſt, has his ſeat, power, and authority, ch. xiii. 1, 2. nor any particular emperor, as Domitian, a cruel and ſavage one, who was in power in Veſpaſian's time, when he was abroad, and then was out of it upon his return, and yet afterwards was in again, being as one ſent from hell, and went at laſt into perdition; but the Roman empire itſelf is intended, as we have ſeen, which carried and ſupported the papacy: and variouſly may this be interpreted; as that it was in the hands of the Romans originally, and long continued with them, but now is not, in John's time, being in the hands of Trajan, a Spaniard, and yet is in being, Rome being the metropolis of it: it was a very powerful and flouriſhing empire, and is not, being deſtroyed by the Goths and Vandals, and yet is a large empire under the juriſdiction of antichriſt; it was an idolatrous empire, which encouraged the worſhipping of heathen Gods, and is not guilty of the ſame idolatrous practices, it was, as the worſhipping of Jupiter, Mars, &c. and yet is much given to idolatry in another way, worſhipping the virgin Mary, and other ſaints; it was under kings, conſuls, dictators, tribunes, decemvirs, and emperors, it is not in ſuch a form of government, and yet is under its ſeventh head the pope; Rome was, but is not the ſame it has been, in ſome reſpects, and yet is the ſame, for idolatry, cruelty, &c. it has the image of old Rome, when pagan, and under the power of the dragon; and tho' antichriſt was not riſen up in the empire to an head, to ſupreme power and dignity, yet it was in being in the Apoſtles times, and began to work, and by degrees to ſhew itſelf. In ſhort, the meaning is, that this beaſt was the Roman empire, as pagan, deſcribed by a dragon with ſeven heads, and ten horns, with crowns on the heads, but is not as yet in the Apoſtle John's time, as papal, deſcribed with ſeven heads, and ten horns, and crowns on the horns. And ſhall aſcend out of the bottomleſs pit; out of hell, from whence the antichriſtian beaſt has its power; ſee ch. xi. 8. and xiii. 2. otherwiſe all civil power is from God, but not antichriſtian power, that is from the devil: and go into perdition; everlaſting deſtruction, the lake which burns with fire and brimſtone; this will be the end of the beaſt, ch. xix. 20. and they that dwell on the earth ſhall wonder; the inhabitants of the Roman empire, earthly-minded men, ſhall have the beaſt in great veneration, and follow and worſhip him; ſee ch. xiii. 3, 4, 12. whoſe names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world; none but reprobates, not any of the elect of God, are the admirers and worſhippers of antichriſt; ſee the note on ch. xiii. 8. when they beheld held the beaſt that was, and is not, and yet is; the Roman empire in glory, under the emperors, deſtroyed by the Goths, and revived in the papacy. The Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions leave out the laſt clauſe, and yet is.

Ver. 9. And here is the mind which hath wiſdom, &c.] This refers either to what goes before concerning the beaſt, his various ſtates, riſe, and ruin, and his admirers; or to what follows after concerning the meaning of his heads and horns, or to both; and the ſenſe is, that notwithſtanding the interpretation of theſe things by the angel, yet it requires a large ſhare of wiſdom to underſtand them; and here's enough to exerciſe the mind that is ever ſo well ſtored with knowledge and underſtanding; and ſo the Arabic verſion renders it, here it is required that one ſhould have judgment and wiſdom; for to a man that has not, the affair will ſtill be obſcure and unintelligible. The words may be rendered, here is the mind, he that hath wiſdom; that is, let him make uſe of it, as in ch. xiii. 18. and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion renders it, and this is the ſenſe, he that hath wiſdom; this is the ſenſe of the beaſt, and of his heads and horns; and he that has wiſdom, let him conſider it, and take it in, and apply it to proper perſons, things and times; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion, he that has wiſdom and underſtanding, let him know this; or take cognizance of it, it being a matter of importance, and attended with difficulty: the ſeven heads are ſeven mountains on which the woman ſitteth; that is, they ſignify ſeven mountains, or are ſymbolical repreſentations of them; juſt as the ſeven good kine, and ſeven good ears in Pharaoh's dream, ſignified ſeven years of plenty, and ſeven thin kine, and ſeven empty ears, ſeven years of famine, Gen. xli. 26, 27. As the woman is a city, ver. 18. theſe ſeven mountains, on which ſhe ſits, muſt be ſo many mountains on which the city is built; and what city can this be but Rome? which is ſo famous for being built on ſeven hills. This is taken notice of by Virgil[m], Horace[n], Ovid[o], Claudian[p], Statius[q], Martial[r], and others; and indeed there is ſcarce a poet that ſpeaks of Rome, but obſerves it: hence it has been ſometimes called, by writers, the ſeven hilled-city, and ſometimes Septiceps, the ſeven headed-city, which comes near to the language here: the names of the ſeven mountains were theſe, Capitolinus, Palatinus, Aventinus, Eſquilinus, Cælius, Viminalis, and Quirinalis; the four firſt of theſe were taken in by Romulus, the firſt founder of it, and the three laſt by Servius Tullius, when he enlarged it; and upon the addition of the ſeventh mountain there was a feaſt kept, called Septimontium; and which was kept in ſeven places in the city[s], and was annually obſerved; and in this ſituation it was in John's time; for Pliny[t], who was cotemporary with him, expreſly ſays, that in his time it took in ſeven mountains; and that this refers to a city in John's time, then reigning over the kings of the earth, is certain from ver. 18. Now there was no imperial city, ſo built in his time, but Rome; for though Conſtantinople is built on ſeven hills, yet this was not in being in John's time, but was built by Conſtantine many years after, in imitation of Rome; and though the ſituation is much altered now, being in Campus Martius, it being greatly reduced, and in a leſs compaſs, yet this hinders not but that it is the ſame city here deſigned: and this confirms, that the beaſt before ſpoken of, on whom the woman ſat, is the Roman empire, ſince ſhe is here ſaid to ſit on the ſeven mountains, on which Rome, the metropolis of that empire, was built; and this ſhows the pope of Rome to be antichriſt, the great whore, Babylon, the mother of harlots, ſince no other has his ſeat at Rome but he.

Ver. 10. And there are ſeven kings, &c.] The Arabic verſion renders it, who are ſeven kings; and it ſhould be rendered, as it is by the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Ethiopic verſions, and they are ſeven kings; that is, the ſeven heads ſignify ſeven kings alſo, for they have in them a double repreſentation, firſt of ſeven mountains, and then of ſeven kings; by which are meant not ſeven ages of the world, as from Adam to Noah; from Noah to Abraham; from Abraham to David; from David to the Babyloniſh captivity; from the Babyloniſh captivity to Chriſt; from Chriſt to antichriſt; and from antichriſt to the end of the world; the five firſt of which were gone in John's time, the ſixth was then in being, and when the ſeventh ſhall come, it will continue for a ſhort time: this is a fooliſh and abſurd interpretation of the papiſts, who make the beaſt to be the devil, and theſe his ſeven heads; whereas he rather is the head, or God of the world: nor are ſeven emperors of Rome intended, which are differently reckoned, according to the different times John is ſuppoſed to have had this revelation. Grotius, who is followed by Hammond, ſuppoſes this was written in the times of Veſpaſian, and reckons them thus; Claudius, Nero, Galba, Otho, Vitellius, Veſpaſian, and Titus; the firſt five of theſe were dead in John's time, one was then, the ſixth, Veſpaſian, the then reigning emperor, and the other, Titus, was yet to come to the empire; and when he came to it, continued but a ſhort time, two years and two months: others, who more rightly judge that John wrote in Domitian's time, reckon them after this manner; Galba, Otho, Vitellius, Veſpaſian, Titus, Domitian, and Nerva; the firſt five of theſe were dead; Domitian was then living, and Nerva, the other that was to come and ſucceed him, reigned but a little while, not quite two years; but to this ſenſe muſt be objected, that there were other emperors before either Galba or Claudius; and before John's time there were more than five fallen or dead; according to the firſt account, there muſt be nine dead, and according to the latter eleven; for before Claudius there were Julius, Auguſtus, Tiberius, and Caius: beſides, if theſe were the ſeven heads of the beaſt, the beaſt muſt have been long ago without any head, and conſequently muſt have expired; whereas it is ſtill in being, and will be under the fifth, ſixth, and ſeventh vials, which are yet to come; it will be at the battle of Armageddon, and will be taken then, and caſt alive into the lake of fire; to which may be added, that the beaſt, in the form in which John now ſaw it, was not yet riſen in the times of theſe emperors: but by the ſeven heads are meant ſo many forms of government which took place ſucceſſively in the Roman empire, and were all of them idolatrous heads, as kings, conſuls, dictators, decemvirs, tribunes, emperors, and popes; it being uſual for any ſort of governours, or governments and monarchies, to be called kings, Deut. xxxiii. 5. Dan. vii. 17, 23. Five are fallen; or ceaſed, are no longer in being as kings, conſuls, dictators, decemvirs, and tribunes; at leaſt, the ſupreme power was not lodged in any bearing either of theſe names in John's time: and one is; the pagan emperors; an heathen emperor, Domitian, then reigning, when John had this viſion; and theſe continued to the opening of the ſixth ſeal, which put an end to that ſucceſſion, as pagan, and till the woman brought forth the man-child, or till Conſtantine's time: and the other is not yet come; which ſome underſtand of the chriſtian emperors, who immediately ſucceeded the pagan ones, and were another, and different from them, as to religion, tho' the form of government was the ſame, and were not another head; for they were not an idolatrous head, on which were names of blaſphemy, but another king; for from the following verſe it appears, that there are eight kings, and but ſeven heads, and therefore one of them ſhould ſeem not to be a head; and theſe, when they came, continued but a ſhort time in compariſon of the heathen emperors that reigned before them, and of the pope, or antichriſt, who was to reign after them 1260 years; for they reigned not, put them all together, more than 150 years; and eſpecially at Rome, their ſtay was ſhort, for Conſtantine removed from thence to Conſtantinople, in the nineteenth year of his empire. But theſe emperors, tho' in religion they differed from the others, yet their form of government and title were the ſame, and therefore muſt be included in the ſixth head: according to ſome Theodoricus the Oſtrogoth, and his ſucceſſors, are meant, who continued about a hundred years; others have thought that the exarchs of Ravenna, who roſe up upon the deſtruction of the weſtern empire, are intended, and who continued but a ſhort time; but then theſe had not their ſeat at Rome, which it ſeems neceſſary each head of this beaſt ſhould have; it is better therefore to underſtand this of the popes of Rome, the ſeventh and laſt head of the Roman empire; theſe were not yet come in John's time to their ſupreme dignity and authority: and when he cometh he muſt continue a ſhort ſpace; forty-two months, or 1260 days; that is, ſo many years, which, tho' a long time in itſelf, and in the account of man, yet with God, with whom a thouſand years is as one day, and in compariſon of the everlaſting kingdom of Chriſt, and his people, it is but a ſhort ſpace; and ſo the reign of the beaſt, and of the ten kings with him, is ſaid to be one hour, ver. 12. and this is ſaid for the comfort of the ſaints, and to keep up their faith and patience under their ſufferings in antichriſtian ſtates. Mr. Daubuz makes theſe ſeven heads, or kings, ſignified by ſeven mountains, ſeven capital cities, which by degrees came to belong to the Roman empire; as firſt Rome itſelf, the capital of Italy; next Carthage, the capital of Africa; then Æge, the capital of Macedonia; after that Antiochia, the capital of the eaſt; then Auguſtodunum, the capital of the Gauls; and Alexandria, the capital of Egypt; five of theſe ſix, with the monarchies belonging to them, were fallen; one, or the firſt of them now, was the miſtreſs of all; and the other ſeventh was to come, namely, Byzantium, or Conſtantinople, which continued not long. This paſſage is ſo interpreted, as alſo the ſeven heads, in ch. xiii. 1. by this writer.

Ver. 11. And the beaſt that was, and is not, even he is the eighth, &c.] That was in embryo in John's time, and yet was not come to its power and grandeur, is the eighth king; and this is the papacy, which takes the name of the beaſt, becauſe it is the head of the beaſt, and the only ſurviving head of the beaſt, or Roman empire, now become papal: and is of the ſeven; one of the ſeven heads, and the laſt of them, and is an idolatrous one, as the reſt were, requiring and encouraging the worſhip of angels, of the virgin Mary, and ſaints departed: the pope of Rome is the eighth king, and ſeventh head, the latter with reſpect to his temporal power, and the former with reſpect to his eccleſiaſtical authority; for his government is quite of a different ſort from the reſt, being of a mixed kind, partly civil, and partly eccleſiaſtical, and therefore is ſignified by two beaſts in the thirteenth chapter: and goeth into perdition; being the ſon of perdition, and is juſtly deſerving of it; ſee the note on ver. 8.

Ver. 12. And the ten horns which thou ſaweſt are ten kings, &c.] Not ten chriſtian emperors, which are reckoned up by Brightman from Conſtantine to Theodoſius; for theſe did not reign with the beaſt, or give their kingdoms to him, and much leſs did they make war with the Lamb; they are rather the angels of Michael, that fought for him, the Lamb, againſt the dragon, and his angels, ch. xii. 7. nor ten kings that will riſe up and divide the Roman empire between them, towards the end of the world, which is a ſenſe deviſed by papiſts to obſcure and hide from men the true meaning of the paſſage; but the ten kingdoms which roſe up, and into which the Roman empire was divided upon its being ruined, and torn to pieces by the Goths, Huns, and Vandals. They are the ſame with the ten toes of Nebuchadnezzar's image, and the ten horns of the fourth beaſt, or kingdom, in Dan. ii. 42. and vii. 7, 23, 24. Theſe are differently reckoned up by interpreters: by Napeir thus, Spain, France, Lombardy, England, Scotland, Denmark, Sweden, Hungary, Italy, and the exarchate of Ravenna: by Mr. Mede after this manner; the Britains in Britain, under Vortimer their king; the Saxons in the ſame place, under Hengiſt; the Franks in Gallia Belgica, or Celtica, under Childeric; the Burgundians, in another part of France, under Gunderic; the Wiſigoths in Aquitain, and part of Spain, under Theodoric; the Sueves and Alans in Gallæcia and Portugal, under Riciarius; the Vandals in Spain and Africa, under Genſeric; the Almains in that part of Germany called Rhetia, under Sumanus; the Oſtrogoths in Pannonia, and after in Italy, under Theodomir; and the Greeks in the reſt of the empire, under Marcianus: and by another [u] writer they are accounted for in this way; the Almains in both the Rhetia, and in Pannonia, who roſe in the year 356; the Oſtrogoths, firſt in Pannonia, and then in Italy, in 377; the Wiſigoths in Pannonia, and then in Italy, afterwards in France, and laſt of all in Spain, in 378; the Huns in Pannonia, and for ſome time throughout all Europe, in 378; the Britain-Romans in Britain, and afterwards the Saxons, in 406; the Sueves, firſt in France, and then in Spain, in 407; the Alans, firſt in France, and then in Spain, in 407; the Vandals, firſt in France, then in Spain, afterwards in Africa, in 407; the Burgundians in France, in 407; the Franks in France, in 410. And it is generally thought all theſe ten kingdoms were up by the year 450 at leaſt. Tho' Dr. Allix makes the epocha of them, A.D. 486, when the weſtern empire was taken from the Romans, and fixes them in the following order; the Almains in Rhetia and Pannonia; the Franks in Belgica; the Anglo-

Saxons in Britain; the Wiſigoths in Gallia Aquitania and Hiſpania Tarraconenſis; the Sueves and Alans in Portugal; the Vandals in Africa; the Burgundians in Gallia Sequanenſis; the Oſtrogoths in Pannonia, and afterwards in Italy; the Lombards in Pannonia, and the Heruli and Turcilingi, who conquered Auguſtulus: and tho' theſe kingdoms were thrown into different forms and ſhapes afterwards, yet it is remarkable they were juſt of this number; as 1. Italy and Germany; 2. France; 3. Spain; 4. England with Ireland; 5. Scotland; 6. Hungary; 7. Poland, with Lithuania; 8. Denmark, with Sweden and Norway, Sweden being ſince divided; 9. Portugal; 10. The Grecian empire ſeized by the Ottomans. And as theſe kings can't be underſtood of ſingle perſons at the head of theſe kingdoms, or of ſo many kings ſucceeding one another; ſo neither is it neceſſary to conſider theſe kingdoms as being in the ſame ſtate, and made up of the ſame ſort of people always; it is enough that they are in the ſame place, and within the empire; for we may obſerve, that different things, at different times, are aſcribed to them, or at leaſt to ſome. They all are at firſt of one mind, and give their kingdom to the beaſt; then they, at leaſt ſome of them, hate the whore, and burn her with fire; and yet others lament the deſtruction and burning of Rome, ver. 16, 17. and ch. xviii. 9. Which have received no kingdom as yet; in John's time, when the pagan empire was in being, and the beaſt was not riſen, with whom they were to reign; hence theſe horns have no crowns on them, ch. xii. 3. But receive power as kings one hour with the beaſt; as ſoon as he was riſen; and therefore the horns are repreſented with crowns upon them, ch. xiii. 1. Their riſe was with the papal beaſt, who roſe not to his ſupreme power and dignity until the weſtern emperor, which let and hindred, was removed out of the way; which was done by the barbarous nations, who ſet up theſe kingdoms, which made way for the lordly and tyrannical government of the pope of Rome; ſo that he and they roſe up together: and this may be meant by the one hour; namely, that at one and the ſame hour or ſeaſon, he came to his ſupreme authority and grandeur, and they received their kingly power with him; or this may denote the time of their continuance in their honour and greatneſs; it was but for an hour, or a ſhort time, as that phraſe ſometimes ſignifies, Philem. 15. and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, for one hour; to which agrees the Arabic verſion, and their power ſhall be of one hour: and this ſhall be as kings; for they only have the title of kings, but not ſovereign power; they are vaſſals to the beaſt, the pope, who reigns over them, ver. 18. and ſets up kings in theſe kingdoms, and depoſes them at pleaſure; exalting himſelf above all that is called God, or above all civil magiſtrates; ſo that theſe have only the name, not the thing; they are as kings, and look like ſuch, but are not really ſo; tho' what power they have, they receive, not from the beaſt, but from God; the beaſt receives his power and authority, as well as ſeat, from the dragon; but civil power and magiſtracy is from God, who ſuffers theſe princes, and gives them up to ſuch ſtupidity as to give their kingdom to the beaſt, and to exerciſe their power as he directs.

Ver. 13. Theſe have one mind, &c.] The princes of theſe kingdoms, and their ſubjects, become, in time, of one religion; firſt they were Arians, and then Papiſts; and for a long ſeries of time there was great unity between them, with reſpect to religious ſentiments, being zealouſly attached to the church of Rome, its principles and practices: and ſhall give their power and ſtrength unto the beaſt; the papal antichriſt, the eighth king, and ſeventh head; to him they have given power to exerciſe all eccleſiaſtical authority in their kingdoms; as to ordain biſhops, and deliver the pall to whom they will; to excommunicate offenders, and even lay their kingdoms under an interdict when they pleaſed; and have aſſiſted and defended the popes of Rome with all their force, with all their might and main, and to the utmoſt of their power, and have engaged in what have been called the holy wars, at their motion; they have given their riches and wealth, which are called the forces of ſtrength, Job xxxvi. 19. which they have, by various methods, drained them of; hence the whore of Rome came to be decked with gold, and pearls, and precious ſtones; yea, they have given them their kingdoms, and have received them from them, and become tributary to them.

Ver. 14. Theſe ſhall make war with the Lamb, &c.] The Lord Jeſus Chriſt, ſo often ſpoken of in this book under this character, ch. v. 6, 12. and vi. 1. and vii. 10. and xiv. 1. And this war is not to be underſtood of a war with him perſonally, or of that laſt and deciſive battle at Armageddon, in which will be the kings of the earth; but of a war with his members, of their perſecuting of the ſaints, and faithful witneſſes of Chriſt in all ages, within their juriſdictions, being inſtigated to it by the beaſt, under whoſe influence they are: and the Lamb ſhall overcome them; partly thro' the conſtancy of his people, who will not love their lives to the death, but freely lay them down for him; nor can any thing ſeparate them from the love of Chriſt, or prevail upon them to deſert him, his truths and ordinances, cauſe and intereſt, but are more than conquerors thro' him, and ſo he overcomes in them; and partly thro' a reformation which he effects, as in ſome of thoſe kingdoms already, as Sweden, Denmark, England, Scotland, and Ireland, and others, and will do in others hereafter; ſee ver. 16. for he is lord of lords, and king of kings; he is ſo by nature, as God and creator, to whom the kingdom of nature and providence belongs; and by office, as mediator, being made higher than the kings of the earth; hence he is an over-match for them, they can't ſtand before him; this is a reaſon why he overcomes them, and it can't be thought it ſhould be otherwiſe: this lamb is the lion of the tribe of Judah, and when he rouſes himſelf, and ſtirs up his wrath, and exerts his power, kings and great men flee from him; ſee Rev. vi. 15, 16, 17. Pſ. ii. 6, 9, 10, 11, 12. This is a proof of Chriſt's proper deity, the ſame titles being given to him, the Word and Son of God, as to God himſelf, Rev. xix. 16. 1 Tim. vi. 15, 16. And they that are with him; his ſervants and his ſoldiers, that fight under him, and abide by him, are called, and choſen, and faithful; they are choſen in Chriſt from all eternity, to grace here, and glory hereafter, and ſo ſtand oppoſed to the admirers of the beaſt, whoſe names are not written in the book of life, ver. 8. for this is to be underſtood of their eternal election, and not of their ſeparation by effectual vocation in time, for that is expreſſed by their being called; and tho' their calling is here ſet before election, as in 2 Pet. i. 10. yet it does not precede it; the Arabic verſion reads, choſen, called, faithful; firſt choſen by God the Father, then called, not with the bare external call by the miniſtry of the word, for ſo, many are called, and not choſen; but by ſpecial grace to ſpecial benefits, and with an holy and heavenly calling, and which is irreſiſtible, and without repentance; and being called they remain faithful: the meaning is, either that they have faith, or are believers in Chriſt; which faith they have beſtowed on them in effectual vocation, as a fruit of electing grace; and by this they overcome the world: or elſe, that they are perſons of integrity and uprightneſs, that are on the ſide of Chriſt; they are the faithful in the Lord, and are made ſo by him; and they are faithful to him, and abide by his Goſpel and ordinances, and in his cauſe and intereſt, even unto death; and ſo this character is expreſſive of the perſeverance of thoſe who are choſen and called, even unto the end.

Ver. 15. And he ſaith unto me, &c.] That is, the angel, who propoſed to give John the interpretation of the viſion, he went on with it as follows: the waters which thou ſaweſt, where the whore ſitteth, ver. 1. ſee the note there, are peoples, and multitudes, and nations, and tongues; denoting the vaſt multitude of people, of which the ſeveral kingdoms, of divers languages, conſiſt, which belong to the juriſdiction of Rome papal: it is an eaſtern way of ſpeaking, and is particularly uſed to expreſs the various kingdoms, and infinite number of people belonging to the Babyloniſh monarchy, which was an emblem of the antichriſtian ſtate, Dan. iii. 4, 7, 29. and iv. 1. and theſe are compared to waters, to many waters; which phraſe ſometimes is uſed for the ſea, Pſ. cvii. 23. becauſe of the vaſt numbers of them; the whole world wondred after the beaſt, and the kings and inhabitants of the earth have been ſubject to the ſee of Rome; and becauſe of their over-bearing force, carrying all before them; ſee Iſ. viii. 7, 8. Jer. xlvii. 2. Rev. xiii. 3, 4. and becauſe, like waters, they are continually upon the flux, one generation ſucceeding another; and becauſe of their inſtability, fickleneſs, and inconſtancy, as in religion, ſo in their conſtitution, they'll hate the whore they love; and as they frequently change and alter in their form, at laſt they will utterly ceaſe: ſo the Jews[w] interpret many waters, in Cant. viii. 7. of all people, and of the kings of the earth, and of the nations of the world; and they ſay, that many waters never ſignify any other than all the nations, and thoſe that are appointed over them[x]. So, he drew me out of many waters, Pſ. xviii. 16. is by the Targum on the place explained, he delivered me from many people. And ſo Pſ. xlvi. 4. is paraphraſed by the Targumiſt; "people, as rivers, and their ſtreams "ſhall come, and make glad the city of the "Lord;" ſee the Targum on Iſ. viii. 7. and in Ezek. xxxii. 2. where it is obſerved kingdoms are compared to waters[y].

Ver. 16. And the ten horns which thou ſaweſt upon the beaſt, &c.] Ver. 3. and which are interpreted of ten kings, ver. 12. The Alexandrian copy, the Complutenſian edition, and the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions read, and the beaſt; and then the ſenſe is, that the ten kings and ſtates in particular, who have defended antichriſt, and the whole empire in general, which has bore up and ſupported the whore of Rome: theſe ſhall hate the whore; her principles and ſentiments, her doctrines, which are doctrines of devils, her wicked practices, her idolatries, adulteries, murders, and thefts; they'll repent of their fornications with her, and ceaſe from them; their love will be turned to hatred, and the latter will be greater than ever the former was, like Amnon's to Tamar; and as it uſually is with men towards harlots, when they ſee their follies, and how they have been deceived and abuſed by them: and ſhall make her deſolate; leave her, quit her communion; no more commit fornication with her, or join with her in her idolatrous worſhip; but come out from that apoſtate church, and renounce all fellowſhip with her, and perſuade and engage as many as they can influence to do the ſame: and naked; ſtrip her of her purple, ſcarlet colour, gold, pearls, and precious ſtones; ceaſe to give their power and ſtrength, with-hold their taxes and tribute, deprive her of her power and authority, civil and eccleſiaſtical, in their realms, and take away even her patrimony from her; and not only ſo, but expoſe her ſhame and filthineſs, her abominable principles and practices to all the world; which has been in part done already: and ſhall eat her fleſh; not literally, but myſtically; not out of love, but hatred; they ſhall take that to themſelves, and make uſe of, which have fattened her, as biſhopricks, and other benefices, lands, endowments belonging to abbies, and monaſteries, and other religious houſes; an inſtance and example of which we have in king Henry the eighth's time; ſo ſome underſtand this phraſe of devouring the ſubſtance of others, in Pſ. xxvii. 2. Dan. vii. 5. So the Targumiſts often interpret fleſh and fatneſs, by riches, goods, or ſubſtance; the phraſe in Iſ. xvii. 4. the fatneſs of his fleſh ſhall wax lean, is paraphraſed, עותר יקריה, the riches of his glory ſhall be carried away; and the words in Mic. iii. 3. who ſhall alſo eat the fleſh of my people, &c. are rendered, and they who ſpoil, נכסי עמי, the goods or ſubſtance of my people, and take away their precious mammon, or money from them. And again, Zech. xi. 9. let the reſt eat, every one the fleſh of another, is in the Targum, let a man ſpoil, נכסי, the goods or ſubſtance of his neighbour; and in ver. 16. he ſhall eat the fleſh of the fat; the paraphraſe is, he ſhall ſpoil, נכסי, the goods or ſubſtance of the rich. And burn her with fire; alluding to the law in Lev. xxi. 9. which required, that the daughter of a prieſt, that played the whore, ſhould be burnt with fire; and this is to be underſtood literally of burning the city of Rome, the ſeat of the whore, with fire; of which ſee ch. xviii. 8, 9, 18. It has been very near being burnt in times paſt, as by Alaricus the Goth, Attila the Hun, Genſeric the Vandal, and by Totilas, and in later times by Charles the fifth; and would have been, had they not been diſſuaded or diverted from it; and which were ſo many preludes and warnings of its future fate: and we may learn from hence, that Rome, and the Romiſh antichriſt, will not be deſtroyed by the Turks, but by the chriſtians; and by the ſame ſtates, and kingdoms, and princes, by which the whore of Rome has been ſupported in her grandeur, power, and authority, who will revolt from popery, and embrace the pure Goſpel of Chriſt: and this ſhows, that the ten horns, or kingdoms, into which the Roman empire has been divided, will ſubſiſt in this form at the deſtruction of Rome; wherefore, it has been rightly obſerved by ſome, that not one of theſe kingdoms ſhall ever be able to riſe to univerſal monarchy. France has been for many years attempting it, but in vain; and we may ſit down eaſy and ſatisfied, aſſuring ourſelves with the greateſt confidence, that all attempts this way will be fruitleſs; there never will be another univerſal monarchy on earth, but that of Chriſt's; ſee Dan. ii. 37, 39, 40. and vii. 3, 23, 27.

Ver. 17. For God hath put in their hearts to fulfill his will, &c.] By doing the preceding things to the whore of Rome, whoſe deſtruction is according to the will of God; it is his approving will, what he likes of, and will be well-pleaſed with; it is his will of command, what he will order to be done, ch. xviii. 6, 7. and it is his determining will, his will of purpoſe, his decree, what he has reſolved ſhall be done; he has fixed the time of her reign, and longer than that ſhe ſhall not continue: and theſe kings in deſtroying her, will not do ſo much their own will, as the will of God, and God will put it into their hearts to do it; he will work in them both to will and to do; he'll fill them with hatred to her; he'll incline their minds to do the above things, as it will be in the power of their hands to do them; he who has the hearts of all men, and even of kings in his hands, and can turn them as rivers of water, will move them hereunto, Prov. xxi. 1. he that turned the hearts of the Egyptians to hate his people Iſrael, Pſ. cv. 25. will turn the hearts of theſe kings to hate the whore, and do unto her as is here predicted; and the ſame God will do this, who has, on the other hand, already put into their hearts to do the following things: and to agree; this clauſe is wanting in the Alexandrian copy, and in the Vulgate Latin verſion, and is the ſame with that of having one mind, ver. 13. that is, being of the ſame religion; God giving them up to a reprobate mind, to believe a lye, that they might be damned; which muſt be underſtood not of the ſame individuals, but of their predeceſſors; unleſs this is to be interpreted of their agreeing together againſt the whore, to pull her down, and ſet up the pure worſhip and ſervice of God; for this is a bleſſing of grace from God, who gives his people one heart and one way, that they may fear him, Jer. xxxii. 39. but the former ſenſe ſeems beſt, ſince it follows, and give their kingdom unto the beaſt; the eighth king, and ſeventh head, the pope of Rome; to whom they have given their power and ſtrength in things civil and eccleſiaſtical, their wealth and riches; and have received their crowns from him, and have held their kingdoms by him, and become tributary to him: and this is done, and will be, until the words of God ſhall be fulfilled; concerning the afflictions of his church and people, and the reign of antichriſt, for the ſpace of forty and two months, ch. xi. 2. and xiii. 5. all which while they are fulfilling the ſecret will of God, unknown to them, and yet act againſt his revealed will, and break his commands; juſt as the Jews, ignorant of the prophecies of the Old Teſtament, fulfilled them in condemning Chriſt, Acts xiii. 27. That God ſhould put it into the hearts of theſe kings to fulfill his will, in deſtroying the whore of Rome, is eaſily received; but there ſeems ſome difficulty that he ſhould put it into their hearts, to agree and give their kingdom to the beaſt, which was ſinful: now this he did, not by infuſing ſin into them, which is contrary to his pure and holy nature; but by leaving them, and giving them up to their own hearts luſts; ſtirring up, and moving upon their minds, and directing the motions of it, to ſuch and ſuch objects, which they readily and voluntarily fell in with; and yet the concern of God herein does not, nor do his decrees about ſin infringe the liberty of the will in acting, or excuſe the ſinfulneſs of the action, or make God the author of ſin; as the inſtances of ſelling of Joſeph by his brethren, and the crucifixion of Chriſt by the Jews, ſhew.

Ver. 18. And the woman which thou ſaweſt, &c.] Ver. 3. as there deſcribed, is that great city, often mentioned in this book; great Babylon, the city of Rome, ch. xi. 8. and xiv. 8. and xvi. 19. which reigneth over the kings of the earth; which then reigned in John's time over the kings of the earth; and this clearly points out the city of Rome, for there was no other city then, but that, which reigned over the kings of the earth; that was then the metropolis of the Roman empire, to which the whole world was ſubject; and therefore it is called all the world, Luke ii. 1. and ſince, all the kings of the empire have been under the juriſdiction of Rome papal. It was formerly called, urbs regum, a city of kings [z], either for the reaſon in the text, or becauſe its inhabitants looked like kings.

CHAP. XVIII.

THIS chapter gives an account of the fall of Babylon, and of the lamentation of many, and of the joy of others by reaſon of it; which account is publiſhed by ſeveral angels: the firſt that declares her fall, is deſcribed by his original, deſcending from heaven; by the great power he had; by his reſplendent glory, and by his mighty cry in publiſhing her deſtruction; which is illuſtrated by the deſolate condition ſhe will be in upon her fall; the reaſons of which are given, becauſe the nations and kings of the earth had committed fornication with her, and the merchants of the earth were enriched by her luxury, ver. 1, 2, 3. Another voice is heard from heaven, calling upon the people of God, firſt to come out of her, leſt partaking of her ſins they ſhould ſhare in her plagues, ſeeing her iniquities had reached to heaven, and were remembred before God; and next to take full vengeance on her, becauſe ſhe had glorified herſelf, lived deliciouſly, and in great ſecurity, ver. 4, 5, 6, 7. And then follows a continuation of the account of her deſtruction, what her plagues would be, death, mourning, famine, and fire; and which would be ſudden, in one hour, and certain, from the power and juſtice of God, ver. 8. Next follow the lamentations of the kings, merchants, and maſters of ſhips, becauſe of her greatneſs, riches, and merchandize, which are all come to nothing, ver. 9—19. And then the church, the ſaints, apoſtles, and prophets, are called upon to rejoice at the vengeance taken on her, ver. 20. upon which a mighty angel appears, who by an action ſignifies the manner of her deſtruction, and the irrecoverableneſs of her ſtate and condition, ver. 21. and declares her utter ruin, by affirming that nothing that was either delightful or profitable, or neceſſary or comfortable, ſhould any more be found in her; giving the reaſons of it, becauſe of her luxury, idolatry, and blood-ſhed, ver. 22, 23, 24.

Ver. 1. And after theſe things, &c.] The viſion of the woman on the ſcarlet-coloured beaſt, and the interpretation of both by the angel: I ſaw another angel; not the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, tho' the ſeveral things ſaid of this angel agree with him; nor one of the miniſtring ſpirits, tho' the characters of him will alſo ſuit with one of them; but rather a miniſter of the Goſpel, or a ſett of Goſpel miniſters, who will ariſe a little before the downfal of Babylon, in the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt; tho' not the ſame with the angel of fire, ch. xiv. 18. as ſome have thought, becauſe of his illuſtrious appearance, and the loudneſs of his voice; but the ſame with the angel, or third thundering voice in ch. xiv. 6. for not only the times of both agree, but the ſelfſame words are expreſſed by one as by the other; and this angel is diſtinct from him that ſhowed John the preceding viſion, and gave him the interpretation of it, and from all the ſeven angels that had the vials, and is deſcribed as follows: and firſt by the place from whence he came, John ſaw him come down from heaven; denoting the ſuddenneſs of his appearance and cry; he came down at once, and cried out immediately; the ſubject of his cry the deſtruction of Babylon, being what will be at an unawares; and alſo the commiſſion and authority of the miniſters ſignified by him, who will have their warrant from heaven to ſay what they will deliver; ſo that this likewiſe expreſſes the truth of their meſſage, ſince both that and they come from heaven: having great power; to do great work, to declare the fall of Babylon the great: or having great authority; being ſent from the king of kings, in his name, as his embaſſador, to proclaim what ſhortly will come to paſs; an event of the greateſt importance to the glory of God, the intereſt of Chriſt, and the comfort of his people: and the earth was lightned with his glory; ſee Ezek. xliii. 2. by which is meant the glorious Goſpel of Chriſt, the light of which will at this time be very great: theſe miniſters will run to and fro the earth, and knowledge will be increaſed, and the earth will be filled with it: the Arabic verſion reads, with the ſplendor of his countenance; and the Ethiopic verſion, with the ſplendor of his countenance, and his glory; ſee Iſ. lx. 1, 2, 3.

Ver. 2. And he cried mightily with a ſtrong voice, &c.] Which ſhews not only the vehemence and affection of the miniſters of the word, who will publiſh what follows, but the greatneſs and importance of it; and this loud voice may be, as for the ſake of the whole church in general, that all may hear, ſo for the ſake of thoſe of the Lord's people in particular, that will be in Babylon at this time; and it may have regard to that deep ſleep and ſpirit of ſlumber that Babylon itſelf will be in, which notwithſtanding this loud cry, will remain inſenſible of its ruin till it comes upon her, as was the caſe of old Babylon, Jer. li. 39, 40, 41. ſaying, Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen; the whole world is not deſigned by Babylon, for it is diſtinguiſhed from all nations in the following verſe; nor Babylon in Chaldea, which was fallen long before John ſaw this viſion, but Rome papal; ſee the note on ch. xiv. 8. ſo the woman is called in ch. xvii. 5. who ſits on ſeven mountains, and is that great city, the city of Rome, that reigns over the kings of the earth, ver. 9, 18. this is ſaid to be fallen, becauſe in a very little time after this declaration it will fall; for as yet it was not deſtroyed, ſince after this the Lord's people are called upon to come out of her, and are bid to reward her double; and it is declared, that her plagues ſhould come in one day, and ſhe ſhould be burnt with fire; and an angel after this throws a milſtone into the ſea, ſaying, that ſo ſhould Babylon be thrown down, ver. 4, 6, 8, 21. and it is repeated to denote the certainty and utter deſtruction of her: and which is more fully expreſſed by what follows, and is become the habitation of devils; as old Babylon was of ſatyrs, Iſ. xiii. 21. dæmons which appeared in a hairy form, like goats, and the word is rendered devils in Lev. xvii. 7. and the inhabitants of Rome now are no other; the pope and his cardinals, the prieſts, jeſuits, monks, and friars, are the ſpirits of devils, and their doctrines the doctrines of devils; ſee ch. xvi. 14. 1 Tim. iv. 1. and the hold of every foul ſpirit; devils are frequently called unclean ſpirits, and theſe appear in deſert and deſolate places, Matt. xii. 43. where they are either of choice, or rather are obliged to it; and ſo the word tranſlated hold ſignifies a priſon, or place of confinement; and ſuch as are comparable to unclean ſpirits, now haunt and abound in Rome, and its territories; ſee ch. xvi. 13. and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird; ſuch as vultures, kites, owls, &c. which generally reſide in deſolate and uninhabited places; the Alexandrian copy, the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions add, and the hold, or ſeat of every unclean and hateful beaſt; and ſo the deſolation of old Babylon, is deſcribed by wild beaſts and doleful creatures dwelling in it, Iſ. xiii. 21, 22. Jer. l. 39. and li. 37. Some conſider all this as a reaſon of the deſtruction of Babylon or Rome, becauſe it now is the reſidence of perſons comparable to devils, foul ſpirits, hateful birds, and beaſts of prey; but this account rather deſcribes its ſtate and caſe in which it will be after its ruin, being never more to be inhabited by men, in alluſion to old Babylon, Iſ. xiii. 19, 20. Jer. li. 62.

Ver. 3. For all nations have drunk of the wine of the wrath of her fornication, &c.] That is, all the nations of the Roman empire, the European nations, otherwiſe the pagan and Mahometan nations have not; but theſe have, being made to drink by her, and made drunk therewith, that is, with her idolatries; ſee the note on ch. xiv. 8. And the kings of the earth have committed fornication with her; joined with her in her idolatrous worſhip and practices, and encouraged the ſame, and obliged their ſubjects to them in their dominions; ſee the note on ch. xvii. 2. And the merchants of the earth are waxed rich through the abundance of her delicacies; or luxury; which is not to be underſtood in a literal ſenſe; tho' it is true that many merchants, in all ages, have enriched themſelves by ſending their commodities to Rome, where, thro' the vaſt conſumption and luxuriousneſs of the place, they have bore a good price; but this is to be interpreted of ſpiritual merchants; theſe are ſuch who do not merchandize by ſea, but are land-merchants, the merchants of the earth, and are ſaid to be the great men of the earth, ver. 23. ſuch as are equal to princes, lords, and nobles; ſuch are the cardinals, archbiſhops, and biſhops; tho' the inferior clergy of the Romiſh church, who are under theſe, may be included: to which may be added, that one part of their wares is ſaid to be the ſouls of men, ver. 13. which plainly ſhows what ſort of merchants theſe are; they are ſuch who make merchandize of men, and pretend to ſell them heaven, and the ſalvation of their ſouls; theſe are they that deal in pardons and indulgences, which they ſell to ignorant people, and for a ſum of money ſay maſs to fetch ſouls out of purgatory: all things have been ſaleable at Rome, crucifixes, prieſts, altars, temples, prayers, heaven, Chriſt, yea God himſelf, as the poet Mantuan expreſſes it; and becauſe of theſe idolatries, and wicked practices, Rome will be at laſt deſtroyed.

Ver. 4. And I heard another voice from heaven, &c.] Either of another, or of the ſame angel, or rather of God, or Chriſt himſelf, ſince the perſons addreſſed are called his people: ſaying, come out of her my people; meaning either his elect ones, till now uncalled, being ſuch whom God had choſen for his people, and were ſo by virtue of the covenant of grace, were given to Chriſt as his people, and were redeemed by him, tho' till this call, in an unconverted ſtate; or elſe ſuch who had been ſecretly called by the grace of God, but had not made a publick profeſſion of the Goſpel, nor bore an open teſtimony againſt the Romiſh idolatry; for as the Lord had a righteous Lot in Sodom, and ſaints where ſatan's ſeat was, Rome pagan, ſo he will have a people in Rome papal, at the time when its deſtruction draws near; and theſe will be called out, not only in a ſpiritual ſenſe, to quit the communion of the church, to forſake its idolatries, and not touch the unclean thing, ſeparate themſelves from her, and bear a teſtimony againſt her doctrines and worſhip, but in a literal ſenſe, locally; they ſhall be bid to come out of her, as Lot was ordered to go out of Sodom before its burning, and the people of the Jews out of Babylon before the taking of it, Jer. l. 8. and li. 45. to which reference is here had; and as the chriſtians were called out of Jeruſalem before the deſtruction of it: this ſhows the particular knowledge the Lord has of his people, be they where they will, and the gracious care he takes of them, that they periſh not with others; and that it is his will they ſhould be a ſeparate people from the reſt of the world; and this call of his ſufficiently juſtifies the proteſtants in their ſeparation from the church of Rome, and every ſeparation from any apoſtate church: that ye be not partakers of her ſins; by conniving at them, or committing the ſame; and all ſuch are partakers of them, and have fellowſhip with theſe unfruitful works of darkneſs, that are in the communion of that church; and thoſe that dwell at Rome are in great danger of being ſo, and cannot well avoid it; yea, even thoſe that only go to ſee it, and ſtay but for a time in it, and that not only thro' the ſtrength and influence of example, but thro' the force of power and authority: and that ye receive not of her plagues; or puniſhments; the ſeven laſt plagues, which belong to her, the vials of which will be poured out upon one or other of the antichriſtian ſtates, and the fifth particularly will fall upon Rome, the ſeat of the beaſt, and is what is here referred to.

Ver. 5. For her ſins have reached unto heaven, &c.] Or have followed unto heaven; one after another, in one age after another, until they have been as it were heaped up together, and have reached the heavens; the phraſe denotes the multitude of them, God's knowledge and notice of them, and the cry of them to him; ſee Gen. xviii. 20. Jon. i. 2. the Alexandrian copy and Complutenſian edition read, have cleaved, or glued, and ſo the Syriac and Arabic verſions ſeem to have read; her ſins were as it were ſoldered together, and ſtuck faſt to her, and being joined and linked together, made a long chain, and reached to heaven, and cleaved to that, and cried for vengeance: and God hath remembred her iniquities; and is about to puniſh her for them; for as forgiveneſs of ſin is ſignified by a non-remembrance of it, ſo puniſhment of ſin by a remembrance of it, and of the perſons that commit it; ſee ch. xvi. 19.

Ver. 6. Reward her even as ſhe rewarded you, &c.] This is ſpoken to the people of God, who are before called out of Babylon; and the chief of them are the ſeven angels with the ſeven laſt plagues of the wrath of God, and the ſame with the ten kings that will burn the whore with fire; theſe are called upon to take vengeance, by way of retaliation for what ſhe had done to them, in alluſion to what is ſaid of old Babylon, Jer. l. 15. and li. 24, 35. and muſt be underſtood not of what ſhe will have done to them perſonally, but to their predeceſſors in the faith of Chriſt in former ages; that as ſhe had hated them, and made war with them, ſo now they ſhould hate her, and make war with her; and as ſhe had ſtripped them naked of their cloaths, and ſpoiled them of their worldly goods and ſubſtance, ſo now they ſhould ſtrip her naked of her harlot's attire, of her gold, ſilver, and precious ſtones, and make her and her territories deſolate; and as ſhe has burnt many of the precious ſaints in the flames, as here in England, and elſewhere, ſo now they ſhall utterly burn her with fire; and as ſhe has ſhed the blood of the righteous, and drank it, and been drunk with it, they ſhall give her blood to drink; and as ſhe hath killed multitudes with the ſword, ſo now ſhall they kill her and her children; ſee ch. xiii. 12. nor is this contrary to the doctrine of Chriſt and his Apoſtles, and the ſpirit of chriſtianity, which will not admit of revenge, Matt. v. 38, 39. Rom. xii. 17, 19, 20, 21. ſince this will not be private, but public revenge, inflicted by chriſtian princes and magiſtrates, who are miniſters of God, and revengers to execute wrath on them that do evil: and double unto her double according to her works; the meaning is not to inflict upon her a puniſhment doubly greater than her ſins, for this would be contrary to the juſtice of God; nor does ever God puniſh men in this life more, but leſs than their iniquities deſerve; nor can any temporal puniſhment be doubly greater than ſin, which deſerves eternal death; and with this ſhe will be puniſhed hereafter, and therefore will not have her full puniſhment now, and much leſs a greater than her ſins required; to which may be added, that this will be according to her works, her wicked works, and therefore will not exceed the demerit of her ſins: but the ſenſe is, that if it was poſſible to be done, they ſhould uſe her with double ſeverity to that ſhe had uſed them with; ſeeing her ſins deſerved a ſeverer treatment than even they had had from her; the phraſe ſignifies an abundant and utter deſtruction, a puniſhment which was ſuitable and ſufficient; ſee Iſ. xl. 2. Jer. xvi. 18. and xvii. 18. and it ſuggeſts, that they ſhould not ſpare her, nor pity her, but uſe her with the greateſt ſeverity imaginable, it being not poſſible to exceed her due deſerts, or what her works required: in the cup which ſhe hath filled, fill to her double; not in the cup of her abominations, her errors, idolatries, and wickedneſs; but in the cup of afflictions and trouble, which ſhe wrung out to the people of God, in that give her double portion: the ſenſe is the ſame as before.

Ver. 7. How much ſhe hath glorified herſelf, &c.] And acted the proud and haughty part in exalting herſelf above all emperors, kings, and princes, above all kingdoms and ſtates, and alſo above all churches, aſſuming arrogant titles, and even blaſphemous names; ſee ch. xiii. 1, 5. and lived deliciouſly; in a very luxuriant manner, as the popes, cardinals, archbiſhops, biſhops, prieſts, monks, and friars have done; ſome being clothed in purple and ſcarlet, and in gold and ſilver, and all living upon the fat of the land, and in rioting and drunkenneſs, in chambering and wantoneſs: ſo much torment and ſorrow give her; by pulling down her pride, which goes before a fall, than which nothing could more torment and afflict her; by ſtripping her of her fine cloaths and rich apparel; and by taking away her fat benefices from her, which will cut her to the heart; and by burning her with fire, which will be very excruciating: for ſhe ſaith in her heart, I ſit a queen; a lady of kingdoms, doms, as in Iſ. xlvii. 5. to which the reference is; having a temporal power and authority over the kings of the earth, and a ſpiritual juriſdiction over all churches, apoſtate ones, being the mother of harlots; and her ſitting as ſuch, as it well agrees with the whore on many waters, and the woman on the ſcarlet-coloured beaſt and ſeven mountains, who are all the ſame, and is very ſuitable to antichriſt, who pretends to ſit in Peter's chair, and does ſit in the temple of God, as if he was God; ſo it is expreſſive of her empire and government over nations and churches, and of the continuance of it, as ſhe imagines, ſee Iſ. xlvii. 7. and ſo the Ethiopic verſion renders it, I ſhall reign always: to which ſhe adds, and am no widow; nor never ſhall be, as ſhe flatters herſelf, ſee Iſ. xlvii. 8. Were ſhe the true ſpouſe of Chriſt, as ſhe boaſts herſelf, ſhe indeed would be no widow, for Chriſt is an everlaſting and never-dying huſband; but ſhe is the whore of the kings of the earth, and though ſhe fancies ſhe ſhall be no widow, that is, bereft of people and power, ſee Lam. i. 1. becauſe ſhe now ſits on many waters, people, multitudes, and nations and tongues; yet ere long, like old Babylon, ſhe will have no men in her, but will be inhabited by devils, foul ſpirits, and hateful birds: and ſhall ſee no ſorrow; thro' loſs of children, power, and authority; ſee Iſ. xlvii. 8. but in this alſo ſhe will be miſtaken; her children will be killed with death, as is threatned to Jezabel, ch. ii. 23. and her plagues ſhall come upon her at once: now theſe words may be conſidered either as ſpoken by her when in the height of her power and glory, as ſhe was about three or four hundred years ago; or juſt before her deſtruction, which ſeems to be the caſe, and looks as if ſhe would regain her power, and be in ſtatu quo before her utter ruin; ſee the note on ch. xi. 2.

Ver. 8. Therefore ſhall her plagues come in one day, &c.] The ſeven laſt plagues, which will be in a very little time executed upon her, very ſpeedily and very quickly one after another, if not all together; and particularly the fifth vial may be reſpected, as well as the plagues that follow; ſee Iſ. xlvii. 9. death; not the ſecond death, which will not be till after the deciſive battle at Armageddon, when the beaſt will be taken, and caſt alive into the lake which burns with fire and brimſtone, which is the ſecond death; but either the peſtilence, which is called ſo, ch. vi. 8. or rather death by the ſword, war, which will be brought upon her, and in which ſhe and her children will be ſlain with the ſword: mourning; for the loſs of her children, the deſtruction of the city of Rome itſelf, the ſeat of the beaſt, and for the darkneſs of his kingdom, the inhabitants of which ſhall be in ſuch pain, as to gnaw their tongues for it: famine; which generally attends war, at leaſt ſieges; and it looks as if Rome would be beſieged a while before it is deſtroyed, which will produce a grievous famine in it; this is oppoſed to her living deliciouſly, as well as the two former are to her notion of ſitting a queen for ever, and knowing no ſorrow: and ſhe ſhall be utterly burnt with fire; the burning of Rome has been attempted ſeveral times, by different perſons, and has been burnt in part, but not wholly, ſee the note on ch. xvii. 16. but now it will be entirely deſtroyed by fire; either by fire from heaven, as Sodom and Gomorrha were; or by fire breaking out of the earth, it being very manifeſt that there are Volcano's, burning mountains, and ſubterraneous fires in thoſe parts, which ſeem to be ſo many preparations in nature for the burning of that city; or rather by the ten kings, who will ſet fire to it; and it may be by all theſe ways. The Jews have a notion that at the coming of the Meſſiah, Rome will be burnt [a], as Sodom has been; you will find, ſay they [b], that of Sodom and of that kingdom (Rome, of which they are ſpeaking, and which they afterwards call the fourth kingdom) it is decreed concerning them both, that they ſhould be burnt with fire; of Sodom, Gen. xix. 24. and of the fourth kingdom (Rome) Iſ. xxxiv. 9. for ſtrong is the Lord God that judgeth her; the Alexandrian copy reads, that has judged; and ſo the Syriac and Arabic verſions; that is, has purpoſed and determined her deſtruction, and therefore it is unavoidable; he that has reſolved upon it, and foretold it, and has adjudged her to it, is the Lord God Almighty; and he is able to execute the ſentence determined and pronounced, and it is impoſſible ſhe ſhould eſcape: it may be underſtood of Chriſt the mighty God, the judge of quick and dead; ſee Jer. l. 34.

Ver. 9. And the kings of the earth who have committed fornication, &c.] Idolatry, ch. xvii. 2. and xviii. 3. and lived deliciouſly with her; ver. 3, 7. joining with her in her ſenſual, as well as in her idolatrous practices: ſhall bewail her, and lament for her; ſhall mourn inwardly, and by various geſtures outwardly expreſs their ſorrow at her deſolation; ſee Ezek. xxvii. 30, 31, 32. theſe will not be the ten kings who will burn the whore with fire, and then repent of what they have done, and weep over her, as Titus did at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem; as ſome Popiſh writers have fancied, for they will hate the whore, and eat her fleſh; but earthly and idolatrous kings, who will be in the communion of the church of Rome: when they ſhall ſee the ſmoke of her burning; as Abraham ſaw the ſmoke of Sodom and Gomorrha go up like the ſmoke of a furnace; by which they will perceive that her judgment is come, and her ruin begun.

Ver. 10. Standing afar off for the fear of her torment, &c.] Leſt they themſelves ſhould ſhare in it, who have partook of her ſins; either they will not be in a capacity to help her, or they will be diſpirited, and will be in awe and dread of God's righteous judgments: ſaying, alas, alas! that great city Babylon! that mighty city! it will aggravate their ſorrow, when they reflect upon the former grandeur, magnificence, power, and authority of the city and ſee of Rome, ſo often called in this book the great city; and ſo it is by other writers; the Jews call it ſo: they ſay [c], when the Meſſiah comes, "the kings "of the world ſhall be gathered to קרתא רבתא, "the great city of Rome; and the holy bleſſed God "will caſt upon them fire and hail, and great hail-"ſtones (with which compare ch. xvi. 21.) and "they ſhall periſh from the world, except thoſe "kings that do not come there." It is common with the Jewiſh writers to call the Roman empire Edom; and Magdiel, one of the dukes of Edom, Gen. xxxvi. 43. who has his name from greatneſs, is interpreted by one of their commentators [d] of Rome; the reaſon of which, another of them ſays [e], is becauſe Rome is become great above all kingdoms: the mount of Eſau in Obad. ver. 21. is interpreted ית כרכא רבא, that great city of Eſau, which is Rome [f]; and the ſame epithet it has in the Talm[illegible]; and Porphyry calls it την μεγαλην πολιν, that great city, without making mention of its name, as here; ſo among the Latins [h], Magnæ ſpes altera Romæ: for in one hour is thy judgment come; the Ethiopic verſion ſion reads, the hour of her judgment; the time of her puniſhment fixed by God; but the ſenſe is, that her vengeance was ſuddenly come upon her; this is the judgment of the great whore, which the angel propoſed to ſhow to John, ch. xvii. 1.

Ver. 11. And the merchants of the earth ſhall weep and mourn over her, &c.] Who theſe are, ſee the note on ver. 3. and what their lamentation, ver. 16. the reaſon of their weeping and mourning follows: for no man buyeth their merchandize any more; what their merchandize is, is expreſſed in the two next verſes; and this ſhows that it is not to be underſtood merely in a literal ſenſe; for ſuch commodities in general as are there mentioned, if they go not off at one place, they will at another; and the decay of trade in one city does not put a ſtop to buſineſs all the world over; and often ſo it is, that the ruin of commerce in one place is the riſe of it in another; and all the things hereafter ſpoken of, excepting the laſt article, are what will be merchandized in one place or another to the end of the world; unleſs the ſenſe ſhould be, that no man at Rome, and the parts adjacent, will buy of this merchandize any more; but though they ſhould not, this could not be cauſe of ſuch lamentation as is afterwards expreſſed, ſince their goods might be taken off elſewhere; but it looks as if this muſt be underſtood of ſuch kind of wares as will be diſuſed and deſpiſed all the world over, and they will meet with no cuſtomers any where to deal with them in them.

Ver. 12. The merchandize of gold and ſilver, and precious ſtones, and of pearls, &c.] Things for treaſure and ornament, and with which the great whore is ſaid to be decked, ch. xvii. 4. and literally underſtood, may denote the vaſt riches which theſe ſpiritual merchants, or factors for Rome, cardinals, archbiſhops, biſhops, prieſts, monks, and friars bring into their own coffers and the pope's, by the trade they drive in her wares, with the ſouls of men; and may have alſo a regard to what their images, chalices, crowns, mitres, &c. are made of, and what ſome of them are adorned with; and as Tyre, to whom the reference is in the ſeveral particulars of this account, had her merchants for theſe things, Ezek. xxvii. 12, 16, 22. ſo Mr. Brightman thinks that in theſe, and in ſome following ones, Spain is Rome's merchant, which fetches them from the Indies for her: but theſe things myſtically taken, ſometimes deſign the doctrines of the Goſpel, 1 Cor. iii. 12. and which are to be preferred to, and more to be eſteemed than thouſands of gold and ſilver; and theſe Rome's merchants pretended to deliver out; but inſtead of them, they put off wood, hay, and ſtubble, yea doctrines of devils, and lyes in hypocriſy; and ſometimes the grace of God is meant, Rev. iii. 18. which is more precious than gold that periſheth; and this they pretend to convey to men ex opere operato, in the ordinances, as baptiſm, &c. and to communicate the Spirit, with his gifts and graces, for money, which is direct ſimony; yea, they pretend to ſell eternal life, nay Chriſt and God himſelf: and fine linnen, and purple, and ſilk, and ſcarlet; things which belong to apparel and dreſs; and literally taken, the fine linnen is for their copes, w[illegible] by biſhops and by chantors, and ſub-chantors, and for ſurplices wore by their prieſts, in imitation of the Jewiſh prieſts, and for maſs-cloaths, &c. the purple, ſilk, and ſcarlet, were for the popes, cardinals, archbiſhops, and biſhops; ſo the woman on the ſcarlet-coloured beaſt is ſaid to be arrayed in purple and ſcarlet, ch. xvii. 4. Tyre had its merchants for theſe, Ezek. xxvii. 7, 16, 24. the fine linnen and ſilk may myſtically denote the holy lives, good works, and merits of the ſaints, thoſe of them called works of ſupererogation, which become the church's ſtock, and they ſell out for money to others that want; which is a monſtrous kind of ware, and a dreadful impoſition upon men, ſince men cannot be ſaved and juſtified by works; and the beſt of men are ſo far from having a redundancy of works, that in every thing they ſin and offend, and are greatly deficient; and they are ſo far from helping others, that they are unprofitable ſervants themſelves: the purple and ſcarlet may ſignify the blood of Chriſt, which they pretend to ſell in the maſs; nay, they have pretended to have had the very liquid blood of Chriſt, which they have carried in a chryſtal glaſs, thick on one ſide, and tranſparent on the other; and ſo could not be ſeen by perſons in a mortal ſin, until they had given a good deal of money, and then the clear ſide was by ſleight of hand turned to them; and which was no other than the blood of a duck, renewed weekly by the prieſt; which trick for a long time brought in vaſt ſums of money, and was detected at Hales in Glouceſterſhire, in Henry the Eighth's time; or theſe may intend the ſufferings of the ſaints, which likewiſe come into the treaſure of the church, and are at its diſpoſe for money, the virtue of which being very great for the ſalvation of mens ſouls: and all thyne wood, and all manner veſſels of ivory, and all manner veſſels of moſt precious wood, and of braſs, and iron, and marble; things for utenſils and furniture, not ſo much for their houſes, as for their churches; Tyre had its merchants for theſe, Ezek. xxvii. 5, 6, 12, 13, 15. Thyne wood, Pliny ſays [1], was very durable, and of it the rafters of antient temples were made; and may deſign ſuch like laſting and odoriferous wood as cypreſs, cedar, &c. uſed in the popiſh churches, for the embelliſhing of them, and for images in them; it may be the ſame with the wood of the Almug, or Algum trees, ſince theſe are rendered Thyne wood in the Vulgate Latin verſion in 1 Kings x. 11, 12. 2 Chron. ix. 10, 11. veſſels of ivory, may be boxes made thereof, in which the hoſt is put, and the reliques of ſaints are preſerved: and veſſels of moſt precious wood, or ſtone, as the Alexandrian copy, Vulgate Latin, and Ethiopic verſions read, and of braſs, iron, and marble, may intend various veſſels uſed in their churches; as veſſels for holy water, fonts of marble, and other valuable ſtones, for baptiſm, cenſers of iron and braſs to burn incenſe in. Cocceius thinks that by theſe veſſels of different materials are meant good men; who are like ſweet-ſmelling wood for the fragrancy of their doctrines and lives; and like iron, braſs, and marble for their courage, conſtancy, and patience; and who have been canonized for ſaints, which has brought in much money into the pope's coffers: this is a practice in imitation of the heathens, who deified men, and ſet them over particular days and affairs; and the privileges of ſuch canonization among the papiſts are, that ſuch a ſaint has his name ſet in the calendar in red letters, may have churches and altars dedicated to him, and his image ſet up in them, and a holyday be kept for him, and may be prayed to, and worſhipped; a practice dreadfully derogatory to the glory of Chriſt's perſon and office, but is that in which theſe merchants have found their account; for thro' references, commiſſions, and reports, for proof of the ſaints character and miracles, his friends are at very great expence before the affair is iſſued, eſpecially if rich; our king Henry the Seventh was very deſirous of having his kinſman Henry the Sixth canonized, and ſolicited the pope for it, but he would not do it under fifteen hundred ducats of gold, which the king thought was too much, and ſo declined it.

[1] Nat. Hiſt. l. 13. c. 16.

Ver. 13. And cinnamon, and odours, and ointments, and frankincenſe, &c.] Things for delight and pleaſure, for the gratifying of the ſenſes; cinnamon and odours were uſed for perfuming, Prov. vii. 17. anointing with oil was uſed at feaſts, Pſ. xxiii. 5. and frankincenſe, or cenſings, at banquets, and for the regaling of perſons after food [k]: theſe cuſtoms obtained among the eaſtern people. Tyre had its merchants for theſe things, Ezek. xxvii. 19, 22. and Mr. Brightman thinks Italy is Rome's merchant in theſe, which it fetches from Greece, Arabia, and Egypt; it may be theſe rather reſpect the eccleſiaſtical uſe of them: cinnamon, odours, and frankincenſe may ſignify the perfumings and cenſings uſed in churches, or the burning incenſe in imitation of the ſweet incenſe under the law; and ointments may denote their chriſm, or anointing with oil at baptiſm, imagining that Chriſt was anointed with material oil at his baptiſm, whereas it was with the Holy Ghoſt: moreover, theſe things may be myſtically underſtood, Cinnamon being uſed by harlots in perfuming their bed, Prov. vii. xvii. may intend the ſtews and brothel-houſes erected at Rome, and licenſed by authority, each whore paying ſo much per week; the revenues of which would ſometimes yearly amount to twenty thouſand ducats: ointments may be underſtood of chriſm in baptiſm, and extreme unction at death: odours and frankincenſe may mean their prayers and pater-noſters, their prayers for the dead, which were never made without the pence; hence that proverbial expreſſion, no pence, no pater-noſter. And wine, and oil, and fine flour, and wheat, and beaſts, and ſheep; things for civil uſe; theſe are things which belong to food, to eating and drinking, and are the moſt material and neceſſary things of life, Pſ. iv. 7. Jer. xxxi. 12. Hoſ. ii. 21, 22. Gen. ix. 3. Iſ. xxii. 13. Tyre had her merchants for theſe, Ezek. xxvii. 17, 18, 21. and Mr. Brightman will have Italy to be Rome's merchant for wine and oil; Sardinia and Sicily her merchants for fine flour and wheat; Germany for beaſts, and England for ſheep: and with reſpect to the eccleſiaſtical uſe of theſe things, wine is for the chalice, uſed in daily maſſes, and drank only by the prieſts; oil for chriſm at baptiſm, and for the extreme unction; fine flour for the maſs, or to make their breaden god of; and wheat, beaſts, and ſheep for tithes for the clergy: and horſes, and chariots, and ſlaves; things for ſplendor, equipage, and attendance; horſes and chariots for the popes, cardinals, archbiſhops, and biſhops to ride in ſtate and grandeur, and ſlaves to wait upon them. Tyre had her merchants for theſe, Ezek. xxvii. 14, 20. and Mr. Brightman's opinion is, that the French are Rome's merchants for horſes and chariots, and the Swiſs for ſlaves, or bodies, as the word may be rendered, who live by exerciſing their bodies, and hiring them out in war; and who are many of them the guards of the perſon of the pope of Rome: and laſt of all it is added, and ſouls of men; ſtill in alluſion to the merchandize of Tyre, ſome of whoſe merchants are ſaid to trade in the perſons of men, Ezek. xxvii. 13. which the Targum and Septuagint render, in the ſouls of men; the popes have ſome of them ſold their own ſouls to the devil, to get into the chair, and when in, have been the means of deſtroying of thouſands of others; they aſſume a power over the ſouls of men, of binding and looſing the conſciences of men, impoſing new laws upon them, and freeing them from obligation to the laws of God and men, to the ruin of their ſouls; and it has been ſaid by their ſycophants, that if the pope ſhould ſend thouſands of men to hell, no one ſhould ſay to him what doſt thou? the Romiſh prieſts pretend to redeem ſouls out of purgatory for ſuch a ſum of money, and ſell pardons and indulgences, ſay maſs, and promiſe heaven itſelf for money; and this they get at the expence of mens ſouls, by their falſe doctrine and ſuperſtitious worſhip, and ſo make merchandize of them, as is ſaid of the falſe teachers, 2 Pet. ii. 3. moreover, as by ſlaves, or bodies, in the preceding clauſe, are meant ſuch who ſerve with their bodies, either by way of attendance, or in unnatural luſt; ſo by ſouls of men may be meant men of ſoul, of great natural wit and underſtanding, of great parts, abilities, and learning, with which they ſerve the man of ſin, and his intereſt, ſuch as Bellarmine, and others.

Ver. 14. And the fruits that thy ſoul luſted after are departed from thee, &c.] Or the autumn of the deſire of thy ſoul; the deſireable fruits which are then in ſeaſon; the Vulgate Latin and Ethiopic verſions render it apples, which are ripe in autumn; and may deſign all ſuch fruit as Italy abounds with, which will now be deſtroyed; and ſeems to point at the time of year when Babylon's deſtruction will be: but in the myſtical ſenſe, theſe fruits may intend univerſal dominion over nations and churches, the obedience of kings and princes, riches, honours, and pleaſures of all ſorts; things greatly affected by the papacy, and of which a large harveſt was expected, but now all will be at an end: and all things which were dainty and goodly are departed from thee; all that were palatable to the taſte, and pleaſant to the ſight, that were excellent and deſireable; as the triple crown, cardinalſhips, archbiſhopricks, biſhopricks, deanaries, fat benefices, and good livings: and thou ſhalt find them no more at all; for this will be an utter deſtruction; at the reformation theſe deſireable things were taken from her in ſeveral nations, and in ſome places ſhe has recovered them again, as in Germany and other places; and the outward court, or the reformed church, ſinking into an outward ſhow and form, will be wholly given to the Gentiles, the papiſts, and they'll have theſe things in their hands again before Rome's utter deſtruction, but after that they'll no more be regained.

Ver. 15. The merchants of theſe things, &c.] Before-mentioned, who have traded in them for themſelves and for Rome: which were made rich by her, ſee ver. 3. ſhall ſtand afar off for fear of her torment; as the kings of the earth before, ver. 10. being conſcious to themſelves of their being partners in her crimes, and ſo might juſtly fear they ſhould ſhare in her puniſhment; and it may be, they will outwardly deny they are now of her religion, and will externally embrace the reformed religion; tho' they will be inwardly weeping and wailing for the deſtruction of Rome, and the loſs of their merchandize and goodly things.

Ver. 16. And ſaying alas, alas! that great city, &c.] Uſing the ſame words the kings of the earth do, ver. 10. only adding, ſuitable to their characters as merchants, and the things they traded in with her, that was clothed in fine linnen, and purple, and ſcarlet, and decked with gold, and precious ſtones, and pearls; ſee the notes on ver. 12. and on ch. xvii. 4. ſee alſo Ezek. xxvii. 32.

[k] Miſn. Beracot, c. 6. § 6.

Ver. 17. For in one hour ſo great riches is come to nought, &c.] That is, in a very ſhort time, expreſſing the ſuddenneſs and ſpeedineſs of Rome's deſtruction, the quick diſpatch and expedition that will be made in it, by the inſtruments of it, as in ver. 10. Rome was always famous for its great wealth and riches; the Jews have a ſaying [1], that if ten kabs of riches deſcend into the world, the antient Romans take nine of them, and the other the whole world: and every ſhip-maſter, and all the company in ſhips, and ſailers, and as many as trade by ſea, ſtood afar off; the lamentation of the kings and merchants of the earth being ended, maſters of ſhips, ſailors, and ſeafaring men begin theirs: by ſhips are meant dioceſes, abbeys, priories, and monaſteries; and by the maſters, or governors of them, biſhops, abbots, priors, the heads of monaſteries, and of the ſeveral orders of the Franciſcans, Dominicans, &c. and by all the company in ſhips, or every ſhipmate, the fellows that belong to every religious houſe and order; and by ſailers and traders at ſea, all ſuch who compaſs ſea and land to make proſelytes to the Romiſh religion, like the phariſees of old, and who, as they, make them two-fold more the children of hell than themſelves; and in general, theſe traders abroad may deſign the pope's legates, ſent by him into various parts, to collect his revenues, and the jeſuits, who are every where ſent abroad to ſow ſedition and falſe doctrine, and the prieſts that travel about to ſell pardons and indulgences: theſe ſtood afar off; as the kings and merchants before, for fear of ſharing in the condemnation and puniſhment of Babylon; knowing full well that they deſerved it, having been aſſociates with her in her crimes.

Ver. 18. And cried when they ſaw the ſmoke of her burning, &c.] See the note on ver. 9. ſaying, what city is like unto this great city? as before for magnificence and grandeur, ſo now for ſorrow, deſolation, and ruin; nor was any city like it for power and authority, for pride and luxury, for idolatry and ſuperſtition, blaſphemy and impenitence; the like the ſailors ſay of Tyre, Ezek. xxvii. 32. from whence this, and other expreſſions are borrowed in this lamentation.

Ver. 19. And they caſt duſt on their heads, &c.] As the ſeafaring men on account of Tyre, Ezek. xxvii. 30. this was a geſture uſed in mourning when perſons were in afflicted and diſtreſſed circumſtances, denoting diſorder, confuſion, and debaſement; ſee Joſh. vii. 6. Job ii. 12. and cried, weeping and wailing, ſaying alas, alas! that great city; as in ver. 10, 16. ſo it was once, tho' now in flames: wherein were made rich all that had ſhips in the ſea; not only the merchants of the earth, as in ver. 3. the cardinals, archbiſhops, and biſhops, but the governors of religious houſes; theſe accumulated great wealth to themſelves, and got the beſt of lands into their poſſeſſion for the uſe and ſupport of their abbeys and monaſteries: by reaſon of her coſtlineſs; or coſtly things; pardons, indulgences, abſolution, ſaying maſs, and praying ſouls out of purgatory, all which are coſtly, and hereby theſe traders have been enriched; and now the remembrance of theſe things, of which they will be deprived, will affect and grieve them, as well as the ſuddenneſs of Rome's ruin: for in one hour is ſhe made deſolate; her judgment come, and her riches come to nought, ver. 10, 17.

Ver. 20. Rejoice over her thou heaven, &c.] This is ſaid by the voice from heaven, ver. 4. which having called upon the ſaints to come out of Babylon, and to take vengeance on her, now calls upon all good men to rejoice at her ruin, whilſt others were weeping and wailing; not at that ſimply conſidered, but as the juſtice of God is diſplayed therein: heaven may be literally underſtood, which ſometimes is addreſſed when any thing of very conſiderable note and moment is done or ſpoken of, whether it be ſomething exceeding bad, as in Iſ. i. 2. Jer. ii. 12, 13. or ſomething exceeding great and good, as in Pſ. xcvi. 11, 12, 13. or elſe the inhabitants of heaven, either the angels, who as they rejoice at the good and happineſs of the ſaints, ſo at the confuſion and deſtruction of their enemies; and the Syriac verſion reads, heavens and angels; or elſe the ſouls of men departed, particularly the ſouls under the altar, that have been long crying for vengeance on account of the ſhedding of their blood, ch. vi. 9. who may be made acquainted with Rome's deſtruction; or rather the true church of Chriſt upon earth, which in this book often goes by the name of heaven, in oppoſition to the apoſtate church, called the earth, becauſe its members, doctrines, and ordinances are from heaven, and its happineſs lies there: and ye holy Apoſtles and prophets; the Alexandrian copy and Complutenſian edition read, and the ſaints, and the Apoſtles, and prophets; making three diſtinct ſorts of perſons of which heaven, or the church conſiſts: by ſaints may be meant private members of churches, who are ſanctified by the Spirit of God, and live holy lives and converſations; and by Apoſtles, not the twelve Apoſtles, or perſons in ſuch an office as they were, but ordinary miniſters of the word, who are ſent forth to preach the Goſpel, and will be upon the ſpot at the deſtruction of Babylon, and will be ſuch as ſhall have preached and defended the pure apoſtolic doctrine; and by prophets are intended not the prophets of the Old Teſtament, nor ſuch under the New who had the gift of fortelling things to come, but ſuch who have a gift of interpreting the ſcriptures and preaching the Goſpel; the ſame with the two witneſſes, who till this time will have propheſied in ſackcloth, but ſhall now put it off, and put on the garments of praiſe and joy: for God hath avenged you on her; or judged your judgment on her; that is, has executed righteous judgment on her, for all the evils done by her to the ſaints in ages paſt, the predeceſſors of the perſons here mentioned, as well as to themſelves: vengeance belongs to the Lord, and he will avenge his elect ſooner or later.

Ver. 21. And a mighty angel, &c.] Not Chriſt, nor one of the miniſtring ſpirits, but ſome man, or ſett of men, perhaps the ſame with him in ver. 1. took up a ſtone like a great mill-ſtone, and caſt it into the ſea; juſt as Jeremiah took a ſtone and bound it to his book after he had read it, and caſt it into the river Euphrates, as a ſign and token of the deſtruction of old Babylon, Jer. li. 63, 64. ſee Exod. xv. 5. Neh. ix. 11. ſaying, thus with violence ſhall that great city be thrown down, and ſhall be found no more at all; which is expreſſive of the utter deſtruction of Rome, and of the violence, force, and power with which it will be deſtroyed, and of the ſuddenneſs and ſwiftneſs of its deſtruction, and of the irrecoverableneſs of its ſtate and condition.

Ver. 22. And the voice of harpers, and muſicians, and of pipers and trumpeters, &c.] Which were for mirth, delight, and pleaſure: ſhall be heard no more at all in thee; the words ſeem to be taken from Iſ. xxiv. 8. Ezek. xxvi. 13. and may not only regard the loſs of every thing that was delightful and pleaſant to the ear in private houſes, at feſtivals, and nuptials, and the like, but the ceaſing of church muſic; there will be no more bells, nor organs, or any other inſtruments of muſic; no more chantors, and ſub-chantors, choriſters, ſinging-men and boys: and no craftſman of whatſoever craft he be ſhall be found any more in thee; which are very uſeful and neceſſary in cities and ſocieties; it is threatned to Judah, that the cunning artificer ſhould be taken from her, Iſ. iii. 3. and it is reckoned as a conſiderable part of the diſtreſs of the Babyloniſh captivity, that the carpenters and ſmiths were carried away from Jeruſalem, Jer. xxiv. 1. and this judgment may fall on Rome for her worſhipping idols of gold, ſilver, braſs, ſtone, and wood, the works of mens hands, artificers and craftſmen, and who are employed in making other trinkets and wares for antichriſt: and the ſound of a mill-ſtone ſhall be heard no more at all in thee; to grind corn with, ſee Jer. xxv. 10. there will be a famine at the time that Rome is beſieged, ver. 8. and after it is deſtroyed, there will be no corn to grind, nor inhabitants to eat it, and ſo no uſe of the mill-ſtone; this is ſaid in oppoſition to her luxurious and delicious living, ver. 3, 7, 9. and this may alſo refer to feaſts and rich entertainments, for which ſpices were ground and prepared by an hand-mill [m] in the houſe; and ſo may ſignify here that there would be no more of ſuch entertainments and rich living; with which ſenſe agrees what follows. This clauſe is wanting in the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions.

Ver. 23. And the light of a candle ſhall ſhine no more at all in thee, &c.] Either for common uſe, or at feaſts, or at marriages, which being kept at night, required candles, lamps, or torches; this ſhows that Babylon, or Rome, ſhall be deprived of every thing, even of the leaſt thing that is comfortable in life; ſee Jer. xxv. 10. this will be a juſt puniſhment upon her for her abuſe of this bleſſing of life; ſo where wax candles in great numbers have been burning in the day-time, there will not be ſo much as a ſingle candle to give light in the night; and where candles have been lighted up for the dead, there will not be one for the uſe of the living: and the voice of the bridegroom and of the bride ſhall be heard nomore at all in thee; there will be no marrying, nor giving in marriage; no procreation of children, or propagation of poſterity in this place; which denotes the utter extirpation of the inhabitants of it; the phraſes are taken from Jer. vii. 34. and xvi. 19. and xxv. 10, 11. and this will be in righteous retaliation for the prohibition of marriage, which God has inſtituted, and is honourable, 1 Tim. iv. 2. the reaſons of Babylon's deſtruction follow: for thy merchants were the great men of the earth; in alluſion to the merchants of Tyre, ſaid to be princes, Iſ. xxiii. 8. for by trading and dealing in the wares and merchandize of Rome, perſons of mean extract, and of very low circumſtances of life, have grown exceeding rich, and have equalled the princes of the earth; as for inſtance, cardinal Woolſey here in England, a butcher's ſon at Ipſwich; and on the other hand, the princes and great men of the earth have become Rome's merchants, and have thought it an high honour to get a cardinal's hat, as the cardinals, Albertus duke of Auſtria, Bourbon, Pool, and others, mentioned by Brightman: for by thy ſorceries were all nations deceived; meaning her falſe doctrines, traditions, idolatry, ſuperſtition, and will-worſhip, with which, as another Jezabel, ſhe has bewitched, allured, and deceived the nations of the empire, and the kings thereof, ver. 3.

Ver. 24. And in her was found the blood of prophets and of ſaints, &c.] Such as before mentioned, in ver. 20. this is another reaſon of her deſtruction, beſides her luxury and idolatry, namely, her ſhedding the blood of the ſaints, with which ſhe is ſaid to be drunk, and therefore blood is now given her to drink, ch. xvii. 6. and xvi. 6. for ſhe will now be found guilty of ſlaying the witneſſes, who are meant by the prophets and ſaints, that have been from the beginning of the apoſtacy: and of all that were ſlain upon the earth; not only of thoſe that have been ſlain in the city of Rome, but of all thoſe that have been ſlain throughout the empire; they being ſlain by her order, or with her conſent, and ſhe conniving at it, encouraging it, and therefore will be juſtly chargeable with it all; ſee Matt. xxiii. 31, 32, 35. the Ethiopic verſion adds, for the name of Chriſt.

CHAP. XIX.

THIS chapter contains the triumph of the ſaints over Babylon, and their thankſgiving to God becauſe of his judgments on her; the marriage of Chriſt and his church, and a battle between him and his and her enemies, with the ſucceſs of it. The congratulations are firſt of a promiſcuous multitude in the church, aſcribing ſalvation, praiſe, honour, glory, and power, to God, becauſe of the righteouſneſs of his judgments, and becauſe of the perpetuity of them, ver. 1, 2, 3. and then of the four and twenty elders and four living creatures, who worſhip God, aſſent to what had been before ſaid, and join in praiſing the Lord, ver. 4. and then another voice out of the throne is heard, calling upon all the ſervants of the Lord, and thoſe that fear him, whether ſmall or great, to praiſe our God, ver. 5. after which is heard the voice of a great multitude, ſtirring up one another to praiſe, becauſe of the reign of the Lord God Almighty, and to rejoice and be glad becauſe the time of the Lamb's marriage with his bride was come; who is deſcribed by her dreſs, the righteouſneſs of the ſaints, comparable to fine linnen, clean and white, ver. 6, 7, 8. upon which an angel bids John write thoſe perſons happy who are invited to the marriage-ſupper of the Lamb, and affirms theſe to be the true ſayings of God; wherefore John, in a tranſport of joy, was juſt going to worſhip the angel, had he not been forbidden by him; from which he diſſuades him, by obſerving that he was his fellow-ſervant, that God only is the object of worſhip, and that the teſtimony of Jeſus is the ſpirit of prophecy, ver. 9, 10. next follows a viſion of a battle between Chriſt and his enemies; and firſt he the general is deſcribed, by the horſe he ſat upon, a white one; by the characters he bears, faithful and true; by what he did, judging and making war in righteouſneſs; by his eyes, which were as a flame of fire; by his having many crowns on his head; by having a name, or names unknown, and particularly one, which is the word of God; by his habit, a veſture dipped in blood; by the armies he was at the head of, riding on white horſes, and clothed in fine linnen; by a ſharp ſword coming out of his mouth, with which he ſhould utterly deſtroy the nations; and by having a name on his veſture and thigh, King of Kings, and Lord of Lords, ver. 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16. upon which an angel is ſeen ſtanding in the ſun, and calling to all the fowls of the heaven to come to the ſupper of the great God, and to eat the fleſh of kings, captains, mighty men, horſes and horſemen, of all ranks and degrees, ver. 17, 18. and next an account is given of the armies of the beaſt, and of the kings of the earth, that came to make war with the above warrior, ver. 19. the iſſue and ſucceſs of which follow; the beaſt and falſe prophet are taken, and caſt alive into a lake of fire and brimſtone; and the reſt are killed by the ſword of the above general, and the fowls have a feaſt of their fleſh, ver. 20, 21.

[m] Schindler. Lex. Pentaglott. in Voce רוח, Col. 1712.

Ver. 1. And after theſe things, &c.] After the angel had declared the fall of Babylon, a voice from heaven had called the people of God out of her, and had ordered them to take vengeance on her; after the mournful lamentation of the kings, merchants, and ſeafaring-men; after another voice had called upon the ſaints to rejoice at her overthrow, and a mighty angel had deſcribed the manner of it, and had expreſſed her ruin in the ſtrongeſt terms, with the reaſons of it, John heard the ſongs of the righteous, as follow: I heard a great voice of much people in heaven; not literally taken, for theſe are not the innumerable company of angels, who are never called people; nor the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect, or the ſouls of departed ſaints, but men on earth; wherefore heaven deſigns the church, as in ch. xviii. 20. and frequently in this book; the people are the ſame with the 144000 ſeen with the Lamb on mount Zion, ch. xiv. 1. and with thoſe on the ſea of glaſs, who had got the victory over the beaſt, ch. xv. 2. and are no other than God's covenant-people, who are given to Chriſt, and made willing to be his in the day of his power; and tho' they are but a ſeed, a remnant, a ſmall company, when compared with the world and carnal profeſſors; yet are a large body of themſelves, eſpecially they will be at this time, when the nation of the Jews ſhall be born at once, and the fulneſs of the Gentiles will be brought in: and their voice on this occaſion, the downfall of Rome, is ſaid to be great; partly on account of their number, who will join together in acclamations of praiſe, and partly on account of their great affection and vehemency of ſpirit, which will be raiſed hereby: ſaying Alleluja; an Hebrew word, which ſignifies praiſe ye the Lord. The Jews ſay [n], that the book of Pſalms conſiſts of ten ſorts of ſongs, but Hallelujah is the greateſt of them, becauſe it comprehends the name (Jehovah) and praiſe in one word: and it is obſervable that this word, which is often uſed in the Pſalms, is firſt uſed when the Pſalmiſt deſires the utter conſumption and deſtruction of ſinners and wicked men on earth, and is here taken up by the ſaints at the deſtruction of the man of ſin and ſon of perdition; ſee Pſ. civ. 35. and its being an Hebrew word, ſhows that at this time the Jews will be converted, and that Jews and Gentiles will become one church-ſtate, and will worſhip and praiſe the Lord together; for the word is a call upon the ſaints to join together in ſolemn praiſe and thankſgiving; who is to be praiſed for the perfections of his nature, for the works of his hands, both of nature and grace, and for his righteous judgments on his and his church's enemies; and this is to be done in concert: ſalvation, and glory, and honour, and power unto the Lord our God; ſalvation, temporal, ſpiritual, and eternal, is of God; ſalvation from antichriſtian power and tyranny, and from all enemies, and the everlaſting ſalvation of the ſoul; and the glory of it belongs to all the three perſons; they are glorious in themſelves, and deſerve all glory to be aſcribed to them by man, and eſpecially by the ſaints: honour is alſo their due; God the Father is to be honoured becauſe he is the Father, and the Son is to be honoured as the Father is, and the Holy Spirit is not to be grieved, but to be highly eſteemed and valued, and equally with the other two perſons: and power belongs to them all, and is ſeen in the works of creation, redemption, and ſanctification.

Ver. 2. For true and righteous are his judgments, &c.] As in ch. xv. 3. and xvi. 7. ſee the notes there: this is to be underſtood of God's judgments in general, and is a reaſon of the attribution of praiſe and glory to him; which may be ſaid to be true, becauſe being threatned, are now fulfilled; and to be righteous, becauſe, according to the demerit of ſin; and particularly God's judgments on antichriſt are intended: for he hath judged the great whore; Jezabel, Babylon, the Romiſh antichriſt, before ſpoken of, ch. xvii. 1. not only by paſſing a ſentence of condemnation on her, but by executing it, putting it into the hearts of the kings to hate and burn her, and utterly deſtroy her; and which is judging right, ſince it follows: which did corrupt the earth with her fornication; drew the kings and inhabitants of the Roman empire into wicked and idolatrous practices, and ſo corrupted and deſtroyed them in ſoul, body, and eſtate; ſee the note on ch. xi. 18. for this viſion is cotemporary with the ſeventh trumpet: and hath avenged the blood of his ſervants at her hand; ſhed by her, ch. xviii. 20, 24. and xvi. 6. and this being done in righteous judgment, is matter of joy and praiſe to the ſaints.

Ver. 3. And again they ſaid Alleluja, &c.] Or a ſecond time they ſaid it; they began and ended their ſolemn worſhip and ſervice with it; ſo ſome Pſalms begin and end with this word, as Pſ. cvi, cxiii. &c. and the repeating of the word ſhows how hearty, earneſt, and conſtant they were in the work of praiſe on this account: and her ſmoke roſe up for ever and ever; they repeated their hallelujah, or gave one ſpiritual huzzah more at the burning of Rome, and this followed: or the words may be rendered, for her ſmoke roſe, &c. and ſo are a reaſon for the ſecond hallelujah; it looks as if Rome, like another Sodom and Gomorrha, would ſink into a ſulphurous burning lake, and continue ſo: reſpect is had to the everlaſting puniſhment of antichriſt and his followers in hell, and to the everlaſting burnings that will follow Rome's temporal deſtruction, which was an example and ſymbol of the vengeance of eternal fire; ſee ch. xiv. 11. ſo the Jews [o] ſay of the burning of Rome, that its fire ſhall not be quenched for ever, and that its ſmoke ſhall riſe up for ever.

Ver. 4. And the four and twenty elders and the four beaſts, &c.] Mentioned in ch. iv. 4, 6. and who repreſent the churches of Chriſt and miniſters of the Goſpel in the ſeveral periods of time, theſe join in the chorus, and praiſe the Lord on the account of the deſtruction of Rome, and ruin of antichriſt; ſo they are often heard of in this book, when any remarkable thing is done, or when there is any breaking forth of the kingdom and glory of Chriſt; ſee ch. v. 8, 9, 10, 14. and vii. 11. and xi. 16, 17. and xiv. 3. and xv. 7. theſe fell down; on their faces before God, as in ch. iv. 10. and xi. 16. in great reverence of him, and of his righteous judgments: and worſhipped God that ſat on the throne; deſcribed in ch. iv. 2, 3. this refers to the public worſhip of God in the churches, by the miniſters and members of them: ſaying Amen, Alleluja; they ſaid Amen, and ſignified their aſſent to what the much people in heaven had ſaid, ver. 1, 2, 3. and joined in the ſame Hallelujah, or expreſſions of praiſe to God, for this great appearance of his in the downfal of Babylon. Both theſe words are uſed together in Pſ. cvi. 48. ſee ch. v. 14.

Ver. 5. And a voice came out of the throne, &c.] Not from God the Father, that ſat upon it, for the phraſe, praiſe our God, could not be ſaid by him with propriety and pertinence; but rather from Chriſt, the Lamb, in the midſt of the throne, who as mediator could ſay of him to his people, my God, and your God, and my Father, and your Father, John xx. 17. tho' it ſeems beſt to underſtand it of the voice of one of the angels about the throne, ſince one of theſe is afterwards ſpoken of, whom John would have worſhipped, but was forbid, ver. 9, 10. and which may deſign either one of the miniſtring ſpirits, or a preacher of the Goſpel, and a ſett of ſuch, calling upon the ſaints to the diſcharge of their duty, or to return to it on this occaſion: ſaying, praiſe our God all ye his ſervants; meaning not the miniſters of the Goſpel only, who ſerve in the Goſpel of Chriſt, by preaching and defending it, and in the adminiſtration of Goſpel ordinances to the comfort of the ſaints, but all the people of God; for tho' they are ſons, and no more ſervants to ſin and ſatan, and the world, yet they are ſervants of God, and of righteouſneſs, and ſerve him willingly and chearfully in a way of duty, and without ſlaviſh fear, and with a godly one, and from principles of love and gratitude, and without mercenary views, and ſelfiſh ends; and theſe are called upon, as a part of their ſervice, to ſay hallelujah, or to ſing the praiſes of God for his judgments on antichriſt; ſee Pſ. cxxxiv. 1. and cxxxv. 1, 2. and ye that fear him, both ſmall and great; who fear the Lord, not with a ſervile, but filial fear, with the new covenant grace of fear, which ſprings from, and is increaſed by the goodneſs and grace of God; whether greater or leſſer believers, fathers, young men, or children; whether Jews or Gentiles, or of whatſoever nation, kindred, or people; ſee Pſ. cxv. 13. Rev. xi. 18.

Ver. 6. And I heard, as it were, the voice of a great multitude, &c.] Even of all the ſervants of the Lord, and them that fear him, ſmall and great; a vaſt multitude of converted Jews and Gentiles, in the ſeveral parts of the world, who in anſwer to the voice out of the throne, which came with great power and energy, lift up their voices in praiſe to God, both for their own converſion, and for the downfal of Babylon: and as the voice of many waters; falling down in a deſcent, or in rough and rocky places, which make a great noiſe, and is heard afar off; and ſuch muſt be the united voice of ſo great a multitude of converts, as will be gathered together every where at this time: the ſame metaphor is uſed of the voice of Chriſt in ch. i. 15. and as the voice of mighty thunderings; violent claps of it, which are ſometimes ſo loud, that they rend the very heavens, and ſtrike the inhabitants of the earth with the utmoſt conſternation: theſe are the ſame voices which will be heard in the church, when the ſeventh angel ſounds his trumpet, ch. xi. 15. ſaying Alleluja; or praiſe ye the Lord; they will call upon one another to celebrate the praiſes of God, on account of the above things, in the ſame manner, and uſing the ſame word, the people in heaven, and the four and twenty elders, and four living creatures do; and this is the fourth time the word is uſed in this context, and confirms the obſervation that has been made, that this viſion refers to the converſion of the Jews, which will quickly follow the deſtruction of Rome: and the Jews themſelves have a notion, that when Rome is deſtroyed, the Meſſiah will come; and ſo he will in his ſpiritual reign. They ſay [o], "our redemption will be immediately upon the deſtruction of Rome." And again [p], "the root of our redemption depends upon the deſtruction of Rome." The reaſon for their ſaying hallelujah follows, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth; by whom is meant the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is Lord of all, and God over all, bleſſed for ever, and is the almighty; and tho' he was ſet up as king over the holy hill of Zion, and has reigned over the church in every age, and came as king into this world, tho' his kingdom was not of it, and at his reſurrection was declared Lord and Chriſt, and his kingdom was then more manifeſt, and he has ever ſince diſplayed his kingly power in defending his church, and defeating the enemies of it; yet now will he reign more viſibly and glorioſly, his kingdom will be enlarged from one end of the earth to the other, and he will be king over all the earth, which will occaſion great joy to Jews and Gentiles; ſee Pſ. xlvii. 1, 2. and xcvii. 1. and the note on Rev. xi. 17.

Ver. 7. Let us be glad, and rejoice, and give honour to him, &c.] The ſaints particularly; the converted Jews will call upon one another to expreſs their gladneſs at the glorious diſplay of Chriſt's kingly power and authority, and at the deſtruction of his enemies, and the happy and comfortable ſtate of his church and people; and to rejoice in him as the Lord their righteouſneſs and ſtrength, and to give him the honour and glory of ſalvation, and to return him thanks for all the benefits they ſhall have received from him, particularly on account of what follows: for the marriage of the Lamb is come; that is, of Chriſt, the Son of God, with the Jewiſh church more eſpecially; there was a ſecret betrothing of all the elect to Chriſt before the world began; and there is an open eſpouſal of every individual of them at converſion; but the public and general ſolemnization of the nuptials, will not be until the new Jeruſalem church-ſtate takes place in the perſonal reign of Chriſt, hereafter mentioned, ch. xxi. 1, 2, 9. but here, and as previous to that, there will be a very general and open marriage of Chriſt with the people of the Jews, who have long rejected and forſaken him; for if the converſion of a ſingle perſon may be called a marriage with Chriſt, much more the converſion of ſuch numbers; and which is often propheſied of under this metaphor of a marriage, as in Iſ. lxii. 4, 5. Hoſ. ii. 19. And now the time will be come for the accompliſhment of it, the evidence of which follows: and his wife hath made herſelf ready; or dreſſed herſelf; by decking herſelf with jewels, and putting on her wedding-garment, provided for her, and given to her by her huſband, the Lamb, as appears from the next verſe: this preparation will lie partly in the number of converts that will be brought into the Jewiſh church, which ſhe will receive and clothe herſelf with, as with the ornament of a bride, Iſ. xlix. 18. and partly by the exerciſe of the ſeveral graces of the Spirit upon Chriſt, comparable to the jewels of a bride, with which ſhe will be adorned for her huſband; and alſo by putting on the robe of his righteouſneſs, hereafter mentioned, which the old Jewiſh ſynagogue rejected, and therefore was caſt off, Rom. x. 3. Matt. xxii. 12, 13. The Arabic verſion reads, the marriage of the Lamb is now come with his ſpouſe, prepared for him; and the Ethiopic verſion, the marriage of his Lamb is come, and the wife is prepared; and that her preparation is not by her own merits and works of righteouſneſs, but by the grace of her huſband, is clear from the following verſe. Mr. Daubuz, by the marriage of the Lamb, underſtands the firſt reſurrection, and the ſtate of the church at that time; and by the fine linnen, the dreſs of the church next mentioned, the incorruptible body of the ſaints compared to a garment, 1 Cor. xv. 53. 2 Cor. v. 2, 3, 4. and by thoſe, who are afterwards ſaid to be called to the marriage, the converted nations in a mortal ſtate: but all the ſaints will ſhare in the firſt reſurrection; beſides, as yet, the beaſt and falſe prophets are not deſtroyed, which muſt be before the firſt reſurrection, as the following viſion ſhows.

Ver. 8. And to her was granted that ſhe ſhould be arrayed in fine linnen, &c.] Or Byſſine: the Byſſus of which fine linnen is made, is ſaid to grow on a tree, in height like to a poplar, and its leaves like a willow, and to be brought out of Judea into Egypt, which the Egyptians uſed in moſt of their holy things[q]. A dreſs neat and modeſt, and not like the attire of the whore of Rome, ch. xvii. 4. and this is ſaid to be clean and white, and is interpreted in the next clauſe: for the fine linnen is the righteouſneſs of ſaints; or righteouſneſſes; not good works, or their own righteouſneſs; for tho' theſe are evidences of faith. by which the ſaints are juſtified, and are what God has prepared for them, that they ſhould walk in them; yet theſe are not comparable to fine linnen, clean and white, but are like filthy rags, and cannot juſtify in the ſight of God; but the righteouſneſs of Chriſt is meant, and juſtification by that; for that is the only juſtifying righteouſneſs of the ſaints: and tho' it is but one, yet it may be called righteouſneſſes, or juſtifications in the plural number; partly becauſe of the ſeveral ſeaſons in which the act of juſtification paſſes, firſt in God's mind from eternity, next on Chriſt as the ſurety, when he roſe from the dead, and on all the elect in him, and then in the conſciences of the ſaints when they believe, and the ſentence of it will be notified and declared to men and angels at the laſt judgment; and partly becauſe of the many perſons that are juſtified by it, as alſo becauſe of the excellency of it; ſo the Jews uſe the word in the plural number: the Targumiſt on Zech. iii. 4. paraphraſes the text, I will clothe thee, זכוך, with righteouſneſſes[r]; upon which words Jarchi has this note, "change of beautiful garments is all one as "if it had been ſaid, זכיות, righteouſneſſes; and "becauſe ſin is like to filthy garments, righteouſ"neſs is like to garments beautiful and white." Chriſt's righteouſneſs may be compared to fine linnen, clean and white, becauſe of its ſpotleſs purity; thoſe that are arrayed with it being unblameable and irreproveable, and without ſpot and blemiſh, and without fault before the throne; with this the Jewiſh church will be clothed; all the Lord's people will be righteous, they will have on the beſt robe, and wedding-garment, which was deſpiſed by the Jews in Chriſt's time, who refuſed to come to the marriage-feaſt; and their being arrayed with it will be owing to the grace of Chriſt, who grants it; and ſo Chriſt's righteouſneſs is called the gift of righteouſneſs, the free gift, and gift by grace, and abundance of grace; and faith, which receives it, and puts it on, is the gift of God, Rom. v. 15, 16, 17. Eph. ii. 8. Not only the garment is a gift of grace, but the putting of it on is a grant from Chriſt, and what he himſelf does, Iſ. lxi. 10. Zech. iii. 4.

Ver. 9. And he ſaith unto me write, &c.] What follows, becauſe of the importance of it, and to ſhew the certainty of it, and that it may be regarded and remembred: the perſon ſpeaking is either the voice from the throne, ver. 5. or the angel that attended John all along, and ſhewed him this revelation, ch. i. 1. or the angel that propoſed to ſhow him the judgment of the great whore, ch. xvii. 1. Bleſſed are they which are called to the marriage-ſupper of the Lamb; by which is meant the Goſpel miniſtry and ordinances, and communion in them, to which the Jews will be called to partake of in the latter day; theſe at the firſt of the Goſpel diſpenſation are called a dinner, to which the Jews were invited, but refuſed to come, and now a ſupper, becauſe made in the evening of that diſpenſation; to which being called with an effectual calling, they will come, and partake of it; on which account they are pronounced bleſſed, being the bride, the Lamb's wife, having on his righteouſneſs, partaking of his benefits, and being called unto, and made meet for eternal glory and happineſs; or elſe theſe may deſign converted Gentiles, who will be invited to join with them, and will. And he ſaith unto me, theſe are the true ſayings of God; the Syriac verſion reads, theſe my true words are of God; being true, it is plain they are of God, and being of God, it is certain they are true; for he is the God of truth, and cannot lye, and therefore may be depended upon.

Ver. 10. And I fell at his feet to worſhip him, &c.] Being tranſported with the news he brought him of the marriage, or converſion of his countrymen the Jews, and ſtruck with reverence and awe of the glory and majeſty in which the angel appeared to him; and forgetting himſelf, that worſhip was only due to God, he behaved in this manner; which is not to be excuſed nor juſtified, as appears from the angel's words: and he ſaid unto me, ſee thou do it not; the words are in the original very ſhort and conciſe, and are ſpoken in an abrupt manner, and in great haſte; as fearing he would be guilty of idolatry, before he could ſpeak all his mind, and uſe the arguments that were neceſſary to diſſuade from it: I am thy fellow-ſervant, and of thy brethren that have the teſtimony of Jeſus; if this was one of the miniſtring ſpirits, he was a ſervant of the ſame Lord as John; and if he was a miniſter of the Goſpel, he was ſtill more literally a fellow-ſervant of his, and of the Apoſtles, and preachers of the Goſpel; which is meant by the teſtimony of Jeſus, that bearing teſtimony to the perſon, office, grace, obedience, ſufferings, and death of Chriſt, and the glory following; and therefore being but a ſervant, and a ſervant in common with John and his brethren, was by no means to be worſhipped; not the ſervant, but maſter; not the creature, but the creator: worſhip God; and him only, even God the Father, Son, and Spirit; not the Father to the excluſion of the Son, the firſt-born whom all the angels are called upon to worſhip; nor of the Spirit, who is equally joined with the Father and Son in baptiſm, a part of religious worſhip, and in other parts of it alſo; but this excludes all creatures, angels and men, things animate or inanimate, and images of them; the worſhipping of which will now be no more, or at leaſt will be quickly at an end. For the teſtimony of Jeſus is the ſpirit of prophecy; phecy; that is, the teſtimony of Jeſus, or the Goſpel which John and his brethren had, is the very ſpirit, life, and ſoul of the prophecy of this book; for as all the prophets bore witneſs to Chriſt, ſo does the Spirit of God in this; or the teſtimony which they had, and bore to Chriſt, was equal to the ſpirit of prophecy with which this angel was endowed; ſo that he and they were upon an equal foot; and he was no more a proper object of divine and religious adoration, than they were.

Ver. 11. And I ſaw heaven opened, &c.] This viſion refers not to the ſame time the firſt ſeal does, ch. vi. 2. for tho' a white horſe, with a rider on it, is ſeen here, as there; that reſpects the firſt times of the Goſpel, this the latter part of the diſpenſation of it; nor to the war in heaven between Michael and the dragon, and their angels, ch. xii. 7. that iſſued in the downfal of paganiſm in the Roman empire, this will iſſue in the downfal of the papacy in it; nor to the perſonal coming of Chriſt to the laſt judgment, of which an account is given in the following chapter; but to the battle at Armageddon, to which the ſixth vial is a preparation, and which is finiſhed under the ſeventh, ch. xvi. 13, 14, 16, 17. and what is briefly hinted at there, is at large related here; in which Chriſt, the general, and his armies, on the one hand, and the kings of the earth, with the beaſt and falſe prophet, and their armies, on the other hand, appear to give battle to each other: and the iſſue of the battle is particularly repreſented, in order to have a view of which, John ſaw heaven opened; not literally, as at Chriſt's baptiſm, and at the ſtoning of Stephen, nor in a ſpiritual ſenſe, by the blood of Chriſt, but viſionally, as in ch. iv. 1. and ſince heaven, often in this book, ſignifies the church on earth, a more glorious and comfortable ſtate of the church may be deſigned; when her gates ſhall be opened continually, and not ſhut day nor night, to receive the forces of the Gentiles, and their kings, Iſ. lx. 15. ſuch a ſtate as is referred to in ch. xi. 19. and xv. 5. to which viſions this is cotemporary; and it may denote a very glorious appearing of Chriſt, not in perſon, which will be after this, but in his kingdom and power, in defeating his enemies, and reigning ſpiritually with his ſaints; and it may alſo deſign the clear revelation and diſcerning John had of the following things: and behold a white horſe; which, as in ch. vi. 2. may be a ſymbol of the Goſpel, and Goſpel miniſters, as there, in the former, here in the latter part of the Goſpel diſpenſation; ſignified by a horſe, to denote the ſwift progreſs of the Goſpel in the latter day, the majeſty, power, and authority with which it will come, bearing down all oppoſition made againſt it; and by a white horſe, to expreſs the purity of the Goſpel, and of its preachers and profeſſors, and the peace it publiſhes, and gives, and the joy it brings, and the triumphs that will attend it. And he that ſat upon him was called faithful and true; that Chriſt is here meant, is evident from the deſcription of his eyes, ver. 12. being the ſame as in ch. i. 14. and from his name, ver. 13. which is the peculiar name of the Son of God, John i. 1, 14. and he ſits upon, and is bore by, and rides forth in the Goſpel, and the miniſtry of it, with glory and majeſty, and proſperouſly, Pſ. xlv. 3, 4. and the characters of faithful and true, well agree with him; ſee ch. iii. 7, 14. and the notes there. He is faithful and true to God, who appointed him a leader and commander of the people, and to them he is the commander of: and theſe characters well ſuit him now, when he will accompliſh all the glorious things ſpoken of the church, relating to her ſpiritual and happy ſtate in the latter day, and ſerve greatly to recommend him as a general. And in righteouſneſs he doth judge and make war; which is to be underſtood not of the laſt judgment, tho' that will be executed in righteouſneſs, and therefore is called the righteous judgment, yet in that day there will be no war, no oppoſition, the wicked will at once ſubmit; but of Chriſt's judging of his people, and avenging their blood on their enemies, and the remainder of them among papiſts, pagans, and Mahometans; who will be gathered together at Armageddon in battle array againſt them, when there will be an utter diſcomfiture of them in righteous judgment; for as in times paſt the beaſt made war with the ſaints and witneſſes, and overcame them, Chriſt will enable his people to make war with him and his accomplices, and overcome them, as the ſequel of this viſion ſhows, Chriſt being at the head of them, though not in perſon, yet in power.

Ver. 12. His eyes were as a flame of fire, &c.] Which denotes the perſpicuity and penetration of them, the omniſcience of Chriſt to look into, and diſcover the ſecret machinations, ſchemes, and devices of his enemies againſt his people, and his exerciſe of it in favour of them, his eyes, like a flame of fire, running to and fro on their behalf; and alſo this may ſignify the fierceneſs of his anger againſt the enemies of his people, the eyes of his glory being provoked by their cruelty and wickedneſs; and likewiſe the ſuddenneſs of their deſtruction, and the inevitableneſs of it. And on his head were many crowns; for he has not only a crown, as the creator and governour of the univerſe, in right of nature, but he has one which his Father has put upon his head, when he ſet him as king over his holy hill of Zion, Pſ. xxi. 3. and there's another which his mother, the church, crowned him with in the day of his eſpouſals, Cant. iii. 11. and beſides theſe, every believer puts a crown on his head, gives him the glory of their ſalvation, and all of them caſt their crowns at his feet: to which may be added, that the crowns of all the kings of the earth are his; they reign by him, and are accountable to him. This part of the deſcription may be expreſſive of that all power in heaven and earth, given to Chriſt at his reſurrection, and exerciſed by him ever ſince; and particularly of the extenſiveneſs of his kingdom at the time this viſion refers to, when the kingdoms of this world ſhall be his, ch. xi. 15. for this viſion, and the ſeventh trumpet, are cotemporary; and it may be a ſymbol of the many victories obtained by him, and of the laſt and cloſing one that ſhould now be obtained by him. And he had a name written that no man knew but he himſelf; which ſeems to be his name, the Son of God, as the unknown name of the overcomer, in ch. ii. 17. is a child of God; and the ſenſe is, that his divine nature, in which he is the Son of God, is incomprehenſible, and that the begetting or generation of him, as ſuch, is ineffable, Prov. xxx. 4. and that without a divine revelation the name itſelf could not be known; or it could not be known that God had a Son, and that Chriſt is he, and bears that name, Matt. xi. 27. and xvi. 16, 17. or elſe his name Immanuel. The incarnate God may be intended, which is a ſecret and wonderful name, and contains in it, without controverſy, a great myſtery, which cannot be comprehended by finite minds; or his name, פלא, wonderful, ſecret, Iſ. ix. 6. and Judg. xiii. 18. This name is ſaid to be written; that is, in the ſcriptures of truth, in which it is revealed that Chriſt is the Son of God, and Immanuel. In ver. 16. the name of king of kings, &c. is ſaid to be written on his veſture, and on his thigh; and the Ethiopic verſion makes this to be written on his crown or diadem, reading the words thus; and upon his head a crown, and there was written in his diadem a name, and no man knew it, but he himſelf only; as the high-prieſt had holineſs to the Lord written on his mitre. The Syriac verſion inſerts a clauſe between the two laſt, having names written, and then follows, and a name written, &c. and ſo the Complutenſian edition.

Ver. 13. And he was clothed with a veſture dipt in blood, &c.] Either in his own, by which he became the ſaviour of his church and people; or elſe in the blood of his ſaints, he now comes to avenge; or rather in the blood of his enemies, with which he appears as ſtained, before the battle is fought, the victory being ſure, and their ſlaughter unavoidable: the metaphor is taken from perſons treading in a wine-preſs, whoſe garments are ſtained with blood of grapes; ſee ver. 15. Gen. xlix. 11. and Iſ. lxiii. 1, 2, 3. Here may be alſo an alluſion to the Roman general's veſture, which was ſometimes purple or ſcarlet, in which he fought, as did Lucullus[s]. And his name is called the Word of God; the name of Chriſt, often uſed by John in his Goſpel, Epiſtles, and in this book, John i. 1, 14. 1 John i. 1. and v. 7. Rev. i. 2, 9. Of the ſignification, reaſon, and import of this name, ſee the note on John i. 1. The reaſon why he is called by it here, may be partly to expreſs his greatneſs, glory, and majeſty, this being a name which principally belongs to him, as a divine perſon, as the creator of all things, and as previous to his incarnation; and partly becauſe all the promiſes of God in his word, and which are all yea and amen in Chriſt, will be now ſhortly fulfilled.

Ver. 14. And the armies which were in heaven, &c.] Not the angels, tho' they are God's hoſt, and are the armies of the heavens; they are in heaven, and dwell there, and follow Chriſt, attend upon him, and miniſter to him, and have been ſometimes repreſented by horſes and horſemen, 2 Kings ii. 11. and vi. 17. Zech. i. 8. and they are pure and holy creatures, and will come with Chriſt to judgment: but this viſion refers not to the day of judgment; and beſides, the ſaints are meant, as appears by their habit, for the fine linnen, white and clean, is the righteouſneſs of the ſaints, ver. 8. and the righteouſneſs of angels and ſaints is not the ſame. Moreover, theſe are the ſame company deſcribed in ch. xvii. 14. The ſaints are in a ſtate of warfare, have many enemies to fight with, ſin, ſatan, and the world; they are enliſted as volunteers under Chriſt, the captain of ſalvation; they are provided with the whole armour of God, and are very numerous, and always more than conquerors thro' Chriſt: theſe are deſcribed by the place where they were, in heaven; not being glorified ſaints in heaven; with theſe indeed Chriſt will come to judgment, even with all his ſaints with him; but members of the church militant, ſaid to be in heaven, becauſe that is often called the kingdom of heaven; and becauſe their names are written in heaven, and they are of heavenly extract; they are born from above, and are partakers of the heavenly calling; they belong to heaven, they are citizens of it, and are preſſing on to it. And theſe followed him; Chriſt, their leader and commander in the exerciſe of grace, and in the diſcharge of duty; having gone on in his ways thro' a train of ſufferings, and cleaved unto him, and now attend him; not to aſſiſt in fighting, but to add to the glorious and triumphant appearance of their general; and therefore are ſaid to be upon white horſes: they had ſerved Chriſt in his Goſpel, which ſome of them had preached, and all profeſſed, and had maintained the purity of it in doctrine and practice, and now triumphed in Chriſt, and along with him, riding upon horſes of the ſame colour with his, as being his princes and nobles, and whom he had made kings as well as prieſts; the former may be ſignified by their horſes; ſee Judg. v. 10. and the latter by their following habit, clothed in fine linnen, white and clean; not the horſes, but the armies on them; which deſigns not their inward purity, which was very glorious; nor their outward converſation-garments, waſhed and made white in the blood of the Lamb; but the robe of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, which is pure and ſpotleſs: theſe have no armour on, for they are not to ſtrike a blow, only their general, who has the bloody garment on, is to tread the wine-preſs, and deſtroy antichriſt with the breath of his mouth, or with his ſword proceeding out of it, as follows.

Ver. 15. And out of his mouth goeth a ſharp ſword, &c.] The Complutenſian edition, and all the Oriental verſions, with the Vulgate Latin, read, a ſharp two-edged ſword. The word of God, or the judiciary ſentence of Chriſt according to it, and which he will fully execute, to the utter deſtruction of all his enemies; ſee the note on ch. i. 16. that with it he ſhould ſmite the nations; the Gentiles, the papiſts, the antichriſtian ſtates, thoſe that have adhered to Babylon, and have drunk of the wine of her fornication. This is predicted in Numb. xxiv. 17, 18, 19. and on account of this the nations will be angry under the ſounding of the ſeventh trumpet, with which this viſion is cotemporary, ch. xi. 18. And he ſhall rule them with a rod of iron; uſe them with the utmoſt ſeverity; the phraſe is taken out of Pſ. ii. 9. a prophecy of Chriſt, and mentioned twice before in this book, ch. ii. 27. and xii. 5. ſee the notes there: and he treadeth the wine-preſs of the fierceneſs and wrath of almighty God; the fierce wrath of God againſt ſinners is compared to a wine-preſs; and the wicked antichriſtian party are likened to cluſters of grapes; who being ripe for deſtruction, are caſt into it, and preſſed, ſqueezed, and trodden down by the mighty power of Chriſt, the Word of God, whoſe veſture is therefore before ſaid to be dipped in blood; the ſame metaphor is uſed in ch. xiv. 19, 20. the alluſion ſeems to be to Iſ. lxiii. 3, 6.

Ver. 16. And he hath on his veſture, and on his thigh a name written, &c.] This name, afterwards expreſſed, is ſaid to be written on his veſture, in alluſion to the cuſtom of perſons of note and eminence, having their names interwoven in their garments, and which was ſometimes done in letters of gold, as Zeuxis had[t]; and it is expreſſive of the conſpicuouſneſs of Chriſt's kingdom, which now will come with obſervation; his judgments, the adminiſtrations of his kingly office will be manifeſt, and he will reign before his ancients glorioſly: and its being ſaid to be written on his thigh, may mean either that it was upon that part of his garment which covered his thigh; or elſe that it was alſo on his ſword, which he ſometimes girt upon his thigh. Mr. Daubuz has given an inſtance out of Victor Vitenſis, of Clementianus, a monk, who had written on his thigh, "a manichee diſciple of Jeſus Chriſt."

[t] Plin. Nat. Hiſt. l. 35. c. 9.

And this being done in Africa, he ſuppoſes it to be a Phœnician cuſtom continued. It may here denote the perpetuity of Chriſt's name, power, and dominion, which will continue to the lateſt poſterity, Pſ. lxxii. 17. which ſpring from the thigh; and it may denote the ſubjection of his people to him, ſignified by the putting the hand under the thigh, Gen. xxiv. 2. And this name is king of kings and lord of all lords; which will well ſuit him now when he ſhall be openly king over all the earth; ſee the note on ch. xvii. 14.

Ver. 17. And I ſaw an angel ſtanding in the ſun, &c.] By whom is meant, not the angel of the fourth vial, who poured it on the ſun, taken in another ſenſe than here, and therefore could not ſtand in it; nor the archangel with the laſt trumpet, for as yet the dead riſe not, nor does the judgment come on; nor one of the miniſtring ſpirits; nor Chriſt himſelf, for he is the great God, to whoſe ſupper this angel invites, but a miniſter of the Goſpel; or rather a ſett of Goſpel miniſters, ſuch as in ch. xiv. who may be ſaid to ſtand in the ſun, in like manner as the woman, the church, was ſeen clothed with it, ch. xii. 1. and may denote the conſpicuouſneſs of Goſpel preachers; for as the church now will be eſtabliſhed upon the top of the mountains, ſo her teachers ſhall not be removed into corners any more, but her eyes ſhall behold her teachers; and alſo the clear ſight they ſhall have of the doctrines and myſteries of the Goſpel, who ſhall now ſee eye to eye; and particularly the further breakings forth of the glory of the latter day, and the enſuing victory of Chriſt over all his enemies; and alſo ſhews the great ſtrength of their ſight, who, far from being like moles and bats, will be able both to look upon the ſun, and to ſtand in it: and it may likewiſe ſignify the glory and majeſty of Chriſt's kingdom; the comfortable influence of him, the ſun of righteouſneſs, who will now ariſe upon his people with healing in his wings; and the ſtedfaſtneſs of Chriſt's miniſters to him, and his pure Goſpel, and the glorious truths of it. And he cried with a loud voice; that he might be heard far and near, having ſomething of moment and importance to publiſh: ſaying to all the fowls that fly in the midſt of heaven; meaning not the barbarous nations, the Goths, and Vandals, and Saracens, which over-run and deſtroyed the weſtern and eaſtern empires; theſe times are too late for them, they roſe up under the ſix firſt trumpets; nor devils and unclean ſpirits, which will prey upon and torment antichriſt, and his followers, in hell; nor military and avaritious men among proteſtants, but chriſtian princes, and their people, are deſigned; they are ſuch as are in heaven, the church, and of note there, who will ſhare the ſpoils of the antichriſtian people, and poſſeſs their kingdoms, ſubſtance, and eſtates: theſe are invited by the angel, ſaying, come and gather yourſelves together unto the ſupper of the great God. The Alexandrian copy, the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions read, to the great ſupper of God; and ſo the Complutenſian edition; not the Lord's ſupper, where not the fleſh of men, but the fleſh of Chriſt is eat by faith; nor the marriage-ſupper of the Lamb, which will be of another kind than this; nor is any ſpiritual repaſt intended, ſuch as living by faith on Chriſt, and ſupping with him, being entertained with his promiſes, preſence, and the diſcoveries of his love; but the ſlaughter of Chriſt's enemies, and his victory over them, which is his ſacrifice; and theſe are the gueſts he bids, ſee Zeph. i. 7. and whom he calls to ſhare in the conqueſt and ſpoils, and to expreſs their joy on this occaſion: the great God, is no other than Chriſt the general of the armies in heaven, called before the Word of God, and king of kings, and lord of lords; who will gain this victory, and will be known to be the great God by the judgment he will execute. This is a proof of our Lord's divinity; ſee Tit. ii. 13.

Ver. 18. That ye may eat the fleſh of kings, &c.] Of the earth, and of the whole world, who will fall in the battle at Armageddon; ſee ch. xvi. 14. and xix. 19. and deſign either thoſe antichriſtian kings and ſtates, which have drunk of the wine of Rome's fornication, and will bewail the downfal of Babylon, ch. xviii. 3, 9. or thoſe pagan kings which will be drawn in by the Pope and Turk, to aid and aſſiſt in this war, or both, when, upon the defeat of them, the chriſtian princes will ſeize upon, poſſeſs and enjoy their kingdoms and dominions, which is meant by eating their fleſh; ſee the note on ch. xvii. 16. And the fleſh of captains; of their generals, and officers under them: and the fleſh of mighty men; the common ſoldiers, who are ſo called, Jer. xlvi. 5. who will be rifled and plundered: and the fleſh of horſes, and of them that ſit on them; whoſe rich trappings and clothes will be taken away from them: and the fleſh of all men, both free and bond, both ſmall and great; that is, the ſubſtance of all the inhabitants of the antichriſtian empire, both eaſtern and weſtern, of whatſoever rank, ſtate, and condition they be, ch. xiii. 16. The metaphors are taken from, and there is a manifeſt alluſion to Ezek. xxxix. 17—20. and the whole denotes the entire ſlaughter, and utter ruin of the whole antichriſtian army, and the certainty of Chriſt's victory over it before hand; and alſo the deſtruction of all that are the followers of antichriſt, throughout his dominions, which will now wholly fall into the hands of the ſaints, and be enjoyed by them.

Ver. 19. And I ſaw the beaſt, &c.] Not the devil, for after this he is taken and bound for a thouſand years, and then looſed, and laid hold on again, and caſt into the lake of fire; not but that this war will be by his inſtigation, and under his influence, ch. xvi. 14. not the Roman pagan empire, which has been deſtroyed long ago, under the ſixth ſeal, and was the iſſue of the battle between Michael and his angels, and the dragon and his; but the antichriſtian civil powers, or antichriſt in his civil capacity; and which, tho' it may chiefly regard the weſtern antichriſt, and the remains of the Latin idolatry, yet may take in the eaſtern antichriſt, or the Mahometan powers, which may all join together in this battle; the beaſt will ſurvive for a while the downfal of his ſeat, Babylon or Rome. And the kings of the earth; theſe, as they ſtand diſtinguiſhed from the beaſt, or the antichriſtian kings, and civil ſtates, may deſign as many of the pagan kings and princes, as the pope and Turk by their emiſſaries can perſuade to aſſiſt them in this war; ſee the note on ch. xvi. 14. And their armies gathered together; at Armageddon, or in the valley of Jehoſhaphat, ch. xvi. 16. Joel iii. 2, 12. to make war againſt him that ſat on the horſe; the white horſe, ver. 11. as the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions read, which muſt be downright folly and madneſs, ſince he is the Word of God, the great God, the king of kings, and lord of lords: and againſt his army, ver. 14. who, tho' unarmed, and only clothed in fine linnen, have nothing to fear, ſince Chriſt, the captain of their ſalvation, is at the head of them.

Ver. 20. And the beaſt was taken, &c.] At the firſt onſet, as ſoon as ever the battle begun, and carried away captive, as it was threatened he ſhould, ch. xiii. 10. and this by Chriſt, who will deſtroy him with the breath of his mouth, and the brightneſs of his coming, 2 Theſſ. ii. 8. And with him the falſe prophet; that is, the ſecond beaſt in ch. xiii. 11, 12, 13, 14. as appears by the characters by which he is here deſcribed, or antichriſt in his eccleſiaſtic capacity; that is, the pope with his clergy: and indeed, when the antichriſtian princes and ſtates are taken and deſtroyed, which are the ſupport of the papacy, that muſt in conſequence ſink, be cruſhed and ruined; the Alexandrian copy reads, and they that are with him, the falſe prophet Jezabel; the falſe propheteſs and her children, who will now be killed with death, ch. ii. 20, 23. that wrought miracles before him; the beaſt, or the civil antichriſtian powers, even ſigns and lying wonders, which were approved of, and applauded by him, by which, believing them, he was confirmed in antichriſtian principles: with which he deceived them that had the mark of the beaſt, and them that worſhipped his image; the ſeveral ſubjects of the antichriſtian ſtates; ſee ch. xiii. 14, 15, 16, 17. but none of God's elect, who cannot be ſeduced by ſuch means, Matt. xxiv. 24. Theſe both were caſt alive into a lake of fire burning with brimſtone; which is the ſecond death, ch. xxi. 8. The ſevere puniſhment of antichriſt, conſidered in both his capacities, civil and eccleſiaſtic, is expreſſed by being caſt into a lake of fire, not material fire, but the wrath of God, which will be poured out like fire, and will be intolerable; and by this lake, burning with brimſtone, which giving a nauſeous ſtench, aggravates the puniſhment. Says R. Joden[t], when a man ſmells the ſmell of brimſtone, why does his breath draw back at it (or catch)? becauſe he knows he ſhall be judged with it in the world to come. The alluſion ſeems to be to the place where Sodom and Gomorrha ſtood, which is become a ſulphurous lake, and is an emblem of the vengeance of eternal fire, Jude 8. and theſe two are ſaid to be caſt alive into it, which ſhews, that they will not only ſuffer a corporal death at this battle, and in the iſſue of it, but will be deſtroyed, body and ſoul, in hell: the phraſe denotes the awfulneſs, inevitableneſs, and ſeverity of their puniſhment; there ſeems to be ſome reference to the earth's ſwallowing up Korah, and his company alive, Num. xi. 33. ſee Dan. vii. 11.

Ver. 21. And the remnant were ſlain, &c.] Not only the kings of the earth, and their armies, that will now be gathered together, but all the remains of Papiſts, Pagans, and Mahometans, in the ſeveral parts of the world, even all the enemies of Chriſt: theſe will be ſlain with the ſword of him that ſat upon the horſe; upon the white horſe, as the Ethiopic verſion reads; the Arabic verſion reads, that ſat upon the throne, which ſword proceedeth out of his mouth, ver. 15. and is the word of God, or the judiciary ſentence of Chriſt according to it; and the meaning is, either that theſe ſhall be ſubdued, conquered, and converted by the word; and ſo are fitly called a remnant, a remnant according to the election of grace among the antichriſtian party; and which ſenſe agrees with ch. xi. 13. or elſe, that they will be convicted and confounded, and not be able to ſtand againſt the light and evidence of the word of God, and will be ſentenced by Chriſt to everlaſting puniſhment; and it may be partly one, and partly the other. And all the fowls were filled with their fleſh; all the chriſtian princes and people will be ſatisfied with their kingdoms, riches and wealth, and will rejoice at their deſtruction, and in the righteouſneſs of God, which will be diſplayed in it: and now the world being clear of all Chriſt's enemies, pagan, papal, and Mahometan, the way will be prepared for Chriſt's open and glorious kingdom in it.

CHAP. XX.

THIS chapter contains the binding of ſatan, the ſaints thouſand years reign with Chriſt, the looſing of ſatan again, the deſtruction of him, and the Gog and Magog army, and the laſt judgment: the angel that is to bind ſatan is deſcribed by his deſcent from heaven; by his having the key of the bottomleſs pit, and a great chain in his hand; and by the uſe he made of them, laying hold on ſatan, binding him, caſting him into the bottomleſs pit, and then ſhutting it up, and ſetting a ſeal on him; by all which he will be prevented from deceiving the nations for the ſpace of a thouſand years, ver. 1, 2, 3. After this thrones are ſeen, with perſons on them, to whom judgment is given; who are ſaid to be ſuch as had been martyrs for Jeſus, and had not worſhipped the beaſt, or profeſſed his religion; whoſe happineſs is repreſented by living and reigning with Chriſt a thouſand years, when others will not; the ſecond death will have no power on them; they'll be the prieſts of God, and Chriſt, and reign with him during the ſaid term, having a part in the firſt reſurrection, ver. 4, 5, 6. At the expiration of which term ſatan will be looſed, and go out of priſon, deceive the nations, and gather Gog and Magog to battle; who being exceeding numerous, will cover the breadth of the earth, encompaſs the camp and city of the ſaints, when fire will come down from heaven and deſtroy them, and ſatan will be caſt into the lake of fire, where the beaſt and falſe prophet are, and be tormented for ever and ever, ver. 7, 8, 9, 10. And next an account is given of the general judgment; and the judge is deſcribed by the throne he ſat on, a white cloud, and by his majeſty, which is ſuch, that the heavens and the earth flee from before him, ver. 11. And next the perſons judged are deſcribed by their common ſtate, the dead; by their age or condition, great and ſmall, and by their poſition, ſtanding before God; and then an account of the procedure, or rule of judgment; the books are opened, and the execution of judgment according to what is found in the books, ver. 12. in order to which the ſea, death, and the grave give up the dead in them, and the two laſt are caſt into the lake, and with them thoſe who are not in the book of life, ver. 13, 14.

Ver. 1. And I ſaw an angel come down from heaven, &c.] All Chriſt's enemies, and ſatan's inſtruments being removed, the devil is left alone, and only ſtands in the way of Chriſt's kingdom; and what will be done to him, and how he will be in the iſſue diſpoſed of, this viſion gives an account: by the angel, John ſaw, is not to be underſtood Conſtantine the great; for though he is the man-child that was taken up to God, and his throne, being advanced to the empire, yet he cannot, with that propriety, be ſaid to come down from heaven; and tho' he vanquiſhed the heathen emperors, in which the dragon preſided, and caſt paganiſm out of the empire, by which the devil ruled in it, yet the binding of ſatan is another kind of work, and ſeems too great for him; and beſides, did not take place in his time, as will be ſeen hereafter: nor is an Apoſtle, or a miniſter of the Goſpel intended; ſuch are indeed called angels in this book, and may be ſaid to come down from heaven, becauſe they have their commiſſion from thence; and particularly the Apoſtles had the keys of the kingdom of heaven, but not the key of the bottomleſs pit; and a chain and ſyſtem of Goſpel truths, which they made good uſe of for the eſtabliſhing of Chriſt's kingdom, and weakening of ſatan's, but not ſuch a chain as is here meant; and they had the power of binding and looſing, or of declaring things lawful or unlawful, but not of binding and looſing of ſatan; nor was he bound in the apoſtolic age: nor is one of the miniſtring ſpirits, or a deputation of angels deſigned; for tho' Chriſt will be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, and will make uſe of them, both to gather together his elect, and to caſt the wicked into the lake of fire, yet not to bind ſatan; but the Lord Jeſus Chriſt himſelf is this angel, who is the angel of God's preſence, and of the covenant; and who is in this book called an angel, ch. vii. 2. and x. 1. to whom all the characters here well agree, and to whom the work of binding ſatan moſt properly belongs; for who ſo fit to do it, or ſo capable of it, as the ſeed of the woman, that has bruiſed the ſerpent's head, or as the Son of God, who was manifeſted to deſtroy the works of the devil, yea to deſtroy him himſelf; and who diſpoſſeſſed multitudes of devils from the bodies of men, and is the ſtrong man armed that diſlodges ſatan from the ſouls of men, and is the ſame with Michael, who drove him from heaven, and caſt him out from thence before, ch. xii. 7, 8. And his coming down from heaven is not to be underſtood of his incarnation, or of his coming from thence by the aſſumption of human nature; for ſatan was not bound by him then, as will be ſeen hereafter; but of his ſecond coming, which will be from heaven, where he now is, and will be local, viſible, and perſonal: of no other coming of his does this book ſpeak, as ſeen by John, or as future; nor will the order of this viſion, after the ruin of the beaſt and falſe prophet, admit of any other. Having the key of the bottomleſs pit; the abyſs or deep, the ſame out of which the beaſt aſcended, ch. xi. 7. and xvii. 8. And the key of this becomes no hand ſo well as his who has the keys of hell and death, ch. i. 18. who has all power in heaven and in earth, and has the power of hell, of opening and ſhutting it at his pleaſure, which is ſignified by this phraſe; ſee ch. ix. 1. The Ethiopic verſion reads, the key of the ſun, where ſome have thought hell to be; and yet the ſame verſion renders the word, the deep, in ver. 3. And a great chain in his hand; the key in one hand, and the chain in another; by which laſt is meant, not any material chain, with which ſpirits can't be bound, nor indeed ſometimes bodies poſſeſſed by evil ſpirits, Mark v. 3, 4. but the almighty power of Chriſt, which he will now diſplay in binding ſatan faſter and cloſer than ever.

[t] Bereſhit Rabba, §. 51. fol. 45. 4.

Ver. 2. And he laid hold on the dragon, &c.] By whom is meant not paganiſm, for that was deſtroyed in the Roman empire under the ſixth ſeal, and was the conſequence of the war between Michael and his angels, and the dragon and his; and before this time it will be deſtroyed in other parts under the ſixth and ſeventh vials, when the kings of the earth, being gathered together at Armageddon, will be ſlain, and the cities of the nations will fall, not only papal, but pagan, and Mahometan; and what will not, will be converted, for before this time the kingdoms of this world will become the kingdoms of Chriſt: but the devil himſelf is intended, ſo called, partly becauſe of his great power, authority, and cruelty he has exerciſed in the world; and becauſe of the venom and poiſon of idolatry, ſuperſtition, falſe doctrine, and worſhip, with which he has infected the inhabitants of it. That old ſerpent; ſo called with reſpect to his cunning and ſubtlety, as well as his antiquity, being from the beginning of the creation, and having as early beguiled our firſt parents: which is the devil and ſatan; the accuſer of God and men, and the adverſary of them both. The Complutenſian edition, and Syriac verſion add, which deceiveth the whole world; and the Arabic verſion, the deceiver of the whole world; which ſeems to be taken out of ch. xii. 9. ſee the note there. Him Chriſt laid hold on, and whom he held faſt, as the word ſignifies: Chriſt will now take him, apprehend him, and detain him, as his priſoner; in the wilderneſs, ſatan only felt the dint of his ſword, the written word of God, and was obliged to leave him; but now he'll feel the weight of his hand, and the lighting down of his arm, with the indignation of his anger; in the agony or conflict with him in the garden, he was conquered by prayer; and on the croſs Chriſt deſtroyed him thro' death, but now he'll be ſeized by his power, and cruſhed under his hand. And bound him a thouſand years; with the great chain he had in his hand: the devil is in chains now, is under the power of divine providence, and can do nothing without divine permiſſion; but this chain is long, and he appears oftentimes to have great liberty, and ranges about the air and earth, and does much miſchief; but now he'll be ſo bound by the power of Chriſt over him, that he'll not be able to ſtir hand or foot, to diſturb the ſaints, or deceive the nations, whether with falſe worſhip, and falſe doctrine, or by ſtirring them up to perſecute the ſaints. So of the devil, Aſmodæus, it is ſaid in Tobit viii. 3. that the angel Raphael, אסרהו, bound him. The ſpace of a thouſand years is not a certain number for an uncertain, or a large and indeterminate ſpace of time, as in Pſ. xc. 4. and cv. 8. theſe years are to be taken, not indefinitely, but definitely, for juſt this number of years exactly, as appears from their having the article prefixed to them; and are called afterwards no leſs than four times, τα χιλια ετη, the thouſand years, or theſe thouſand years, ver. 3, 4, 5, 7. and from the things which are attributed to the beginning and ending of theſe years, which fix the epócha, and period of them; as the binding of ſatan, when they begin, and the looſing of him when they end, as well as the reign of the ſaints with Chriſt during the whole time; to which may be added, the reſurrection of the ſaints at the commencement of them, and the reſurrection of the wicked at the cloſe: but the great queſtion is, whether they are begun or not? if they are begun, when they began; and if not, when they will. Some think that they began either at the birth of Chriſt, or at his reſurrection, or at the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. I put theſe together, becauſe they were all in one century, within the compaſs of ſeventy years, or thereabout; ſo that if the thouſand years began at either of them, they muſt end in the ſame century, in 1100. Now, tho' upon Chriſt's coming ſatan fell like lightning from heaven, and multitudes of men, poſſeſſed with devils, were diſpoſſeſſed by Chriſt, and he that had the power of death, the devil, was deſtroyed by him; and upon the preaching of the Goſpel by the Apoſtles in the Gentile world, the prince of the world was caſt out, his oracles were ſtruck dumb, multitudes were converted, and churches were ſet up every where, yet ſtill ſatan was not bound: he was not bound before the death of Chriſt; witneſs the many bodies of men poſſeſſed by him; his tempting Chriſt himſelf in the wilderneſs; his attacks upon him in the garden, and on the croſs; his putting it into the heart of Judas to betray him, and filling the chief-prieſts and ſcribes with malice and envy againſt him, to ſeek his death, which they brought about: nor was he bound, ſo as not to deceive the Jews, either before, or after the death of Chriſt, nor is he to this day; they were in Chriſt's time under the influence of their father the devil, whoſe luſts they would do, and did, in putting Chriſt to death; and after his death, they were inſtigated by ſatan to perſecute his Apoſtles in Judea, and elſewhere; and tho' after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem they had no more power to act in this way, yet they had no leſs ill-will and malice againſt the chriſtians, and are to this day filled with enmity againſt them, and are led captive by ſatan, and given up to believe a lye, that the Meſſiah is not come, and to reject the true Meſſiah, and to expect a falſe one: and as for the heathen world, notwithſtanding the progreſs of the Goſpel in it, yet for the firſt three hundred years paganiſm was the eſtabliſhed religion of the Roman empire; and chriſtianity was every where ſpoken againſt, deſpiſed, and perſecuted, and ſometimes triumphed over, as if it was extinct; and ſatan could never be ſaid to be bound, and in priſon himſelf, when he caſt ſuch multitudes into priſon, and cauſed them to have tribulation ten days, Rev. ii. 10. in which ſo many martyrs ſuffered: nor did ſatan appear to be bound, with reſpect to the church; the myſtery of iniquity began to work in the Apoſtles times, and there were then many antichriſts in the world, deceivers, falſe teachers and hereticks; there was a ſynagogue of ſatan, Rev. ii. 9. and ſuch a ſett of vile perſons under the name of chriſtians, as ſcarce ever was in the world; to which may be added, the great decline of love, and other graces, and of the purity of doctrine and worſhip in the beſt churches, and the many contentions among themſelves, in which ſatan had a great hand, and therefore could not be bound: moreover, ſome hundreds of years before the thouſand years ended, beginning from either of the above dates, the man of ſin, the ſon of perdition, the pope, or weſtern antichriſt, was revealed, whoſe coming is after the working of ſatan, 2 Theſſ. ii. 9. and therefore ſurely he could not be bound then: beſides, Mahomet, the eaſtern antichriſt, ſprung up, who opened the bottomleſs pit, and let out the ſmoke of it, by the Alcoran he delivered, and the falſe worſhip he ſet up: nor was there any thing in the eleventh century, which anſwered to the looſing of ſatan, to the Gog and Magog army, their war with the ſaints, and the iſſue of it; nor were the nations then more deceived, than they had been in ſome centuries paſt; at leaſt they were deceived in centuries paſt, both by the pope and Mahomet, which they would not have been, had ſatan been bound then: to which may be ſubjoined, that if ſatan was looſed, then he can't be ſaid to be looſed a little ſeaſon, as in ver. 3. in compariſon of the thouſand years, as that muſt be underſtood; ſince it is now between ſix and ſeven hundred years ſince, which is more than half a thouſand years. Others begin theſe years at Conſtantine's coming to the imperial throne; but tho' there was at that time a great ſpread of the Goſpel, an enlargement of Chriſt's kingdom, and a weakning of ſatan's, yet ſatan was far from being bound; ſee ch. xii. 7, 8. xiii. 15. witneſs the flood of errors and hereſies which he quickly brought in, as the Eutychian and Neſtorian hereſies, the one confounding the natures, the other dividing the perſon of Chriſt; the Pelagian hereſy, which obſcured the grace of God, and advanced the free will of man; the Macedonian hereſy, which denied the divinity of the Spirit; and eſpecially the Arian hereſy, which was oppoſed to the deity of Chriſt, and which introduced great contentions and confuſion in the churches, and iſſued in a violent perſecution of them, being embraced by the ſons of Conſtantine; not to take notice of Julian, an heathen emperor, aſcending the throne, who by many deviliſh arts endeavoured to extirpate chriſtanity; nor what has been obſerved before, the riſe of both Mahomet in the eaſt, and the Romiſh antichriſt in the weſt, which were both within this period; in proceſs of time the weſtern empire was over-run by the Goths and Vandals, and the eaſtern empire by the Saracens and Turks; to which may be added, the violent perſecutions of the Waldenſes and Albigenſes, before the year 1300, about which time the thouſand years muſt ceaſe, according to this computation, for oppoſing the pope of Rome, and who were ſlain where ſatan had his ſeat, Rev. ii. 13. and therefore not bound; nor was there any thing happened in that century which might anſwer to the looſing of him. Others date theſe thouſand years from the reformation, and ſo not much more than two hundred of them are yet paſſed; but that ſatan was not bound then, and is not now, is manifeſt. All the popiſh nations have not been reformed, but ſtill remain under the deception; and ſome that have been, have revolted again; and the devil has continued to deceive the nations with that falſe worſhip, and to ſtir them up to perſecute the reformed. Witneſs the burning of them here in queen Mary's days, the maſſacres in France and Ireland, the preſent inquiſition in Spain and Portugal, and the perſecution of the Hugonots in France, and other proteſtants elſewhere: and this is further evident from the decline in the reformed churches, both as to doctrine, diſcipline, and converſation; from the ſpread of errors and hereſies of all kinds ever ſince, and eſpecially in our age; and from the general prophaneneſs and infidelity of the times, which, when conſidered, no man in his ſenſes can ever think that ſatan is bound; nor indeed will he be bound, or theſe thouſand years begin, till after the converſion of the Jews, and the bringing in the fulneſs of the Gentiles, and the deſtruction of all the antichriſtian powers, pagan, papal, and Mahometan, as appears from the order of this viſion, and its connexion with the preceding chapter.

Ver. 3. And caſt him into the bottomleſs pit, &c.] Or deep, into which the devils deſired they might not be ſent, and which they dreaded as a torment, it may be, becauſe a place of confinement, Luke viii. 31. Matt. viii. 29. for this is called a priſon, ver. 7. and is diſtinguiſhed from the lake of fire, into which the devil is afterwards caſt, ver. 10. And ſhut him up; that ſo he might not rove about in the air, nor go to and fro in the earth, nor walk about like a roaring lion, ſeeking to affright, diſturb, or devour: and ſet a ſeal upon him; or upon the door of the pit, for further ſecurity, as was upon the ſtone at the mouth of the lion's den, Dan. vi. 17. and of Chriſt's ſepulchre, Matt. xxvii. 66. The Jews[u] make mention of a ſtone they call Shetijah, with which the Lord of the world ſealed the mouth of the great deep, or bottomleſs pit, at the beginning; but here not that, but ſatan in it is ſealed. The Alexandrian copy reads, and ſealed him firmly, ſo that it was impoſſible for him to break out: the end of this apprehenſion, binding, impriſonment, and ſecurity of ſatan is, that he ſhould deceive the nations no more; that is, by drawing them into idolatry, falſe worſhip, and falſe doctrine; and by exciting them to make war againſt the ſaints, or to perſecute them, as appears from ver. 8. as he had done before; and it is notorious enough, that he has deceived them both theſe ways; he deceived the pagan nations not only before, but ſince the coming of Chriſt, to worſhip the heathen deities; and the papiſts, who are called Gentiles, or nations, ch. xi. 2. to fall down to idols of gold, ſilver, ſtone, and wood; and the nation of the Jews to entertain a falſe and deluded notion of the Meſſiah; and all of them, in their turns, to perſecute the people of God, as the Jews at the death of Stephen, and afterwards; the pagan emperors for the firſt three hundred years after Chriſt; the papiſts from the riſe of the beaſt, who had power given him to make war with the ſaints, and overcome them; but now he'll be under ſuch reſtraint, and in ſuch cloſe confinement, that he'll not be able to move the wicked nations to any thing of this kind, as he will when he is looſed at the end of the thouſand years; nor will he be able ſo much as to tempt any of the ſaints, during this term of time, nor give them the leaſt moleſtation or uneaſineſs. Till the thouſand years ſhall be fulfilled; or ended, the whole ſpace of them run out: and after that he muſt be looſed a little ſeaſon; a ſmall ſpace of time, in compariſon of the thouſand years; how long it will be exactly, can't be ſaid; and this muſt be, not becauſe he can't be held any longer, or thro' any weakneſs in Chriſt; but becauſe of the decree of God, who has ſo appointed it, for the glorifying of himſelf, in the ſalvation of his people, and in the final deſtruction of the devil, and the Gog and Magog army.

Ver. 4. And I ſaw thrones, and they ſat upon them, &c.] Beſides the throne of God the Father, and the throne of glory, on which the Son of God ſits, and the twelve thrones for the twelve Apoſtles of the Lamb; there will be thrones ſet, or pitched, for all the ſaints, Dan. vii. 9. who will ſit on them, in the character of kings, and as conquerors, and ſhall ſit quiet, and undiſturbed, and be in perfect eaſe, and peace, for they that ſit on them are the ſame perſons hereafter deſcribed in this verſe; for after the binding of ſatan, an account is given of the happineſs and glory of the ſaints during that time: and judgment was given unto them; that is, power, dominion, regal authority, poſſeſſion of a kingdom, anſwerable to their character as kings, and to their poſition, ſitting on thrones, Dan. vii. 22, 27. unleſs it ſhould be rather underſtood of juſtice being done them, which does not ſo manifeſtly take place in the preſent ſtate of things, and of which they ſometimes complain; but now righteous judgment will be given for them, and againſt their enemies; their perſons will be openly declared righteous; their characters will be cleared of all falſe imputations faſtened on them; and their works and ſufferings for Chriſt will be taken notice of in a way of grace, and rewarded in a very glorious manner. And ſo it may reſpect their being judged themſelves, but not their judging of others, the wicked, which is the ſole work of Chriſt; nor will the wicked now be upon the ſpot to be judged; nor is that notion to be ſupported by Matt. xix. 28. 1 Cor. vi. 2, 3. ſee the notes there. The Jews fancy, that their chief men ſhall judge the world in the time to come; for ſo they ſay[w], "in future "time, (or in the world to come) the holy bleſſed "God will ſit, and kings will place thrones for the "great men of Iſrael, and they ſhall ſit and judge "the nations of the world with the holy bleſſed "God:" but the perſons here meant are not Jews, but ſufferers for the ſake of Jeſus, as follows: and I ſaw the ſouls of them that were beheaded for the witneſs of Jeſus, and for the word of God; theſe, with the perſons deſcribed in the next clauſe, are they who will ſit on thrones, during the thouſand years of ſatan's being bound, and will have judgment given them; even ſuch who have bore witneſs to the truth of Jeſus, being the Son of God, the true Meſſiah, and the only ſaviour of ſinners, and to him as the eſſential Word of God, or to the written word of God, the whole Goſpel, all the truths and doctrines of it; and who have been beheaded for bearing ſuch a teſtimony, as John the Baptiſt was, the firſt of the witneſſes of Jeſus: and ſince this kind of puniſhment was a Roman one, it ſeems particularly to point at ſuch perſons who ſuffered under the Roman pagan emperors, and to deſign the ſame ſouls ſaid to be under the altar, and to cry for vengeance, ch. vi. 9. This clauſe, in connexion with the former, is differently rendered; the Syriac verſion renders it thus, and judgment was given to them, and to the ſouls that were beheaded, &c. the Arabic verſion, and to them was given the judgment of the ſouls killed, &c. the Ethiopic verſion, and then I ſaw a ſeat, and the ſon of man ſat upon it, and he rendered to them judgment for the ſouls of them that were ſlain for the law of the Lord Jeſus. And which had not worſhipped the beaſt, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; ſee ch. xiii. 1, 4, 14, 15, 16. This deſcribes ſuch who ſhall have made no profeſſion of the popiſh religion, nor have ſupported it in any way; who ſhall not have joined in the idolatry of the Romiſh antichriſt, but ſhall have proteſted againſt it, and departed from it, and ſhall have adhered to Chriſt, and to the true worſhip of God; ſee ch. xiv. 1. and xv. 2. And ſo this, with the preceding character, includes all the ſaints that lived under Rome pagan, and Rome papal, to the deſtruction of antichriſt, and the ſetting up of Chriſt's kingdom; not that theſe martyrs and confeſſors, or even all the ſaints of their times, are the only perſons that ſhall ſhare in the glory and happineſs of the thouſand years reign of Chriſt, and binding of ſatan; for all the ſaints will come with Chriſt, and all the dead in Chriſt will riſe firſt, or be partakers of the firſt reſurrection; and all that are redeemed by his blood, of whatſoever nation, or in whatſoever age of the world they have lived, even from the beginning of it, ſhall be kings and prieſts, and reign with him on earth, Zech. xiv. 5. 1 Theſſ. iii. 13. and iv. 14, 16. Rev. v. 9, 10. tho John only takes notice of theſe, becauſe the deſign of this book, and of the viſions ſhown to him, was only to give a prophetic hiſtory of the church, from his time, to the end of the world; and theſe particularly are obſerved to encourage the ſaints under ſufferings for Chriſt: and they lived; meaning not ſpiritually, for ſo they did before, and whilſt they bore their teſtimony to Chriſt, and againſt antichriſt, and previous to their death; nor in their ſucceſſors, for it would not be juſt and reaſonable that they ſhould be beheaded for their witneſs of Chriſt and his word, and others ſhould live and reign with Chriſt in their room and ſtead; nor is this to be underſtood of their living in their ſouls, for ſo they live in their ſeparate ſtate; the ſoul never dies; God is not the God of the dead, but of the living: but the ſenſe is, that they lived again, as in ver. 5. they lived corporally; their ſouls lived in their bodies, their bodies being raiſed again, and re-united to their ſouls, their whole perſons lived; or the ſouls of them that were beheaded lived; that is, their bodies lived again, the ſoul being ſometimes put for the body, Pſ. xvi. 10. and this is called the firſt reſurrection in the next verſe: and reigned with Chriſt a thouſand years; as all that ſuffer with him will, and as all that will live godly muſt, and do, 2 Tim. ii. 12. and iii. 12. Chriſt being deſcended from heaven, and having bound ſatan, and the dead ſaints being raiſed, and the living ones changed, he will reign among them perſonally, viſibly, and glorioſly, and in the fulleſt manner; all the antichriſtian powers will be deſtroyed; ſatan will be in cloſe confinement; death, with reſpect to Chriſt and his people, will be no more; the heavens and the earth will be made new, and all things will be ſubject to him; and all his ſaints will be with him, and they ſhall reign with him; they ſhall be glorified together; they ſhall ſit on the throne with him, have a crown of righteouſneſs given them, and poſſeſs the kingdom appointed for them; they'll reign over all their enemies; ſatan will be bruiſed under their feet, being bound; the wicked will be ſhut up in hell, and neither will be able to give them any diſturbance; and ſin and death will be no more: this reign will not be in a ſenſual and carnal way, or lie in poſſeſſing worldly riches and honours, in eating and drinking, marrying, and giving in marriage; the ſaints will not be in a mortal, but in an immortal ſtate; the children of this reſurrection will be like the angels; and this reign will be on earth, ch. v. 10. the preſent earth will be burnt up, and a new one formed, in which theſe righteous perſons will dwell, 2 Pet. iii. 13. of which ſee the note on ch. xxi. 1. and it will laſt a thouſand years; not diſtinct from, but the ſame with the thouſand years in which ſatan will be bound; for if they were diſtinct from them, and ſhould commence when they are ended, the reign of Chriſt with his ſaints would be when ſatan is looſed, which is utterly inconſiſtent with it. The Syriac verſion very rightly renders it, theſe thouſand years, referring to thoſe of ſatan's binding. Nor are theſe thouſand years to be underſtood prophetically, for as many years as there are days in a thouſand years; for as this would defer the judgment of the wicked, and the ultimate glory of the ſaints, to a prodigious length of time, ſo it ſhould be obſerved, that prophetic time will now be no longer, according to the angel's oath in ch. x. 6. but theſe are to be underſtood literally and definitely, as before, of juſt ſuch an exact number and term of years; ſee 2 Pet. iii. 8. this is a perfect number, and is expreſſive of the perfection of this ſtate, and is a term of years that neither Adam, nor any of his ſons, arrived unto; but Chriſt the ſecond Adam ſhall ſee his ſeed, and ſhall prolong his days longer than any of them, Iſ. liii. 10. It is an obſervation of the Jewiſh Rabbins [x], that the day in Gen. ii. 17. is the day of the holy bleſſed God (i. e. a thouſand years) and therefore the firſt Adam did not perfect, or fill up his day, for there wanted ſeventy years of it: and it is a notion that prevails with them, that the days of the Meſſiah will be a thouſand years [y]; and ſo they will be at his ſecond coming, but not at his firſt, which they vainly expect, it being paſt: and alſo they ſay [z], that in theſe thouſand years God will renew his world, and that then the righteous will be raiſed, and no more return to duſt; which agrees with John's new heaven and new earth during this ſtate, and with the firſt reſurrection: and ſo Jerom, who was converſant with the Rabbins, ſays [a] that the Jews expect a thouſand years reign.

[u] Targum Jon. in Exod. xxviii. 30.

[w] Yalkut Simeoni, par. 2. fol. 41. 4.

Ver. 5. But the reſt of the dead, &c.] Meaning not the dead ſaints, for they'll be all raiſed together, but the wicked dead; and not them as morally or ſpiritually, but as corporally dead: theſe lived not again until the thouſand years were finiſhed; ſo that there will be ſuch an exact term of years between the reſurrection of the ſaints and the reſurrection of the wicked; nor will there be any wicked living upon earth, or in bodies, during that time; for the wicked dead will not be raiſed with the ſaints at Chriſt's coming, and the wicked living will be deſtroyed in the conflagration of the world, and neither of them ſhall live again until the end of theſe years. This clauſe is left out in the Syriac verſion. This is the firſt reſurrection, which is not to be connected with the living again of the reſt of the dead at the end of the thouſand years, for that will be the ſecond and laſt reſurrection; but with the witneſſes of Jeſus, and the true worſhippers of God living again, in order to reign with Chriſt a thouſand years; for this reſurrection is not meant of a reſurrection from the death of ſin to a life of grace; though the work of grace and converſion is ſometimes ſo repreſented, it cannot be deſigned here; for ſuch a reſurrection the above witneſſes and worſhippers were partakers of before their ſufferings, and which was antecedently neceſſary to their witneſs and worſhip; beſides, this reſurrection was future in John's time, and was what was to be done at once, and was peculiar to the commencement of the thouſand years; whereas the ſpiritual reſurrection was before his time, and has been ever ſince the beginning, and is ſucceſſive in all ages, and not affixed to any one period of time, though there may be more inſtances of it in one age than in another; nor is this ever called the firſt reſurrection, nor can any reaſon be given why it ſhould; for tho' one man may be converted before another, his converſion can't be called the firſt reſurrection, ſince there are many inſtances of this nature before, and many more after; beſides, at this time, there will be none of God's people to be raiſed in this ſenſe; they'll be all quickened and converted before; the nation of the Jews will be born again, and the fullneſs of the Gentiles brought in; to which may be added, that if the firſt reſurrection is to be underſtood in a ſpiritual ſenſe, then the ſecond reſurrection of the wicked dead, at the end of the thouſand years, muſt be underſtood in like manner: nor is a reviving of the cauſe of Chriſt and his intereſt here intended, particularly thro' the calling of the Jews, and the numerous converſion of the Gentiles; for tho' the former of theſe eſpecially is ſignified by the quickening of the dry bones in Ezekiel's viſion, and is expreſſed by bringing the Jews out of their graves, and is called life from the dead, Rom. xi. 15. yet that cannot with any propriety be called the firſt reſurrection; for there was a great reviving of true religion in the time of John the Baptiſt, Chriſt and his Apoſtles, eſpecially after the effuſion of the Spirit on the day of Pentecoſt, both among Jews and Gentiles; and there was a revival of the chriſtian religion in the times of Conſtantine, and again at the reformation from popery; and as for the converſion of the Jews and the Gentiles in the latter day, that will be the laſt reviving of the cauſe and intereſt of Chriſt, which will uſher in his ſpiritual reign, and therefore ſhould rather be called the laſt, than the firſt reſurrection; beſides, this affair will be over before this time; this is ſignified by the marriage of the Lamb in the preceding chapter; and the kingdoms of the world will become Chriſt's under the ſeventh trumpet, and both will be in the ſpiritual reign: moreover, this does by no means agree with the character of the perſons who ſhall ſhare in this reſurrection, they are ſuch who ſhall have lived and ſuffered, at leaſt many of them, under Rome pagan and papal, ver. 4. and therefore can never be underſtood of Jews and Gentiles in the latter day, when neither one nor other ſhall be any more. To which may be ſubjoined, that if this was the ſenſe, then this cauſe muſt revive alſo among the wicked at the end of the thouſand years, whereas, when they are raiſed, they'll attempt the very reverſe. It remains then, that by this firſt reſurrection muſt be meant a corporal one; for as ſome of thoſe that will live again were corporally beheaded, and all of them corporally died, they will be corporally raiſed again; and in ſuch ſenſe will the reſt of the dead be raiſed at the end of theſe years; with reſpect to which this is properly called the firſt reſurrection; it is the firſt in time, it will be at the beginning of the thouſand years, and the ſecond will be at the cloſe; the dead in Chriſt will riſe firſt in order of time, 1 Theſſ. iv. 16. ſee the note there; they will have the dominion in this ſenſe over the wicked in the morning of the reſurrection: Chriſt's reſurrection is indeed firſt, but that is the cauſe and pledge of this; and there were particular reſurrections both before and after his, but they were to a mortal ſtate; and there were ſome ſaints that roſe from the dead immediately after his reſurrection; but theſe were but few, and were deſigned as an earneſt of this; beſides, tho' it was a reſurrection, it was not the reſurrection; and it may be further obſerved, that the reſurrection of the righteous will be the firſt at the coming of Chriſt, 1 Cor. xv. 22. there will be none then before theirs; theirs will be the firſt; the reſurrection of the wicked, to which this is oppoſed as the firſt, will not be till a thouſand years after: add to all which, that this reſurrection will be η πρωτη, the firſt, that is, the beſt, as the word is uſed in Luke xv. 22. the chief, the principal; the reſurrection of the wicked can hardly be called a reſurrection in compariſon of it, and in many places theirs is not taken notice of where this is, as in 1 Cor. xv. 1 Theſſ. iv. the righteous will be raiſed by virtue of union to Chriſt, in conſequence of his having the charge both of their ſouls and bodies, and in conformity to his glorious body, and to eternal life, which will not be the caſe of the wicked.

[a] Comment. in Zach. xiv. 16, 18.

Ver. 6. Bleſſed and holy is he that hath part in the firſt reſurrection, &c.] This may be conſidered either as deſcriptive of the perſons that ſhall partake of this privilege; as that they are only ſuch who are bleſſed with ſpiritual bleſſings, with a juſtifying righteouſneſs, with pardon of ſin, and regenerating grace, and who are ſanctified by the Spirit of God; theſe, and theſe only, will be firſt raiſed, and will be called to inherit the kingdom prepared for them, Matt. xxv. 34. or elſe as expreſſive of their happineſs and holineſs when raiſed; they ſhall be perfectly bleſſed in ſoul and body, and perfectly holy in both: they ſhall be bleſſed, for on ſuch the ſecond death hath no power; which is the lake of fire, ver. 14. and ch. xxi. 8. the ſenſe is, they ſhall eſcape everlaſting burnings, the fire of hell, the torment and miſery of the wicked; they ſhall be delivered from wrath to come; and as their bodies will die no more, their ſouls will not be ſubject to any ſenſe of wrath, or to any ſort of puniſhment: and they will be holy; they will have no ſin in them: but they will be prieſts of God and of Chriſt; of God the Father, and of his Son Jeſus Chriſt, being made ſo to the former by the latter, ch. i. 6. or of God, even of Chriſt, that is, of God, who is Chriſt, ſince it follows: and ſhall reign with him; they will be wholly devoted to, and employed in the ſervice of God and of Chriſt, and will be continually offering up the ſacrifices of praiſe, or ſinging the ſong of the Lamb, adoring the grace and goodneſs of God and Chriſt unto them, ſhewn them both in providence and in grace: and ſhall reign with him a thouſand years; this is mentioned again, partly to aſſert the certainty of it, and partly to point at the bleſſedneſs of the riſen ſaints.

Ver. 7. And when the thouſand years are expired, &c.] Which are not yet expired; not in the year 1000, or 1033 or 4, reckoning from the birth or death of Chriſt, when paganiſm, which had been deſtroyed in the Gentile world, was introduced into the church, which bore the chriſtian name, through the man of ſin; for this had been bringing in by degrees more or leſs from the times of Conſtantine; whence it appears, that ſatan in this reſpect was looſe before, and therefore this was not the time of his looſing; nor in 1073, reckoning from the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, and the carrying and ſpread of the Goſpel among the Gentiles, in which year Hildebrand came to the popedom, who may be truly called the brand of hell; Damianus, a brother cardinal, who lived at the ſame time with him when he was archdeacon of Rome, calls him the holy devil; he was an impoſtor, ſorcerer, and necromancer, and by wicked arts got into the papal chair; this pope raiſed the papal power over princes to a very great height, and made the ſee of Rome abſolutely independent, and all biſhops dependent on it; he forbid biſhops receiving their inveſtiture from the emperor, or any lay perſon, under pain of excommunication: this is the pope that made the emperor, with his empreſs and child, wait three days bare-foot at his gates, in the depth of winter, before they could be admitted to him; that doctrine of devils, forbidding prieſts to marry, was eſtabliſhed by him; and in his days that monſtrous and abſurd notion of tranſubſtantiation began to prevail, tho' he himſelf uſed his breaden god but very roughly; for taking it to be really God, he required an anſwer from it againſt the emperor; but it not ſpeaking, he threw it into the fire, and burnt it. Now it will be allowed, that the devil was looſe at this time, but then ſo he was before: there had been popes before this who were conjurers, necromancers, and had familiarity and confederacy with the devil; and near five hundred years before this time, the pope was declared univerſal biſhop by Phocas; and the forbidding prieſts marriage was ſtarted in the council of Nice, and was approved of by pope Siricius, long before this time, tho' it was now more firmly eſtabliſhed; add to this, that if the expiration of the 1000 years, and the looſing of ſatan were at this time, he muſt have been looſed near 700 years, which can never be called a little ſeaſon, as in ver. 3. eſpecially in compariſon of the 1000 years, the time of his binding; when it is two thirds of that time: nor did theſe years expire in or about 1300 reckoning from Conſtantine, about which time pope Boniface the Eighth lived, of whom it is ſaid, that he came in like a fox, ruled like a lion, and died like a dog; upon his acceſſion to the popedom, he inſtituted a jubilee, and on the firſt day he appeared in his pontifical habit, and gave the benediction to the people, and on the next day he cloathed himſelf with an imperial habit, and put on a rich diadem, and ſat on a throne, with a naked ſword bore before him, when he uttered theſe words, Ecce hic duo gladii, Behold here are two ſwords, referring to Luke xxii. 38. which the papiſts would have underſtood of the temporal and ſpiritual power which Peter and his ſucceſſors are poſſeſſed of; at the ſame time Ottoman was crowned emperor of the Mahometan nations, who founded the Turkiſh empire, and ſpread the Mahometan religion in Aſia and Greece; and by both theſe, great diſturbances and wars were occaſioned, both in the eaſt and weſt: but ſtill this does not make it appear that now was the time of ſatan's looſing; ſince before this time the papal power was at its utmoſt height, and the Mahometan religion had been hundreds of years in the world, and had greatly prevailed; and therefore ſatan muſt be looſed before; and indeed, it is in vain to ſeek after the expiration of theſe years, and the looſing of ſatan, when as yet the years are not begun, nor has ſatan been bound, as has been ſhewn on ver. 2. but however, when they will be ended, ſatan ſhall be looſed out of his priſon; during the thouſand years he will be in a ſtate of confinement, being bound, ſhut, and ſealed up in the bottomleſs pit, which is therefore here called a priſon, as is the place of damned ſpirits, in 1 Pet. iii. 19. but when theſe will be at an end, his chain will be taken off, at leaſt will be lengthened; the ſeal upon him will be broken off, the bottomleſs pit will be opened, and he let looſe; which will be done not by himſelf, but by him that bound him, or by divine permiſſion.

Ver. 8. And ſhall go out, &c.] Of his priſon, the bottomleſs pit, and ſhall walk to and fro in the earth, and go about like a deceitful ſerpent, and roaring lion, as before: to deceive the nations; as he had done before the thouſand years began, and from which he was reſtrained during that time; he had before deceived the pagan, papal, and Mahometan nations, and now he'll go forth to deceive thoſe at this time which are in the four quarters of the earth; all the world over: the names of which nations are, Gog and Magog; not the ſame which are mentioned in Ezekiel, ch. xxxviii. and xxxix. tho' there is an alluſion to them, and from thence the names are taken, and ſome of the figures borrowed, and deſign the enemies of God's people, who will be in the world at this time; ſo the Jews[b] ſpeak of a Gog and Magog, that will come up againſt Jeruſalem in the days of the Meſſiah, whom they ſtill expect, by whom they ſhall be deſtroyed: to gather them together to battle; not one againſt another, as ſome think, as the pope againſt the Turk, and the Turk againſt the pope, nor are they deſigned at all; nor to kill them, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it; but againſt the ſaints and people of God, in the beloved city and camp; herein will lie his deception of them: the number of whom is as the ſand of the ſea; that is, innumerable, in alluſion to Gog and Magog in Ezek. xxxviii. 9, 15, 16. but the great queſtion is, who are meant by theſe?—Not the papiſts, the nations made drunk with the wine of Rome's fornication, the Gentiles, by whom the holy city is trodden under foot, and who will be angry when the time of avenging the ſaints is come, ch. xi. 2, 18. and xviii. 2. for theſe will be all deſtroyed, even all the remains of them, at the battle of Armageddon; nor is antichriſt himſelf intended, who will be deſtroyed in the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt, with the breath of his mouth; and at the above deciſive battle the beaſt and the falſe prophet will be taken alive, and caſt into the lake of fire: nor are the Turks deſigned, the people of Magog being Scythians originally, as Joſephus ſays[c], from whence the Turks ſprung; or Tartarians, for Paulus Venetus[d] ſays, the countries of Gog and Magog are in Tartary, called Jug and Munjug; hence ſome think theſe are the ſame with the four angels bound at the river Euphrates, and looſed, whoſe armies are repreſented as exceeding numerous, ch. ix. 14, 16, 17. but tho' the Turkiſh dominions are very large, yet they don't extend to the four quarters of the world; and when the Turks were let looſe, and came even into Europe, it was not againſt the true chriſtians, the camp of the ſaints, the beloved city, as here, but againſt the antichriſtian party; the papiſts have ſuffered moſt by the incurſions of the Turks, tho' it has not brought them to repentance; beſides, the looſing of the four angels, or the Turkiſh nations, and their chiefs, is long before theſe thouſand years begin; that is paſt already, under the ſixth trumpet, whereas the ſeventh trumpet will be blown, and all the ſeven vials poured out, and the world cleared of all Chriſt's enemies, and after that a thouſand years muſt run out, before this Gog and Magog army will appear: nor are the Americans the nations here ſpoken of; for they are but in one quarter of the world; nor is there any reaſon to believe there will be there more enemies of Chriſt's people than in any other part, ſince in the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt the earth ſhall be full of his knowledge, and his ſpiritual kingdom will be to the ends of the earth: and as for that notion that thoſe inhabiting the other hemiſphere will be ſaved from the general conflagration, there's no reaſon to believe it, ſince the earth, and whatſoever is therein, ſhall be burnt up, 2 Pet. iii. 10. Some think that the wicked living in the diſtant parts of the world, in the corners of the earth, are meant, who upon Chriſt's coming, will flee thither, and remain in continual dread and terror to the end of the thouſand years, when ſatan will gather them together, and ſpirit them up againſt the ſaints; but this cannot be, becauſe they'll all be deſtroyed at the univerſal conflagration of the world; nor will there be any in the new earth but righteous perſons: but theſe will be all the wicked dead, the reſt of the dead, who lived not again until the thouſand years are ended, when will be the ſecond reſurrection, the reſurrection of all the wicked that have been from the beginning of the world; and theſe, with the poſſe of devils under ſatan, will make up the Gog and Magog army: all the characters agree with them; theſe may be called nations, or Gentiles, being aliens from the true Iſrael of God, the dogs that will be without the holy city; theſe may be ſaid to be in the four quarters of the world, ſince where they die and are buried, there they'll riſe and ſtand upon their feet, an exceeding great army; and as they'll die enemies to Chriſt and his people, they'll riſe ſuch; as they will go down to hell with their weapons of war, as is ſaid of Meſhech and Tubal, the people of Gog, Ezek. xxxii. 27. they'll riſe with the ſame; the grave, the duſt of the earth, will make no change in their vile bodies, nor the flames of hell any alteration in the diſpoſition of their minds; yea, as is ſaid in the above place, they'll lay their ſwords under their heads, and ſo be in a readineſs when they riſe, to make uſe of them againſt the ſaints, and to avenge themſelves; for their envy, malice, and revenge, will be heightened and increaſed by their confinement and puniſhment in hell: nor need this be wondered at, ſince the devils, notwithſtanding they have been ſo long expelled the realms of light, and have been in chains of darkneſs, and in expectation of everlaſting torment, retain the ſame enmity as ever; and tho' the deception will be very great, to attack ſaints in an immortal ſtate, who are like the angels that die not, nor will theſe die any more, and eſpecially ſince Chriſt the King of Kings and Lord of Lords, who rules the nations with a rod of iron, will be at the head of them; yet it need not ſeem ſtrange, when they will riſe as weak and feeble, and as little able to reſiſt temptation, and as much expoſed to ſeduction as they were before; ſatan will have as much power over them as ever; and what with their own numbers, and the poſſe of devils at the head of them, and eſpecially conſidering the deſperateneſs of their ſtate, and that this is their laſt ſtruggle and effort for liberty, they will animate themſelves and one another to this ſtrange undertaking. Theſe now may be called Gog and Magog, as the one ſignifies covered, the other open, or uncovered; theſe being all the enemies of Chriſt and his people, both ſecret and open: and this ſenſe well accounts for their number, being as the ſand of the ſea; and which the Arabic verſion ſeems to confirm, and Jagog and Magog ſhall riſe with him. The Jews have a notion that this deception of ſatan will be at the day of judgment, which agrees with this account; for immediately upon this will follow the judgment of the wicked: they ſay[e], "in the day that judgment ſhall be found in the "world, and the holy bleſſed God ſhall ſit upon the "throne of judgment, ſatan אסטי לעילא ותתא, "ſhall deceive above and below (angels and men) and "he ſhall be found to deſtroy the world, and to "take away ſouls."

[c] Antiq. l. 1. c. 6. §. 1.

[d] In Schindler. Lex.

Ver. 9. And they went up on the breadth of the earth, &c.] Either the whole earth, in the ſeveral parts of which they will be raiſed; or the land of Iſrael, where Chriſt and his people will be; and ſo the wicked being raiſed, will come up from the ſeveral parts of the world, and ſpread themſelves over the holy land; juſt as Gog and Magog are ſaid to cover the land of Iſrael, as a cloud, Ezek. xxxviii. 16. and it may be obſerved, that the very phraſe of רחב ארצך, the breadth of thy land, is uſed of Immanuel's land, or the land of Iſrael, in Iſ. viii. 8. and compaſſed the camp of the ſaints about; theſe are the bleſſed and holy ones, who have part in the firſt reſurrection, even all the ſaints; not only the martyrs under the heathen perſecutions, and the confeſſors of Chriſt under the papacy, but all the ſaints from the beginning of the world; theſe will be all encamped together, with the tabernacle of God in the midſt of them, ch. xxi. 3. and Chriſt their king at the head of them, Micah ii. 13. the alluſion is to the encampment of the children of Iſrael in the wilderneſs, about the tabernacle, which was in the midſt of them, Numb. ii. 2, &c. afterwards the city of Jeruſalem itſelf was called a camp, and anſwered in all reſpects to the camp in the wilderneſs[f], to which the reference is in Heb. xiii. 11, 12, 13. and which ſerves to illuſtrate the paſſage here, ſince it follows: and the beloved city; not Conſtantinople, as ſome have thought, but the holy city, the new Jeruſalem, ch. xxi. 2. the general aſſembly and church of the firſt-born, beloved by God and Chriſt, and by the holy angels, and by one another; and theſe very probably will be with Chriſt upon the ſame ſpot of ground where the old Jeruſalem ſtood, a city ſo highly favoured, and ſo much diſtinguiſhed by God; ſo that where Chriſt ſuffered ſo much reproach and ſhame, and ſuch an accurſed death, he will now be glorified, and live in triumph with his ſaints: and fire came down from God out of heaven and devoured them; not material fire; with this the earth, and the bodies of the wicked then upon it, will be burnt at the beginning of the thouſand years; but now their bodies will be raiſed immortal, and not capable of being conſumed with ſuch fire; but the fiery indignation of God, or his wrath, which will be poured out like fire, is here meant, which will deſtroy both body and ſoul; this is no other than the lake of fire, or ſecond death, into which they will be caſt; and which will not be until the judgment is over, though it is here related to ſhow what will be the event and iſſue of their attack upon the ſaints: the alluſion is to the fire ſent upon Gog and Magog, and to the burning of their weapons, in Ezek. xxxviii. 22. and xxxix. 6, 9, 10. and ſo the Jews[g] ſay of their Gog and Magog, that "they ſhall be killed with the burning of "the ſoul, with a flame of fire, which ſhall come "from under the throne of glory."

Ver. 10. And the devil that deceived them, &c.] Both before death, in the preſent life, by tempting and drawing them into immorality and prophaneneſs, or idolatry, ſuperſtition, and will-worſhip, or perſecution of the ſaints; and after their reſurrection, by inſtigating them to make this fooliſh attempt upon the ſaints of the moſt high: was caſt into the lake of fire and brimſtone; the ſame with the everlaſting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels; this will be his full torment, in which he is not as yet; and this will not be until the judgment is finiſhed hereafter deſcribed; tho' it is here mentioned to iſſue the account of ſatan at once, and to ſhow what will be his final ſtate and condition: where the beaſt and falſe prophet are; ch. xix. 20. who for ſo many years have been companions in wickedneſs together; the beaſt being the firſt beaſt, that received his power, ſeat, and authority from the dragon, or devil; the falſe prophet being the ſecond beaſt, or antichriſt in his eccleſiaſtical capacity, as the beaſt is antichriſt in his civil power, whoſe coming is after the working of ſatan, with ſigns and lying wonders: and ſhall be tormented day and night for ever and ever; that is, not only the devil, but the beaſt and falſe prophet, for the word is in the plural number: and this will be the caſe of all wicked men, of all whoſe minds are enmity to God and Chriſt, and to his people; and is a proof of the eternity of hell-torments.

Ver. 11. And I ſaw a great white throne, &c.] This viſion refers not to the Goſpel-diſpenſation, from the exaltation of Chriſt to his ſecond coming; when he ſat down on his throne at the right hand of God, and was declared Lord and Chriſt; when there was a ſhaking of the heavens and the earth, a removing of the Moſaic œconomy, and the ordinances of the ceremonial law in Judea, and of paganiſm in the Gentile world; when the Goſpel was preached to all nations, and the dead in ſins were quickened, and aroſe and ſtood before the throne of grace; when the books of the ſcriptures were opened and explained, and the book of life was alſo opened; and by the converſion of ſome, and not others, it was known who were written in it, and who were not, and men were judged to be alive or dead in a ſpiritual ſenſe, according to the influence the opening of theſe books had upon them; and the powers of the world, comparable to a ſea, and of death and hell, were not able to hold in the dead in ſin, when they were called to life, with reſpect to whom death and hell were deſtroyed; nor was the Goſpel the ſavour of death to any but to ſuch who were not written in the book of life. This, in other words, is the ſum of Cocceius's ſenſe of this viſion; but this affair will be over, and all God's elect gathered in by the preaching of the Goſpel, before this viſion takes place: nor does it reſpect the reſtoration of the Jews, who now are as dead, like Ezekiel's dry bones, but will at this time be quickned, and ſtand upon their feet an exceeding great army, and will be gathered from the ſeveral parts where they are as dead; and when it will be known by their conduct and behaviour who are God's elect among them, and who are not; which is Brightman's interpretation of the viſion: but this, as we have ſeen, will come to paſs according to the viſion in the preceding chapter, before the thouſand years begin; whereas this viſion will not begin to be accompliſhed until they are ended: it is beſt therefore to underſtand it of the general judgment at the laſt day, which is the common ſenſe of antient and modern interpreters; tho' it ſeems only to regard the judgment of the wicked, for no other are made mention of in it: the throne here ſeen, is a throne of judgment; it is called a great one, becauſe a great perſon ſat upon it, the Word of God, the King of Kings and Lord of Lords, even he who is the great God, and judge of the whole earth; and becauſe of the great work that will be tranſacted upon it, the judgment of all the wicked; this will be the greateſt aſſize that ever was held; it is called the judgment of the great day, and the great and dreadful day of the Lord, Jude 6. Mal. iv. 5. this throne is alſo ſaid to be a white one; juſt as the ſame perſon is ſaid to ſit upon a white cloud, and ride upon a white horſe, ch. xiv. 14. and xix. 11. it may be in alluſion either to a white and ſerene cloud, or to a throne of ivory, ſuch an one as Solomon made, 2 Chron. ix. 17. and this is either expreſſive of the majeſty and ſplendor of it, it being a throne of glory, or a glorious throne, Matt. xxv. 31. or elſe it may denote the purity and juſtice of him that ſits on it, according to which he will proceed in judgment, and finiſh it; his character is the righteous judge, and the judgment he will execute will be righteous judgment: and him that ſat on it; the throne was not empty, one ſat upon it, who is no other than the Son of God; to whom all judgment is committed, and who is ordained to be judge of quick and dead; and is every way fit for it, being of great knowledge, wiſdom, and ſagacity, and of great integrity and faithfulneſs, as man and mediator, and being, as God, both omniſcient and omnipotent, and ſo capable both of paſſing a right ſentence, and of executing it; to which may be added, his great majeſty and glory, neceſſary to ſtrike an awe, and command an attention to him: from whoſe face the earth and the heavens fled away, and there was found no place for them; which is to be underſtood not figuratively, as in ch. vi. 14. and xvi. 20. where in the one place is deſcribed the deſtruction of paganiſm, and in the other the deſtruction of the papacy, and all antichriſtian powers; but literally, and not of the preſent earth and heaven, as they now are, for theſe will be burnt up with fire at the beginning of the thouſand years, but of the new heaven and new earth, at the end of them; and the phraſes of fleeing away, and place being found no more for them, ſhow the entire annihilation and utter abolition of them; after this there will be no place in being but the heaven of angels and ſaints, and the lake of fire, in which are the devils and damned ſpirits: but tho' this is mentioned here, it will not be till after the judgment is over; for how otherwiſe will the dead have a place to ſtand in before the throne, or hell, that is the grave, and alſo the ſea, give up their dead, ver. 12, 13. but it is obſerved here, tho' afterwards done, to ſet off the majeſty of the judge upon the throne, at whoſe ſight, and by whoſe power, this will be effected.

[f] T. Bab. Zebachim, fol. 116. 2. Maimon. Hilch. Beth Habbechirah, c. 7. §. 11.

[g] Targum Jon. in Num. xi. 26.

Ver. 12. And I ſaw the dead, &c.] An account being given of the judge, next the perſons to be judged are deſcribed, and in this clauſe, by the ſtate and condition in which they had been; for it can't be thought they were dead when they ſtood before the throne, but were raiſed from the dead; for this character is not deſcriptive of them as dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, tho' they are ſuch as die in their ſins, and riſe in them, who are meant, but as having been corporally dead; theſe are the reſt of the dead, the wicked, who lived not again until the thouſand years were ended, ver. 5. as for the righteous, they'll be judged upon their reſurrection from the dead in the beginning of the day of the Lord; and will be declared righteous and bleſſed, and be called upon and introduced to inherit the kingdom prepared for them, which they ſhall have poſſeſſed a thouſand years when theſe wicked dead will be raiſed: who are ſaid to be ſmall and great; which may refer either to their age, being children and adult perſons; or to their condition, being kings and peaſants, high and low, rich and poor; or to their characters, as greater or leſſer ſinners; and this deſcription reſpects them as they are in this world, and is deſigned to ſhow that no conſideration whatever, of age, condition, or character, will exempt them from the general judgment. This is a way of ſpeaking uſed among the Jews [h], who ſay, "in the world of "ſouls, הגדולים והקטנים, the great and the ſmall, "ſtand before God." The diſputations of the ſchoolmen about the age and ſtature in which mankind will riſe and be judged, are vain and fooliſh: theſe John ſaw ſtand before God; that is, Chriſt, who is God and judge of all; before his judgment-ſeat and throne, in order to be judged; for they will ſtand not as miniſtring to him, nor as having confidence before him; in this ſenſe they ſhall not ſtand in the judgment, Pſ. i. 5. but as guilty perſons, to receive their ſentence of condemnation. The Alexandrian copy, the Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions read, before the throne; the ſenſe is the ſame; for if they ſtood before the throne, they muſt ſtand before God, that ſat upon it: and the books were opened; the book of God's omniſcience, which contains all the actions of the wicked, in which all their ſins are taken notice of, and will now be brought to light; and the book of his remembrance, in which they are all written as with a pen of iron, and with the point of a diamond; and the book of the creatures, which they have abuſed, and which will witneſs againſt them; and the book of providence, the riches of whoſe goodneſs have been deſpiſed by them; and the book of the ſcriptures, both of law and Goſpel, as well as the book of nature, of the light of nature, ſee Rom. ii. 12, 16. to which may be added, the book of conſcience; the conſciences of men will be awakened, and will accuſe them, and bear witneſs againſt them, and be as good as a thouſand witneſſes: and another book was opened, which is the book of life; the ſame that is mentioned in ch. iii. 5. and xiii. 8. and xvii. 8. the book of eternal election, ſee the notes there. No other uſe ſeems to be made of this book in the judgment of the wicked, than only to obſerve whoſe names were not written in it, as appears from ver. 15. reference ſeems to be had to Dan. vii. 10. It is a notion that has obtained among the Jews [i], that "at the beginning of the year (or every new year's-day) ג׳ ספרים נפתחין, three books are opened, one of the wicked perfect, another of the righteous perfect, and a third of thoſe between both; the righteous perfect are written and ſealed immediately for life; the wicked perfect are written and ſealed immediately for death; the middlemoſt are in ſuſpence, and continue from the beginning of the year to the day of atonement; if they are worthy, they are written for life, if not worthy, they are written for death:" and in the ſame treatiſe [k], they repreſent God at the ſame time of the year as a "king, ſitting on a throne of judgment, and the books of the living, and the books of the dead פתוחין open before him:" this with them was a prelude and a figure of the future judgment: and the dead were judged out of thoſe things which were written in the books, according to their works; that is, they were ſentenced to everlaſting condemnation and death, according to the juſt demerit of their wicked works; for no other are done by wicked men, nor can any other be in the books, ſince they are without God and Chriſt, and deſtitute of the Spirit, have no principle of grace to act from, nor any good end in view in any action of theirs. So the Jews ſay [l], "all the works which a man does in this world are written in a book, and they come into thought before the holy king, and they are manifeſt before him."

[h] Tzeror Hammor, fol. 154. 2.

Ver. 13. And the ſea gave up the dead which were in it, &c.] Which is not to be interpreted metaphorically of the world, and the men of it, who are like the troubled ſea; but literally of the ſea, and of all ſuch who have been drowned in the waters of it, as were Pharaoh and his hoſt; or have died upon the mighty waters, and have been caſt into them, and devoured by the fiſhes; and particular regard may be had to the men of the old world, drowned by the flood; theſe ſhall be raiſed from thence; the ſea ſhall deliver them up: now this, and what is expreſſed in the next clauſe, will not be done after the judgment is ſet, the books are opened, and the ſentence paſſed, but before all this, and in order to it, as the laſt clauſe of this verſe ſhows: and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them; death, which is here repreſented as a perſon, and elſewhere as a king, reigning and having power over men, ſignifies death in general, and every kind of death of which men have died, whether natural or violent, over whom it will now have no longer dominion, but will be obliged to deliver up all its ſubjects; and hell ſignifies the grave, which will now be opened, and deliver up all its priſoners, all that have been buried in the earth; ſee Job xxvi. 5, 6. the Ethiopic verſion adds, and the earth delivered up them that were dead in it; but this ſeems unneceſſary after the former: and they were judged every man according to their works; ſome to greater, ſome to leſſer puniſhment, as their ſinful works deſerved.

Ver. 14. And death and hell were caſt into the lake of fire, &c.] Death cannot be taken properly, nor hell be the place of torment, for devils and damned ſpirits; ſince that is the lake of fire, for then the ſenſe would be, hell is caſt into hell; but either by theſe the devil is meant, who has the power of death, and is the prince of hell, were it not that the caſting of him into this lake is mentioned before in ver. 10. or it denotes the deſtruction and abolition of death and the grave, that from henceforth they ſhould no more have power over men, or have any under their dominion, and in their hands; and ſo what has been promiſed, will now be fully performed, Hoſ. xiii. 14. 1 Cor. xv. 26. ſee ch. xxi. 4. or rather the wicked dead, which they ſhall have delivered up, and will be judged and ſentenced to eternal death, ver. 13. this is the ſecond death; or the deſtruction of the ſoul and body in hell, which will conſiſt in an eternal ſeparation of both from God, and in a continual ſenſe of his wrath and diſpleaſure. The Alexandrian copy, and the Complutenſian edition read, this ſecond death is the lake of fire; and ſo the Arabic verſion, and this is the ſecond death, even the lake of fire; and not much different is the Ethiopic verſion, the ſecond death, which is the fire of hell.

Ver. 15. And whoſoever was not found written in the book of life, &c.] Upon the opening of it, ver. 12. as all that worſhip the beaſt, and wonder after him, ch. xiii. 8. and xvii. 8. and all wicked men, every one of them: was caſt into the lake of fire; where are the devil, beaſt, and falſe prophet, ch. xix. 20. and xx. 10. It is a ſaying of R. Iſaac [m], "wo to the wicked, who are not written בפנקא, in the book, for they ſhall periſh in hell for ever and ever:" and in the Targum on Ezek. xiii. 9. it is ſaid of the falſe prophets, "that בכתב חיי עלמא, in the writing of eternal life (or in the book of eternal life) which is written for the righteous of the houſe of Iſrael, they ſhall not be written." There ſeems to be ſome alluſion in the phraſe uſed here, and in the the preceding verſe, and elſewhere in this book, to the lake Aſphaltites, a ſulphurous lake, where Sodom and Gomorrha ſtood, which the Jews call the ſalt ſea, or the bituminous lake; and whatſoever was uſeleſs, or rejected, or abominable, or accurſed, they uſed to ſay, to ſhow their rejection and deteſtation of it, let it be caſt into the ſea of ſalt, or the bituminous lake; thus for inſtance, "any veſſels that had on them the image of the ſun, or of the moon, or of a dragon, יוליכם לים המלח, let them caſt them into the ſalt ſea, or bituminous lake [n]."

CHAP. XXI.

THIS chapter contains an account of the happy ſtate of the church, conſiſting of all the elect, both Jews and Gentiles, which will take place upon the firſt reſurrection, and will continue during the thouſand years reign mentioned in the preceding chapter. The ſeat of the church in theſe happy times will be the new heaven and the new earth, ver. 1. the church that will dwell there is deſcribed by its names, the holy city, and new Jeruſalem; by its deſcent, from heaven; and by its ſtate and ornament, being prepared and adorned as a bride for her huſband, ver. 2. and her happineſs is expreſſed by the preſence of God with her, and communion with him enjoyed by her, and by a freedom from all evils endured in the preſent ſtate of things, ver. 3, 4. after which John hears the voice of him that ſat on the throne, declaring himſelf to be the author of the new heaven and earth; ordering him to write, that what had been ſaid was true and faithful; affirming that things were now done and finiſhed; calling himſelf the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end; promiſing grace to the thirſty ſoul, the inheritance of all things to the overcomer, and alſo divine ſonſhip; and threatning the ſecond death to ſinners, whoſe characters are given, ver. 5, 6, 7, 8. next John has a viſion of the bride before ſpoken of; the preface to it is in ver. 9, 10. in which is ſignified that one of the ſeven angels that had the ſeven vials talked to him in a very free and familiar manner, and propoſed to ſhow him the Lamb's wife; and in order to it carried him to an exceeding high mountain, and ſhewed him the city before-mentioned, ſaid to be great, holy, and heavenly; and which is deſcribed by the glory of God upon it, and the light that was in it, comparable to a chryſtal—jaſper ſtone, ver. 11. by its wall, which is great and high; and by its gates and foundations; its gates are in number twelve, twelve angels at them, and on them written the twelve names of the children of Iſrael, and theſe ſituated three at each point, eaſt, weſt, north, and ſouth; and its foundations are alſo twelve, having the names of the twelve Apoſtles on them, ver. 12, 13, 14. by the meaſure of it, which the angel took with his golden reed; of the city, which was twelve thouſand furlongs, it being four ſquare, and its length, breadth, and heighth equal; and of the wall, which was a hundred forty and four cubits, ver. 15, 16, 17. and next the city is deſcribed by the matter of which it was built; the wall of jaſper; the city of pure gold, like to clear glaſs; the foundations of precious ſtone, each foundation being of one ſtone; the gates of pearls, each gate being of one pearl; the ſtreet of the city of pure gold, like tranſparent glaſs, ver. 18, 19, 20, 21. and then by the temple in it, which is no other than the Lord God and the Lamb; and by the light, which is the ſame, it having no need of ſun or moon, ver. 22, 23. and next by its inhabitants, the nations of the ſaved ones, who walk in its light, and the kings of the earth, that bring their honour and glory to it; by its ſafety and ſecurity, and by the purity of it, none but undefiled perſons, and ſuch who are written in the Lamb's book of life, being admitted into it, ver. 24, 25, 26, 27.

Ver. 1. And I ſaw a new heaven and a new earth, &c.] This viſion relates to a glorious ſtate of the church, not in the times of the Apoſtles, or firſt diſpenſation of the Goſpel; when the old Jewiſh church-ſtate, with its ordinances, rites, and ceremonies, paſſed away, and a new church-ſtate, a new diſpenſation, new ordinances, and a new people took place; and when ſaints came not to mount Sinai, but to mount Sion, the city of the living God, the heavenly Jeruſalem; and when God tabernacled and dwelt with men in particular churches and congregations; and the curſe of the law, and the ſting of death were taken away by Chriſt, and there was no condemnation to them that were in him; which is the ſenſe of ſome: but death did not then ceaſe, it has reigned over men in common ever ſince, in a natural way, and immediately upon that diſpenſation aroſe perſecution unto death, both by Jews and Gentiles; and for the firſt three hundred years, inſtead of death being no more, and ſorrow and ſighing fleeing away, there was ſcarce any thing elſe; nor can it be ſaid that there was no temple, or places of public worſhip; or that the church had no need of the ſun and moon of the Goſpel and Goſpel-ordinances then, ſince theſe have continued ever ſince, and will to the end of the world; nor did the kings of the earth bring their honour and glory into that church-ſtate in any ſenſe, but ſet themſelves againſt it, and endeavoured to deſtroy it; nor were the churches even of that age ſo pure as here deſcribed, ver. 27. many perſons both of bad principles and bad practices crept into them; there were tares among the wheat, goats among the ſheep, and fooliſh virgins with the wiſe: nor does this viſion refer to the times of Conſtantine, when the old pagan idolatry was removed out of the empire, and the chriſtian religion was revived, and came to be in a flouriſhing condition, and a new face of things appeared, and chriſtianity was embraced and honoured by the emperor, and the great men of the earth; there was not that purity as in this ſtate; the chriſtian doctrine and worſhip were ſoon corrupted, being mixed with Judaiſm and paganiſm; a flood of errors was brought in by Arius, Eutychius, Neſtorius, Macedonius, Pelagius, and others; yea, doctrines of devils, and which at length iſſued in a general apoſtacy, and in the revelation of the man of ſin; nor was there that peace and comfort, and freedom from evils, as from death, pain, and ſorrow; witneſs the Arian perſecution, the incurſions of the Goths and Vandals into the empire, and the inhuman butcheries and numerous maſſacres and murders of the popiſh party ſince. Nor has this viſion any thing to do with the converſion and reſtoration of the Jews, when they will become a new people, quit their old principles and modes of worſhip, and there will be no more among them the ſea of corrupt doctrine, reſpecting the Meſſiah, the works of the law, &c. for this will be over before this viſion takes place, as appears from the 19th chapter: nor does it belong to the ſpiritual reign of Chriſt, which will be in the preſent earth, whereas this glorious ſtate of the church will be in the new heavens and new earth; that will be at the ſounding of the ſeventh trumpet, and in the Philadelphian church-ſtate, this will not be till prophetic time and antichriſtian times will be no more, when the myſtery of God will be finiſhed, and after the Laodicean ſtate is at an end; in that there will be public worſhip, the miniſtry of the word, and adminiſtration of ordinances, but not in this; and though there will be then great ſpirituality and holineſs, yet not in perfection, nor will the churches be clear of hypocrites and nominal profeſſors, and will at laſt ſink into a Laodicean ſtate. Nor is this viſion to be interpreted of the church triumphant in heaven, or of the ultimate glory of the ſaints there; ſince the new Jeruſalem here deſcribed deſcends from heaven, that is, to earth, where the ſaints will reign with Chriſt; and ſince the church is repreſented as a bride, prepared and adorned for her huſband, but not as yet at the entrance of this ſtate, delivered up to him; and ſince the tabernacle of God is ſaid to be with men, that is, on earth; and this dwelling of God with them is as in a tabernacle, which is moveable, and ſeems to be diſtinct from the fixed ſtate of the ſaints in the ultimate glory; to which may be added, that in this ſtate, Chriſt, as king of ſaints, will be peculiarly and diſtinctly glorified, whereas in the ultimate one, when the kingdom is delivered to the Father, God will be all in all: this therefore is to be underſtood of the glorious ſtate of the church during the thouſand years of ſatan's binding, and the ſaints living and reigning with Chriſt; the holy city, and new Jeruſalem, is the ſame with the beloved city in ch. xx. 9. what is there briefly hinted, is here largely deſcribed and inſiſted on; this will be the time and ſtate when the church of the firſt-born, whoſe names are written in heaven, will firſt meet together, and be brought to Chriſt, and be preſented by him to himſelf a glorious church, without ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing, and Chriſt will reign glorioſly among them: the ſeat of this church-ſtate will be the new heaven and new earth which John ſaw, and which are the ſame that Peter ſpeaks of, in which dwelleth righteouſneſs, or in which righteous perſons only dwell, 2 Pet. iii. 13. for as the firſt heaven and earth both here and there are to be underſtood literally, ſo in like manner the new heaven and new earth; which will be new, not with reſpect to the ſubſtance, but their qualities; they will be renewed, or purged from every thing that is diſagreeable, and is the effect of the ſin of man; the firſt heaven and earth were made chiefly for men, but on account of the ſin of man, the earth was curſed, and brought forth thorns and thiſtles, and both the earth and air, or the heaven, were attended with noxious vapours, &c. and the whole creation was made ſubject to vanity and corruption; from all which they will be cleared at the general conflagration, and a new earth and heaven will appear, fit for the habitation of the ſecond Adam, and his poſterity, for the ſpace of a thouſand years. So the Jews ſpeak of new heavens, as מחודשים, renewed ones, which are the ſecrets of ſublime wiſdom[o]: and they ſay[p], that the holy bleſſed God will renew his world a thouſand years, and that in the ſeventh millennium there will be new heavens and a new earth[q]: for the firſt heaven and the firſt earth were paſſed away; not thoſe in ch. xx. 11. but the heaven and the earth which were firſt made, which paſſed away, as Peter alſo ſays, adding with a great noiſe; meaning not as to their ſubſtance, but as to their form, faſhion, and qualities: and there was no more ſea; which may be underſtood either as to the being of it; it was exhauſted, as the Ethiopic verſion renders it, being dried up by the conflagration; ſee Amos vii. 4. and if Mr. Burnet's hypotheſis can be ſupported, that the paradiſaical earth, or the earth before the flood, was without a ſea, that being made, with the mountains and hills, by the falling of the ſurface of the earth into the waters under it, there is a ſurpriſing agreement between that earth and this new one; but the Alexandrian copy reads, and I ſaw the ſea no more; it might be in being, tho' John ſaw it not; and ſince at the end of the thouſand years, the ſea will give up the dead which are in it, it muſt be in being, unleſs it can be interpreted of the place where the ſea was: wherefore it ſeems beſt to underſtand it with reſpect to its uſe and qualities; and that as the heaven and earth will paſs away, not as to their ſubſtance, but quality, ſo in like manner the ſea will be no more uſed for navigation, nor may it be a tumultuous and raging one, or have its flux and reflux, or its waters be ſalt, as now; the ſchoolmen ſay it will no more be a fluid, but will be conſolidated into the globe as the ſphere; and in a myſtical ſenſe, there will be no more wicked men; tumultuous and turbulent men are like the troubled ſea, that cannot reſt, Iſ. lvii. 20. for in the new heavens and earth only righteous perſons will dwell, 2 Pet. iii. 13.

Ver. 2. And I John ſaw the holy city, &c.] The ſame with the beloved city in ch. xx. 9. the church of God: ſometimes the church militant, is called a city, of which the ſaints are now fellow-citizens, governed by wholeſome laws, and enjoying many privileges; but here the general aſſembly and church of the firſt born, or all the elect of God, are intended, the whole body and ſociety of them, being as a city, compact together; called holy, not only becauſe ſet apart to holineſs by God the Father, and their ſins expiated by the blood of Chriſt, or becauſe he is made ſanctification to them, or becauſe internally ſanctified by the Spirit of God, which now is but in part; but becauſe they will be perfectly holy in themſelves, without the being of ſin in them, or any ſpot of it on them: and John, for the more ſtrong aſcertaining the truth of this viſion, expreſſes his name, who ſaw it, to whom God ſent his angel, and ſignified to him by theſe Apocalyptic viſions what ſhould be hereafter; tho' the name is left out in the Alexandrian copy, and in the Syriac, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions: new Jeruſalem; the church of God, both in the Old and New Teſtament, is often called Jeruſalem, to which its name, which ſignifies the viſion of peace, agrees; it was the city of the great king, whither the tribes went up to worſhip; it was a free city, and a fortified one: the Goſpel church-ſtate in its imperfection is called the heavenly Jeruſalem, and the Jeruſalem above, which is free, and the mother of all; and here the church in its perfect ſtate is called the new Jeruſalem, where will be compleat peace and proſperity; and which is called new, becauſe it has its ſeat in the new heaven and new earth; the inhabitants of which will appear in their new and ſhining robes of immortality and glory; and to diſtinguiſh it from the old Jeruſalem, and even from the former ſtate of the church; for this will be תליתאה, the third time that Jeruſalem will be built, as ſay the Jews, namely, in the time of the king Meſſiah[r]: coming down from God out of heaven; which deſigns not the ſpiritual and heavenly original of the ſaints, being born from above, on which account the church is called the heavenly Jeruſalem; but a local deſcent of all the ſaints with Chriſt from the third heaven into the air, where they will be met by living ſaints; and their bodies being raiſed and united to their ſouls, they will reign with Chriſt in the new earth: and this is "the building which the Jews ſay God will prepare for the Jeruſalem which is above, לנחתא, "to deſcend into[s]:" prepared as a bride adorned for her huſband; Chriſt is the huſband, or bridegroom, and the church is his ſpouſe, and bride; and in theſe characters they will both appear at this time, when the marriage between them will be conſummated: and the church may be ſaid to be prepared as ſuch, when all the elect of God are gathered in, the number of the ſaints is perfected; when the good work of grace is finiſhed in them all, and they are all arrayed in the righteouſneſs of Chriſt: and to be adorned, when not only they are clothed with the robe of righteouſneſs, and garments of ſalvation, and are beautified with the graces of the Spirit, but alſo with the bright robes of immortality and glory. The phraſe is Jewiſh, and is to be read exactly as here in the book of Zohar[t].

Ver. 3. And I heard a great voice out of heaven, &c.] Either of an angel, or rather of Chriſt, or God himſelf; ſince the Alexandrian copy and Vulgate Latin verſion read, out of the throne, ſaying, behold the tabernacle of God is with men; in alluſion to the tabernacle being with the Iſraelites, and the Shechinah, or divine majeſty, being in the midſt of them, and as an accompliſhment of the promiſe in Ezek. xxxvii. 27. in the fulleſt ſenſe of it; and deſigns ſomething diſtinct from the ſpiritual preſence of Chriſt in his church, as his tabernacle and temple, and in the hearts of his people; and from the heavenly glory, or ultimate ſtate of happineſs, in which they will be with him, and that not as in a tabernacle, but as in a city, which has foundations: the phraſe ſeems to denote the perſonal preſence of Chriſt with his ſaints in human nature, like, tho' different from that in the time of his humiliation; then he dwelt or tabernacled with men on earth, but it was in the form of a ſervant; but now he'll appear in a glorious body, and indeed in all his perſonal glory, and reign among them as their king: and he will dwell with them; in perſon, and not by his Spirit, or by faith, as before, nor as a wayfaring man only for a night; but he will dwell with them for the ſpace of a thouſand years, and after that for ever: Chriſt and his church will now be come together as huſband and wife: and they ſhall be his people; that is, they ſhall appear, to be his covenant-people, that will be out of all doubt; this is made manifeſt in ſome meaſure in effectual vocation; but it does not yet appear neither to the ſaints themſelves, nor to others, what they are, and ſhall be, but now it will be evident and unqueſtionable. And God himſelf ſhall be with them; the Immanuel, God with us; not by his Spirit, as he was after his aſcenſion to heaven, and ſince is; but in perſon, he himſelf will deſcend from heaven, when his church, the new Jeruſalem does; the Lord their God will come in perſon with all the ſaints, and will be king over all the earth. And be their God, as Thomas ſtiles him, my Lord, and my God, John xx. 28. The covenant of grace, with all its bleſſings and promiſes, are in him, and now will it have its full accompliſhment, and the ſaints be in a ſtate inexpreſſibly happy; ſee Pſ. cxliv. 15.

Ver. 4. And God ſhall wipe away all tears from their eyes, &c.] Occaſioned by ſin, ſatan, the hidings of God's face, and afflictive diſpenſations of providence; for theſe will be no more: and there ſhall be no more death; natural or violent; there will be no more putting of the ſaints to death, or perſecution of them unto death, as in former times; nor will they die a natural death any more; theſe children of the reſurrection, and inhabitants of the new heaven and earth, will be like the angels who die not; there will be no more deadneſs as to ſpiritual things among the ſaints; and as for the ſecond death, that will have no power over them. So the Jews ſay [u], אין מיתה לעתיד לבא, there is no death in the world to come; good is laid up for the righteous in the world to come, and with them is no death [x]; and after the reſurrection the body is perfect, and ſhall never after taſte the taſte of death [y]. Neither ſorrow, nor crying; on account of ſin, or becauſe of oppreſſion and perſecution, or thro' the loſs of near relations and friends; ſorrow and ſighing will flee away, all occaſions thereof being gone: neither ſhall there be any more pain; either of body or mind; there will be nothing to afflict the mind, and make that uneaſy, but all the reverſe; nor will there be any ſickneſs or diſeaſes of body, for the body will be raiſed glorious, powerful, incorruptible, and ſpiritual. For the former things are paſſed away; not only the firſt heaven and earth, the world, its faſhion, and its luſts; but the former grievous times under Rome pagan and papal, and every thing which in this preſent life gives uneaſineſs and diſtreſs.

Ver. 5. And he that ſat upon the throne, ſaid, &c.] By whom is meant, either God the Father, who is often repreſented in this book as ſitting on the throne, and as diſtinguiſhed from Chriſt the Lamb; ſee ch. iv. 2. and v. 13. and vi. 16. and vii. 10. and who may ſeem the more to be intended, ſince he is by adopting grace the God and Father of his people, and they are his ſons and daughters; or rather Chriſt, who not only is ſet down on the ſame throne with his Father, but has a throne of his own, called the throne of the Lamb, and was ſeen upon one by John in the preceding viſion, ch. xx. 11. which tho' in order of time will be after this, yet in the order of the viſions was ſeen before; and eſpecially ſince the perſon on the throne ſpeaking, calls himſelf the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end, as Chriſt does in ch. i. 8. and ſeeing he it is that gives to thirſty ſouls of the water of life, John vii. 37, 38. and makes promiſes to the overcomer ſo largely and frequently in ch. ii. and iii. He addreſſes John, and delivers the following things to him, behold, I make all things new; which is to be underſtood not of the renovation of perſons at converſion, when a new heart and ſpirit are given, and men are made wholly new creatures; for this is the work of the Spirit, and which is done daily, and is not peculiar to any particular period of time; nor of the renewing of the church-ſtate at the beginning of the Goſpel, when the Jewiſh church-ſtate and ordinances waxed old, and vaniſhed away, and a new covenant took place, a new and living way was opened, and new ordinances appointed, ſince all this was before John had this viſion; nor was there any need of it to repreſent it to him; but of the making of the new heaven, and the new earth, which Chriſt aſcribes to himſelf, and of his forming his church anew, making it a new Jeruſalem, beſtowing new glories upon his people, both in ſoul and body, and ſo preſenting them to himſelf a glorious church; and of the new adminiſtration of his kingdom in a very ſingular and glorious manner; ſo that it reſpects a new people, a new habitation, and a new manner of ruling over them; all which is his own doing, and is marvellous; and becauſe it is a matter of great importance, and is wonderful and certain, therefore a behold is prefixed to it; ſee Iſ. xliii. 19. The Jews ſay [z], that the holy bleſſed God will make ten things new in the future ſtate, or world to come; the firſt is, he will enlighten the world; (ſee ver. 11, 23.) the ſecond is, he will bring living water out of Jeruſalem; (ſee ver. 6.) the third is, he will make trees to bring forth their fruit every month; (ſee ch. xxii. 2.) and the fourth is, all the waſte places ſhall be built, even Sodom and Gomorrha; the fifth is, Jeruſalem ſhall be built with ſapphire ſtone; (ſee ver. 19.) the ſixth is, the cow and the bear ſhall feed; the ſeventh is, a covenant ſhall be made between Iſrael, and the beaſts, fowls, and creeping things; the eighth is, there ſhall be no more weeping and howling in the world; the ninth is, there ſhall be no more death in the world; the tenth is, there ſhall no more be ſighing, and groaning, and ſorrow in the world; ſee ver. 4. And he ſaid unto me, write; what John had ſeen, and Chriſt had ſaid, and was about to ſay; and particularly what concerned the renewing of all things, the whole being a matter of moment, and worth noting and taking down in writing, that it might be on record for ſaints to read, and receive comfort and advantage from; and to denote the certainty of it, as well as to ſhow, that it was a clear point, and to be known, whereas, when it was otherwiſe, he was bid not to write; ſee ch. i. 11, 19. and xiv. 13. and xix. 9. and x. 4. for theſe words are true and faithful; both what he had ſaid, and was about to ſay; they were true, becauſe they came from God, who cannot lye, and faithful, becauſe they would be punctually and exactly fulfilled; ſee ch. xix. 9. The Syriac verſion adds, they are Gods, and ſo the Arabic verſion.

Ver. 6. And he ſaid unto me, it is done, &c.] The end of all things is come; it is all over with the firſt heaven and earth; theſe are no more, and the new heaven and earth are finiſhed: there ſeems to be an alluſion to the old creation, he ſpake, and it was done, Pſ. xxxiii. 9. The whole election of grace is compleated; every individual veſſel of mercy is called by grace; all the ſaints are brought with Chriſt, and their bodies raiſed, and living ſaints changed, and all together are as a bride prepared for her huſband; and the nuptials are now ſolemnized; all the promiſes and propheſies relating to the glorious ſtate of the church are now fulfilled; the myſtery of God, ſpoken by his ſervants, is finiſhed; the kingdom of Chriſt is compleat, and all other kingdoms are deſtroyed; the day of redemption is come; the ſalvation of the ſaints is perfect; what was finiſhed on the croſs, by way of impetration, is now done as to application; all are ſaved with an everlaſting ſalvation. I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end; which are expreſſive of the primacy, perfection, and eternity of Chriſt; of his being the ſum and ſubſtance, the firſt cauſe, and laſt end of all things, relating both to the old and new world, to things temporal and ſpiritual; ſee the note on ch. i. 8. I will give unto him that is athirſt of the fountain of the water of life freely; he that is athirſt is one that is ſo not in a natural, much leſs in a ſinful, but in a ſpiritual ſenſe; who as he has thirſted after Chriſt, and ſalvation by him; after pardon of ſin, and a juſtifying righteouſneſs; after communion with Chriſt, and conformity to him, and a greater degree of knowledge of him; ſo after the glories of his kingdom, and the happineſs of a future ſtate: to ſuch an one Chriſt promiſes to give ſuch large meaſures of grace and glory, and in ſuch abundance, as will continue to refreſh and delight, and as may be compared to a fountain of living water, namely, for refreſhment, abundance, and continuance; and all this he'll give freely, without money, and without price; for as pardon and righteouſneſs, and the whole of ſalvation, are all of free grace, ſo are all the enjoyments of the kingdom-ſtate, the riches, honours, and glories of it, and eternal life itſelf; alſo plentifully, and in great abundance, and anſwers to the Hebrew word חנם; ſee Numb. xi. 5.

Ver. 7. He that overcometh, &c.] All ſpiritual enemies, ſin, ſatan, and the world, the antichriſtian beaſt, his image, mark and number of his name; who is more than a conqueror through Chriſt; one that perſeveres to the end, notwithſtanding all temptations, trials, and difficulties; ſee the note on ch. ii. 7. ſhall inherit all things; the kingdom of Chriſt in the new Jeruſalem ſtate, and all things in it; heaven, eternal glory and happineſs, and everlaſting ſalvation; yea, God himſelf, who is the portion, and exceeding great reward of his people, and will be all in all. The Alexandrian copy, and the Vulgate Latin, Syriac, and Arabic verſions, read, theſe things; the new heaven, and new earth, the preſence of God with men, freedom from all evils, and divine refreſhments from the fountain of living water, before mentioned: and I will be his God, and he ſhall be my Son; Chriſt is not only concerned in predeſtination to the adoption of children, in making way by redemption for the enjoyment of this bleſſing, and in the actual donation of it; but he himſelf, who is the mighty God, is the everlaſting Father, and his people are his ſpiritual ſeed and offſpring, and in his kingdom he will ſee his ſeed, and prolong his days; he will long enjoy them, and preſent them to himſelf, and afterwards to his Father, ſaying as in Heb. ii. 13. and tho' they are now, in the preſent ſtate of things, the ſons of God, yet it does not appear ſo manifeſt that they are, or at leaſt what they ſhall be; but in this new and glorious ſtate of things, it will be abundantly manifeſt, that they are the ſons of God, and ſeed of Chriſt; and it will be known how glorious they are, and ſhall be, when they ſhall ſee Chriſt in his glory, and be like him; who will now be, πατηρ τȣ μελλοντος αιωνος, the father of the world to come, as the Septuagint render the phraſe in Iſ. ix. 6.

Ver. 8. But the fearful, &c.] Not the timorous ſheep and lambs of Chriſt, the dear children of God, who are ſometimes of a fearful heart, on account of ſin, temptation, and unbelief; but ſuch who are of cowardly ſpirits, and are not valiant for the truth, but who thro' fear of men, either make no profeſſion of Chriſt, and his Goſpel, or having made it, drop it, leſt they ſhould be expoſed to tribulation and perſecution; theſe are they that are afraid of the beaſt, and live in ſervile bondage to him. And unbelieving; meaning not merely atheiſts, who don't believe there is a God, or deiſts only, that don't believe in Chriſt; but ſuch who profeſs his name, and are called by it, and yet don't truly believe in him, nor embrace his Goſpel, and the truths of it, but believe a lye; theſe are condemned already, and on them the wrath of God abides, and they will be damned at laſt; tho' it may have a regard to ſuch alſo who are infidels as to the ſecond coming of Chriſt to judgment, and who are ſcoffers and mockers at it: and the abominable; every ſinful man is ſo in the ſight of God; but here it denotes ſuch who are the worſt of ſinners, given up to ſinning; who are abominable, and to every good work reprobate; who are addicted to the worſt of crimes, as were the Sodomites and others; the Ethiopic verſion renders it, who pollute themſelves with unnatural luſts. The Syriac and Arabic verſions expreſs it by two words, ſinners and polluted, filthy ſinners; the character well agrees with Babylon, the mother of harlots, and abominations of the earth, and to all that adhere to her, and join with her in her abominable idolatries. And murderers; of the ſaints, and prophets, and martyrs of Jeſus, with whoſe blood Babylon, or the whore of Rome has made herſelf drunk, and in whom it will be found. And whoremongers; all unclean perſons, that indulge themſelves in impure luſts, in fornication, adultery, and all lewdneſs; as the clergy of the church of Rome, who being forbidden to marry, and being under a vow of celibacy, and making great pretenſions to chaſtity, and ſingular holineſs, give up themſelves to all laſciviouſneſs, to work all uncleanneſs with greedineſs. And ſorcerers; conjurers, dealers with familiar ſpirits, necromancers, and ſuch as uſe the magic art, as many of the popes did to get into the chair, and poiſoners of kings and princes; whoredoms and witchcrafts go together ſometimes, as they did in Jezabel, an emblem of the Romiſh antichriſt. And idolaters; that worſhip devils, idols of gold, ſilver, braſs, ſtone, and wood, repreſenting God, and Chriſt, and the virgin Mary, and ſaints departed, ch. ix. 20. And all liars; in common, and particularly ſuch who ſpeak lyes in hypocriſy, as the followers of the man of ſin, and who are given up to believe a lye, that they might be damned; all lyes being of the devil, and abominable to God. All and each of theſe ſhall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimſtone. The Jews[a] ſpeak of ſeveral diſtinct places in hell, for ſeveral ſorts of ſinners, as particularly for ſabbath-breakers, adulterers, and liars; and ſay of the wicked, that when he is condemned, he ſhall take, חלקו, his part in hell[b]; ſee the note on ch. xix. 20. which is the ſecond death; ſee the note on ch. ii. 11.

Ver. 9. And there came unto me one of the ſeven angels, &c.] Either the firſt of them, as one of the four beaſts is the firſt of them, ch. vi. 1. or it may be the laſt, and very likely the ſame as in ch. xvii. 1. which had the ſeven vials full of the ſeven laſt plagues; that is, the wrath of God poured out by them on the antichriſtian party; ſee ch. xv. 1, 7. and xvi. 1. And talked with me, ſaying, come hither; ſee ch. xvii. 1. I will ſhew thee the bride, the Lamb's wife. The Lamb is Chriſt, who is often ſo called in this book; ſee ch. v. 6, 7, 9. and xiv. 1. and xiii. 8. and xxi. 23. and vii. 17. and xix. 7. and is the Son of God, the heir of all things, the maker and governour of the univerſe, the king of kings, and lord of lords; and who, as mediator, has all accompliſhments and qualifications to recommend him as a bridegroom, ſuch as beauty, riches, and wiſdom: the bride, his wife, is not any particular believer, nor any particular church; not the Gentile church, nor the Jewiſh church only, but all the elect of God, conſiſting of the raiſed and living ſaints, at the coming of Chriſt; who will make up one body, one general aſſembly, and be as a bride prepared and adorned for her huſband: theſe were firſt betrothed to Chriſt in eternity, and were openly eſpouſed by him, one by one, at converſion; and now being all gathered in by effectual vocation, the dead being raiſed, and the living changed, and all glorified, the marriage is conſummated, and they are declared publickly to be the bride, the Lamb's wife; ſee the note on Matt. xxii. 2. And now, tho' John had had a ſight of her before, ver. 2. yet that was but a glimmering one, at a diſtance, he being in the wilderneſs, ch. xvii. 3. wherefore the angel calls him to him, and propoſes to give him a clear, diſtinct, and particular view of her, in all her glory; and a glorious ſight this indeed! to ſee the bride brought to the king in raiment of needle-work, and the queen ſtand at his right hand in gold of Ophir. This is a ſight of a quite different nature from that of the filthy ſtrumpet, which the ſame angel propoſed to give to John in ch. xvii. 1.

Ver. 10. And he carried me away in the ſpirit, &c.] John was in an exſtacy, as in ch. i. 10. and iv. 2. and xvii. 3. and in the thoughts and apprehenſions of his mind and ſpirit, it ſeemed to him as if he was carried away from one place to another; for this was not a corporal ſight, nor were any of the viſions he had, but what was repreſented to his mind or ſpirit; it being with him, as it was with the Apoſtle Paul, when he was caught up to the third heaven, who knew not whether he was in the body, or out of the body. The Ethiopic verſion renders it, the Spirit brought me; not the evil ſpirit ſatan, who took up our Lord corporally, and carried him to an exceeding high mountain, and ſhewed him all the kingdoms of this world, and their glory, Matt. iv. 8. but either a good angel, or the Spirit of God: to a great and high mountain; to ſuch an one was Ezekiel brought in the viſions of God, when the frame of a city and temple was ſhown him, with their dimenſions, Ezek. xl. 2. as here, a city is ſhown to John, with its wall, gates, foundations, and their meaſures: and he was brought to ſuch a place, partly that he might have the more plain and full view of it; and partly to ſuggeſt unto him, that now the church of Chriſt was eſtabliſhed upon the top of the mountains, and exalted above the hills, and was a city on a hill, which could not be hid, Iſ. ii. 2. And ſhewed me that great city; which is no other than the church, the bride, the Lamb's wife; juſt as the apoſtate church, all along in this book before, is called the great city, ch. xi. 8. and xiv. 8. and xvii. 18. and xviii. 10, 16, 18. but now that being demoliſhed, there is no other great city in being, but the church of Chriſt, called a city before; ſee ver. 2. here a great one, not only becauſe of its prodigious large dimenſions, ver. 16. but becauſe of the number of its inhabitants, being ſuch as no man can number; and becauſe it is the reſidence of the great king, the tabernacle of God will be in it; tho' this epithet is left out in the Alexandrian copy, and in the Vulgate Latin, and all the Oriental verſions: the holy Jeruſalem; called the new Jeruſalem, ver. 2. here holy, in alluſion to the city of Jeruſalem, which was called the holy city, Matt. iv. 5. on account of the temple in it, the place of divine worſhip; but here this city is ſo called, becauſe it is the reſidence of the holy God, Father, Son, and Spirit, inhabited only by holy men, made perfectly ſo, and encompaſſed by holy angels. Deſcending out of heaven from God; as in ver. 2. ſee the note there.

Ver. 11. Having the glory of God, &c.] Not only upon their ſouls, which will lie in the glorious robe of Chriſt's righteouſneſs, the bride's wedding garment being on them, in the perfect holineſs, which will be in them, and in that compleat knowledge of all ſpiritual and heavenly things they will be poſſeſſed of, for they will have a glory revealed in them; but upon their bodies alſo, for this city, the church, the bride of Chriſt, will conſiſt only of riſen and changed ſaints, whoſe bodies will be freed from all diſhonour, deformity, diſeaſes, and imperfections, and will be made like unto Chriſt's glorious body, and will ſhine like the ſun in the kingdom of God. Moreover, the preſence of God may be intended by his glory, as the Shechinah, or the divine majeſty of God in the tabernacle and temple, was called, Exod. xl. 35. 1 Kings viii. 11. for the glorious preſence of God will now be in this church-ſtate, which will caſt a luſtre on all that are in it; for if the face of Moſes, and of Stephen, ſhone ſo bright and glorious, thro' the preſence of God with them; ſee 2 Cor. iii. 7. Acts vi. 15. how much more glorioſly will the ſaints ſhine in this ſtate, when they ſhall enjoy the preſence of God in a far more illuſtrious manner? to which may be added, that Jeſus Chriſt, who is the brightneſs of his Father's glory, will now appear in that, and in his own, and in the glory of his angels; and all the ſaints will appear with him in glory; and to ſee them in all this glory, is a glorious ſight indeed! And her light was like unto a ſtone moſt precious; by her light is not meant the light ſhe will have in her, tho' that will be exceeding great, but the fountain of it from whence it comes; that which holds it forth to her, and ſupplies her with it: the word Φωϛηρ ſignifies an illuminator, and is uſed of the miniſters of the Goſpel, that hold forth the word of life and light to others, Phil. ii. 15, 16. but here it intends Chriſt, who is the ſun of righteouſneſs, the church's light or enlightner, ver. 23. not with the light of nature, as he enlightens every man, nor with the light of grace, with which the ſaints are enlightened by him in the preſent ſtate of things, by his Spirit, thro' the word and ordinances, but with the light of glory: and he is comparable to the moſt precious ſtone; he is more precious than rubies; he is ſo now to them that believe, in his perſon, offices, grace, and righteouſneſs, and will be more ſo in his light and glory in the new Jeruſalem ſtate: even like a jaſper ſtone clear as chryſtal; God the Father, who ſits on the throne, is ſaid to be to look upon like a jaſper, ch. iv. 2. ſee the note there; and here Chriſt, the illuminator of his church, is ſaid to be like one, becauſe of the exceeding brightneſs of this ſtone, and the durableneſs of it, expreſſive of the perpetuity of Chriſt, as the light of his church and people; he is the everlaſting light of it, Iſ. lx. 19, 20. and he is compared to the chryſtallizing jaſper. There is one ſort which is called Aerizuſa, like to air[c], and another Chryſtallizuſa[d], clear as chryſtal. So Pliny ſpeaks[e] of a white jaſper called Aſtrios, and which, he ſays, is cryſtallo propinquans, near to chryſtal, found in India, and on the ſhores of Pallene. To this Chriſt is like, becauſe he is light itſelf, and in him is no darkneſs at all, and will cauſe an everlaſting day; and ſuch a clear and bright ſtate of things, as that there will be no night, nor any more darkneſs, nothing but everlaſting joy, peace, proſperity, and happineſs; there ſeems to be ſome reference to Iſ. lx. 1, 19, 20.

Ver. 12. And had a wall great and high, &c.] Not the Spirit of God, who ſeparates, ſanctifies, and preſerves the ſaints, as Cocceius thinks, for this account reſpects not the church militant; nor the eternal decree of God, the unpaſſable gulf between heaven and hell, which everlaſtingly fixes the ſtate of men; for this regards not the ultimate ſtate of happineſs: many interpreters underſtand it of the doctrine of the Goſpel, which as it ſecures the church now from hereticks, and is like a wall very ſtrong well-built, is durable and impregnable; and may be called great, becauſe of the great author of it, and the great things contained in it; and high, ſince it is not to be reached by carnal minds; ſo none but ſuch who have embraced it, ſhall enter into the new Jeruſalem; for all liars, and forgers of doctrinal lyes, and who embrace the antichriſtian lyes, ſhall be without. Tho' rather the almighty power of God, which guards his church and people now, and will be their defence in this ſtate, is meant; and which ſhows the ſtate not to be that of the ultimate glory, which will need no wall, but this will; ſince an attempt will be made upon the ſaints in it, tho' it will be a fooliſh and fruitleſs one: and this wall of divine power is very great indeed, and is inſuperable by men; God himſelf is a wall of fire about his people; tho' it may be beſt to interpret this of ſalvation itſelf, which is by Jeſus Chriſt, if we compare with this text Iſ. xxvi. 1. and lx. 18. for thoſe, and thoſe only who are intereſted in it, will dwell in the new Jeruſalem; and ſalvation in this ſtate will be enjoyed in its fulneſs; and this is very great in its author, objects, and matter, being wrought out by the great God, for great ſinners, at a great expence, and including grace and glory, and not to be got over or enjoyed by thoſe who have no intereſt in it. And had twelve gates; though, ſtrictly ſpeaking, there is but one gate, and that a ſtrait one, which is the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, his perſon, blood, righteouſneſs, regenerating and ſanctifying grace; for as he is the only door into the ſheepfold, the church, in its preſent ſtate, or he only that has faith in him, has a right to enter there, and is the only way to heaven and eternal happineſs; ſo he is the only gate into the new Jeruſalem, or ſuch only will be admitted there, who are intereſted in him: but theſe gates are ſaid to be twelve, in alluſion to the twelve Apoſtles, who pointed out to men the way of ſalvation by Chriſt; and to the twelve tribes of Iſrael, who repreſent all the elect of God, who enter in thereat; and to the twelve gates of Ezekiel's city, Ezek. xlviii. 31—35. And at the gates twelve angels; meaning either the miniſtring ſpirits, in alluſion to the cherubim in Gen. iii. 24. who are watchers, and encamp about the ſaints now, and will, as it were, ſtand centinels in this camp of the ſaints, as it is called, ch. xx. 8. and beſides, will be made uſe of in gathering the ſaints from the ſeveral parts of the world, and introducing them into this ſtate; or elſe the Apoſtles and miniſters of the word, often called angels in this book, who will ſhine with peculiar luſtre now, and will appear at the head of the ſeveral companies they have been uſeful to, and bring them as their joy and crown of rejoicing into this glorious ſtate: this clauſe is wanting in the Alexandrian copy, and in the Syriac verſion. The Jews ſpeak of שרים, princes, being appointed over the gates of heaven, eaſt, weſt, north, and ſouth, with the keys in their hands, whoſe names they give us[f]. And names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Iſrael; not literal, but myſtical Iſrael, whom God has choſen to ſalvation, Chriſt has redeemed by his blood, and the Spirit calls by his grace; denoting that all, and each of theſe, have a right to enter into the new Jeruſalem, and will be admitted there, and none but they. In like manner the Jews[g] make mention of a court of the Lord, "which has twelve gates, according to the computation of the tribes of Iſrael; on one gate is written Reuben, on another is written Simeon; and ſo all the tribes of Iſrael are written on thoſe gates; in the time they go up to appear before the Lord of the world, who ever goes up to this gate, (on which the tribe of Reuben is written) if he is of the tribe of Reuben they open to him, (and receive him) if not they caſt him without; and ſo of all whom they don't receive; they open to none but to him who is of that tribe, or whoſe name is written on the gate."

Ver. 13. On the eaſt three gates, &c.] On which were written the names of Joſeph, Benjamin, and Dan: on the north three gates; on which were writholineſs, give up themſelves to all laſciviouſneſs, to work all uncleanneſs with greedineſs. And ſorcerers; conjurers, dealers with familiar ſpirits, necromancers, and ſuch as uſe the magic art, as many of the popes did to get into the chair, and poiſoners of kings and princes; whoredoms and witchcrafts go together ſometimes, as they did in Jezabel, an emblem of the Romiſh antichriſt. And idolaters; that worſhip devils, idols of gold, ſilver, braſs, ſtone, and wood, repreſenting God, and Chriſt, and the virgin Mary, and ſaints departed, ch. ix. 20. And all liars; in common, and particularly ſuch who ſpeak lyes in hypocriſy, as the followers of the man of ſin, and who are given up to believe a lye, that they might be damned; all lyes being of the devil, and abominable to God. [b] T. Bab. Chagiga, fol. 15. 1.

Ver. 12. And had a wall great and high, &c.] Not the Spirit of God, who ſeparates, ſanctifies, and preſerves the ſaints, as Cocceius thinks, for this account reſpects not the church militant; nor the eternal decree of God, the unpaſſable gulf between heaven and hell, which everlaſtingly fixes the ſtate of men; for this regards not the ultimate ſtate of happineſs: many interpreters underſtand it of the doctrine of the Goſpel, which as it ſecures the church now from hereticks, and is like a wall very ſtrong well-built, is durable and impregnable; and may be called great, becauſe of the great author of it, and the great things contained in it; and high, ſince it is not to be reached by carnal minds; ſo none but ſuch who have embraced it, ſhall enter into the new Jeruſalem; for all liars, and forgers of doctrinal lyes, and who embrace the antichriſtian lyes, ſhall be without. Tho' rather the almighty power of God, which guards his church and people now, and will be their defence in this ſtate, is meant; and which ſhows the ſtate not to be that of the ultimate glory, which will need no wall, but this will; ſince an attempt will be made upon the ſaints in it, tho' it will be a fooliſh and fruitleſs one: and this wall of divine power is very great indeed, and is inſuperable by men; God himſelf is a wall of fire about his people; tho' it may be beſt to interpret this of ſalvation itſelf, which is by Jeſus Chriſt, if we compare with this text Iſ. xxvi. 1. and lx. 18. for thoſe, and thoſe only who are intereſted in it, will dwell in the new Jeruſalem; and ſalvation in this ſtate will be enjoyed in its fulneſs; and this is very great in its author, objects, and matter, being wrought out by the great God, for great ſinners, at a great expence, and including grace and glory, and not to be got over or enjoyed by thoſe who have no intereſt in it. And had twelve gates; though, ſtrictly ſpeaking, there is but one gate, and that a ſtrait one, which is the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, his perſon, blood, righteouſneſs, regenerating and ſanctifying grace; for as he is the only door into the ſheepfold, the church, in its preſent ſtate, or he only that has faith in him, has a right to enter there, and is the only way to heaven and eternal happineſs; ſo he is the only gate into the new Jeruſalem, or ſuch only will be admitted there, who are intereſted in him: but theſe gates are ſaid to be twelve, in alluſion to the twelve Apoſtles, who pointed out to men the way of ſalvation by Chriſt; and to the twelve tribes of Iſrael, who repreſent all the elect of God, who enter in thereat; and to the twelve gates of Ezekiel's city, Ezek. xlviii. 31—35. And at the gates twelve angels; meaning either the miniſtring ſpirits, in alluſion to the cherubim in Gen. iii. 24. who are watchers, and encamp about the ſaints now, and will, as it were, ſtand centinels in this camp of the ſaints, as it is called, ch. xx. 8. and beſides, will be made uſe of in gathering the ſaints from the ſeveral parts of the world, and introducing them into this ſtate; or elſe the Apoſtles and miniſters of the word, often called angels in this book, who will ſhine with peculiar luſtre now, and will appear at the head of the ſeveral companies they have been uſeful to, and bring them as their joy and crown of rejoicing into this glorious ſtate: this clauſe is wanting in the Alexandrian copy, and in the Syriac verſion. The Jews ſpeak of שרים, princes, being appointed over the gates of heaven, eaſt, weſt, north, and ſouth, with the keys in their hands, whoſe names they give us[f]. And names written thereon, which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Iſrael; not literal, but myſtical Iſrael, whom God has choſen to ſalvation, Chriſt has redeemed by his blood, and the Spirit calls by his grace; denoting that all, and each of theſe, have a right to enter into the new Jeruſalem, and will be admitted there, and none but they. In like manner the Jews[g] make mention of a court of the Lord, “which has twelve gates, according to the computation of the tribes of Iſrael; on one gate is written Reuben, on another is written Simeon; and ſo all the tribes of Iſrael are written on thoſe gates; in the time they go up to appear before the Lord of the world, who ever goes up to this gate, (on which the tribe of Reuben is written) if he is of the tribe of Reuben they open to him, (and receive him) if not they caſt him without; and ſo of all whom they don't receive; they open to none but to him who is of that tribe, or whoſe name is written on the gate.”

Ver. 13. On the eaſt three gates, &c.] On which were written the names of Joſeph, Benjamin, and Dan: on the north three gates; on which were written ten the names of Reuben, Judah, and Levi : on the ſouth three gates ; on which were written the names of Simeon, Iſſachar, and Zabulon : and on the weſt three gates ; on which were written the names of Gad, Aſher, and Naphtali ; ſee Ezek. xlviii. 31, 32, 33, 34. This denotes the collection of the ſaints from all parts of the world, who ſhall come from eaſt, weſt, north, and ſouth, and ſit down in the kingdom of God ; and therefore here are gates at every point to enter in at ; ſee Iſ. xliii. 5, 6. Luke xiii. 29.

Ver. 14. And the wall of the city had twelve foundations, &c.] Chriſt is the one and only foundation of his church and people, of the covenant of grace, and of ſalvation ; and of faith, hope, peace, and joy, and of eternal happineſs, and ſo of this glorious ſtate of the church ; he will be the light and temple of it, the glory and ſafety of it ; he will be all in all in it ; but becauſe he has been miniſterially laid as the foundation by the twelve Apoſtles, for men to build their preſent and future happineſs upon, therefore the foundations of the wall of ſalvation are ſaid to be twelve ; ſee Eph. ii. 20. Moreover, this may denote the firm and immoveable ſtate of the church at this time, it being a city which has foundations, or is well founded, Heb. xi. 10. with which compare Iſ. xiv. 32. and xxviii. 16. Hence it follows, and in them the names of the twelve Apoſtles of the Lamb. The Alexandrian copy, Vulgate Latin, Syriac and Arabic verſions read, the twelve names of the twelve Apoſtles ; the alluſion ſeems to be to the inſcribing of the names of builders on ſtones laid in the foundation, in memory of them ; and ſo theſe wiſe maſter-builders will be had in everlaſting remembrance.

Ver. 15. And he that talked with me, &c.] One of the ſeven angels, ver. 9. for not a man is the meaſurer of this city, as in Ezek. xl. 3. nor John, as of the temple, ch. xi. 1. but an angel, the ſame that ſhowed to John this great ſight. Had a golden reed ; not a common meaſuring reed, or rod, as in Ezek. xl. 4. Rev. xi. 1. but one covered with gold, denoting the preſent glorious ſtate of the church, being without ſpot or wrinkle, or any ſuch thing : to meaſure the city ; the new Jeruſalem, its length and breadth ; ſee Zech. ii. 1, 2. to ſhow how exactly conformable this church-ſtate will be to the rule of God's word, even to perfection : and the gates thereof ; to ſignify who had a right to enter into it, and who not : and the wall thereof ; its height, it being exceeding high.

Ver. 16. And the city lieth four-ſquare, &c.] To the four corners of the world, from whence its inhabitants come, and denotes the regularity, uniformity, perfection, and immoveableneſs of it. And the length is as large as the breadth ; this church-ſtate will be all of apiece, perfect, entire, and wanting nothing. And he meaſured the city with the reed twelve thouſand furlongs ; or fifteen hundred miles ; a monſtrouſly large city indeed! ſuch an one as never was upon earth ; ſee Ezek. xlviii. 35. and which ſhows, that this is not to be underſtood literally, but myſtically ; and intends the capaciouſneſs of it, here being room enough for all the twelve tribes of Iſrael ; that is, for all the elect of God ; for as in Chriſt's Father's houſe, ſo in this kingdom-ſtate of his, there will be many manſions, or dwelling-places, enow for all his people. This city will hold them all. The Jews [b] ſay of Jeruſalem, that in time to come it ſhall be ſo enlarged, as to reach to the gates of Damaſcus, yea, to the throne of glory. The length, and the breadth, and the heighth of it are equal. A perfectly uniform ſtate! according to the Ethiopic verſion, it is in length twelve thouſand furlongs, and every meaſure equal, ſo that it is ſo many furlongs in length, breadth, and heighth.

Ver. 17. And he meaſured the wall thereof, an hundred and forty and four cubits, &c.] The root of which is twelve, for twelve times twelve is a hundred and forty-four ; which number is myſtical and apoſtolical, and ſuited to the perfect ſtate of this church : hence twelve gates, and twelve angels at them, and the names of the twelve tribes on them, and twelve foundations of the wall, and twelve thouſand furlongs, the meaſure of the city. According to the meaſure of a man, that is, of the angel ; who talked with John, and meaſured the city, gates, and wall, and who appeared in the form of a man ; and his reed might be, as ſome have ſuppoſed, the length of a man, ſix cubits, or ſix feet, as in Ezek. xl. 5. and may denote that this buſineſs requires the utmoſt wiſdom and underſtanding of a man, and even of an angel, to look into, and find out ; ſee ch. xiii. 18. and alſo may ſignify the angelic ſtate of the ſaints at this time, when the children of the reſurrection will be like the angels of God, for immortality and glory.

Ver. 18. And the building of the wall of it was of jaſper, &c.] Which is expreſſive of the impregnableneſs, duration, brightneſs, and glory of ſalvation by Chriſt, the jaſper being a very hard, durable, and bright ſtone ; and ſalvation can never be made void, and of none effect ; it will laſt for ever, and in this ſtate will come forth as light, and as a lamp that burneth ; it is repreſented by the ſame precious ſtone as God and Chriſt themſelves are ; ſee ch. iv. 2. and xxi. 11. And the city was pure gold, like unto clear glaſs ; it was made or built of gold ; its parts, buildings, houſes, and palaces, were all of gold, and that the beſt ; and it was like to tranſparent glaſs ; that is, either the city, as moſt copies read, or the gold ; for the Alexandrian copy reads ομοιον, and ſo the Vulgate Latin verſion ; the gold of which it was, is different from common gold : and as this city, the new Jeruſalem, deſigns the ſaints, the precious ſons of Zion, comparable to fine gold, the inhabitants of the new earth ; this denotes the ſolidity, excellency, and preciouſneſs of them, the rich and happy ſtate they will be in, as well as their purity and freedom from all ſin and corruption, and the clear knowledge of things they themſelves will have, and others will have of them ; their hearts and actions will be open to all ; nor will this gold have any ruſt upon it any more, or ever be changed, and become dim.

Ver. 19. And the foundations of the wall of the city, &c.] Which were twelve ; ſee ver. 14. were garniſhed with all manner of precious ſtones ; ſee Iſ. liv. 11, 12. not that there were all manner of precious ſtones in every foundation, but in them all there were, and each foundation had its ſtone peculiar to it, as follows ; and which are not applicable to the perſons of the Apoſtles, who were not the foundations, but on them their names only were written : and beſides, the order of them, as given in the Evangeliſts and Acts of the Apoſtles, is not certain, and always the ſame, to which theſe ſeveral ſtones may be adjuſted ; tho' they are doubtleſs comparable to them for their preciouſneſs in the ſight of God, and Chriſt, and all the ſaints ; and for the brightneſs and purity of their doctrine and lives ; and for their zeal in the cauſe of Chriſt ; and for their ſolidity, and invincible courage and conſtancy :

ſtancy: much leſs are theſe precious ſtones applicable to a ſett of miniſters in the latter day, who are to be uſeful in the converſion of the Jews in the ſeveral parts of the world, where theſe ſtones are found, as Brightman thinks, but to Jeſus Chriſt, the one and only foundation: and without entring into the particular virtues and excellencies of theſe ſtones, in general, they ſet forth the worth and preciousneſs of Chriſt, who is the pearl of great price; the pleaſure and delight had in viewing his excellencies and perfections; his brightneſs, purity, and glory, and his firmneſs and durableneſs, as a foundation. There may be ſome alluſion to the twelve ſtones in the breaſt-plate of the high-prieſt, on which the names of the tribes of Iſrael were written [i]. The firſt foundation was jaſper; it was laid with a jaſper ſtone, of which ſee ch. iv. 3. On this ſtone, in the breaſt-plate, Benjamin's name was written. The ſecond a ſapphire; its colour is azure, or ſky-blue; it is tranſparent, and exceeding hard. Schroder ſays there are very good ones found in the borders of Bohemia and Sileſia; but thoſe which are brought from Pegu are moſt valuable: on this ſtone Iſſachar's name was engraven. The third a chalcedony; it is of a miſty grey colour, clouded with blue, yellow, or purple; the beſt is that which has a pale caſt of blue; it is very much like the common agate; and the Hebrew word, כדכד, Cadcod, is rendered Agate in Iſ. liv. 12. tho' it is thought to anſwer to the carbuncle in the breaſt-plate, on which was written the name of Levi. And Pliny [k] ſpeaks of carbuncles, called Charcedonies, which R. Leo Mutinenſis ſays [l] had their name in memory of the city of Carthagena. There is a precious ſtone mentioned in the Targum of Jonathan, called כדכודין, Cadcodin, which anſwers to the diamond in the breaſt-plate, on which Zabulon's name was written; and in the Jeruſalem Targum it is called כדכדנא, Cadcedana, and anſwers to the emerald, which had Judah's name on it, and ſeems to be put for Chalcodin and Chalcedana, which agrees with the name of this ſtone. The fourth an emerald; of which ſee ch. iv. 3. The beſt of this ſort are the Eaſtern ones. Schroder ſays [m], they are found in Cyprus, Britain, and other places, but not ſo good as the reſt. On this ſtone Judah's name was written.

Ver. 20. The fifth ſardonix, &c.] Which is partly of the ſardian, and partly of the onyx ſtone, which reſembles a man's nail, from whence it has its name; it is reddiſh, bordering on white; it may be thought to anſwer to the onyx in the breaſt-plate, on which was written the name of Joſeph. The ſixth ſardius; the ſame with the ſardine ſtone, ch. iv. 3. of a blood colour, and what is commonly called a cornelian: it is found in Sardinia, from whence it has its name, and in Bohemia and Sileſia, tho' thoſe of Babylon are the beſt. This was Reuben's ſtone. The ſeventh chryſolite; a ſtone of a duſky green colour, with a caſt of yellow; by its name it ſhould have the colour of gold. Schroder ſays, it is found in Bohemia, and that it is the ſame the moderns call the topaz. Some think it anſwers to Tarſhiſh in the breaſt-plate, rendered Beryl, on which was the name of Aſher. The eighth beryl; a ſtone of a pale green colour, thought to be the diamond of the ancients: it may anſwer to the Ligure in the breaſt-plate, which the Targum on Cant. v. 14. calls Birla, and had the name of Dan on it. The ninth a topaz; a ſtone very hard and tranſparent, of a beautiful yellow, or gold colour: the topaz of Ethiopia was counted the beſt, Job xxviii. 19. Some ſay it is ſo called from the iſland Topazus; on this ſtone Simeon's name was engraven. The tenth a chryſopraſus; a ſtone of a green colour, inclining to that of gold, from whence it has its name; for this is the agate in the breaſt-plate, which was Napthali's ſtone. The eleventh a jacinth; or hyacinth; a ſtone of a purple, or violet colour, from whence it has its name; tho' what the moderns ſo call is of a deep reddiſh yellow, pretty near a flame colour. Zabulon's ſtone was the diamond. The twelfth an amethyſt; a ſtone of a violet colour, bordering on purple: it has been thought a preſervative from drunkenneſs, from whence it ſeems to have its name. On this ſtone was written the name of Gad. Agreeable to this account of John's, the Jews ſpeak [n] of the tabernacle above, being built on twelve precious ſtones; and ſometimes they ſay [o], that the holy bleſſed God will found Jeruſalem with ten kind of precious ſtones, and which they mention, and ſeveral of which are the ſame with theſe.

Ver. 21. And the twelve gates were twelve pearls, &c.] Denoting the purity and preciouſneſs of Chriſt, by whom the ſaints enter, and of the ſaints who enter in thereat, as well as of the place into which they enter. Every ſeveral gate was of one pearl; the pearl of great price, the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, who is the only gate, door, and way into this happy ſtate: this ſhows that this account cannot be taken literally, but myſtically, for no ſuch pearl was ever known, large enough to make a gate of. "A pearl is a hard, white, ſhining body, uſually roundiſh, found in a ſhell-fiſh reſembling an oyſter, but is three or four times the ſize of the common oyſter; and which ordinarily yields ten or twelve pearls, and ſometimes more. Thoſe of the largeſt ſize, that have been known, are that of Cleopatra, valued by Pliny at centies H S, or at 80000 pound ſterling; and that brought in 1574 to Philip the ſecond, of the ſize of a pigeon's egg, worth 14400 ducats; and that of the emperor Rudolph, mentioned by Boetius, called la peregrina, or the incomparable, of the ſize of a muſcade pear, and weighing 30 carats; and that mentioned by Tavernier, in the hands of the emperor of Perſia in 1633, bought of an Arab for 32000 tomans, which at three pounds nine ſhillings the toman, amounts to 110400 pounds ſterling [p]." But what is one of theſe pearls to make a gate of, for a wall which was an hundred and forty-four cubits high? ver. 17. The Jews ſay [q], that the holy bleſſed God will bring precious ſtones and pearls of thirty cubits by thirty, &c. and place them in the gates of Jeruſalem, as it is ſaid, Iſ. liv. 12. which muſt be underſtood alſo, not in a literal but myſtical ſenſe: and L'Empereur [r] makes mention of an ancient commentary on Pſ. lxxxvii. 1. which ſays, that the holy bleſſed God will make a gate at the eaſt (of the temple), and in it two doors, each of one pearl. So R. Joſhua ben Levi ſays [s], that there are in paradiſe two gates of agates or diamonds; ſome render the word rubies. And the ſtreet of the city was pure gold, as it were tranſparent glaſs; denoting the preciouſneſs and delightfulneſs of the ſaints converſation one with another; and the purity and cleanneſs of it, there being no mire and filth of ſin in theſe ſtreets; and the ſincerity and openneſs of it, each one walking in his uprightneſs; which will be ſeen and known of all, as clearly as any thing can be beheld in a tranſparent glaſs. So the Jews ſay [t] of paradiſe, that the ground is paved with precious ſtones, the luſtre of which may be compared to the light of burning torches.

Ver. 22. And I ſaw no temple therein, &c.] No material temple, as was in the old Jeruſalem, or ſuch as is deſcribed in Ezekiel's viſion; nor any place of publick worſhip, as under the Goſpel diſpenſation; for in this ſtate there will be no ſuch external form of worſhip, as now, ſuch as preaching the word, and adminiſtring ordinances. The Jews expect a third temple, but in vain. For the Lord God Almighty, and the Lamb, are the temple of it; God will be immediately preſent with his people, whoſe face they ſhall ſee, and whom they will ſerve in the moſt pure and ſpiritual manner; and Chriſt in his human nature, in the temple of his body, that tabernacle which God pitched, and not man, which is filled with the train of the divine perfections, and in which the fulneſs of the Godhead dwells bodily, will be the only medium of the divine preſence, and of the communications of glory to men, and of the ſaints praiſe to God, which will be the ſervice they will be employed in; and the Lamb being joined with the Lord God Almighty, ſhews his deity and his equality with his Father.

Ver. 23. And the city had no need of the ſun, neither of the moon to ſhine in it, &c.] Which may be underſtood either literally of theſe two luminaries, which all earthly cities need; and which, tho' they may be in being in the new heavens, yet will not have the uſe with reſpect to this city, they now have. The Jews ſay [u], the orb of the ſun is in this world; and the Gloſs adds, but not in the future ſtate, for the lights ſhall be renewed: and they further ſay [w], as here, that "in the world to "come, Iſrael, אין צריכין לאור החמה, will have "no need of the light of the ſun, nor of the light of "the moon, neither by day nor by night," as they ſay [x] the Iſraelites had not in the wilderneſs. So they repreſent the Lord ſpeaking to Moſes, and ſaying [y], "thy days ſhall ceaſe, but thy light ſhall not "ceaſe; for thou ſhalt have no need for ever of the "light of the ſun, nor of the light of the moon, "and of the ſtars." Or elſe it may be underſtood myſtically, but not of Chriſt, the ſun of righteouſneſs, whom the ſaints will always need and enjoy; but of the governours and diſcipline of the church in its preſent ſtate; and of the written word, which is a light unto them now, and the miniſtration of it, and the ordinances of the Goſpel, by which light and knowledge are conveyed; but in this ſtate all will be immediately taught of God; nor ſhall every one teach his neighbour, but all ſhall know the Lord perfectly; and alſo of political governours, who will be no more; ſee 1 Cor. xv. 24. For the glory of God did lighten it; the Shekinah, or glorious preſence of God, which filled the temple of Solomon, and ſhone round about the ſhepherds at the incarnation of Chriſt; with the preſence of God, who is light itſelf, which will be enjoyed in a much more glorious manner, will the church now be enlightened; and this will be an everlaſting light unto her: and the Lamb is the light thereof; in whoſe light they will ſee the face of God, and ſee God face to face; they will ſee Chriſt as he is, and behold his glory, and look upon the angels, thoſe glorious forms of light, and all the glorified ſaints, and know and converſe with each other; and they will look into, and clearly diſcern all the myſteries and doctrines of grace, and all the various ſcenes of providence, which will all be opened and laid before them. And this light will be always without any change and variation; which is no ſmall part of the commendation of this city, which is the inheritance of the ſaints in light. So the holy bleſſed God is ſaid by the Jews [z] to be, אורו של ירושלם, the light of Jeruſalem; he is the light of the new Jeruſalem; ſee Iſ. lx. 19, 20. and the light of the world to come is, by [a] them, called, the great light.

Ver. 24. And the nations of them which are ſaved, &c.] In diſtinction from them that will be deceived by ſatan, ch. xx. 8. Theſe are not all the nations of the world, which will be gathered before Chriſt, the judge, for all will not be ſaved, there's a world that will be condemned; nor the Gentiles only, which ſhall come into the church-ſtate of the Jews when called, for that ſtate is not here deſigned, and beſides, all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved then; nor the living ſaints at Chriſt's coming, who ſhall have eſcaped, and are ſaved from the general conflagration; for theſe, with the raiſed ones, will be caught up together to Chriſt, and deſcend and dwell together on earth, and make one church-ſtate; but all the elect of God, both Jews and Gentiles, whom God has choſen, Chriſt has redeemed, and the Spirit has called out of all the nations of the earth: theſe are only ſaved ones; ſuch are already ſaved, not only are determined to be ſaved, and for whom ſalvation is wrought out by Chriſt, and to whom it is applied at converſion, and who are repreſentatively ſet down in heavenly places in Chriſt, and are already ſaved by hope and faith, and with reſpect to the certainty of ſalvation; all which may be ſaid of ſaints in the preſent ſtate: but theſe will be ſuch, who will be actually and perſonally ſaved, will be in the full poſſeſſion of ſalvation, enjoying all the bleſſings of it; they'll be partakers of the firſt reſurrection, and the glories of it; the tabernacle of God will be with them; they will be free from all ſorrows and death, and will inherit all things: the Syriac verſion reads, the nations that are ſaved; who are redeemed and ſaved by Chriſt: this may teach us how to underſtand thoſe phraſes, which ſeem to favour general redemption, as all men, the world, the whole world; ſee Iſ. xlv. 20. and lxvi. 19. Theſe words, of them which are ſaved, are left out in the Vulgate Latin, Arabic, and Ethiopic verſions, but are in all the copies. Theſe nations are the inhabitants of this city, and they ſhall walk in the light of it, which is Chriſt; they ſhall enjoy it; they ſhall have the light of life, and be partakers of the inheritance with the ſaints in light, and that continually; they ſhall not only come to it, but continue in it, and walk at it, and by the light of it: the walk of theſe will be different from the walk of ſaints now, who walk by faith, and not by ſight; but theſe ſhall walk by ſight, enjoying the beatific viſion of God, and the Lamb. The Jews ſay [b], that Jeruſalem, in time to come, will be made a lamp to the nations of the world, והם מהלכים לאורה, and they ſhall walk in its light, or by the light of it, which is the ſenſe of

[b] Yalkut Simeoni, par. 2. fol. 56. 3.

Iſ. lx. 3. the Gentiles ſhall come to thy light; ſee Iſ. lx. 1, 3. and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honour into it; by whom may be meant either myſtically all the ſaints, who will be kings as well as prieſts unto God, and will reign as ſuch with Chriſt in this ſtate, will caſt their crowns at his feet, and give him all the honour and glory; or literally, the kings of the earth, who ſhall have relinquiſhed antichriſt, hated the whore, and burnt her with fire, and who will have been nurſing fathers in the ſpiritual reign; or rather all good kings that ever have been in the earth: not that they will be kings of the earth at this time, for now all rule, authority, and power will be put down; nor will any worldly riches, honour, and glory, be brought by them into this ſtate, nor will they be needed in it; but it is to be underſtood of ſuch who have been kings on earth, tho' not of their having brought earthly riches and grandeur into the intereſt and churches of Chriſt; as David gave much towards the building of the temple, which was begun and finiſhed by king Solomon his ſon, and as Conſtantine greatly inriched and aggrandized the church when he became emperor; but the ſenſe ſeems to be this, that ſuch who have been chriſtian kings on earth will prefer the happineſs of this ſtate to all their riches and greatneſs here; and that could all the glory of the kings of the earth be put together, it would not equal, but be greatly inferior to the glory of the new Jeruſalem; Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of the inhabitants of this place; ſee ch. xx. 6. beſides, theſe ſhall do all homage, and ſubmit to Chriſt the king of kings in the midſt of the church, which may be meant by glory and honour.

Ver. 25. And the gates of it ſhall not be ſhut at all by day, &c.] Which does not deſign the free communication between the living ſaints on the new earth, and the raiſed ones in the new heaven, as ſome have thought, for theſe ſhall be together, and make up one body; but rather the univerſal collection, and free admiſſion of all the ſaints from all parts into this city; tho' it ſeems beſt to interpret it of the ſafety of the inhabitants, ſee Jer. xlix. 31. who will have no enemy to fear, and therefore need never ſhut their gates; the beaſt and falſe prophet will have been taken, and caſt into the lake of fire long ago; ungodly men will be deſtroyed in the general conflagration, and ſatan will be bound in the bottomleſs pit during the thouſand years: for there ſhall be no night there; this is a reaſon given why it is before ſaid, the gates ſhall not be ſhut by day, ſince it is unuſual to ſhut gates in the day, unleſs in time of war, becauſe there will be no night in this city, and ſo no need of ever ſhutting the gates; the night-time being the ſeaſon for thieves and robbers, and for enemies to make their incurſions, and to ſurprize: but here will be no night; either literally, times and ſeaſons, as meaſured by the revolutions of the ſun and moon, will be no more, they will not have the uſe they have; at leaſt this city will ſtand in no need of them. The Jews ſay [c], that the world to come will be כולו יום, all day: or myſtically and figuratively, there will be no night of ſpiritual darkneſs and deſertion, of drowſineſs, ſleepineſs, and inactivity, of error and hereſy, or of calamity and diſtreſs of any kind; all which are ſometimes ſignified by night in ſcripture; ſee Cant. iii. 1. Matt. xxv. 5, 6. Iſ. xxvi. 9.

Ver. 26. And they ſhall bring the glory and honour of the nations into it.] The glory of the nations are the people of God, who, tho' they are reckoned the filth of the world, are the excellent in the earth; theſe will be brought into this city, and be preſented to the king of it, in a glorious manner, and that by the kings of the earth; either ſuch who have been eccleſiaſtical rulers over them, who will introduce them as their joy and crown of rejoicing; or who have been political governors of them, their fathers and protectors; or the ſenſe is as before, that whatever is great and glorious in the nations of the world, will be counted as nothing in compariſon of the glory and magnificence of this ſtate, and not to be mentioned with it: the Arabic verſion renders it, the nations ſhall bring glory and honour to it; in the ſenſe before given.

Ver. 27. And there ſhall in no wiſe enter into it any thing that defileth, &c.] As evil thoughts, words, and actions do; and therefore he that enters into this city muſt be free from all theſe: or that is defiled, as the Vulgate Latin and Syriac verſions read; or that is unclean, as the Arabic and Ethiopic verſions; alluding to the tabernacle and temple, into which no unclean perſon might come; ſee Iſ. lii. 1. No prophane ſinner, whoſe mind and conſcience are defiled, and whoſe converſation is defiling, may enter here; nor any ſelf-righteous perſon, whoſe righteouſneſs is as filthy rags, and he himſelf is as an unclean thing, ſhall be admitted here; only ſuch who are waſhed in the blood of Chriſt, and have on his righteouſneſs, and ſo are without ſpot or wrinkle; which ſhows the pure and perfect ſtate of this church, and therefore cannot deſign any ſtate of the church previous to the coming of Chriſt and the firſt reſurrection: neither whatſoever worketh abomination; commits ſin, which is abominable in the ſight of God, lives and dies in a courſe of wickedneſs; or particularly is guilty of idolatry, either makes idols, or ſerves them, or both, which are an abomination to the Lord; ſee 1 Kings xi. 7. or maketh a lye; any lye in general; who is a common liar, loves and invents a lye, and ſpeaks one; delivers that which is falſe with an intention to deceive; or in particular, who embraces and propagates antichriſtian lyes, doctrinal ones, lyes ſpoken in hypocriſy; ſuch ſhall be damned; ſee 1 Tim. iv. 1. 2 Theſſ. ii. 11, 12. but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life; who are predeſtinated to eternal life; and tho' they are naturally, and in themſelves defiled and ſinful creatures, yet they are juſtified by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and ſanctified by his Spirit, and ſo are made meet and fit to enter this city; ſee the note on ch. xiii. 8. It is by the Jews obſerved [d], that "the Jeruſalem of the world to come is not as the Jeruſalem of this world; the Jeruſalem of this world, "whoever would go up to it (or enter into it) "might; but that of the world to come, "אין עולין אלא המזומנין לה, none may go up to "it (or enter into it) but thoſe who are prepared, or "appointed for it."

CHAP. XXII.

THIS chapter contains a further account of the above city, a confirmation of the viſions of this book, and the concluſion of it. The city is further deſcribed by the river that ran by it, or thro' it, called a river of water of life, ſaid to be pure and clear as chryſtal, and to have its riſe from the throne of God and the Lamb; and by the tree of life in the midſt of it, ſituated on each ſide the river, bearing twelve ſorts of fruit, yielded every month, the leaves of which heal the nations, ver. 1, 2. and the happineſs of the inhabitants of it is ſet forth, by there being no curſe in it; by the throne of God and the Lamb being in it; by the ſervice of the ſaints in it; by the pleaſure they enjoy, and the honour put upon them; by the light of the place, and the duration of the ſaints reign, ver. 3, 4, 5. next follow teſtimonies concerning the authority of the book, and the truth of things in it; and firſt, the teſtimony of the angel that talked with John, declaring that the things in it were true and faithful; and that he was ſent from the Lord God of the prophets to ſhew to the ſaints things that would quickly come to paſs; and that Chriſt himſelf would quickly come; and that they were happy who kept and obſerved the ſayings and prophecies of it, ver. 6, 7. then the teſtimony of John who ſaw and heard them, and was about to worſhip the angel that declared them, but was forbid by him, and diſſuaded from it, by obſerving to him who he was, a fellow ſervant of his and of his brethren, and that God only was to be worſhipped, ver. 8, 9. who is ordered, as it ſeems by Chriſt, not to ſeal up the prophecies delivered to him, ſince the time of their fulfillment was at hand, when men would remain juſt as they were, whether ungodly and filthy, or righteous and holy, ver. 10, 11. and who declares that he ſhould quickly come to reward every man according to his works; and that he was the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the firſt and the laſt; and that they were happy that did his commandments, ſince it would appear they had a right to the tree of life, and to entrance thro' the gates into the city before deſcribed, when wicked men, whoſe characters are given, would be without, ver. 12, 13, 14, 15. and ſtill more clearly and fully Chriſt aſſerts himſelf to be the author of this revelation, and the ſender of the angel, to teſtify it to the church, who is David's root and offspring, and the morning-ſtar, whoſe coming is to be wiſhed for by the ſpirit and bride, and every truly gracious ſoul, ver. 16, 17. and to ſhow the perfection and authority of this book, as well as of the whole ſcripture, and to deter perſons from adding to it, or taking from it, he threatens to inflict on ſuch perſons the plagues herein written, and to take the names of ſuch out of the book of life, out of the holy city, and from the things written in this book, ver. 18, 19. and then he delivers out a freſh aſſeveration of his ſpeedy coming, to which John adds his hearty Amen, and earneſt requeſt that he would come quickly; and the book is concluded with a benediction uſual in the Epiſtles, eſpecially in thoſe of the Apoſtle Paul, ver. 20, 21.

Ver. 1. And he ſhewed me a pure river of water of life, &c.] Not baptiſm, which uſed to be adminiſtred in rivers and pools of water; and which engaged to purity of life; and the power and authority of adminiſtring which was from God and Chriſt; but in this Jeruſalem-ſtate there will be no uſe nor need of ordinances; for this chapter, to ver. 6, belongs to the preceding chapter, and is a continuation of the ſame account, this being not a new viſion, but a part of the former, which the ſame angel, as in ch xxi. 9. proceeds to ſhow to John: nor is the Holy Ghoſt intended by this river, whoſe gifts and graces are ſometimes for their plenty, purity, and quickening virtue, compared to rivers of living water; and who is a pure and holy ſpirit, and proceeds from the Father and the Son: nor the doctrine of the Goſpel, which comes from the bleſſed God, and is the Goſpel of Chriſt; and when purely and faithfully preached, is clear as chryſtal; and is the means of conveying ſpiritual life to men, and of ſupporting it in them: nor the ultimate joys of heaven, which may be called a river of pleaſure, for the fullneſs and variety of delight; pure, and clear as chryſtal, for the holineſs and perfect knowledge of that ſtate; and be ſaid to proceed from the throne of God and the Lamb, being the free gift of God thro' Chriſt; but this ſtate is not deſigned here: rather, therefore, by this river, is meant the everlaſting love of God, which may be compared to a river for its largeneſs and abundance, its height and depth, its length and breadth; and for the large diſplays of it in this ſtate, when its waters will increaſe, and be a broad river to ſwim in, and be unpaſſable; and for the ſtreams of it in election, redemption, vocation, juſtification, pardon, adoption, and eternal life, which make glad the city of God; and for the pleaſure it yields, and the fruitfulneſs it gives to thoſe who drink of it: it may be called a river of water of life, becauſe in the preſent ſtate of things it quickens ſuch who are dead in treſpaſſes and ſins; revives the ſaints when dead and lifeleſs, ſupports their ſpirits, and is a cordial that preſerves from fainting; it keeps and ſecures from dying the ſecond death, and is the ſpring and ſource of eternal life; and that itſelf will laſt and flow for ever, it is ever-running water, it is everlaſting love: and it may be ſaid to be pure and clear as chryſtal, it being free from all hypocriſy and diſſimulation, being real, hearty, and ſincere, both in the Father and in Chriſt, of which the fulleſt proofs and demonſtrations are given; and being clear of all motives and conditions in the creature, by which it might be influenced; and it engaging to purity and holineſs of life and converſation; for the doctrine, which brings the account of it, and the inward principle of grace, which is the fruit of it, and every diſcovery of it, have a tendency hereunto: proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb; not taking its riſe from man's obedience, nor from his love to God, nor from his faith in Chriſt; for the love of God is prior to all theſe, and is the ſpring and cauſe of them, and therefore can't be moved and influenced by them; but it has its origin from the ſovereignty of God and of Chriſt, ſignified by the throne of both, who will be gracious to whom they will be gracious; nor can any reaſon be given why they love any of the ſons of men, but their own ſovereign will and pleaſure; this is the ſole motive, ſpring, and cauſe of their love; and God and the Lamb being mentioned together, ſhows both the equal dignity of their perſons, being on the ſame throne, and the equality of their love to the inhabitants of the new Jeruſalem: and thus, as a river adds to the pleaſure, uſe, conveniency, and wholeſomeneſs of a city, this glorious city is commended by ſuch a river running by it, or in the midſt of it: there may be an alluſion to the river which ran out of the garden of Eden, for this will be a paradiſaical ſtate, Gen. ii. 9. or rather to the waters in Ezek. xlvii. 1—5. which came from under the threſhold of the ſanctuary; tho' this river proceeds not from the temple, there being no temple in this ſtate, but from the throne of God and the Lamb, which is inſtead of it.

Ver. 2. In the midſt of the ſtreet of it, &c.] That is, of the city deſcribed in the preceding chapter, which ſhows that this viſion belongs to that, and is a continuation of it, and which ſtreet was all of pure gold, ch. xxi. 21. and of either ſide of the river, was there the tree of life; not that it ſtood either in the midſt of the ſtreet of the city, which being a pavement of gold, a tree could not well ſtand there; nor on both ſides of the river, which is impoſſible, unleſs the tree of life is put for many trees of the ſame kind, as in Ezekiel's viſion, to which the alluſion is; and ſo ſome were on one ſide of the river and ſome on the other, as there; ſee ch. xlvii. 7, 12. or unleſs it can be thought that ſuch a ſolution of the difficulty is ſufficient, that the root of it was on one ſide, and the branches grew over to the other; tho' the words may be better rendred, and the difficulty will be removed, and the ſenſe be clear, between the ſtreet of it, the city, and the river, on this ſide, and on that ſide; that is, the ſtreet on one ſide, and the river on the other, was the tree of life; compare with this John xix. 18. So the Jews ſay [e], that the tree of life is in the midſt of paradiſe, and its body covers all the garden; and that there is in it five hundred thouſand different taſtes; and that there is no likeneſs and ſmell like it. By the tree of life is meant not the Goſpel, nor godlineſs, nor eternal life, nor any other of the divine perſons, but Chriſt, who is the author of life, natural, ſpiritual, and eternal; ~~ſee the~~ note on ch. ii. 7. and ſituation between the ſtreet of the city, where the ſaints commune and converſe together, and the river of God's everlaſting love, which in this ſtate will appear in its fullneſs and glory, ſhows that Chriſt will be ſeen and enjoyed by all in the moſt delightful and comfortable manner that can be wiſhed for: which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month; not one ſort of fruit one month, and another ſort another month, and ſo on, but twelve ſorts every month; which is expreſſive of the fruits and ſpiritual bleſſings of grace from Chriſt, enjoyed by ſaints in the preſent ſtate, and of that variety of happineſs and pleaſures to be had in this glorious ſtate, and of the continuance of them; they being always ever-freſh and new, and will be always ſufficient for the twelve tribes of the true Iſrael of God, and for all that have embraced the doctrine of the twelve Apoſtles of the Lamb; whoſe drink in this ſtate will be the everlaſting love of God, and whoſe food will be the fruit of the tree of life; both which they ſhall enjoy in great abundance: and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations; not for the curing of diſeaſes, or repairing of health; which in the preſent ſtate of things is done by the application of the blood of Chriſt for the pardon of ſin, which is a healing of diſeaſes, and by the diſcoveries of the love of God, thro' the miniſtration of the Goſpel, and the doctrines of it, which might be thought to be ſignified by leaves; for there will be no diſeaſe either of body or mind in this ſtate; beſides, the nations that will walk in the light of this city, will be ſaved perfectly and compleatly, ch. xxi. 4, 24. but theſe leaves will be for the preſerving and continuing the health of the people of God in this ſtate, as the tree of life in Eden's garden was for the preſervation of the health and life of Adam, had he continued in a ſtate of innocence; and it denotes that every thing in Chriſt will contribute to the comfort, health, and happineſs of the ſaints. The Jews interpret the paſſage in Ezek. xlvii. 12. to which this refers, of future time, or the world to come [f]; and ſpeak of various trees and herbs of great fragrancy and medicinal virtues, which grow quite round on the ſides of a laver that ſtands in paradiſe [g].

Ver. 3. And there ſhall be no more curſe, &c.] As there was in Eden, from whence a river came, and where was a tree of life; for there the ſerpent was curſed for his concern in man's tranſgreſſion, and the earth on account of it; but in this new earth, and paradiſaical ſtate, and on the inhabitants of it, will be no curſe; here will be no ſin, the cauſe of the curſe, nor pain and ſorrow, nor death, corporal, ſpiritual and eternal, or the wrath of God, the ſeveral effects of ſin, and parts of the curſe; the curſe of the law cannot here take place; for beſides the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, which all in the new Jeruſalem will be cloathed with, and ſo be bleſſed and ſecure from the curſe, they will be perfectly pure and holy in nature, and conſtant and compleat in their obedience and ſervice; they will always do the will of God on earth, as it is done in heaven; no accurſed perſon, or any one devoted to ruin and deſtruction, will be here; not the old ſerpent, the devil, he will be ſhut up in the bottomleſs pit; nor the blaſphemous beaſt and falſe prophet, they will be taken and caſt alive into the lake of fire before this time comes; no curſing, or accurſed men will dwell here; not ſuch who curſe themſelves, or the ſaints, or ſuch who will be bid to depart as curſed, theſe will be deſtroyed in the general conflagration; nor will there be any anathema denounced againſt any perſon, for here will be no introducers of another Goſpel, nor any that do not love the Lord Jeſus Chriſt; nor will any be an anathema, or accurſed from Chriſt, excommunicated from the church of Chriſt, for that will have no members deſerving of that; none but what are pure and undefiled; ſee Zech. xiv. 11. but the throne of God and of the Lamb ſhall be in it; God himſelf will be there, his tabernacle will be among men; the name of this city will be Jehovah Shammah, the Lord is here; the pure and ſpotleſs Lamb of God, the Son of the bleſſed, will be here, whoſe preſence will make it an happy ſtate; theſe will both have their throne, or ſeat here; they will ſit on one throne, being the one God over all bleſſed for ever; this city will be the city of the great king, where his royal glory and majeſty will be moſt illuſtriouſly diſplayed, and which will greatly make for the felicity of this ſtate, and ſecure it from the curſe: and his ſervants ſhall ſerve him; either the angels, who are miniſtring ſpirits, and the ſervants of God and of the Lamb; or the miniſters of the Goſpel, the ſervants of the moſt high God; or rather all the true followers of Chriſt, who ſhall be where he is, and ſerve him; both God and the Lamb, who are one in nature, tho' two diſtinct perſons; wherefore ſerving them both is not ſerving two maſters: and the ſervice the ſaints will be employed in, in this ſtate, will not be preaching the word, or attending on the miniſtry of it, or ſubjecting to ordinances, which will now be at an end, but celebrating the praiſes of God, adoring the perfections of his nature, aſcribing the glory of every providence, and of all ſalvation to him, and magnifying the riches of his grace; and this they will perform in the moſt ſpiritual, fervent, and perfect manner, and that continually; ſee ch. vii. 15.

Ver. 4. And they ſhall ſee his face, &c.] The face of God, ſo as he is not to be ſeen now; they ſhall ſee him as he is; not only the angels, who always behold the face of God, but all the ſaints, riſen and changed, being pure in heart, and perfectly holy; they ſhall ſee him face to face, they ſhall have intimate and familiar communion with him; they ſhall enjoy his favour, and have the freeſt and largeſt diſcoveries of his love; and they ſhall ſee the face of the Lamb; they ſhall behold Chriſt and his glory, both with the eyes of their underſtanding, and with the eyes of their bodies; and this is a very deſireable ſight, and will be very glorious and delightful; it will be fully ſatisfying, and will make the ſaints like unto him; it will be free from all darkneſs and any interruption, and will always continue. And his name ſhall be in their foreheads; they ſhall be known to be his ſervants, as if his name was written and bore on their foreheads; it will be a clear caſe that they are the children and people of God; now they are, but it is not known, at leaſt not ſo known as it will be in this ſtate; and they will alſo in the fulleſt and freeſt manner own God to be their God, and the Lamb to be their redeemer; they will be under no fear of man, nor be under any temptation to be aſhamed of Chriſt, or of his ſervice; ſee ch. xiv. 1. Some think there is an alluſion to the inſcription on the mitre of the high-prieſt's forehead, holineſs to the Lord, the ſaints being now openly, viſibly, and perfectly holy.

Ver. 5. And there ſhall be no night there, &c.] This is repeated from ch. xxi. 25. to expreſs the certainty of it, and to obſerve, that the happineſs of this ſtate will greatly lie in the light thereof; it will be one everlaſting day, ημερα αιωνος, day of eternity, or eternal day, as in 2 Pet. iii. 18. and they need no candle, nor the light of the ſun; neither artificial nor natural light; neither the dimmer light of the ceremonial law, under the legal diſpenſation, which was like a candle lighted up in Judea; nor the more clear light of the Goſpel and its ordinances, under the preſent diſpenſation, which now will be at an end: for the Lord God giveth them light; immediately from himſelf, without the uſe of means and ordinances; and in his light the ſaints will ſee all things clearly; who will be always communicating it to them, and will be their everlaſting light; ſee the note on ch. xxi. 23. and they ſhall reign for ever and ever; they are made kings now, and in this ſtate they ſhall reign with Chriſt for the ſpace of a thouſand years; and when they are ended, they ſhall not ceaſe to reign; nor will Chriſt, when he delivers up the kingdom to the Father, for his and their kingdom is an everlaſting one, ch. i. 6. and v. 10. and xx. 4. Dan. vii. 27. and here ends the account of this glorious ſtate of things; what follows is the concluſion of the whole book.

Ver. 6. And he ſaid unto me, &c.] That is, the angel that talked with him, and ſhowed him the above things: theſe ſayings are faithful and true; not only what are delivered in particular concerning the new Jeruſalem-ſtate, in which are many things new, and unheard of before, and which may ſeem ſtrange, and even incredible, but all that are written in this book, ver. 7, 18, 19. all which are faithful; to be believed by all that read them, and in the fulfillment of which the faithfulneſs of God is engaged and diſplayed: and they are true; for they come from the God of truth, that cannot lye, and are to be credited, and will have a certain accompliſhment: this is ſaid to ſecure the divine authority of this book againſt the gainſayers of it, whom the Holy Ghoſt foreſaw would ariſe in the world; and which is here, and in the following part of this chapter, ſupported by the teſtimonies of Chriſt, of his angel, and of John his ſervant. And the Lord God of the holy prophets ſent his angel to ſhew unto his ſervants the things which muſt ſhortly be done; the Lord God is the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, as appears by comparing this with ch. i. 1. and this is a very glaring proof of the deity of Chriſt, ſince he is not only called the Lord God, but the Lord God of the holy prophets; of the prophets of the Old Teſtament, who foretold things to come, and ſpake of the Meſſiah, his perſon, office, ſufferings, death, and the glory that ſhould follow; and of the prophets of the New Teſtament, who had a gift of explaining the prophecies of the Old, as well as ſome of them predicted future events; and both ſorts were holy men, ſet apart by God for this office, and had principles of holineſs wrought in them, and were moved by the Holy Ghoſt; theſe Chriſt inſpired, and qualified with gifts ſuitable to their work; and he is, as the Alexandrian copy, the Complutenſian edition, the Vulgate Latin verſion, and the Oriental verſions read, the Lord God of the ſpirits of the prophets; ſee 1 Cor. xiv. 32. who had power over their ſpirits, could come at them, and did impreſs them with a ſenſe and knowledge of divine and future things, which none but God can do: the ſame ſent an angel of his, one of his miniſtring ſpirits he has under his command, perhaps the ſame that here ſpeaks, for ſo reads the Syriac verſion, ſent me his angel; to ſhow to John, and by him to all the ſaints, and to all the ſervants and followers of the Lamb, things that were in a very little time to begin to come to paſs, till all were fulfilled; and even thoſe at the greateſt diſtance were, and are to be fulfilled within a little time, with reſpect to God, with whom a thouſand years are as one day, and in compariſon of eternity, and even of the time which had elapſed from the beginning of the world; and theſe things were ſhown in the various viſions of the ſeals, trumpets, vials, and others; ſee ch. i. 1.

Ver. 7. Behold I come quickly, &c.] Theſe are the words not of the angel, but of Chriſt, as is manifeſt from ver. 12, 16, 20. and which are to be underſtood not of Chriſt's coming in his power to deſtroy Jeruſalem, for this was paſt when John had theſe viſions, and wrote this book; but of the ſecond and perſonal coming of Chriſt to judgment, as is clear from ver. 12. which tho' it will not be ſooner than the time appointed, yet will be as ſoon as that time is come, and ſooner than is generally expected by men. The Ethiopic verſion adds, as a thief, as in ch. xvi. 15. and becauſe the ſecond coming of Chriſt is an affair of the utmoſt moment, and will be attended with events of the greateſt conſequence and importance, in which the viſions of this book iſſue, a behold is prefixed to it, as a note of attention and admiration: bleſſed is he that keepeth the ſayings of the prophecy of this book; this book is a prophecy of things to come, and therefore cannot refer to the times of Jeruſalem's deſtruction, which ſome interpreters make it chiefly to concern, for then it would be a narrative of things paſt; the ſayings of it are the things contained in it; to keep theſe ſayings is to read them with obſervation, to take notice of the accompliſhment of them, ſo far as it has taken place, to keep them in mind, and memory, to meditate upon them, and thro' the grace of God to ſteer the life and converſation according to the inſtructions, directions, and cautions here given; and ſuch are bleſſed in life, and will be in death; they'll die in the Lord, ſhare in the firſt reſurrection, and enter thro' the gates into the city.

Ver. 8. And I John ſaw theſe things, and heard them, &c.] He was both an eye and an ear-witneſs; ſome things he ſaw, and others he heard; and to render his teſtimony the more authentic, he puts his name to it; and he being an Apoſtle of Chriſt, and a man of great ſincerity and probity, is to be believed. And when I had heard and ſeen; the things related in this book, being amazed at them, and filled with joy on account of many of them, and firmly believing the whole as coming from God: I fell down to worſhip before the feet of the angel which ſhewed me theſe things. This is the ſecond time John did ſo, tho' warned of it, and rebuked for it, which ſhows the proneneſs even of good men to fall into ſin again and again; and what a propenſity there is in mankind to idolatry; and very likely this might be ſuffered, that a ſecond reproof might be given, and repeated inſtructions be on record, to prevent the worſhipping of angels, introduced in the firſt ages of chriſtianity.

Ver. 9. Then ſaith he unto me, &c.] The angel at whoſe feet John fell down to worſhip: ſee thou do it not; this he ſaid in great haſte, and with much vehemence, to hinder him from doing it, as his ſhort way of ſpeaking ſhows: for I am thy fellow-ſervant; of God, and of Chriſt, and am no more the object of worſhip than thyſelf; and both of us are, and ought to be, the worſhippers of God, whoſe ſervants we are: and of thy brethren the prophets; the Apoſtles and miniſters of the word; for propheſying and preaching are the ſame thing; theſe were the brethren of John in a ſpiritual ſenſe, and by reaſon of their function: and of them which keep the ſayings of this book; ſee ver. 7. and this is ſaid to encourage the obſervation of them, and is the character of private chriſtians, and ſhows the great condeſcenſion of the angel to put himſelf, not only upon a level with John, and the miniſters of the word, but with common believers: worſhip God; and him only, and that in a ſpiritual manner, with reverence and godly fear, in faith, and according to his revealed will; ſee the note on ch. xix. 10.

Ver. 10. And he ſaith unto me, &c.] Not the angel, but Chriſt, as is manifeſt from ver. 12, 13, 16, 20. This clauſe is left out in the Ethiopic verſion. Seal not the ſayings of the prophecy of this book; as the orders are, when things are intended not to be publiſhed, but concealed, at leaſt as yet, becauſe of the diſtance of the accompliſhment of them, which was not the caſe here; ſee ch. x. 4. Dan. viii. 26. and xii. 4, 9. Chriſt would have the things John ſaw and heard, written, and made publick, ſent in an open book, unſealed, to the churches, that they might be ſeen and read of all; that ſo the afflictions and perſecutions of the people of God, both under Rome pagan, and Rome papal, might be known, and the ſaints not be offended at them when they came, but be prepared for them, to endure them patiently; and that they might be apprized of the errors and hereſies that were to ſpring up, and of the appearance and wickedneſs of the man of ſin, and his followers, and beware of them; and that they might have ſome aſſurance of the deſtruction of antichriſt, and of the glorious ſtate of the church, both in the ſpiritual and perſonal reign of Chriſt, and ſo be comforted in the midſt of their tribulations, and rejoice in the faith and hope of theſe things. We may learn from hence, that the ſcriptures in general are not to be locked up, and concealed from the common people, but lie open, and are to be read by all; and in particular, that this book is not ſo dark and obſcure as it is thought to be: for the time is at hand; when the things in this book ſhall begin to be fulfilled; ſee ch. i. 1, 3.

Ver. 11. He that is unjuſt, let him be unjuſt ſtill, &c.] Theſe words are not to be conſidered as ironical expreſſions, ſuch as in Eccl. xi. 9. Iſ. l. 11. much leſs as an allowance to do injuſtice and commit filthy actions; nor even as deterring perſons from theſe things, by tacitly ſuggeſting, that ſhould they continue unjuſt and filthy, they would be ſeverely puniſhed; nor as an anticipation of an objection, that might be made againſt the publication of this book, and the ſayings of it, taken from the ill uſe that ſome men might make of it, who might be provoked to injure and perſecute the ſaints more and more, or indulge a filthy converſation; but as a prophecy of what would be at the cloſe of time, at the ſecond coming of Chriſt. The imperative is put for the future, as is uſual in the Hebrew language, in which it is ſaid, let ſuch and ſuch things be, when the ſenſe is, that they ſhall be; ſee Ezek. iii. 27. Zech. xi. 9. and ſo the meaning of this expreſſion is, he that is now found without a righteouſneſs, and full of all unrighteouſneſs, and acts unrighteouſly, will continue ſo; there will be no change made in him, no regeneration, renovation, repentance, or reformation; he'll remain the ſame wicked man he ever was; or he that hurts, or does injury to his fellow-creatures, will ſtill do miſchief; at leaſt he will have the ſame inclination, tho' not the opportunity and power, but will attempt it, of which there will be an inſtance in the wicked dead, when raiſed; ſee ch. xx. 8. And he which is filthy, let him be filthy ſtill; or he ſhall be filthy ſtill: all mankind are originally, naturally, and univerſally, filthy, or defiled with ſin. Some are cleanſed from it by the blood of Chriſt, others are not; and theſe will continue polluted, nor will the fire of hell fetch out the filthineſs of their hearts and nature: or the words may be rendered, he that defileth, let him defile ſtill; tho' he'll not be able to defile the temple of God, or corrupt the good communications of the ſaints, yet he'll continue to defile himſelf; the ſame evil thoughts, &c. will proceed out of him, as ever, which defile the man. And he that is righteous, let him be righteous ſtill; a truly righteous man is one that is righteous, not by his own righteouſneſs, but by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt imputed to him; he is one, who by faith looks to Chriſt for righteouſneſs, and receives it from him, and in conſequence of it, lives ſoberly, righteouſly, and godly, and ſuch will continue righteous; not that they will be made more righteous, tho' they may have a clearer view of their juſtification, for the ſentence of it will be afreſh pronounced upon them; but the meaning is, they will ever remain in a juſtified ſtate, and never enter into condemnation, their righteouſneſs being an everlaſting one. The Alexandrian copy, the Complutenſian edition, Syriac and Arabic verſions read, and the righteous man, let him do righteouſneſs ſtill; as he will do, for ſuch will ever be before the throne of God, and ſerve him in his temple day and night, ch. vii. 15. and xxii. 3. And he that is holy, let him be holy ſtill. They are holy who are ſanctified by the Spirit of God, and none but ſuch will be admitted into the pure ſtate of things upon Chriſt's ſecond coming; and ſuch will then be perfectly holy, and without ſin, and ſhall continue ſo: hence we may learn, that juſtification and ſanctification are two diſtinct things, and that both are durable. With theſe ſayings may be compared ſome expreſſions of the Jewiſh doctors [h], as the ſenſe of Lev. xi. 43, 44. "if a man defiles himſelf a little, they defile him much; the Gloſs on it is, they let, or ſuffer him to be more defiled; if below, they defile him above; if in this world, they defile him in the world to come; if a man ſanctifies himſelf a little, they ſanctify him much; if below, they ſanctify him above; if in this world, they ſanctify him in the world to come."

Ver. 12. And behold I come quickly, &c.] This is repeated, to confirm the truth of Chriſt's ſecond coming, and the ſpeedineſs of it, and to point at the time when the above ſhall be, and to add what follows. And my reward is with me; which words are taken out of Iſ. xl. 10. and lxii. 11. and which being compared together, furniſh out a clear proof of Chriſt being the true Jehovah, the eternal God. There is a reward of debt, or a due reward, a reward of puniſhment, which is the juſt recompence of reward, which ſhall be righteouſly given to wicked men for their ſin, Heb. ii. 2. Iſ. iii. 11. and there is a reward of grace, which is alſo called the recompence of reward, the reward of the inheritance, which is no other than the gift of eternal life, which God of his free grace beſtows upon his people, Heb. xi. 26. Col. iii. 24. and both theſe are with Chriſt; they are in his hands, he has authority from God, as mediator, to inflict vengeance on the wicked, and to give eternal life to his people; both which he will do, for this is with him: to give every man according as his work ſhall be; if his work is evil, and he is an unjuſt and filthy man, and the courſe of his converſation has been vicious, the reward of debt, or juſt puniſhment, will be rendered to him; but if his work is the fruit of grace, and he has had his converſation in the world by the grace of God, and he is a righteous perſon, juſtified by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and a holy, good man, ſanctified by the Spirit of God, the reward of grace, the crown of righteouſneſs will be given to him.

Ver. 13. I am Alpha and Omega, &c.] See the note on ch. i. 8. Theſe characters are all put together here, which are before uſed in ch. i. 8, 11. and xxi. 6. and are very pertinently mentioned in this place, when all promiſes and prophecies, relating to the glorious kingdom of Chriſt, were juſt finiſhing, and that itſelf was ready to appear, in which Chriſt alone ſhould be exalted, the myſtery of God would be compleated, and time itſelf be no more. The Ethiopic verſion adds, the beginning and end of days, or time. A teſtimony this, of the deity, eternity, infinity, and perfection of Chriſt.

Ver. 14. Bleſſed are they that do his commandments, &c.] Either the commandments of God, ch. xii. 17. and xiv. 12. the precepts of the moral law, which are the whole duty of man; which are done either legally, in order to obtain life, and then they muſt be perfectly done, which no man can do; hence none live, and are juſtified by the deeds of it, and conſequently are not bleſſed, but curſed; or evangelically, when they are done in the ſtrength of Chriſt, from love to God, in the exerciſe of faith upon him, with a view to his glory, and without dependence on them, acknowledging the imperfection of them, and looking unto Jeſus for righteouſneſs and life, in whom ſuch find both, and ſo are bleſſed perſons: or elſe the commandments of Jeſus are intended, who is ſpeaking in the context, ver. 12, 13, 16. and is ſpeaking of himſelf, and his, as the angel does in ver. 6. Chriſt's commandments are his new commandment of love, and the ordinances of baptiſm, and the Lord's ſupper; which are to be obſerved in the ſame evangelical manner, as the commandments of God, and to be kept exactly as they are delivered, without any alteration, addition, or diminution; and they are to be attended to immediately, and without delay; and ſuch as regard them in a right way and manner are bleſſed; they have much pleaſure and delight in the obſervance of them; theſe commandments are not grievous, eſpecially when they have the preſence of Chriſt, the diſcoveries of his love, and are under the gracious influences of his Spirit: or it may be rather the commandments in this book are deſigned, for it may be rendered, that do its commandments; keep the ſayings of this book, as in ver. 7. ſuch as relate to the worſhip of God, and forbid the worſhip of the beaſt, which caution againſt idolatry, and exhort to come out of Babylon, and direct to follow the Lamb, and charge not to add or take from any thing written in this prophecy; and ſuch perſons as keep the words of it are pronounced bleſſed, ch. i. 3. The Alexandrian copy reads, that waſh their garments; and ſo the Ethiopic verſion, and alſo the Vulgate Latin, which adds, in the blood of the Lamb, agreeable to ch. vii. 13. and ſuch whoſe perſons and garments are waſhed in the blood of Chriſt are bleſſed indeed; they are juſtified by it, pardoned thro' it, and both they and their ſervices are accepted on account of it. The inſtances of their happineſs follow, that they may have right to the tree of life; or power over the tree of life; that is, Chriſt, not of government over him, but of enjoyment of him; a liberty of eating of the fruit of this tree, having intereſt in it, and ſo a right to partake of it; which right, or liberty, is not obtained by obedience to the commands of God, or Chriſt, or of this book, for this is what is due to God, and obligatory on men; and which, when done, is but their duty, and can merit nothing; tho' a chearful and evangelical obedience to the divine will makes ſuch appear to have a right to ſuch a privilege, as the diſciples of Chriſt are not made ſo, but appear to be ſuch by bringing forth fruit, John xv. 8. but to have intereſt in Chriſt, the tree of life, and a right, power, and liberty to eat thereof, is a free grace gift, ch. ii. 7. and happy are thoſe who enjoy ſuch a privilege! Prov. iii. 18. Cant. ii. 3. And may enter in thro' the gates into the city; the Ethiopic verſion reads, into this holy city; and which intends not entrance into a particular church of Chriſt, the way into which is faith in Chriſt, and a profeſſion of it, and ſubmiſſion to the ordinance of baptiſm; nor entrance into heaven, which, as a Goſpel-church, is often called a city, and into which none ſhall enter, but ſuch who are juſtified by the righteouſneſs of Chriſt, and are regenerated by his Spirit, the gates of it are Chriſt and his grace; but the holy city, the new Jeruſalem, is meant, and entrance into that, which is ſo largely deſcribed in the preceding chapter, and particularly its gates; and they muſt be happy perſons indeed, who enter there; and their right to it is from, and lies in Chriſt, his blood, righteouſneſs, and grace, under a ſenſe of which they yield a ready obedience to his will, which makes their right to appear. Frequent mention is made of the gates of this city in the book of Zohar: and, ſays R. Iſaac[i], "when "the ſoul, זוכה לכנס בשערי, is fit, (or worthy, "or has a right) to enter through the gates of Je"ruſalem that is above, Michael the great prince "goes with it, who anticipates for it the peace "of the miniſtring angels, wondring at him, and "enquiring concerning it, ſaying, who is this that "comes out of the wilderneſs, &c. Cant. iii. 6."

Ver. 15. For without are dogs, &c.] That is, without the holy city are ſuch perſons who are comparable to dogs for their filthineſs, impudence, and voraciouſneſs, as are perſecuters, hereticks, and apoſtates, Matt. vii. 6. Phil. iii. 2. 2 Pet. ii. 22. Some think Sodomites are intended, as in Deut. xxiii. 18. ſo Abarbinel and others interpret the law; and who abound in the Roman juriſdiction, called therefore Sodom, ch. xi. 8. and indeed all wicked men, who will be caſt out into outer darkneſs, may be ſignified hereby. The Jews ſay[k], "when a "man dies, if he be worthy (or righteous) he de"ſcends in the likeneſs of a lion to receive his "ſoul, but if not, in the likeneſs of a dog, con"cerning which David ſays Pſ. xxii. 20." And ſorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters; characters of the antichriſtian party, who will have no place in this city, or glorious kingdom of Chriſt; ſee the note on ch. xxi. 8. And whoſoever loveth and maketh a lye; who loves both to invent and tell lyes, and loves to hear them told by others; meaning more eſpecially the doctrinal lyes of antichriſt, which are ſpoken in hypocriſy by him, and his followers are given up to believe.

Ver. 16. I Jeſus have ſent mine angel, &c.] As John, the writer of this book, ſets down his own name, who was an eye and ear-witneſs of the things contained in it, that they might be more ſurely believed, ver. 8. ſo Chriſt, the author of it, puts his name Jeſus to it, to engage the greater attention to hear, and read, and keep the words of it, as well as to make it plain and manifeſt, who is the perſon ſpeaking of his coming, ver. 7, 12. and who that has any value for Jeſus the ſaviour, but will give credit, and pay a regard to this revelation of his, which he ſent by his angel, one of his miniſtring ſpirits, made by him, and under his command, he being the creator, Lord, and head of angels: this expreſſes the dignity of his perſon, and is no inconſiderable proof of his deity: and this was done, in order to teſtify, to bear witneſs to the truth of the things contained in it; to ſignify and ſhew them, to ſet them forth in emblems and viſions: unto you theſe things in the churches; to the ſervants of the Lord, ver. 6. to John, and by him to others, to the paſtors of the ſeven churches, who were επι, over the churches, as it may be rendered, and to the members of the churches, to all that were in them; for the Alexandrian copy, the Vulgate Latin and Arabic verſions read εν, in; the Syriac verſion renders it, קדם, before the churches. What John ſaw he wrote in a book, and ſent it to theſe churches, ch. i. 11. The words may be rendered, concerning the churches; and then the ſenſe is, that the angel was ſent to ſhew to John, and by him to others, even to all the ſaints in all ages, the things relating to the church of Chriſt, in the ſeveral periods of time, repreſented in ſucceſſion by the ſeven churches of Aſia. Chriſt gives a further account of himſelf, for the greater confirmation of the faith of his people, in the certain accompliſhment of the things herein written, by ſaying, I am the root and the offspring of David. The former of theſe is mentioned in ch. v. 5. ſee the note there; and the meaning of it is, either that Chriſt, as God, is David's Lord and head, from whom he had his being, both in a temporal and ſpiritual ſenſe, and by whom he was ſupported and ſuſtained; or that, as man, he ſprung from the root of David, or deſcended from him; and ſo it falls in with the latter, which may be explanative of it, the offspring of David; that is, the ſon of David, according to the fleſh, a frequent name of the Meſſiah; ſee the note on Matt. i. 1. God promiſed that the Meſſiah ſhould be of the ſeed of David, and according to his promiſe he raiſed up unto Iſrael of his ſeed, a ſaviour Jeſus, the ſame perſon here ſpeaking, Acts xiii. 23. who adds, and the bright and morning ſtar; Chriſt is compared to a ſtar, as in Numb. xxiv. 17. for its light, the light of nature, and of grace, and of the new Jeruſalem ſtate being from him; and for its glory, his glory being the glory of the only-begotten of the Father, and he having a glory, as mediator, which his ſaints will ever behold, and be delighted with; and for its influence, all the bleſſings of grace, life, and righteouſneſs being from him; and to a bright ſtar, becauſe he is the brightneſs of his Father's glory, and ſo ſplendid, ſhining, and illuſtrious, that he is light itſelf, and in him is no darkneſs at all; and to a bright morning ſtar, which ſhows the night is going off, and the day is coming on, and is the Phoſphorus, or bringer of light: as Chriſt by his firſt coming, who was then the day ſpring from on high, put an end to the night of Jewiſh darkneſs, and ſprung the great Goſpel-day, ſo often ſpoken of by the prophets, and brought life and immortality to light by the Goſpel, and ſhewed the way to eternal life by himſelf; ſo by his ſecond coming, to which this character refers, he will put an end to the night of antichriſtian darkneſs, pagan, papal, and Mahometan; ſo that there ſhall be no more night, and and ſhall make an everlaſting day, and bring ſuch light into the holy city, that it ſhall need no candle, nor light of the ſun or moon. The dawn of light at the reformation was a preſage of this, ch. ii. 28. called there the morning-ſtar. With great propriety and pertinence are theſe titles here aſſumed by Chriſt, as the root and offspring of David, or David's ſon, when he was about to ſit on the throne of his father David, and poſſeſs his kingdom in the moſt viſible and glorious manner; and the bright and morning ſtar, when he was going to uſher in ſuch light into the new Jeruſalem, as would make all other light unneceſſary. Aijeleth Shahar, in the title of Pſ. xxii. which is a pſalm that belongs to the Meſſiah, is, by ſome Jewiſh writers[l], interpreted, כוכב הבוקר, the morning ſtar, the title of Chriſt here.

Ver. 17. And the Spirit and the bride ſay, come, &c.] Hearing Chriſt ſay that he ſhould come quickly, ver. 7, 12. the Spirit and the bride expreſs an earneſt wiſh, and a moſt affectionate deſire after his coming: by the Spirit may be meant the Spirit of God in the hearts of his people, who not only convinces them of, and acquaints with the coming of Chriſt to judgment, and gives them reaſon to expect it, but fills their ſouls with the love of his appearance, ſo that they look and long for it, and haſten in the breathings of their ſouls after it: and this in like manner he may be ſaid to wiſh for, and deſire it in them, as he is ſaid to cry Abba, Father, in them, Gal. iv. 6. and to make interceſſion for them, Rom. viii. 26, 27. Hence ſome interpreters, by the Spirit, underſtand ſuch as have the Spirit, and are ſpiritual men; either have ſpiritual gifts, the gift of prophecy, as John, who in ver. 20. expreſſes an ardent deſire that Chriſt would come quickly; or regenerate men in common, who are born of the Spirit, and bear his name, John iii. 5, 6. and ſo by an Hendyadis, the Spirit and the bride ſignify one and the ſame; namely, the ſpiritual bride of Chriſt, who is ſanctified by the Spirit of God; even all the elect of God, whom Chriſt loved from all eternity, and who are eſpouſed to him as a chaſte virgin; the new Jeruſalem, who is as a bride adorned for her huſband, and is the bride, the Lamb's wife: theſe wait for the bridegroom's coming, and moſt earneſtly deſire it, as there is good reaſon for them ſo to do, ſince his appearing in itſelf will be a glorious one, being in his own glory, and his Father's, and the holy angels; and ſeeing then will be the ſolemnization of the marriage-day between Chriſt and his church; it will be the ſaints redemption-day; they will then poſſeſs full ſalvation in ſoul and body; compleat grace will be given to them, and glory will be revealed in them, and they ſhall be for ever with the Lord. And let him that heareth; what the Spirit and the bride ſay; or the words of this prophecy; or that has ſpiritual ears given him, and he hears ſo as to underſtand ſpiritual things, the kingdom of Chriſt, and the glories of it, let him join the Spirit and bride, and ſay, come likewiſe; or expreſs his wiſhes and deſires in the ſame earneſt and affectionate manner, that Chriſt would haſten his ſecond coming: and let him that is athirſt come. Theſe ſeem to be the words of Chriſt inviting ſuch who thirſt after him, his grace and righteouſneſs, after more knowledge of him, and communion with him, to come unto him, by faith, and partake thereof, John vii. 37. or who thirſt after his ſecond coming, and the glories and delights of the new Jeruſalem ſtate, to come into it, and eat of the tree of life, and drink of the river of water of life in it; for the character ſeems to deſign ſuch, to ſpeak in the language of the Jews, who uſe like phraſes with this, who hunger, וצמאים לשתות מים חיים, and thirſt to drink living water[m], as appears by what follows: and whoſoever will, let him take the water of life freely. The water of life deſigns the free favour and love of God, and the communications and diſplays of it in the new Jeruſalem ſtate, even the comfort, refreſhment, and glories of that ſtate: to take it is to enjoy it, to partake of it, being led unto it, and that being given to them by Chriſt the Lamb in the midſt of the throne, ch. vii. 17. and xxi. 6. and which is had freely, without money, and without price, as in Iſ. lv. 1. which ſeems to be referr'd to; for the happineſs of this ſtate, as well as eternal life, is the free gift of God thro' Chriſt; and the perſons encouraged to partake of it, are, whoſoever will; that is, whoever has a will to divine and ſpiritual things, wrought in him by God, for no man has ſuch a will of himſelf, Phil. ii. 13. tho' this does not ſo much regard the character of the perſon, that may take of the water of life, as the free manner in which he may take it: ſo the Jews are wont to expreſs themſelves, when they would ſignify the liberty that might be uſed, or the free way in which any thing might be taken, particularly when ſpeaking of the law, and the things of it, כל הרוצה ליטול יבא ויטול, whoſoever has a mind to take, let him come and take, as it is ſaid, Iſ. lv. 1. ho, every one that thirſteth, &c[n]. that is, he is free to take, he's welcome to it; which paſſage referr'd to, is thus paraphraſed by the Targumiſt, "ho, כל דצבי, whoſoever will learn, "let him come and learn, &c."

Ver. 18. For I teſtify to every man, &c.] Theſe are not the words of a ſcribe, who having wrote out a copy of this book, added the following adjuration to it, to deter perſons from adding to it, or diminiſhing it; for the book is not yet finiſhed, and both Chriſt and John ſpeak after this; and to inſert ſuch a paſſage into the text, would be a bold and daring action; nor are they even the words of John, the inſpired writer of it, but of the Lord Jeſus Chriſt, the faithful witneſs, as appears from ver. 16, 17, 20. who in a moſt ſolemn manner declares to every man, high or low, rich or poor, of whatſoever character, or however dignified, either in a civil or eccleſiaſtic way, that heareth the words of the prophecy of this book read, or explained, if any man ſhall add unto theſe things. To add to the things contained in this book, is not to deliver, or write an expoſition of it, in a modeſt manner, with a ſincere view to give light into it, agreeable to the analogy of faith; for to expound ſcripture, or to preach from it, conſiſtent with it, is not to add unto it, but to give the ſenſe of it; but then may it be ſaid to be added unto, and ſo this book, when it is wreſted and perverted, and a falſe gloſs is put upon it, as the Phariſees did upon the law; and when unwritten traditions are made to be equal to it, or above it, as the ſame perſons made the traditions of the elders, whereby they tranſgreſſed the law, and made the word of God of none effect, and ſo broke through the precept given, Deut. iv. 2. as do the papiſts in like manner; and when men pretend to viſions and revelations, and make them the rule of faith and practice, and to confirm things that are neither in this book, nor in any other part of the word of God; and when men interpolate it, and ſet up human fictitious writings upon equal authority with it; which ſhows the authenticneſs of this book, and of all the whole ſcripture, and the perfection of it, whoſe canon is cloſed with it: the puniſhment of ſuch a crime follows, God ſhall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book; the things threatened to the antichriſtian party, ch. ii. 22, 23. and xiii. 10. and xiv. 9, 10, 11. the ſeven laſt plagues in which the wrath of God is filled up, which will be inflicted on the ſame, ch. xvi. the lake of fire and brimſtone, into which the beaſt, the falſe prophet, the devil, and all wicked men will be caſt, ch. xix. 20. and xx. 10. and xxi. 8. ſee Prov. xxx. 5, 6.

Ver. 19. And if any man ſhall take away from the words of the prophecy of this book, &c.] As he may be ſaid to do, who denies the authority of this book, which has been done by ſome, and which the Holy Ghoſt foreſaw; or takes it away from, or denies the reading of it to the people, as the Papiſts do with reſpect to the whole ſcripture; and who wilfully pervert the ſenſe of it, and will not have the things in it, relating to antichriſt, to belong to him. God ſhall take away his part out of the book of life; by which is meant eternal election, which is the meaning of the phraſe throughout this book, in which whoever are written, ſhall certainly be ſaved. The worſhippers of the beaſt, or the antichriſtian party, who are chiefly regarded here, are not written in it, ch. xiii. 8. and xvii. 8. wherefore taking away the part of ſuch, is only taking away that which they ſeemed to have; ſee Luke viii. 18. and the ſenſe is, that ſuch ſhall be caſt into the lake of fire, which is the ſecond death, and will be the portion of all that are not written in the book of life, ch. xx. 15. The Alexandrian copy, one of Stephens's, and the Complutenſian edition, read, the tree of life; and ſo do the Syriac and Ethiopic verſions; the ſenſe is the ſame; ſee John xv. 2. and out of the holy city; the new Jeruſalem, before deſcribed, a part in which is a right to enter into it thro' the gates, and poſſeſs the glories of it: what is mentioned here, is only a ſeeming one, which wicked men may flatter themſelves with; and the meaning is, that ſuch ſhall never enter into it, and enjoy the happineſs of it, but ſhall ever be without, ch. xxi. 27. and xxii. 15. and from the things which are written in this book; the bleſſings promiſed to the overcomers in ch. ii. and iii. which ſuch as detract from this book ſhall have no ſhare in. The Alexandrian copy, with ſome others, and the Syriac verſion, leave out the copulative and, and read which are written, &c. connecting them with the book of life, and holy city, which are written, and ſpoken of, in this book. The Ethiopic verſion connects the words with the holy city, only reading them, which is written, &c. The Jews ſay of their Talmud, that nothing is to be added to it, or diminiſhed from it [o].

Ver. 20. He which teſtifieth theſe things, &c.] Not the angel, ver. 16. nor John, who ſometimes ~~uſed this way of ſpeaking, John xxi. 24.~~ but Chriſt, as appears from what follows; for he ſaith, ſurely I come quickly; who not only aſſerts the ſpeedineſs of his coming, as in ver. 7, 12. but expreſſes the certainty of it, ſo that it ought not to be doubted of by any, eſpecially by his own people; tho' it may ſeem to be deferred, and upon that account, be derided by ungodly men; and Chriſt may have ſome reſpect in this ſtrong repetition of it, to the certainty of the puniſhment that will then be inflicted upon ſuch who add to, or diminiſh from this book; for he himſelf will certainly come in perſon, and execute the vengeance threatned. John next puts his Amen to it, ſignifying his aſſent unto it, declaring his faith in it, and expreſſing his earneſt deſire after it, and wiſh for it: and in words at length adds, even ſo come, Lord Jeſus; quickly, ſpeedily, as thou haſt ſaid, and in all thy glory; ſet up thy kingdom, let that come, introduce thy people into it, and deſtroy thine enemies; this he ſaid as one that loved the appearance of Chriſt, longed for it, haſtened to it, and was impatient at the delay of it.

Ver. 21. The grace of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt be with you all. Amen.] That is, let a ſenſe of the love of Chriſt, ſhown in all his regards to his church and people, which is always the ſame in itſelf, though the ſaints have not always the ſame perception of it, abide upon you: may you ſee your intereſt in the redeeming grace of Chriſt, in all its branches, and in his juſtifying, pardoning, ſanctifying, and perſevering grace; let the fulneſs of grace in Chriſt be the object of your truſt and confidence; may you have a ſupply from it to enable you to overcome every temptation, to exerciſe every grace, and diſcharge every duty. This ſhows this book was written in the form of an Epiſtle, and ſent to the ſeven churches of Aſia, ch. i. 11. and thro' them to the churches in all ages. It begins with a ſalutation of them, ch. i. 4. and ends with one commonly uſed by the Apoſtle Paul in all his Epiſtles, 2 Theſſ. iii. 17, 18. The Arabic verſion inſtead of you reads us; and the Complutenſian edition, and the Syriac verſion read, with all the ſaints.
